The General PREFACE.

THAT the Reader may have a more particular knowledge of the peculiar Advantages of This Edition, and a clearer view of the great Worth of both the Author and his Writings, as alſo of thoſe Methods and Helps whereby the Author arrived at ſuch a Perfection even in Literis interioribus, in the more abſtruſe and recondite parts of Knowledge; it is neceſſary that he be made acquainted with theſe following Advertiſements.

Advertiſements touching This Edition.

1. That the * Works of this Great Author, printed at diſtant times ſince his Death, have been with care and attention more then once collated and examin'd by the Author's own Manuſcripts; that ſo upon a ſecond, and ſometimes a third, reading it might appear where the Prints differ'd from the Originals, and that thereby they might be reſtored to that Luſtre and Perfection wherein the Author left them.

* All of them, except ſome few mentioned at the end of this Preface.

How toilſome ſuch an Employment was, none can ſo well judge as they that have travell'd in the like labour: But how advantageous it is for others, the judicious Reader will eaſily diſcern upon the peruſal of this Edition, where he will find the Author's Notions to run more clear and ſmooth, now that they are freed from any interpolations and imperfections that had crept into any of the former Prints. For that all that care (how weariſome ſoever) was no leſs then neceſſary, may appear from what I can averre with truth and ſoberneſs, That in ſeveral of theſe Poſthumous pieces I found that (either through the haſt or incuria of the Scribe, or through his miſtaking the Author's hand, or for what other reaſon I affect not to enquire) there were too many aberrations from the Original: Sometimes a line or more being left out; elſewhere ſome words omitted or miſtaken, and others ſubſtituted in the room thereof, to the impairing at leaſt of the Senſe. To inſtance in one or two Tracts for all: In the two former Editions of the Paraphraſe upon S. Peter's Prophecy there were at leaſt Thirty Miſtakes, ſome of them corrected in the Third, but all in this laſt Edition according to the Author's Papers: And in that excellent Diatriba upon S. Mark 1. 14. (which in this Edition makes Diſcourſe XXV) there were at leaſt Fifty places * wherein the Print did ſwerve from the Original Copy, and ſometimes not without harm done to the ſenſe; as (in pag. 38. l. 6. of the former Edition) it was thus expreſs'd

* None of which were number'd among the Errata.

expreſs'd and pointed, [And ſo we are now arrived at the main Cardo and hinge of Repentance. The joint or ſecond part thereof, in which Averſion or Converſion meet and are knit together;] Whereas in the Author's Papers (and agreeably in * this Edition) it is thus, [And ſo now we are arrived at the main Cardo and hinge of Repentance, the Joint where the two parts thereof, * Averſion and Converſion, meet and are knit together.]

* Pag. 141. lin. 41.

* Theſe the Author a little before calls the Two parts of Repentance; Averſion from ſin, the firſt; Converſion to God, the ſecond part.

I may not here forget that there was one Diſcourſe (viz. Diſc. 48. not before publiſhed) wherein one word was ſo written, that neither I nor any I adviſed with could poſsibly reade it, and therefore I left a void ſpace in the line [a]. In three other places there was a word wanting in the Author's Manuſcript, and what word was plainly fit to be inſerted, I have encloſed in a different letter in theſe two crotchets [ ], and accordingly given notice thereof in the [b] margins. Which I here intimate as an Inſtance of that Diligence and Fidelity I thought my ſelf bound to uſe in the preparing theſe Papers for the Preſs; endeavouring all along ſo to deal herein as I my ſelf would be dealt with in the like circumſtances, as being mindfull of that Rule of our Saviour Chriſt, [c] As ye would that men ſhould doe to you, doe ye alſo to them likewiſe: A moſt equitable and obliging Rule, the obſervance whereof (beſides the good effect it would have as to the publick intereſt of Learning, as in the particular caſe for which I here remember it) would have a propitious and prevailing influence to the bettering of all the affairs and tranſactions of humane life. Yea there is that compris'd in this compendious Aphoriſm (wherein is contracted the Pith and Subſtance, the very Quinteſſence and Spirits of all the many Precepts and Practical Maximes in the Doctrine not onely of the Law and Prophets, but of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, as alſo of the Inſtitutes, and Pandects of the Civil Law, containing what was drawn out of 150000 Verſes of the old Books of Law) which would not fail to make the whole World happy, but would certainly make a true and real (and more then Poetical) Golden Age, would turn the Wilderneſs into a Garden of Eden, and make the World one Great Paradiſe, and particularly Chriſtendome the Joy and Praiſe of the whole Earth. For this Rule's ſake did the Emperour Alexander Severus (as Lampridius relates of him) ſhew the Chriſtians more then ordinary favours; who was ſo much in love with it, that in palatio & in publicis operibus he cauſed this to be written, as a Memorial worthy to be regarded by all, Quod tibi fieri non vis, alteri nè feceris: the ſame with that Rule of elder date which Tobias received from his Father, * Quod ab alio oderis fieri tibi, vide nè tu aliquando alteri feceris; ſo the Vulgar Latine renders what is thus conciſely expreſs'd in the Greek, ὃ μισεῖς, μηδενὶ ποιήσῃς.

But to put a ſtop to this pleaſing Digreſsion, and to conclude this Firſt

Advertiſe-

Advertiſement, one thing more I would adde, which I can affirm with a ſafe confidence, That if in any Paſſages of theſe Papers I either did or do yet demurre for the preſent; (and it need be no wonder if, in ſo Voluminous a Collection as this, enrich'd with ſo great a variety of Notions, one ſhould chance ſometimes ἐπέχειν nor would the Author himſelf have taken it ill in his life-time, if he had not been thought Infallible, and if every Hypotheſis of his were not readily ſwallowed down: I know no Book, but the divinely-inſpired Bible, of which it may be ſaid as it was of the Roll to [a] Ezekiel, and of that little Book to S. [b] John, Λάβε καὶ κατάφαγε αὐτό· whereas of any other Writing or Compoſure of a fallible and uninſpired man, it may generally be ſaid as Clemens Alexandrinus ſomewhere in his Στρωματεῖς obſerves of the Greek Philoſophy, Τῆς Ἑλληνικῆς φιλοσοφίας, καθάπερ καὶ τῶν καρύων, ὃ τὸ πᾶν ἐδώδιμον) yet have I in thoſe very Paſſages expreſs'd as great a diligence and faithfulneſs as in any other particulars of thoſe Diſcourſes and Treatiſes wherein I did moſt fully accord with the Author.

[b] Revel. 10. 9.

2. As the Prints have been examin'd by the Original Manuſcripts, ſo likewiſe the Quotations that frequently occurre therein (not onely thoſe out of the H. Scripture, but) out of the ancient Liturgies, Councils, Fathers, the Hebrew Writers, Hiſtorians, Poets, or any other Monuments of Antiquity, have been carefully collated, and alſo ſet down more largely where they were but briefly referr'd to ſometimes in the Author's Papers. This care (though not over-eaſy) I have found upon trial not to be needleſs, (it being ordinary (and ſcarce poſſible to be otherwiſe) where there are many Quotations, to miſ-write the numbers of ſome Books or Chapters that are quoted) and being well aſſured it would be much for the Reader's Benefit, the deſire thereof did animate me to this laborious ſervice, which became yet more laborious in that the Authors were not always mention'd, or if the Authors, yet the Book and Chapter were not always expreſs'd: But in this Edition theſe are all particularly ſet down, except ſome among ſo great a number of Quotations might poſſibly eſcape me; but if any were pretermitted, I am ſure they were onely ſome ſhort ones, or ſuch as rather added ſome little ornament to the matter in hand then any neceſſary ſupport and ſtrength to any of his peculiar and principal Notions.

There is one thing more that is not impertinent to be here advertis'd, That whereas the Author did uſe, in ſeveral of his Chappel-exerciſes and other Diſcourſes delivered in publick, to quote the Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriack, and ſometimes alſo the Greek, Teſtimonies (eſpecially if they were long) not in thoſe Languages, but in Latine; as judging it perhaps more fit and uſefull to quote them in a Language which might be underſtood by all that heard him, even by the younger Students, then to make an aſtoniſhing clatter with many words of a ſtrange ſound and of an unknown ſenſe to ſome in the Auditory: I thought it would be moſt for the advantage of this Edition, (now that the forementioned reaſon of his then quoting in Latine did ceaſe, his Diſcourſes being now expoſed to the publick view) to ſet down theſe Authorities (all, or part of them) in their own Language, eſpecially where it is more ſignificant and emphatical. And this is the reaſon why the Reader will find ſome paſſages out of the Hebrew Writers, as alſo ſome out of S. Baſil, Greg. Nazianzen, his brother Cæſarius, Epiphanius, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret and other Greek Authors, repreſented in their Original and proper Language: Which I thought would be a greater ſatisfaction to the more learned; and yet, that others might be alſo gratified, they are done into Engliſh.

3. That ſeveral paſſages in the Author's Works (and ſuch as I think the Author himſelf would have taken care for, had he revis'd them for the publick uſe) I have endeavour'd to make more evident and inſtructive by Marginal illuſtrations; (not to mention the many places of Scripture added alſo in the Margins, which were pretermitted in the Original MSs.) as (to name ſome amongſt many) in Book I. Diſcourſe XXXVI. pag. 273. where he relates the ſeveral opinions of ſome Hebrew Doctors concerning Urim and Thummim, I have ſet in the margin their very expreſſions, as alſo the places (not mentioned by him) where their other Notions of the ſame argument are to be found. And in Diſc. XLVIII, an elaborate piece of Sacred Geography, as alſo in Diſc. XLIX, part of which treats of all the kinds of Sacrifices and Offerings under the Law, there is ſet down in the margins what I thought might give farther light to his Obſervations; beſides a ſummary account of the Author's Method in thoſe Diſcourſes ſet all along in the margins. The like care I thought needfull for his Concio ad Clerum, Book II. pag. 507.

As for thoſe Three Pieces publiſhed in his life-time, [viz. His Clavis & Commentationes Apocalypticæ, his Tract about Churches, and that about the name Θυσιαστηριον] there needed nothing of Marginal obſervation for the explaining of the Author's ſenſe, they were ſo exactly peruſed by himſelf. There are indeed in this Edition of his Commentary upon the Apocalyps ſome Marginal notes that were not extant in the former; but theſe are not mine, but were the Author's own Additions, and were tranſcribed out of the printed Book where he himſelf had written them in the margins, as he had alſo corrected ſome few faults in the print. Onely ſometimes in the margins of this learned Treatiſe I thought it might be of uſe (beſides ſome marginal references) to ſet down where the Greek reading he choſe in ſome few places to follow is confirm'd by the authority of Tecla's, or the Alexandrian, Copy, a Manuſcript of moſt venerable antiquity, and inſerted in the Biblia Polyglotta; and to this very purpoſe (beſides many other advantages) advantages) himself would have made use of that noble Edition, had it been extant in his life-time.

4. That (besides that some of the formerly-printed Discourses and Tracts are now published with several * Enlargements out of the Author's Manuscripts) there are * XXXII. Additional Pieces in this Edition, (no slight nor inconsiderable accession to the Author's Works.) Nor do I know of any one Tract, or Fragment of a Tract, that contain'd any Notion worthy of the Author, that is not brought into this Edition in Book V, which consists of Miscellanies, or set somewhere in the Margins of the other Books.

* See a particular account both of the Enlargements and of the Additionalls at the end of this Preface.

There were indeed among his Papers Three Discourses, one upon Zech. 8. 19. which was deliver'd by him in publick in the year 1611. after he was newly made Master of Arts, and one upon 1 Joh. 3. 9. and another upon Matth. 6. 33. which were made a little after; but these did seem less fit for the publick upon the * same reason that he was unwilling some Latine Dissertations written by him in his younger days should be made publick.

* See Epistle 97. p. 1082.

As for two short Discourses of his upon Genes. 28. 16. and upon Exod. 3. 5. found among his Papers, they had been published, but that I found they were both inserted by the Author partly into his Discourse on [a] Eccles. 5. 1. intitled The Reverence of God's House, and partly into that [b] Epistolary Tract of his touching The Holiness of Churches: nor is there any thing in them but what is incorporated into those Tracts, except this one Notion in the beginning of that forementioned short Discourse upon Genes. 28. 16. Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not; where the Author hath this Observation, [They are the words of Jacob, when he awoke out of the Vision he saw at Bethel: He dream'd he saw a Ladder reaching from Heaven to Earth, and the Angels of God ascending and descending thereon: Above it stood the Lord himself, saying, I am the Lord, the God of Abraham thy Father, and the God of Isaac; the Land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it and to thy seed. I will multiply thee, and in thy seed shall all the Families of the Earth be blessed. I mean not to expound the Vision unto you, it would be besides my scope; but onely will tell you thus much, that the Author of the Book of Wisedome (Ch. 10. 10.) calls it a Vision of the Kingdom of God; meaning (as I suppose) the Kingdom of Messiah which is here promised; Ἔδειξεν αὐτῷ βασιλείαν Θεοῦ, καὶ ἔδωκεν αὐτῷ γνῶσιν ἁγίων, He shewed him (saith he, relating this history of Jacob) the Kingdom of God, and gave him knowledge of holy things. Which passage I think so much the more worthy to be observed, because the term of [Kingdom of God,] so frequent in the New Testament, is no where to be found save in this place onely.] This Obſervation I thought good to preſerve by inſerting it here upon this occaſion.

There are ſeveral Texts of Scripture ſet down in the beginning of a thin Paper-book in Quarto, which the Author (it's likely) intended to diſcourſe upon; but whether he perfected his intentions, or onely laid in ſome general materials for ſuch a purpoſe in ſome other Papers, (ſome ſuch thing ſeems to be intimated) appears not to me from any Papers of his that have come to my hands: Howſoever it may not be amiſs, but rather a gratification to ſome, to ſet down here thoſe Paſſages of Scripture which he had made choice of as fit objects for his deep-ſearching Thoughts to be exercis'd upon. And they are theſe.

Acts 7. 43. Ye took up the Tabernacle of Moloch, and the Star of your God Remphan, &c.

Gen. 2. 9. ——The Tree of life in the middle of the Garden.

Jam. 5. 14. Is there any ſick among you, let him call for the Presbyters of the Church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: And the prayer of Faith ſhall ſave the ſick, &c.

Gen. 14. 18. And Melchizedek King of Salem brought forth bread and wine; and he was the Prieſt of the moſt high God.

Gen. 20. 7. For he is a Prophet, and he ſhall pray for thee, and thou ſhalt live.

Matth. 12. 39.——And there ſhall be no ſign given to it, but the ſign of the Prophet Jonas.

2 Sam. 21. 1. ——It is for Saul and his bloudy Houſe, becauſe he ſlew the Gibeonites.

1 Sam. 8. 7. And the Lord ſaid unto Samuel, They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I ſhould not reign over them.

2 Cor. 3. 6, 7. Who alſo hath made us able miniſters of the New Teſtament, not of the Letter, but of the Spirit; for the Letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life. But if the miniſtration of Death written and engraven in ſtones was glorious——How ſhall not the miniſtration of the Spirit be rather glorious?

Matth. 2. 18. A voice was heard in Rama, lamentation and weeping——Rachel weeping for her children, &c.

1 Cor. 8. 10. For if any man ſhould ſee thee which haſt knowledge ſit at meat in the Idol's temple, &c.

Joh. 16. 8. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of ſin, and of righteouſneſs, and of judgement.

Heb. 11. 4. By faith Abel offered unto God πλείονα θυσίαν then Cain.

2 Ep. Joh. v. 1. Ὁ πρεσβύτερος ἐκλεκτῇ κυρίᾳ.

Jos. 22. 19. If the land of your poſſeſſion be unclean, then paſs ye over unto the land of the poſſeſſion of the Lord, wherein the Lord's tabernacle dwelleth, &c.

Nehem. 8. 6. And all the people anſwered, Amen, Amen, with lifting up their hands, &c.

1 Cor. 11. 16. But if any man ſeem to be contentious, we have no ſuch cuſtome, nor the Churches of God.

Theſe * Seventeen Texts of Scripture (together with that Title of ſeveral Pſalms, לַמְנַצֵּחַ) I found ſet down in the beginning of that Paper-book, (the reſt is wanting) and theſe it ſeems he deſigned for the matter of his Chappel-exerciſes: and if any ſuch Diatribæ or Diſcourſes, perfected by him upon theſe Scriptures, be in the poſſeſſion of any worthy perſons, (for the Author was very communicative of his Papers) it is both deſired and hoped that they would impart them for the common benefit.

* Beſides ſome mentioned in another looſe paper, Acts 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 10, 11. Acts 3. 22. Rom. 3. 21. Acts 26. 22, 23.

5. That upon the View of all the Author's Writings, it ſeem'd moſt accommodate for the Reader's benefit, that they ſhould be digeſted into Five Books.

The First Book to contain his Diſcourſes on ſeveral Texts of Scripture, and of a different importance: All of which were delivered in publick, (either in the College-Chappel or in ſome greater Auditory) except that one onely Diſcourſe * upon Eſay 2. 2, 3. which was dictated by the Author ἀυτοχεδίως*, for the ſatisfaction of a Friend of his who deſired his opinion touching that Prophecy; and (as it was related by the Author's Friend) the original Paper is thus ſubſcribed,* More time and more leiſure might have afforded you better; but for this you are beholden to your Couſin B. whoſe pains in writing was more then mine in dictating. Vale. Yours, J. M.

* Diſc. XXIX. p. 182.

The Second Book to contain ſuch Tracts and Diſcourſes on ſeveral Texts of Scripture as were of the like Argument and deſign: viz. about Churches and the worſhip of God therein. There are among the firſt 21 Diſcourſes in the foregoing Book ſome Diatribæ of the like import: but thoſe being publiſhed by the direction, or with the liking, of the Author's Executor, I would not break the order in which they are ſo diſpos'd.

Theſe Two Books make up the Firſt Volume of the Author's Works.

The Third Book to contain his Treatiſes upon Prophetical Scriptures. viz. The Apocalypſe. S. Peter's Prophecy concerning The Day of Chriſt's ſecond Coming. S. Paul's Prophecy touching The Apoſtaſy of the Latter Times. Tobie's Prophecy De duplici Judæorum Captivitate & Statu Noviſſimo. And Three Treatiſes upon ſome obſcure Paſſages in Daniel.

The Fourth Book to contain his Epiſtles to ſeveral Learned men; whoſe Letters are alſo publiſhed, otherwiſe his Anſwers to them had been leſs intelligible. There are ſeveral large and learned Epiſtles of his added in this Edition, (beſides ſome elaborate Letters of others, as that of * L. de Dieu, not heretofore publiſhed) but there is nothing left out among the Epiſtles; onely ſome of them are placed in another (but their due) order; as alſo ſome other Tracts that were mingled with them are removed to their proper places. There is one onely Tract printed among the Epiſtles in pag. 517. of the former Edition (viz. Specimina Interpretationum Apocalypticarum ad Prophetiam Sigillarem ſpectantium*) which deſerved to be left out, it being nothing elſe but a ruder draught and* Specimen of what he afterwards perfected and printed in his Commentary upon the Apocalyps. But as for other Tracts and Diſcourſes, wherein the Author did purſue the ſame Notions, and ſometimes for ſome lines together in much-what the like expreſſions; (as he might well be bold with his own; and accordingly the Lord Verulam does ſometimes in ſeveral Tracts of his harp upon the ſame ſtring, repeating ſome Notions diſcourſed of in his other Papers; and of old the ſame was practis'd by Plutarch, as every one knows that is acquainted with that excellent Author:) yet becauſe where theſe Notions are repeated by him in other Tracts, they are expreſs'd with ſome variety, and ſometimes with farther advantage and clearneſs; I thought it ſafeſt not to leave out any thing, nor to goe about to contract them: For the ſame Notions being repreſented with ſome enlargements or ſome difference of expreſſion, may haply enlighten and affect ſome Readers in this form of words, others in another.

* Epiſt. XLVIII.

The Fifth Book to contain Fragmenta Sacra, or ſuch Miſcellanies as could not well come under any of the forementioned General Heads. The 3 laſt Chapters of which Book (containing a Collection of whatſoever was found among his Papers that related to the Apocalyps, and did ſeem to afford ſome light to ſome expreſſions therein) might have been fitly placed in the Third Book among the Remains upon ſome paſſages in the Apocalyps; but they came not ſoon enough to my hands to be inſerted there. There were written in ſome papers of his ſome Half-ſentences and Memorialls (beſt underſtood by himſelf) or ſhort Hints of what was afterward at large treated of and made out in ſeveral Tracts perfected by him, (which Hints he uſually wrote in Latine:) Theſe were too imperfect and unfit to be number'd among his Fragmenta Sacra; and to have publiſhed them would have been as diſhonourable to the Author, as it would be greatly injurious to a famous Artiſt, after he had with all care imaginable and to the life perfected his deſigned Picture, to make publick his firſt ſtrokes and eſſays, the imperfect rudiments of his Pencil.

One

One thing more, and I ſhall conclude this Advertiſement; That for the farther accommodation of the Reader, (beſides the dividing the whole into Five Books*) Two of the largeſt and moſt elaborate Treatiſes, (next to that upon the* Apocalyps*) viz.* The Chriſtian Sacrifice, and The Apoſtaſy of the Latter Times, are divided into Chapters with Contents briefly, but particularly, repreſenting the chief matters therein diſcourſed of. This I thought would be much for the Reader's both eaſe and advantage. The ſame care is taken for the Remains on the Apocalyps, which being divided into 12 Chapters with Contents is alſo thereby made more accommodate to the Reader's uſe, and any part thereof may be the more eaſily referr'd to. And the like accommodation of the Reader is endeavour'd (not onely as to the forementioned Treatiſes, but) as to the reſt of his Works, which could not be without great inconvenience divided into Chapters, namely by the Alphabetical Tables of Words and Things, as alſo by what is ſet in the top of every Page, which doth ſummarily import what is contain'd therein.

6. And now after all this, when I could not think there was any thing uncared-for wherein I might be farther inſtrumental to the Reader's accommodation and the publick good, I was ſollicited (and with ſome continued importunity) to another trouble. It was deſired by ſome That the Hebrew, Greek and Latine Quotations in theſe Writings (eſpecially in the Treatiſes and Diſcourſes upon any paſſages of Scripture) might be render'd into Engliſh, for the benefit of thoſe Readers who had not the advantage of ſuch Education as would have enabled them to underſtand Words in thoſe Tongues, though otherwiſe of good abilities to underſtand Things and the beſt Notions when repreſented in a Language known to them.

It was eaſy for me to foreſee how tedious ſuch an employment would be, both where any Author's ſtyle is entangled and not ſo properly and clearly expreſſive as it might have been, or where the Original Greek being loſt an old barbarous Latine Tranſlation is all that is to be had, (as in ſome parts of Irenæus*) as alſo where the Quotations are many, (as in the* Chriſtian Sacrifice, the Tracts about Churches and the name Θυσιαστήριον, and in the Apoſtaſy of the Latter Times*) and likewiſe large, ſome whole pages being fill'd with Teſtimonies of ancient Authors, as pag. 474, &c. 479 to the end of that Tract, and (to name no more) pag. 791.

* As in pag. 425, 428, 430. and in many others.

Yet it was leſs difficult for me to deny my ſelf ſome eaſe by undertaking this new labour, then to deny the importunity of others, their deſire eſpecially being back'd with this conſideration, That it would conduce more to the benefit of all Readers. And therefore in compliance with their requeſt the ſeveral Teſtimonies that occurre, eſpecially in his Treatiſes and Diſcourſes upon Scripture, are done into Engliſh, except where the ſenſe ſenſe of the Quotation is ſufficiently intimated in the either foregoing or the following lines.

As for ſome Quotations in Book IV, which contains his Epiſtles; they being, moſt of them, written to Learned men, and ſeveral of the Quotations (not to mention ſuch as are here repeated, and were tranſlated in the foregoing three Books) relating to ſome Criticiſms and other points of Learning moſt proper for Scholars to buſy themſelves about; I was leſs ſolicitous about every thing therein that was in other Languages. And as for ſome Epiſtles which are wholly in Latine, I thought good to give a ſummary account of them in Engliſh, either in the Margin or in the Contents.

The Tranſlation keeps cloſe to the letter for the moſt part; it does not always: for that would be not onely Pedantick and ſervile, but infinitely inconvenient, and would render the Tranſlation ſometime as inſignificant and unintelligible to ſome Readers as the Original it ſelf. And therefore in ſome places I found it abſolutely neceſſary to enlarge the Tranſlations, and ſo to improve them that they might ſeem alſo a little Commentary upon ſome Quotations out of the Fathers and Councils, particularly ſuch as related to Eccleſiaſtical Antiquities, which would otherwiſe have been too obſcure and impoſſible to be underſtood by every Reader: a Specimen whereof (to omit other places) the Readers may obſerve in Pag. 487. and in Pag. 420. where the Author ſpeaks of the 5 Degrees of Penitents in the ancient Church. And for the better clearing the ſenſe of ſome Authors in ſuch places as ſeem'd moſt intricate, I neglected not to conſult either Eccleſiaſtical Antiquaries or thoſe that had commented upon the Fathers, ſuch as I could meet with in private or publick Libraries; (though oftentimes my conſulting ſuch proved but a fruitleſs, though toilſome, labour; it being the faſhion of many Commentators to write a deal of Notes upon what is eaſy and needs them not, but to give the Goe-by to places more difficult.) The moſt ſerviceable in all my ſearch was the induſtrious and learned Rigaltius, agreeably to whoſe judgement and the ſenſe of the moſt diligent Writers, as alſo to the ſcope of the place, (not neglecting alſo ſometimes to conſult the living, and the better, Libraries) I have render'd ſome Paſſages, which haply at firſt ſight may ſeem to others to import otherwiſe.

There is this yet farther to be advertis'd, That where the Teſtimonies out of Greek Authors are ſometimes quoted in Latine, (as in thoſe 2 Tracts about Churches and the name Θυσιαστήριον*) I have in the tranſlating attended not always to the* Latine, but rather to the Original Greek, where it ſeem'd more expreſſive, which I have therefore ſet down in the Margin, either part of it, as in Pag. 428. and elſewhere, or the whole, as in another Treatiſe, Pag. 791. that large Quotation out of Theodoret is more free from ambiguity in the Greek then (as it was formerly quoted) in the Latine.

And

And thus much for the First Head of Advertiſements. I proceed to the next.

II. Advertiſements touching the Author and his Writings.

1. As for the Author, I ſhall not need to exſpatiate in a large and particular recounting of the ſeveral Perfections (whether Intellectual Accompliſhments or Moral Endowments*) which were eminently conſpicuous in him, there being drawn a true and lively Picture of him in the following* Hiſtory of his Life and Death, (written by ſome of great acquaintance with him, and that always had a juſt eſteem for him) and in that compendious Epitaph annexed thereunto, (which, together with the Verſes ſet in the beginning of this Volume, was ſent out of the Country from a Reverend perſon ſometime of Cambridge*) as likewiſe in the adjoyning* Appendix to the Author's Life, (ſent from another Doctor anciently of the ſame Univerſity, one who frequently reſorted to Mr. Mede, and thought himſelf richly rewarded by his diſcourſe for every journey he made to his Chamber.) In theſe Three there is an endeavour to repreſent the Author's Picture at large and in his full proportions. Howſoever it may not be impertinent to ſuperadde here ἐξ ἐπιμέτρου ſome few Memorialls; as Pictures of Great perſons are wont to be expreſs'd not onely in their juſt proportions, but alſo in little Tables and Medalls.

In ſhort then, His Intellectual Accompliſhments muſt needs be eminent and advanced above the ordinary pitch, they being the Effects of excellent Natural parts accompanied with an early and unwearied Induſtry, as alſo (which is a more rare conjunction) with a great Judgement and a great Memory. He began his ſearch after Wiſedome betimes, and continued it unto the laſt; it might truly be ſaid of him (to borrow the words of * Siracides*) that* ἐξ ἄνθους ἕως πεπηγάσης σταφυλῆς, from the flower till the grape was ripe, (from the budding ingenuities of his youth till the more concocted and mature thoughts of his riper years) he delighted in Wiſedome, he ſought her from his youth up, and * had his heart joyned with her from the beginning. And for a proof of that ſucceſs which attended this his early enquiry after Knowledge, it may not be here impertinent to obſerve, That ſome of thoſe peculiar Notions of his which occurre in his latter Writings (as in that of the Reverence of God's Houſe*) were his* eldeſt thoughts and ſtudies, as he himſelf calls them ſomewhere in his Epiſtles. What he hath obſerv'd in his Chriſtian Sacrifice, about the Oblation of Praiſe and Prayer at the celebration of the Euchariſt, *he had an early apprehenſion of; as appears by that (not till now publiſhed) * Diſcourſe of his upon* Pſal. 50. 14. which was compoſed by him in XLIX.

* Ecclus. 51. 15.

in his younger daies. What he hath at large illuſtrated in his learned Diſcourſe upon 1 Tim. 4. 1. concerning Dæmon-worſhip and the Apoſtaſy of the Latter Times, he had a glimpſe of many years before, as is evident from his, * Diſcourſe upon 2 Pet. 2. 1. And as for that ſhort, but elaborate, Tract De Numeris Danielis, or Revelatio Antichriſti, perfected by him toward the latter end of his Life, he call'd it * an old Notion long laid aſide by him, but now upon an apprehenſion of its Uſefulneſs thought fit by him to be reſum'd and perfected: Ità ut cano placeret quod juveni complacebat, as Walſingham (though an adverſary) reports of Wiclef. By which Inſtances (to name no other) it may appear what a quick Sagacity he had in his younger years, and how his early Studies were bleſt with the diſcoveries of ſuch Theories as lay deep and were not obvious to every eye.

* See Diſc. XLII.

* See Book IV. p. 1023.

His skill in Hiſtory and Geography appear'd betimes; a fair Specimen whereof the Reader may obſerve in thoſe two * Diſcourſes of his upon Geneſ. 10. 5. where he treats of the Original Habitations and Firſt Seats of Japhet's Sons and their Colonies after the great diſperſion from the Tower of Babel; (a Subject that the learned Bochartus in his Phaleg has copiouſly diſcours'd of.) And for the happineſs of Mr. Mede's Conjectures in an argument ſo difficult and ſo little traced by any Writers before him, I refer the judicious Readers to thoſe above-mention'd Diſcourſes, where they will find ſeveral Conjectures of his more eaſy and leſs unforced then in ſome Authors that have written either before or after him, not excepting Bochartus himſelf. And herein we have another proof of his early Sagacity.

* See Book I. Diſc. 47, 48. not publiſhed before.

But more particularly for Hiſtory, his Commentaries upon the Apocalyps and ſome paſſages in Daniel ſpeak the eminency of his skill herein, there being no Interpreters before him that have with equal clearneſs accommodated thoſe Prophecies and Viſions to their proper Events. That Methodus legendi Hiſtoricos cum fructu, drawn up by him and ſent to Sr. William Boſwell (his ancient and inward Friend) for the private uſe of ſome ſtudious Gentlemen, would alſo have teſtified as much. This Method for the ſtudy of Hiſtory, as likewiſe his Catalogue of ſuch Authors as were moſt eminent in the ſeveral Arts and Sciences, ſent to the ſame Learned Knight, and (what was ſent at a third time to him for the uſe of ſome Friends of his) a little Bibliotheca Theologica, or an Account of ſuch Authors as had made the beſt diſtribution of Theology into its parts, and had written beſt for the ſeveral parts thereof; theſe his Three Epiſtolary Diſcourſes (for the which Sr. W. B. does in his Letters return moſt affectionate thanks to Mr. Mede) would certainly have been moſt advantageouſly inſtructive unto all, could they have been found among Sr. W. Boſwell's Papers, and copied out for the publick uſe: but as yet they cannot be retrived, notwithſtanding all imaginable diligence has been uſed, of which they were well worthy, as containing (not mere lines of Ceremony and Complement, such as usually pass between Friends, nor little matters of News or of private concern, but what is of greater importance) Instructions and Advices about the study of Theology, the Arts and History, and from one who was versatissimus and excellently accomplish'd in them all. And for the attaining a rare perfection in (that which was last named) History, he had a singular advantage from his great Memory, without which all studies of this nature would signify but little. His Memory was so officious and faithfull to him, that he relied much upon it, and made little use of Common-place-Books: Accordingly in the Catalogue of his Manuscripts, written by his worthy Executor the learned Mr. John Alsop, (then Fellow of Christ's College*) are set down Two thick Paper-books* in folio, prepared by the Author when he was a young Student; but withall this note is there added, That little or nothing was written in them. Yet did he not wholly trust to his Memory; for he had a lesser Paper-book wherein he wrote down (besides what he had briefly observ'd out of the Ancients and others) some short Notes of his present Conjectures and Thoughts upon either some obscure Text of Scripture or some other difficult argument. That he had some such Repository for his Notions, (and it were well if those that are more knowing and Contemplative would be thus commendably provident,) is intimated in the * Appendix to the Author's Life.

* Sect. 2. at the end.

By other Letters of his (if they could be had) might farther appear his equal skill in the History of Nature and Philosophy; they being written in answer to several Enquiries of Sr. W. Boswell, an excellent Philosopher and Mathematician, some De motu Gravium & Levium, as likewise touching the Equality of Natural Motions, with some reflexions upon the common opinion of their being velociores in fine quàm in principio; others about the Nature of Comets, particularly about that Comet in 1618. its Figure and Disposition, &c. Besides several other ingenious Quære's mention'd in Sr. W. Boswell's Letters, as (to name two or three) about Shooting or managing the long Bow; as also about the possibility and best methods of teaching the Deaf and Dumb from birth to cast accompts, with other Mathematical calculations, to know moneys and the use thereof, to understand by sight of others writing and expres by their own whatsoever may pass for civil life and conversation.

* In the like strain he somewhere speaks of his skill in Chaldee, as also in the Mathematicks, which yet was great in others esteem, how little soever it was in his own

For the Languages, (particularly the Oriental,) although his Modesty would not permit him to speak otherwise of himself then in such an humble strain as this, * In Hebraicis modicum fortè possim, as he writes in one of his Ep. to L. de Dieu: yet that his knowledge herein was more then mean and ordinary, yea such as shew'd him to be a man of a rare perspicacity in the Genius and Proprieties of the Sacred Language, may be ſufficiently evinced from the many uſefull Criticiſms and Obſervations upon ſeveral Words and Phraſes of Scripture, ſcattered throughout his Writings, and particularly (to omit other Inſtances) from his clear and ſmooth * rendring and explaining that difficult Paragraph in Dan. 11. 36, &c. about Mahuzzim, &c. and from his unexampled accuracy in tranſlating and gloſſing upon that which is the moſt important of all the Prophecies in the Old Teſtament for the intereſt of Chriſtianity, (I mean Daniel's LXX Weeks in chap. 9. from verſ. 24. to the end:) Concerning which (not to meddle with his Epocha of the LXX Weeks, wherein perhaps he did not fully ſatisfy himſelf, for he was * unwilling his Papers about this ſubject ſhould be imparted, otherwiſe the moſt communicative of his Notions of any man living) this is to be obſerved, That thoſe expreſſions in verſ. 26. עם נגיד הבא and ואין לו, and thoſe in verſ. 27. משמם and על כנף שקוצים are very unintelligible, and there is ſcarce any tolerable ſenſe made of them in ſome other Verſions; but in his Tranſlation and Notes the importance of them is very eaſy and natural, and agreeable to the mind of the Original: whereby is verified what he in a Letter of his to L. de Dieu obſerves of himſelf, Eo ingenio ſum, (delicatulo, an moroſo?) ut niſi ubi interpretatio commodè & abſque ſalebris eat, nunquam mihi ſatisfacere ſoleam.

See Pag. 707.

And indeed his ſingular ability for interpreting the δυσνόητα and clearing the Obſcurities of the Holy Scriptures was one of thoſe Great Accompliſhments which were moſt illuſtrious in him. His inſight into the inmoſt Receſſes of theſe Sacred Writings was ſo quick as well as ſure, that it was a moſt true Elogium which Sr. Will. Boſwell gives of him in one of his Letters, That Mr. Mede did diſcern Day before others could open their eyes. Nor might that Cognomen be unfitly applied to this Joſeph, which was given to the Patriarch Joſeph, I mean that Egyptian name, * Zophnath-paaneah, which is as much as κρυπτῶν εὑρέτης, The Revealer or Interpreter of hidden things, according to Philo, Joſephus, both the Targumiſts, Jonathan and Onkelos, ſeveral Hebrew Writers, and (to name onely one more, but one whoſe judgment is the more conſiderable, becauſe of his peculiar skill in the Coptick language) Athanaſ. Kircherus. And from this famous Parallel between the two Joſephs (which lies more open to every ones obſervation) I might take occaſion to adorn this Preface with ſeveral other not leſs memorable, though leſs obvious, Reſemblances betwixt them: But I muſt not give way to a Digreſſion that would take up more room then I can well ſpare, in the Preface; eſpecially having ſeveral other Memorials to bring in that are more uſefull and proper to the deſign thereof; which I ſhall diſpatch with all convenient brevity.

* Gen. 41.

The moſt Myſterious of all the Books of Scripture is the Apocalyps: and and yet, though it be more myſterious and dark then the reſt, * εἰς τὴν ἡμετέραν διδασκαλίαν πεπεγεάφη, it was, as well as the reſt of Scripture, written for our learning, for our comfort, for the encouragement of our Patience, Faith and Hope; and therefore written to be underſtood: Otherwiſe the * Promiſe of Bleſſedneſs to them that reade (that is, that reade with underſtanding) and hear and keep the words of this Prophetical Book and the things written therein, would be but a Mock-promiſe of a Bleſſedneſs promiſed upon a * condition impoſſible, after the uſe of all endeavours, to be perform'd, and withall promiſed to a blinde obedience, or to the keeping and obſerving they know not what: Which to imagine and affirm were an unworthy reproch and high diſhonour done to the Divine Wiſedome and Goodneſs.

* Rom. 15.

* This is mentioned both in the beginning and in the end of the Apocalyps, Chap. 1. 3. and Chap. 22. 7.

* For ſuch an impoſſible condition is the underſtanding of this Book ſuppos'd to be according to that Hypotheſis.

In the Interpretation of this Book of Myſteries (as alſo of Daniel's Viſions) how well the Author hath quitted himſelf, let others judge; ſuch as are of a free and diſcerning ſpirit, and not unacquainted with the Schemes of Prophetick ſtyle, (for theſe alone are competent judges in theſe matters, ἴσασιν οἱ μεμυημένοι,) let ſuch as theſe judge between the Author's method and the Novel way of interpreting, wherein the Learned * Hugo Grotius is the Choragus and leads the Dance, (a Dance which has made thoſe of the Court of Rome no little ſport.) For me here to make a judgement upon theſe two ſo diſtant Methods of Interpretation, (if it were fit, yet) it is needleſs; both of them being brought into view and impartially compared, and the Author's Method undeniably evinced to be the better, and fully vindicated from the little pretenſions of the contrary party; and all this perform'd by * one not only of the ſame Univerſity, but of the ſame College too; which renders the performance more decorous and gracefull, it being as well a becoming teſtimony of a fair and worthy reſpect to the Author's memory, as a ſeaſonable ſervice to the Truth it ſelf.

* In his way of interpreting 2 Theſ. 2. & Dan. 7. he departs alſo from the ſenſe of the Ancients, and forſakes thoſe common Sentiments and Notions wherein the Fathers generally agree touching the τὸ κατέχον and the man of Sin, the Fourth Beaſt and Little Horn, the Son of Man's coming in the clouds, the Stone cut out of the mountain without hands; beſides other paſſages in theſe chap. & in ch. 11.

* See Dr. More's Myſtery of Godlineſs, Book 5. chap. 15, 16, 17. & his Synopſis Prophetica, Book 2. chap. 2, 3, 4, &c.

This is a little of the much that might be obſerv'd touching the Author's Intellectual Accompliſhments.

His Moral Endowments did teſtify his great Piety, as the other his great Parts and Learning. By his Moral Endowments I mean his Humility and Charity, his Moderation, Peaceable-ſpiritedneſs, Long-ſuffering and Patience, his Meekneſs towards thoſe that oppos'd themſelves, his Benignity, Largeneſs and Openneſs of Spirit, his Zeal for God and things Holy, Juſt and Good, his Free-dome from Ambition, Envy and Love of the World, his Sympathies and Pious Solicitudes for the Breaches in Christendome; and (not to instance in all those Vertues that shined forth in him, and render'd him an Exemplary and Usefull Christian) I shall name onely one more, (and it's that which is the signal Character of the Best Souls, such as approch neareſt to an Heroick state of Goodness, and the greateſt Reſemblance of the Divinity) his Communicativeness and Readiness to doe good, (and that particularly by a free imparting unto all ingenuous lovers of Knowledge, of his beſt Treaſures) and his Unweariedness herein, an argument that he ſenſibly knew that Noble pleasure which useth to accompany the exerciſe of ſuch Beneficence: And (which is the Crown of all) all theſe were actuated and inſpirited by Faith, the Root of every Grace that is truly Chriſtian; and accordingly the neceſſity of ſuch a Living and Operative Faith the Author has with great ſeriouſneſs treated of in ſeveral of his Diſcourſes. And here indeed were a large and pleaſant Field to traverſe, a rich argument to diſcourſe upon: But, there being in the following Hiſtory of the Author's Life a very particular account of theſe and other his Endowments which muſt needs make his Memory precious to all perſons of Piety and Learning, I would not by an unneceſſary lengthening of this Preface detain the Reader too long from the ſatisfaction he may there receive.

Thus much in brief touching The Author.

2. Concerning his Writings (beſides what has been intimated by the way in the foregoing Advertiſements) theſe things are fit to be obſerv'd.

1. That there were Three Treatiſes of his publiſhed in his life-time. The Firſt was his Clavis & Commentationes Apocalypticæ; the largeſt and withall the moſt elaborate of any of his Writings. This was his * Gen. 49. Firſt-born, his might and the excellency of his ſtrength, as * Jacob ſpake of his Firſt-born. It was extorted from him by the loving violence of ſome great Friends; otherwiſe he would have deferr'd the publiſhing of it till he had perfected his Specimina upon the laſt Chapters of the Apocalyps into a juſt Commentary, agreeably to that large method of Interpreting wherein he had proceeded to the end of Chap. 14.

The other Two ſhort Tracts (viz. about the Name Θυσιαστήριον anciently given to the H. Table, and about Churches in the Apoſtles times) were not publiſhed neither without his modeſt reluctancy; he was overruled herein by his Superiors, whoſe Command for the former was accompanied with this high Elogium, (as ſome of the Author's friends have related it) That this little Piece ſhould ſilence all other Tracts about that argument, there being enough therein (ſaid they) to ſatisfy all reaſonable men, and there having been more then enough already publiſhed, but to leſs purpoſe. The Engliſh of the many Quotations in theſe Two Tracts not tranſlated by the Author, I have ſet (not in the body of the line, immediately after any of the Quotations, but) in another Columne. To have done ſo in the reſt of his Works would have ſwell'd the whole into a greater bulk: But I choſe to doe thus in theſe Two Tracts, becauſe they were publiſhed in his life-time, and without any Tranſlation immediately following the ſeveral Teſtimonies out of others. And yet I am apt to think that if he had lived to prepare for the publick view ſome other Tracts or Diſcourſes, he would have render'd them into Engliſh; and I the rather think ſo, becauſe he has done thus in ſome Diſcourſes perfected by him (though not publiſhed) not long before his death. Theſe were his Diſcourſe upon Eccleſ. 5. 1. intitled The Reverence of God's Houſe, and that upon S. Matth. 6. 9. about the Sanctification of God's Name: Theſe were reviſed by him, and ſeem to have received his laſt care, beſides ſome other Tracts, as his Paraphraſe and Expoſition of S. Peter's Prophecy, and that Latine Tract De Numeris Danielis.

Engliſh

2. That his other Diſcourſes and Treatiſes (whether formerly printed or now added) were Opera Poſthuma, and yet too good to have been buried in obſcurity, and conſequently loſt to the World; (for, according to that twice-mentioned ſentence in Siracides, ch. 20. & 41. Σοφία κεκρυμμένη, καὶ θησαυρὸς ἀφανὴς, τίς ὠφέλεια ἐν ἀμφοτέροις;) although had they been reviſed by the Author in order to printing, they would doubtleſs have received ſome poliſhing luſtre and farther enrichments from his laſt hand. How advantageous ſuch a Reviſal of them would have been, may appear from thoſe fore-mentioned Diſcourſes of his, the former draughts whereof (as they were deliver'd in the College-chappel) were upon his review and going over them again much enlarged and made more full.

This Advertiſement was fit to be here mentioned, and that in juſtice to the Author's memory: And therefore it is a very reaſonable requeſt, to entreat the Reader to peruſe them with that Candour and Fairneſs which is deem'd by all ingenuous perſons but a due reſpect to the Poſthumous Works of Worthy men. In the confidence of ſuch a Favour and Civility have the Poſthuma of many Learned men been preſented to the world; particularly ſome Poſthumous Pieces of the eminently learned Biſhop Andrews by the then Biſhops of London and Ely, the Three laſt Books of the Judicious Mr. Hooker's Eccleſiaſtical Polity by the late Biſhop of Worceſter, and (to name but one more of the many that might be mentioned) the Profound Dr. Jackſon's Tenth and Eleventh Books of Commentaries upon the Creed by the unexpreſſible induſtry of the Reverend Mr. Oley. Upon the like confidence of a fair reſpect to be afforded to the Poſthuma of this Great Author did the Reverend Mr. John Alſop publiſh the Firſt Part of his Diatribæ, being Chappel-Exerciſes and (most of them) short Discourses upon Texts of Scripture, which yet the Author could have made more full and perfect, had he design'd them for the publick view.

Amongst his Posthuma, the largest, and which cost him most study, was his Treatise about The Doctrine of Dæmons, &c. or The Apostasy of the Latter Times, containing several Discourses upon 1 Tim. 4. 1. Of this there were 3 Copies amongst his Papers. The First was a shorter Draught of his Thoughts upon this Subject, when prepared for the College-auditory. The Second was larger and fuller, being delivered in severall Sermons at S. Mary's before the University. Both these were in 8°. A Third in 4°. when formed by him into a larger Treatise, and in several places enrich'd with considerable additions. And according to this Third and last Draught is this Treatise printed in this Edition, wherein also are added some Marginal Annotations of his, others, that were displaced in the former prints, restored to their due and proper places; so that the whole must needs be now more significant, clear and usefull to the judicious Readers, as well as render'd more gratefull and accommodate for their perusal by being distinguished into Chapters with Contents.

There were some Friends (to whom he had communicated this Treatise) that moved him to print it; (and had it been then published by him in compliance with their desires, it would certainly have brought him in a large Return of Esteem and Honour, for the multifarious Learning and the many Notions therein, not less solid and important then ingenious and uncommon.) But he being hugely averse from appearing any more in print (as may appear from what he writes in Ep. 97.) withstood the importunity of that motion, alledging for his excuse some Deficiencies therein, which his maturer thoughts could correct, and that he could mend the Foundation *thereof: Which expressions of his need not seem strange, nor are they to be interpreted to the lessening the due value of that Treatise, they being the proper language of his Modesty, and usual with him, when he was put upon any such occasion of expressing his sense concerning any of his Composures. And indeed he was so infinitely curious, and so seriously sollicitous that every thing which came from his pen should be exact and accurate, that in a * Letter of his to the L. Primate of Ireland he thus writes of himself, That he should never get through that which is his own, without everlasting mending, blurring, and pausing at every sentence to alter it. Smaller matters to so quick and severe an eye as Mr. Mede had for his own Writings, would be thought to want correcting, and sometimes, it may be, expunging: But this is nothing to the main substantial Notions that influence the whole Treatise; for these the Author professedly owns and insists upon in his Commentary upon the Apocalyps (which was written after this Treatise, and contains tains his elder and maturer thoughts.) As for example, That grand Notion which runs through the whole Diſcourſe upon 1 Tim. 4. 1. viz. of Dæmon-worſhip revived amongſt an Idolatrous ſort of Chriſtians, he makes uſe of in his Notes upon Apocal. 9. 20. and referrs to his Treatiſe about The Doctrine of Dæmons for the fuller confirmation thereof: as alſo in his Specimina upon Apocal. 17. he makes uſe of that Notion diſcourſed of in the fore-mentioned Treatiſe, chap. 8. viz. That Idolatry is the main Character of the Churche's Apoſtaſy. But without mentioning any more particulars, what in his Apoſtaſy of the Latter Times was conſonant to his Clavis & Commentationes Apocalypticæ, was avowed by him; and thoſe ſome things he ſaith in his Epiſtles that he could alter, were ſuch eſpecially as were not ſo * conſentaneous to his Apocalyptical Notions. In ſhort, although the Foundation and the whole Structure of this Treatiſe may ſeem, as it now is, ſufficiently ſtrong and well-compact to the eye of others, yet he being σοφὸς ἀρχιτέκτων a wiſe maſter-builder ſaies he could have mended it, that is, have added ſome more ſtrength to it, (for to mend the Foundation is not to take it quite away, but rather to ſtrengthen it:) an inſtance not onely of his great Humility, (when he was forced to pronounce concerning any performance of his own,) but alſo of his equal Sagacity and Quick-ſightedneſs in diſcovering where any the leaſt paſſage might be mended, which yet to others ſeem'd not deficient; and withall an argument of his great Sollicitude for the beſt ſatisfaction of others.

* See Ep. 43.

* See Ep. 29.

* See p. 983.

It is not unlikely but ſome may have an itching curioſity to know (if it were poſſible) where he would have either alter'd or added. And for anſwer to ſuch there is a Paper of his own writing with Memorandums to this purpoſe. His Addenda for the farther clearing or confirming of ſome paſſages in this Treatiſe were ſuch as theſe. 1. He would have added a Paraphraſtical Expoſition upon the laſt verſe of the former Chapter, in ſhort this; God was manifeſt in the fleſh, that is, was incarnate: Juſtified by the Spirit, that is, * teſtified and witneſſed by the Holy Ghoſt at his Baptiſm, &c. Seen of Angels, viſited by them at his Faſting in the wilderneſs and at other times, &c. 2. To what is ſaid in Chap. 2. That Dæmon-worſhip or Idolatry is the Apoſtaſy meant in the Text and elſewhere in Scripture, he would have added for a farther proof hereof, That it is ſo, as being a direct Breach of the Vow in Baptiſm, according to the Ἀποτάξις in the ancient form of Baptiſm,* Ἀποτάσσομαι τῷ Σατανᾷ, καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς ἔργοις αὐτοῦ, καὶ τοῖς ἀγγέλοις αὐτοῦ, καὶ πάσῃ τῇ λατρείᾳ αὐτοῦ. And to this he would have added that of S. Auguſtin, lib. 1. De moribus Catholicæ Eccleſiæ, c. 34. where he ſaith, Nolite conſectari turbas imperitorum, qui vel in ipſa vera Religione ſuperſtitioſi ſunt, ut obliti ſint quæ promiſerint Deo. obſerv'd obſerv'd in the 2 Part of this Treatiſe, about Lies of Miracles, he would have ſhew'd more at large, That Miracles out of the Charnels are properly thoſe ſpecified κατ' ἐνέργειαν τῦ Σαλανᾶ, 2 Theſſ. 2. 9. becauſe Satan ever loved to delude the world in that kind, and it appears not that God uſeth to work Miracles by ſuch means. Quære (ſaith he) whether the Charnel-cures are not a-kin to thoſe Magicall ointments made of like ingredients. As for the Alterations, he has a Memorandum to conſider whether in his explication of the word Ἀποϛήσονται ſomewhat may not be cut off or contracted; and another Memorandum he hath to alter ſomewhat in the beginning of his explication of Ἐν ὑϛέροις καιροῖς· and withall That the * Scriptures of the Singular and Plural number ſpeaking of the Laſt Time or Times be ſo fitted, that they may leave Dies Judicii to be a Continued Time; for, according to his * Notion and Deſcription thereof, upon his ſtudy of the Apocalyps, Dies Judicii non breve aliquot horarum ſpatiolum deſignat, ſed (pro more Hebræorum, Diem pro tempore uſurpantium) continuatum multorum annorum intervallum.

Theſe are the Addenda and Corrigenda as they are ſet down in that Paper; but not a word about Διδασκαλίαι Δαιμονίων, as if any thing therein were to be alter'd: and yet ſome (and they not over-captious nor prejudiced perſons) have been apt to demurre ſomewhat upon his explication of thoſe words. The intendment of this Preface is not to write Notes upon any of the Author's Works, yet for the ſake of the Ingenuous it may not be impertinent here to obſerve theſe few things. 1. That Διδασκαλίαι Δαιμονίων (or, as ſome Copies reade, Δαιμόνων) may properly enough be render'd Doctrines of, that is, concerning, Dæmons; the Genitive caſe here, as elſewhere in Scripture in the like Forms of ſpeech, being to be taken Paſſively; as the Author hath made it clear in Chap. 1. of this Treatiſe. 2. That Δαιμόνια or Dæmons are to be taken in Scripture ſometimes in a better and indifferent ſenſe, (according to the ſenſe of the Gentile Philoſophers) for the Souls of men deceaſed, and need not be taken always in the worſt ſenſe, for Devils or Evil Spirits, he hath endeavour'd (in Chap. 6.) to make it appear from ſeveral places of Scripture, and from an obſervable paſſage in Epiphanius; where he alſo ſhews That the Worſhip of theſe Dæmons or Souls of the deceaſed was in reality the Worſhip of Devils; thoſe Evil Spirits counterfeiting ſometimes the Souls of men deceaſed, and none but Devils being willing to admit that Honour which does certainly derogate from the Honour of the onely true God. 3. That whatſoever the importance of Διδασκαλίαι Δαιμονίων or Doctrines of Dæmons be in this place, yet what is taught and practis'd by an Idolatrous ſort of Chriſtians, as to the worſhipping of Angels and Saints, adoring of Reliques, Image-worſhip, &c. is a lively and expreſs reſemblance of the Doctrine and Practices of the Gentiles concerning their Δαιμόνια or Dæmons: as he hath proved at large. 4. That there are onely 3 Chapters in this Treatiſe (viz. Chap. 3, 4, 5.) which treat of Δαιμόνια, the uſe of the word, and the Gentiles Theology concerning the Nature, the Office, the Original of Dæmons, the manner and way of worſhipping them; but all the reſt of this large Treatiſe is as valid and concluding as if all in thoſe 3 Chapters had been omitted, nor does the ſtrength thereof depend upon that Hypotheſis purſued in thoſe Chapters, viz. That Δαιμόνια or Dæmons are to be taken here for the Souls of men deceaſed. 5. That the truth of the former Aſſertion may be confirmed from a view of theſe ſeveralls. 1. His Arguments (in Chap. 7, 8, 9.) to prove Saint-worſhip and Image-worſhip to be Idolatry, have no dependence upon his fore-going explication of the word Δαιμόνια, but prove what they are brought for, be the ſenſe of the word that or any other. 2. His Diſcourſe of the Churche's Viſibility clouded in the prevailing Apoſtaſy under the Reign of Antichriſt, is not concerned in his peculiar Notion of the word Δαιμόνια. 3. And as little concerned therein is all that large and conſiderable part of this Treatiſe which diſcourſes of the ὕστεροι καιροὶ, or the Times of the Great Apoſtaſy; as likewiſe that which is grounded upon that famous and expreſs Prophecy (in Dan. 11. 36, &c.) of the Churche's lapſing into Idolatry and the worſhipping of Mahuzzims; the proper meaning of which word, (not eaſy for every one to have diſcovered,) as alſo the fitneſs of this Title to be applied to the worſhipped Angels and Saints, with their Images and their Reliques, are there explain'd and confirm'd by him, both by comparing ſeveral Places of Scripture, and by pertinent Proofs out of Ancient and Modern Authors. 4. All the Second Part of this Treatiſe is unconcern'd in the foremention'd Notion of Διδασκαλίαι Δαιμονίων. I mean that Part which relates to verſ. 2, 3. Ἐν ὑποκρίσει ψευδολόγων, &c. κωλυόντων γαμεῖν, &c. and makes it evident by ſeveral Proofs (collected with great induſtry and equal judgement out of Eccleſiaſticall Antiquities) That Invocation of Saints and Image-worſhip were advanced by Hypocritical Lying, Lies of Miracles, Fabulous Legends, &c. wherein the Profeſſors of Monkery had the chief hand.

3. There is one thing more to be added concerning the Author's Writings, (and it is fit to be advertis'd, as being a Right due to his Name and Memory,) That whereas in the former Editions the Diſcourſes, being publiſhed at ſeveral times and by ſeveral perſons, could not be ſo fitly ranked and ſet in order, as otherwiſe they might have been, had they been publiſhed all at once; but the New and Old were mingled together, without any intimating which were compoſed by him in his younger days and which in his elder: In this Edition care is taken to diſpoſe them otherwiſe. Know therefore that those Diatribæ or Discourses are set first that were composed and deliver'd by him within the last Ten years of his life, (viz. from the year 1628 to 1638,) and the First XXV Discourses are such: XXI of which were published by the Author's Executor, but for the Order wherein they were set, (except those two which treat upon the Lord's Prayer, and were therefore fitly placed first) he seems to have been indifferent; otherwise (if he had thought it expedient) he could have placed them according to the time when they were delivered in publick, either in the College-Chappell, (as most of them were, being Common-places and short Diatribæ on several Texts of Scripture) or before the University at S. Mary's, (as the larger Discourses were.) For (as it appears by the Author's Papers) Discourse the 7th was delivered Anno 1637. Disc. 9, An. 1633. and in the same year Disc. 14, 21. Disc. 13, An. 1632. Disc. 19, An. 1635.

The Eight following Discourses (viz. from Disc. 25. to Disc. 34.) were preached all of them (except Discourse 30, of which I am not so certain) between the years 1624 and 1628, as I gather from some Memorialls in the Manuscripts.

The Twelve next Discourses were between the years 1615 and 1624. some of which are more Notional then others, as Discourse 35. upon Jer. 10. 11. and Disc. 36. upon Urim and Thummim, and those upon Genes. 3. 13, 14, 15. But if these and Disc. 45. be not every way so accurate and exact as those Diatribæ that stand in the first rank, whereof it may be said (to use Paterculus his expression) In illis Scriptis plus limæ est; it was fit that the Reader should be advertis'd about the distant times wherein these and the other Discourses were composed by him.

The Five last Discourses (which are added in this Edition) all but the [a] First of them, were made by him in his [b] younger days, and all of them but the Last are elaborate, and argue his great reading and study. Nor was the Last, which is plainer then the rest, added merely to make up the just Number of Fifty, but because the latter part thereof especially is a fit Supplement to Discourse 40. and withall, because the whole is a pregnant proof of his freedome from Vaingloriousness and Affectation, (a Disease to which Young men are most subject) and that he knew (as to discourse learnedly before capable Hearers, and to prepare * strong meat for those of full age, so likewise) to become weak to those that were weak *, in imitation of the Great Apostle of the Gentiles, and, when he was to speak before a Country-Auditory, to express himself in a very plain and familiar way. Which ability and readiness of condescending to the meanest capacity was a Vertue and Perfection in him worthy of praise and imitation, rather then an unseemly debasement and lessening of himself. The Great S. Augustine was pleas'd to humble himself himself to a yet lower condescension; he would speak sometimes broken and barbarous Latine before some sort of Hearers, so it were better understood by them, as Ossum for Os, &c. upon the mentioning of which instance he addes, * Melius est ut nos reprehendant Grammatici, quàm ut non intelligant populi.

In general, His Style is every where grave and proper and fitly expressive of his sense, (an argument that he was Master of his Notions, and did fully comprehend them.) Nor is it easy to find many Writers that, in treating upon Prophetical and Obscure Scriptures or any other Abstruse arguments, have either illustrated them with that clearness, that easy and punctual accommodation of them to their proper Events, or represented their Notions so handsomely and advantageously, as he hath done. To be short, In his Discourses and Sermons there is nothing that is light, humorous and trifling, no little pieces of Wit or slight Phancy, no high-flown nor affected Modes of expression, no needless Quotations of the meaner and less-significant Sentences out of Authors; with which some (such especially who are less acquainted with the inward sense and relish of Better things) endeavour to make their Discourses look very fine and (as they think) wondrous learned, hoping thereby to gratify some weak and Childish minds, and by them to be had in admiration, whose Applause yet is in the esteem of Wise men a Disparagement: No, His great care was to make his Discourses rather substantial and solid, fit to entertain such as are of a more Manly and serious spirit, then gawdy and quaint and pleasing onely to those that are but Children, and not grown to be Men, in Understanding; as being well assured that to men of judgement (as Petronius hath well observ'd) Nihil esset magnificum quod pueris placeret: His Generous Soul could not stoop so low as to humour these, such a Pedantick δυσησισοφία and Affectation being in his account a certain sign of a Poorness and Narrowness of spirit, a Littleness of Mind, when it can thus vacare rebus tam exiguis, & his interesse ut suis.

In a word, what is related in the Life of Padre Paolo, (that Oracle of Venice, the famous Author of the History of the Council of Trent, and, for his scarcely-parallel'd Accomplishments, both Intellectual and Moral, the Glory and Wonder of that Age, Il miracolo di questo secolo, as the learned and excellent Vincentius Pinellus of Padua did love to style him,) may with equal truth be said of Mr. Mede and his Writings, viz. That here was an happy conjunction of those Excellencies which rarely meet in one and the same Subject, Scienza & humiltà, prudenza e mansuetudine, ritiratezza & officiosità, seriosità e dolcezza, brevità e chiarezza, soavità e sodezza, Knowledge and Humility, Prudence and Meekness, Retiredness and Officiousness, Seriousness and Pleasantness, Brevity and Clearness, Sweetness and Solidity.

I might adde a word concerning ſome other Tracts of his, and particularly ſuch as (beſides his Clavis Apocalyptica*) referre to the* Apocalyps, and make the 3 laſt Chapters in Book V. But concerning theſe there is an Advertiſement there prefixed: And for the Παραλειπόμενα or * Remains upon the Apocalyps, this in ſhort may ſuffice to be intimated, That they were onely an Additional Supplement to the firſt Draught of his Synchroniſms privately communicated to ſome Friends, and were not written after, but * before, his Clavis & Commentationes Apocalypticæ, which were his Laſt labours upon that myſterious Book; and by theſe his Laſt Thoughts upon the Apocalyps ſhould be farther cleared and rectified whatſoever may ſeem in thoſe former Papers leſs perfect and ſatisfying. Concerning other Tracts of his there are particular Advertiſements inſerted (where there was need) in their proper places.

* Except that Tract in Chap. 9. of the Remains be of a later date.

And thus much concerning the Author and his Writings; I proceed to the laſt Head of Advertiſements.

III. Advertiſements touching the Methods and Helps whereby the Author arrived at ſuch an eminent degree of skill in the more abſtruſe parts of Knowledge.

And becauſe it is and ever was the General ſenſe of all Wiſe and Vertuous perſons in the World, That the * Divine Preſence and Aſſiſtence is abſolutely neceſſary, and therefore to be implor'd, in all weighty undertakings; that which deſerves firſt to be number'd amongſt thoſe Helps to knowledge is,

Agreeable to ſuch holy Counſels and theſe great Examples was Mr. Mede's practice, particularly when he enter'd upon the Apocalyps. Accordingly in a Letter of his to Mr. W. (his ancient Friend) he tells him That it was his daily Deſire and Prayer to God that he might not be led away with deluſions, (as ſome unskilfull and unſtable ſouls had been in their attempts upon ſo abſtruſe a Book as the Apocalyps) and that therefore his Hope was in God, that he would not ſuffer him to fall, (as they had wretchedly miſcarried) but be merciſull to him a ſinner: and withall he earneſtly deſires that others would pray for him, as he would not ceaſe to pray for them engaged in the like difficult labours. In this humble ſtrain does he expreſs himſelf in that private Letter, which needed not to be printed, it treating upon what he hath more fully and clearly diſcourſed of in other Tracts publiſhed in this Edition. Beſides out of his printed Works upon the Apocalyps the Reader may obſerve the ſame: For thoſe two humble Addreſſes of his to God, in the beginning of both his Clavis and Commentary upon the Apocalyps, [Tu qui Throno inſides——and, Chriſte, Dei Sapientia——] are pregnant proofs how ſenſible he was of the availableneſs of continued Prayer *for the ſafe underſtanding of ſuch Myſteries. II. His Ingenuous Gratitude and Thankfull acknowledgements for any meaſure of Light received. For Praiſe (as it is in it ſelf moſt * comely, a ſingular piece of the Beauty of Holineſs, the Soul's beſt dreſs and moſt gracefull deportment, ſo likewiſe) *it is an effectual inſtrument and one of the moſt compendious means to the obtaining of greater Favours and Bleſſings. Nor was Mr. Mede's Practice leſs obſervable in this then in the foregoing Particular; of which it were eaſy to produce many Inſtances: This for one, out of that above-mentioned Letter to Mr. W. to whom he had ſent the Firſt Draught of his Notions upon part of the Apocalyps,——As for me, (ſaith he) I am conſcious of my weakneſs and unworthineſs; being, when theſe kind of thoughts firſt poſſeſs'd me, looking another way with a prejudice incompatible with this——But if it be found the leaſt means of farther light, to the Father of Lights be the Glory. His Epiſtles *are full of the like thankfull acknowledgements. III. His ſerious diligence in the uſe of ſuch means as were moſt proper and inſtrumental to the attaining of that Knowledge he pray'd for. Where the moſt ſeemingly-earneſt Prayer is not attended with as earneſt Endeavours, it is but a lazy inſignificant wiſh, and in ſome a piece of vain Enthuſiaſm. But our Saviour's advice is not barely [a] Matth. 7. to [a] ask, but to ſeek; and ſuch was that of [b] Prov. 2. 4. Solomon, not onely to lift up the voice for Wiſedome and Underſtanding, but to ſeek her as Silver, and ſearch for her as for hid Treaſures. And of theſe counſells Mr. Mede was a carefull obſerver, who failed not to accompany his Prayers with his beſt Endeavours. And as he was not ſlight and ſudden in any thing, but proceeded with the greateſt care and caution imaginable in any important argument his Thoughts were fix'd upon, ſo was he more eſpecially ſerious and thoughtfull in his endeavours to interpret the Apocalyps and any other Prophetical Scriptures; a work to which he was peculiarly deſign'd and fitted by God, and moved to it by ſome interiour invitation and gracious Inſtinct of his Spirit, as the Author himſelf does ſomewhere acknowledge in his Epiſtles, where he alſo looks upon any abilities he had for interpreting ſuch Scriptures as that particular Talent God had intruſted to him, to improve to the beſt advantage in his ſervice: and therefore (as became a good and faithfull Servant, deſirous to approve himſelf to his Maſter in Heaven) * Eccleſ. 9. 10. whatſoever his hand did find to doe herein, he did it with all his might. And that he might wholly give himſelf to theſe ſtudies, (according to that of the * 1 Tim. 4. Apoſtle, ταῦτα μελέτα, ἐν τούτοις ἴσθι) and attend upon them without diſtraction, he prudently made choice of his moſt ſtill and vacant hours wherein he might be moſt free from the noiſe and tumult of other cares and diſtractive, but leſs pertinent, buſineſs; for he would tell his Friends, that he could doe nothing in theſe things but in ſilence and ſecurity of not being diſtracted by company and buſineſs. S. John received his Apocalyps in his Solitude at Patmos; and our Author found thoſe ſeaſons to be the moſt favourable and advantageous for gaining any abilities to reveal this Apocalyps, when he could be moſt retired and recollected in his [a] Cell or Study, where he might gather in and intend all the Powers of his Mind and poſſeſs his whole Soul, the Soul never acting ſo ſtrongly as when its whole force is thus united in ſuch Recollections.

One Inſtance (and a very remarkable one) of his great Diligence and Faithfulneſs in this Work he mentions in a [b] Letter of his to Dr. T. where acquainting him with the leiſurely and deliberate progreſs he made in his Expoſition of Apocal. chap. 14th, he addes, I am by nature cunctabundus in all things, but in this let no man blame me if I take more pauſe then ordinary; and he gives this Reaſon for it, Altiùs enim hoc animo meo inſedit, (ſaith he) That raſhly to be the Author of a falſe interpretation of Scripture is to take God's name in vain in an high degree: Words worthy to be written (to uſe * Jeremy's expreſſion) with a pen of iron or with the point of a diamond upon the table of the heart, in the moſt legible and laſting characters; Words arguing the Author's moſt ſerious and pious ſpirit, full of reverence for the Word of God, and moſt ſadly to be conſidered by the over-confident and ſuperficial Expoſitors of the Divine Oracles and Myſteries. * Ch. 17.

Thus much in general. The particular Means whereby he attain'd ſo great an inſight and skill in the Apocalyps and other abſtruſe Prophecies of Scripture were ſuch as theſe.

1. His accurate and judicious comparing of Scripture with Scripture, and obſerving the proper and genuine uſe of the like Words and Phraſes in ſeveral paſſages of Scripture, as they are either in the Original Languages, or in the ancient Verſions thereof, eſpecially the Chaldee, Greek and Syriack. For he found by good experience that ſome Scriptures do excellently illuſtrate others where the like Expreſſions are to be found; and conſequently that the Word of God is * a Lamp unto our feet and a Light unto our path, not onely as to the guiding of our life and practice, but alſo as to the directing our progreſs in the ſafeſt and cleareſt method of interpreting it ſelf; and that ſuch comparing of places is as needfull for our conduct in the more ſolitary and dark paſſages of Scripture, as that burning Pillar of fire was to the Iſraelites in their journeying through a waſt and deſolate Wilderneſs, which God gave them to be both a guide of the unknown journey, and an harmleſs Sun by night, as the Author of the Book of Wiſedom does elegantly expreſs it in ch. 18. 3. πυελφλεγῆ τύλον, ὁδηγὸν μὴ ἀγνώστῳ ὁδοιπορείας, ἥλιον ἢ ἀβλαβῆ, &c. * Pſ. 119.

Particularly he obſerv'd that the Style of the New Teſtament doth frequently imitate the Conſtruction and Propriety of the Hebrew in the Old, as alſo the Greek of the LXX, and that the uſe of many Words in the New Teſtament was not Vulgar but Helleniſtical, and agreeable to the uſe and importance of them in the Greek Bible. As for example, οἶνος τῦ θυμῦ τῆς πορνείας, Apocal. 14.8. Μαμωνᾶ ἀδικίας, Luke 16.9. εἰς νῖκος, 1 Cor. 15. 54. ὁ ἀπείρων ἐπ' βλασφημίαις, 2 Cor. 9. 6. πεφοβισμένοι τὸ θεῖον, Apocal. 13. 4. Χερυβὶμ δόξης, Heb. 9. 5. Several other examples might be mentioned; but it is a Truth ſo generally acknowledged by thoſe that are but competently acquainted with Sacred Philology, that it would be a needleſs task to produce the very many In- ſtances which might be brought in confirmation thereof.

2. His exact skill in History and the Cuſtomes both of the Jews and other Nations was a ſingular aid and advantage to him for explaining the obſcurer paſſages in the Apocalyps and Prophets. 'Tis true, Thoſe things that are abſolutely neceſſary to be known and practis'd in order to Salvation, they are plain and evident in the Scripture; more eſpecially to the good and honeſt heart, to the ſincerely-obedient Soul they are as clear as if they were written with a Sun-beam, (its * Tertullian's expreſſion) yea they are (as [a] S. Chryſoſtome hath phraſed it higher) τ ἡλιακῶν ἀκτίνων φανερώτερα. In thoſe things [b] that pertain to life and godlineſs, which lead to an happy life hereafter, and conſtitute that Holineſs here which is the onely way to that Happineſs, the Scripture is [c] clear and intelligible without any Paraphraſe or Comment, without any Criticiſms or Philological learning; they are not hard to underſtand, but hard to practiſe, (nor are they hard in this latter reſpect but through our own fault, through our unwillingneſs to implore and uſe thoſe aids which God is ready to afford to ſuch as diligently ſeek him:) Yet that [d] the man of God may be perfect and throughly furniſhed to every good work, and particularly to that good work which moſt properly becomes the man of God, the underſtanding and explaining of many other conſiderable parts of H. Scripture, it is requiſite that he ſhould be well read in Hiſtories and Antiquities, both Jewiſh, Chriſtian and Ethnick, and withall be indued with an happy ἀγχίνοια and Sagacity for the better diſcovering what Events recorded in History do particularly anſwer the Scripture-Prophecies. And that Mr. Mede was excellently accompliſh'd for ſuch purpoſes, is manifeſt to all judicious Readers of his Works; in particular, his Commentary upon the Apocalyps is an illuſtrious proof of the great and ſucceſsfull uſe he made of his acquaintance with the beſt Hiſtorians that treat of the ſucceſsive Changes and States of the Roman Empire, together with the Degrees of its Ruine, (repreſented in the * Viſion of the Seven Seals and Trumpets) as alſo of the Saracens, (thoſe * Locuſts that came out of the ſmoky and darkening Seduction of Mahomet) together with their Succeſſors the Turks, (thoſe * Horſemen from Euphrates) and likewiſe of the Chriſtian Church, whether in its primitive Purity (chap. 11. & 12.) or in its Degeneracy and Apoſtaſy (chap. 13. 14, &c.)

His acquaintance with the Jewiſh Antiquities enabled him to diſcover what was meant by that Glorious Seſſion of the Divine Majeſty upon a Throne, (as it is deſcribed in Apocal. 4.) and by thoſe * Four Animalia (the Enſignes of the Four Standards of the Iſraelitiſh Camp in the Wilderneſs) that were placed about the Tabernacle or Throne of God. From the ſame Antiquities he explain'd the Two Courts of the Temple (mention'd Apocal. 11.) the Inner Court for the Prieſts, the Middle wall of partition between the Jews and Gentiles does plainly allude hereunto. But not to mention any more Obſervations of this nature, there are ſeveral Phraſes alſo in the Scripture illuſtrated by him out of the ſame Monuments of Antiquity; as the Σεβόμενοι, Οἰκουμένη μέλλουσα, Δεύτερος θάνατος [a] the ſecond Death, (an expreſſion four times uſed in the Apocalyps) and (that which occurrs thrice in the ſame Book) [b] the being arayed or walking in white garments. Other Inſtances might be added, but theſe may ſuffice for a Specimen.

His acquaintance with the Ethnick Antiquities enabled him to explain the Δέκαλον τῆς πόλεως or Tenth part of the City, (Apocal. 11. 13.) the two Eagle's wings, (chap. 12. 14.) the receiving the Beaſt's mark in their right hands or in their foreheads, (chap. 13. 16.) as there is mention alſo of the Virgin-Company having the Lamb's and his Father's name in their foreheads, (chap. 14. 1.) with ſundry other Paſſages in that Book of the like import.

But beſides theſe and the foregoing Inſtances, I might here mention ſeveral other Paſſages in Scripture which the Author had not occaſion to touch upon in his Diſcourſes, whether Words and Phraſes, or whole Paragraphs, (if not almoſt whole Chapters ſometimes) not to be illuſtrated without skill in Hiſtory and Antiquities: as (to name onely ſome few) ἡμᾶς ἐχάτιδς ἀπέδειξεν ὡς ὀπθαναλίδς, ὅτι θέαλρον ἐγενήθημεν, &c. 1 Cor. 4. 9. and the white Stone, with a new name written therein, given to him that overcometh, Apocal. 2. 17. as alſo that in Acts 19. 2. where the Chriſtians at Epheſus tell S. Paul, We have not ſo much as heard εἰ Πνεῦμα ἅγιόν ἐστι whether there be an Holy Ghoſt, or (as the Hebrew Maſters phraſe it) רוח הקודש. And for that Paragraph in S. John 7. from verſ. 37. to verſ. 40. containing what was ſpoken by our Saviour in the laſt day, that great day, of the Feaſt of Tabernacles, the elegancy and fitneſs, as well as the genuine importance, of thoſe expreſſions is moſt clear to ſuch onely as apprehend the reference they have to the Cuſtomes and practices of the Jews on that day, recorded in their ancient Authors. Nor can that in 1 Cor. 9. from verſ. 23. to the end be illuſtrated without skill in the Ethnick Antiquities, the whole Paragraph alluding to the Cuſtomes of thoſe Exerciſes and Games kept at Corinth, (as they were alſo in 3 other places of Greece) and call'd Iſthmia certamina from that Iſthmus on which that great and wealthy City of Corinth was ſituate, and where thoſe Sports were celebrated every fifth year: Upon the knowledge of which Cuſtomes it would appear that the Apoſtles expreſſions in this Paragraph are most pertinent and Emphatical. Much of S. Matth. chap. 24. relating to the Destruction of Jerusalem, (together with the Signes and Forerunners thereof) is to be explain'd out of Jewish and Ethnick Historians, and very particularly and clearly too out of those Authors who yet knew nothing of our Saviour's Predictions therein, nor of that ancient Prediction in Micah, ch. 3. 12. (quoted also by the Prophet * Jeremy) Zion shall be plowed as a field; which was also most punctually fulfilled, as were the other. I will name but one Book of Scripture more, and it shall be that of Daniel, where the Interpretation of both the 8th and 11th Chapters does wholly depend upon History; as also what in Chap. 7. is said of the Four Monarchies, and particularly the fitness of representing the Third Monarchy (that of the Greeks) by the Leopard with four wings, vers. 6. and in chap. 8. by the [a] He-goat, and the [b] first King thereof by that קרן חזות or notable Horn (vers. 5, & 21.) together with the Four Horns that came up after it was broken (vers. 8.) as likewise the fitness of representing the Second Monarchy (that of the Medes and Persians) by the Ram with two Horns (vers. 3.) of which the Author has a short hint in his Com. Apocal. p. 588. to which might be added that Moris erat apud Persas aureum caput arietinum pro diademate gestare, as appears from Ammian. Marcellinus l. 19 The clear understanding of these and many other particulars in those Chapters depends altogether upon History.

By all which it is manifest how necessary it is for the full understanding of several parts of Scripture to be acquainted (as the Author was) with the Original Languages, ancient Versions, the Genius and Idioms of the Scripture-style, and also with History, and the ancient Customes both of the Jews and others: without which it would be a fruitless attempt, even for such as otherwise are of good abilities, to undertake to give a pertinent and satisfying account of the foremention'd (and other the like) passages of Scripture. And as for those who, though they are [c] ψυχικοὶ, πνεῦμα μὴ ἔχοντες, and bring not forth the [d] Fruits of the Spirit, would engross the Spirit wholly to themselves, (as the Jews did the Messias to their Nation, to the excluding of the Gentiles,) and ignorantly despise all Humane Learning and means of Knowledge; what has been said may abundantly check their vain confidence; such Scriptures as I have instanced in (and others of the like nature) being not to be explain'd without skill in the learned Languages, History and Antiquity, which is not to be had but by a studious converse with the best Authors: except they will say that such skill and knowledge is infused, and that the particular Events and Res gestæ, at large treated of in Books, are made known to them by extraordinary Revelation; which yet they are so wary as not to pretend to, as they are also so wise as not to pretend

3. His diligent enquiry and happy inſight into the Oriental Figurative Expreſſions and Prophetick Schemes throughout the Scripture. For he obſerv'd that there were, eſpecially in the Writings of the Prophets, certain Symbols, Emblems and Hieroglyphicall repreſentations, which were no leſs familiar to thoſe Eaſtern Nations then our Poetical Schemes and Pictures are to us: and that the true meaning of theſe Symbols was to be found out by ſome ſuch means as theſe; as 1. By comparing thoſe ſeveral places of Scripture where they occurre, and obſerving what they uſe to ſtand for, or what their uniform ſignification and notion is in ſuch places, which may be farther cleared (as by conſidering the fitneſs and analogy between thoſe Symbols and the Things repreſented by them, ſo likewiſe) by attending to ſome Plainer expreſſions in the Context, which are a certain Key to the underſtanding of thoſe that are Figurative and Emblematical. Thus what in Jer. 4. 23. is figuratively deſcribed, The Earth is without form and void [תהו ובהו, the words uſed Gen. 1. 2. of the old Chaos] and the Heavens have no light, is the ſame with what is plainly expreſs'd in the Context, The whole Land is ſpoiled, The whole Land ſhall be deſolate. And that in Haggai 2. 6, & 21. I will ſhake the Heavens and the Earth, is explain'd by the words immediately following. Thus in Zech. 11. 2. The Cedar is fallen, the defenced Foreſt is come down, is no other then that which is plainly ſet down in the ſame verſe, The mighty (or the Nobles, אדירים) are ſpoiled. But in Dan. chap. 7. and ch. 8. and in Apocal. 17. much of the Viſions is there explain'd, and the Symbols therein are render'd out of the Prophetical ſtyle afterwards into more eaſy and familiar ſenſe. 2. By obſerving how theſe Oriental Symbols are interpreted and render'd into plainer expreſſions by the Chaldee Paraphraſts, who may juſtly be preſum'd to know beſt what was meant thereby in thoſe Countries: as (for example) when the Prophets frequently ſpeak of the Sun's being darkned in its going forth, the Moon not giving her light, and elſewhere of the Starrs falling from Heaven upon the Earth (a phraſe not to be underſtood Literally) the Targum renders theſe and the like Prophetick ſtrains in words that ſignify the diminution of the Glory and Felicity of the State, and the Downfall of the Grandees and Chiefs therein; Sun, Moon and Starrs being put according to the Prophetick ſtyle for the Higher Powers, Princes and Peers, thoſe Great Lights ſhining in the Firmament

See a particular account of ſuch Prophetick Symbols as theſe in the Author's Comment. Apocal. p. 555, 556, 570, 578. and a yet more particular account in Dr. More's Prophetick Alphabet in his forementioned Synopſis Prophetica, Book 1. Chap. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

of the Political World. Thus also when the Prophets denounce God's Judgements to come upon all the Cedars and Oaks, (Esay 2.) and when the Firre-trees and Oaks are bid to howl (Zech. 11.) the Targum instead of mentioning these tall and goodly Trees has מלכי עממיא and טורני מרינתא Princes of the People and Rulers of Provinces. 3. By consulting such Authors as had collected any Fragments and Remains of the ancient Onirocriticks, as Apomasar or Achmetes the Arabian (published by the learned Rigaltius) had of the Onirocriticks of the Indians, Persians and Egyptians; concerning which I need not enlarge, the Author having inserted some pertinent Extracts thereof (together with his judgment of their fitness to illustrate the meaning of the Prophetical Representations) in his Commentary upon the Apocalyps, pag. 559, and elsewhere. By which Onirocriticks it may appear what the Eastern nations did commonly suppose to be signified by such Symbols.

4. His observing things in distant places of the Apocalyps to Synchronize and belong to the same time: whence he was well assured That it was a false Hypothesis and a Fundamental Error in any Commentators to think That all the Prophecies and Visions in this Mysterious Book are placed in such an order as is agreeable to the order of time wherein they were fulfill'd, or That the Events succeeded one another in the same Series and order as the Visions do; and consequently for them to frame their Interpretation of the Visions according to that deceitfull Hypothesis, and not according to that safe guidance and light which the Synchronisms afford, must needs expose them to manifold mistakes from first to last, and encumber the whole work with such Difficulties, Inconsistencies and Incongruities in applying the Prophecies to History and Events, as cannot possibly be excus'd and removed by all their wit, were it greater then it is. Of such consequence it is for all that would interpret the Apocalyptick Visions to take heed to the Apocalyptick Synchronisms ὡς λύχνῳ φαίνοντι ἐν αὐχμηρῷ τόπῳ, (to use S.* Peter's expression) as unto a light that shineth in a dark place: Otherwise their whole Fabrick of Annotations will be but as a Building without a sure Ground-work and Foundation, an House built upon the Sand, which is but a fluid and uncertain bottome; a Pile of private Fancies, slight Conceits and weak Conjectures: And though there may be some things therein which may have a shew of Learning and a seeming Concinnity to the injudicious and unskilfull in the Prophetick Style; yet the main of their performance (for want of attending to this and the other means of knowledge mention'd in the foregoing particulars) will be little better then a more pompous, solemn and plausible Impertinency, and upon the whole matter their Enterprise no other then magno conatu nugas agere, with a great deal a-doe to doe nothing.

* 2 Ep. 1.

The

The glory of the First discovering these Synchronisms is peculiarly due to Mr. Mede, and upon this score shall the present and succeeding Ages owe a great respect and veneration to his Memory: For of these Synchronisms he might justly affirm what Aristotle doth of his Syllogisms, (the invention of which method of reasoning he challengeth to himself) * Ταύτης δὲ τῆς πραγματείας οὐδὲν παντελῶς ἦν πρχε, and again, περὶ ὧν τὸ συλλογίζεσθαι παντελῶς οὐδὲν εἴχομεν πρότερον λέγειν ἄλλο· ἀλλὰ πολὺ χρόνον ἐπονοῦμεν. This was Mr. Mede's noble εὕρημα, as well usefull and serviceable as new and curious: and it was an argument of his great judgement, as to discern the proper Events and Times to which these Visions are to be applied, so likewise to discover those Passages in the Apocalyps which, though dispersed here and there, are Synchronal and Homogeneal; there being certain Characters and Intimations secretly couched in this Book of Mysteries, whereby (as also by considering the nature of the things themselves that are Contemporary) the Synchronisms of the Visions may be found out.

* De Sophist. Elench. l. 2. c. ult.

I shall not need to shew how necessary it is for those that goe down to this Prophetick Sea to steer by the guidance of these Synchronisms, (that lightsome Pharos, and indeed the only Cynosura to direct those that are upon this great Deep,) the Author himself having fully and undeniably done this all along in his Clavis Apocalyptica, and summarily in the * two last pages thereof: Nor will the excellency and advantages of this Discovery be doubted of by any that shall with patience and attention peruse what he hath written in a close and concise way (agreeably to his Mathematical Genius) of the Apocalyptick Synchronisms in that Clavis.

Thus much for the Third General Means of Knowledge. I must be shorter in what follows.

IV. A Fourth Means whereby he arrived at so great a measure of Knowledge was, His Freedome from Partiality, Prejudice and Prepossession, Pride, Passion and Self-love, Self-seeking, Flattery and covetous Ambition.

1. How free he was from all Partiality, there are many pregnant Proofs in his Writings. It is a common, yet a most true, observation, That with many men Maxima pars studiorum est studium partium; but with him it was otherwise. In some of his * Epistles he complains that it was Partiality that undoes all, and that Studium partium together with Prejudice is an invincible mischief, while it leaves no place for admission of Truth that brings any disadvantage to the Side or party; that being the Rule which they examine all by. And therefore being sensible and aware of this evil, he professeth (in Ep. 96.) that he endeavour'd as much as possibly he could to ſubdue himſelf to ſuch a Free temper of Mind as not to deſire to find for this ſide rather then that. And his Endeavours herein being hearty and ſerious, they were conſequently (through God's bleſſing) ſucceſſfull, inſomuch that he judged himſelf highly obliged upon this account to return this gratefull acknowledgement to Almighty God, (in Ep. 56.) I thank God (ſaith he) I never made any thing hitherto the caſter of my reſolution but Reaſon and Evidence, on what ſide ſoever the advantage or diſadvantage fell. The ſingular availableneſs of ſuch free and unbiaſſed affections in the purſuit of Knowledge he hath excellently expreſs'd in that clear profeſſion of his (in Ep. 96.) If I have hit upon any Truth, it is wholly to be attributed to my indifferency in ſuch ſearches, to embrace whatſoever I ſhould find, without any regard whether it were for the advantage of one ſide or other. This and the forementioned paſſages are excellent words, the genuine language of a Son of Wiſedome, the lively picture and true character of his and every generous Soul, every way becoming a right Virtuoſo and member of the Philalethean Academy. From this Free-ſpiritedneſs (together with the ingenuous effects thereof) were the * Beræans ſtyled εὐγενέστεροι a more noble ſort of Chriſtians. They that are ſhort of this Excellency and Largeneſs of ſpirit, ſeldome attain * δοκιμάζειν τὰ διαφέροντα to prove things that differ, or to approve things that are excellent, ſeldome riſe to what is above mean and vulgar, ſlight and ſuperficial, but are condemned to what is ſervile and Pedantick, and judge themſelves unworthy of the nobleſt Truths, and withall are expos'd to the ſame Falſhood and Miſtakes that the Perſon or Party whom * they have in admiration becauſe of advantage, or the Vulgus in any rank of men (being of the ſame illiberal and contracted ſpirit with themſelves) are liable to: For it is a Maxime equally true and generous, Suum eſt cuique Ordini vulgus, & optima ſemper pauciſſimis placuere. To which I may fitly adjoyn that pertinent Obſervation of Seneca, * Non tam bene cum rebus humanis agitur, ut meliora pluribus placeant.

2. Nor was he leſs free from all Prejudice and Prepoſſeſſion, with the attendants thereof, Pride, Paſſion and Self-love.

Men come to be prejudic'd againſt Truth, either by their diſguſt and diſaffection to the perſon that repreſents it: an argument this is of their little Judgement, but great Paſſion: but from this he was ſecured by his Charity enlarged to all men, and by the cool and calme temper of his ſpirit; he could patiently endure the contradiction of others, and reply without paſſion; witneſs his ſober and pacate Anſwer to Lawenus his hot * Strictures.

Or elſe they are prejudic'd by their ſcornfull diſeſteem of others: an effect this is of their high Self-conceit and ſurly Pride: and from

from this he was ſecured by his great Humility and Modeſty, whereof there are many clear Proofs in his Writings. Accordingly when he had to doe with Mr. Hayns about ſome Tenets of his in reference to ſeveral paſſages in Daniel and the Apocalyps, he plainly tells him, * I profeſs to you, I contemn not your diſcourſes, but do diligently and apud conſcientiam meam weigh your arguments, howſoever it comes to paſs I am not perſuaded by them: and farther, ſo far he was from ſlighting what was done by thoſe that were eager for the ſame Tenets, that he aſſures him * he had read the moſt that had or could be ſaid for thoſe Opinions either by the chief Patrons thereof or their followers, and ſo had uſed all that Diligence that was due in the ſearch of Truth. And herein he was Exemplary to every ingenuous lover of Knowledge, and contrary to the proud and paſſionate man that is conceited and reſolved upon his Opinion, (Οἷος πέπυσται, τοὶ δὲ σκιαὶ ἀίσσουσι) and is therefore impatient to hear or conſider any thing that oppoſes it. But Humility affords a very conſiderable advantage for the clearer diſcerning what is True and Right, while it prepares men to receive any better information from others. This effect it had in Mr. Mede, and upon this ſcore how heartily does he thank Lud. de Dieu for ſuggeſting to him an eaſier explication of [a] [ἐν μέσῳ τῶν θρόνων καὶ κύκλῳ τῶν θρόνων, Apocal. 4. 6.] and for acquainting him with his [b] notion about כְּרוּב Cherub ſignifying an Oxe, from the Chaldee כְּרַב [c] Cherab, which is Aravit, whereby his obſervation upon the 4 Animalia in Apocal. 4. 7. was confirmed? And with the like affection he acknowledges Mr. Haydock's [d] ingenious conjecture about the form of the Seven-ſealed Book, (Apocal. 5.) as alſo his being better informed about the Number of the Beaſt [666] by Mr. Potter's Diſcourſe concerning it, with which Diſcovery he was ſo highly pleas'd, that (not without ſome παθος) he affirm'd it * to be one of the happieſt Tracts that had come into the world, and ſuch as could not be read without much admiration. In ſhort, He did not take himſelf to be Infallible, and therefore was not Unalterable, where the change was for the better, (and the change is ever ſuch, where we part with a plauſible Miſtake or with a ſpecious Probability for ſolid Truth and clear Demonſtration) but he was always ready to hear another's Reaſon, and to yield himſelf a willing Captive to the Evidence of Truth. For to be overcome by Truth and Reaſon, makes the conquered a gainer, and puts him into a better ſtate then he was in before; nor will he fail (if he know his own happineſs) to make one in that joyous acclamation, * Great is Truth, and mighty above all things: She is the Strength, Power and Majeſty of all ages. Bleſſed be the God of Truth.

Or elſe men come to be prejudic'd by an undue affection to their Idola ſpecûs, (as the L. Verulam calls them) their peculiar Conceits, ſome

Notions and Speculations of their own, by which they either are or would be known; being fondly perſuaded that things are ſo as they imagine them, or vehemently deſirous that they ſhould be ſo: and therefore it is no wonder if, being thus prepoſſeſs'd, they have loſt their taſt, and wrong'd their κριτηριον, that they cannot readily diſcern between Good and Evil, but (as the Prophet Eſay ſpeaks) put bitter for ſweet and ſweet for bitter, and are eaſily brought to fanſy that to be True and Right which they paſſionately will to be ſuch, in order to ſome corrupt deſign and intereſt eagerly purſued by them, or to the gratifying of thoſe ſeveral Luſts wherewith they are led away, (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) and are therefore unable to come to the knowledge of the Truth. *And if they that are thus affected do ſometimes for a pretence conſult the Holy Scriptures, they come ſo fully poſſeſs'd that this or that Opinion and Practice of theirs is True and Right, or ſo ſtrongly reſolved to find it ſo, that even the Divine Oracles ſeem to them to return ſuch an Anſwer as they promiſed themſelves they ſhould receive and moſt impetuouſly luſted after. But ſuch was the excellency of his ſpirit, that he could not but abhorre all Servile obſequiouſneſs whatſoever; as accounting it a certain argument of a Poorneſs of ſpirit either to flatter, or to invite and receive Flatteries; and withall conſidering that if thoſe of Power and high degree were men of inward worth and excellent ſpirits, they would ſhew themſelves ſuch in their valuing him not the leſs, but rather more, for his not applying himſelf to thoſe ignoble arts and courſe policies proper to Paraſites and ambitious men, who ſpeak not their own words nor ſeem to think their own thoughts, but wholly enſlave themſelves to the thoughts and words, the luſts and humors of thoſe by whom (for this pretended doing honour to them) they ſeek to be advantaged. Beſides, he might well think that he ſhould rather undervalue and leſſen them, if he ſuppos'd they would regard him the more for thoſe or the like inſtances of an officious Flattery: as if they were not able to diſcern that Frankneſs and Openneſs of Spirit and Converſation, Singleneſs of Heart and a Cordial readineſs to ſerve others in love * out of a pure heart, is truely Chriſtian, Generous and Manly; and, on the contrary, that Flattery and Fawning is Dog-like, Baſe and Mercenary, and laſts not long: for though Paraſites pretend to ſerve their Maſters with great devotion, (a devotion ſo great, as if they thought themſelves rather their Creatures then God's) yet in truth * δουλεύουσιν τῇ ἑαυτῶν κοιλίᾳ, they rather ſerve their own belly; and when their Maſters ceaſe to be in a capacity of ſerving them, theſe men alſo ceaſe to regard them, and value them no more then an uſeleſs Tool, or (to uſe the Prophet's expreſſion) a broken Veſſel, wherein there is no pleaſure.

* 1 Pet. 1. ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας ἀγαπήσατε ἐκτενῶς.

* Rom. 16.

Other Particulars might be added, but theſe may ſuffice to ſhew how Free he was from that which is apt to tempt men to judge amiſs: For it appears from the nature of the things themſelves, that Partiality, Prejudice, Pride and Paſſion, Self-love, Love of the World, Flattery and Covetous Ambition do importunely ſollicite men to make a falſe judgement, corrupt their Affections, wrong their Underſtandings, enfeeble their Faculties, unhappily dwarf their growth in uſefull Learning, and keep them back from ſuch an excellent improvement in Knowledge, eſpecially Divine Knowledge, as otherwiſe they might attain. And therefore had not Mr. Mede been free from the power of theſe Luſts, he could never have perform'd ſo well as he hath done in any of his Tracts or Diſcourſes, eſpecially upon the more abſtruſe and myſterious paſſages of H. Scripture. Thoſe therefore that are not of ſuch a free and enlarged ſpirit, but are fondly addicted either to Themſelves or Parties, and are enſlaved to Honour, Wealth and particular narrow Intereſts, and are under the power of Pride and Paſſion, ſerving divers Luſts and Pleaſures, they muſt needs be leſs excellent, leſs improved in their ſtudies, leſs ſucceſsfull in their Intellectual adventures then otherwiſe they might have been, had they been * eſtabliſhed with a Free ſpirit. Nor had ſome Authors of great reading and fame for Learning ever fallen into ſuch miſtakes, but their Writings had been freer from imperfections, and a greater reſpect they had ſecured to their Memories, had they been leſs Paſſionate, leſs Envious, Proud and Self-conceited, more Free and unbiaſſed, more Humble and Modeſt, as alſo more faithfull to that excellent Rule of S. Paul, * Μὴ ὑπερφρονεῖν παρ' ὃ δεῖ φρονεῖν, ἀλλὰ φρονεῖν εἰς τὸ σωφρονεῖν. * Pſ. 51. * Rom. 12. 3.

This is ſomewhat of that great deal more which might be obſerved of the Author's Largeneſs and Freedome of ſpirit; which yet in him was not accompanied with any unbecoming reflexions upon others, (as if he deſign'd to leſſen the due eſteem of what was laudable in their performances) much leſs with any irreverence and oppoſition to the eſtabliſhed Articles of Religion, and prejudice to the Peace of the Church or State; but on the contrary was an innocent, ingenuous, peaceable Freedome of enquiring into ſuch Theories onely as do not at all claſh with the Doctrine eſtabliſhed, and was ever attended with a ſweet Modeſty, a ſingular Sedateneſs and Sobriety of ſpirit, and a due regard to Authority. And whoſoever would reade the Author with moſt profit and judgement, muſt reade him alſo with a free, unpaſſionate and unprejudiced ſpirit: That Saying, Omnis Liber eo ſpiritu legi debet, quo ſcriptus eſt, is true as well of every uſefull Book as of the Divinely-inſpired Books of H. Scripture.

Thus much of the Fourth Help or Inſtrument of Knowledge. I ſhall mention but one particular more, but it is a very weighty and important one, of ſingular uſe and abſolute neceſſity for the gaining the Beſt Knowledge; wherein I might be as large as in the foregoing, but becauſe I would haſten to conclude the Preface, I ſhall diſpatch it in fewer lines.

V. The Fifth and Laſt Means whereby the Author arrived at ſuch an Eminency of Knowledge was, His faithfull endeavour after ſuch a Purity of Soul as is requiſite to fit it for the fuller and clearer diſcerning of Divine Myſteries.

The neceſſity of ſuch a Purity of Heart and Life in order to this End appears by ſeveral expreſs places of Scripture: as where it is ſaid, The Secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, Pſal. 25. The Fear of the Lord is the beginning of Wiſedome, and דעת קדשים the knowledge of the holy ones is Underſtanding, Prov. 9. (their way of knowing is Knowledge and Underſtanding indeed) and again, The pure in heart ſhall ſee God, (Matth. 5.) But none of the wicked ſhall underſtand, (ſays the Angel to Daniel concerning the Myſteries mentioned in Chap. 12.) And agreeable to theſe and many ſuch paſſages of H. Scripture is that in the Book of Wiſedome, chap. 1. Into a malicious Soul Wiſedome ſhall not enter, nor dwell in the Body that is ſubject unto ſin.

The

The ſame Truth is plainly acknowledged by the Beſt and more Divine Philoſophers; and accordingly they frequently diſcourſe of their Ἀρεταὶ καθαρτικαὶ Purgative Vertues as neceſſary to prepare the Soul for the knowledge of the moſt Excellent and Higheſt Truths, (as the Myſtical or Contemplative Divines ſpeaking of the way to Divine knowledge place the Via Purgativa before the Via Illuminativa:) and it is a known Maxime of Plato in his Phædo, Μὴ καθαρῷ καθαρὸν ἐφάπτεσθαι μὴ ὀ θεμιτὸν ἦ, implying that Impure Souls are not admitted to any inward converſe with God moſt Pure and Holy. That Wickedneſs is deſtructive of Principles, is alſo Ariſtotle's obſervation, Ἡ κακία φθαρτικὴ ἀρχῶν. Immorality or a Vicious life unfits men for the nobleſt Speculations, ſo that they can neither know Divine nor Moral Truths * καθὼς δεῖ γνῶναι as they ought to know, and as they might have known, had they had a true reſentment of Morality, and an inward eſteem of the * ὅσα δίκαια, ὅσα ἁγνὰ, ὅσα προσφιλῆ, ὅσα εὔφημα, the things that are juſt, pure, and lovely, and of good report. And though ſuch men may ſometimes hit upon ſome Philoſophical Notions; yet even in the diſcovering the Myſteries of Nature they had done far better, and had excell'd themſelves, had they been more purged from brutiſh Senſuality and all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit. I will onely adde this, That for a moſt clear and undeniable proof of this Aſſertion, [That Morality and a Good life affords the greateſt advantages to a more excellent knowledge of not onely Divine, but Philoſophicall Truths] we have in this Age the unparallel'd Works of ſome eminently-learned and nobly-accompliſh'd Writers, who really are Virtuoſi according to the ancient Latine importance of the word; and not merely in the Italian ſenſe, which applies it onely to the Wits and ſuch as are any way Ingenious, be they or be they not morally Vertuous.

* Phil. 4.

But that which I chiefly intended under this laſt Particular was, to acquaint the Reader how deeply ſenſible Mr. Mede was of the indiſpenſable neceſsity of a Purified Mind and Holy Life in order to the fuller and clearer diſcerning of Divine Myſteries. This was his firm belief, and it obliged him to endeavours worthy of it. To which purpoſe I ſhall here produce a very obſervable paſſage out of a Letter of his to an ancient Friend in Lincolnſhire, who having received, and with great ſatisfaction read, ſome Papers from Mr. Mede containing his firſt Eſſays upon part of the Apocalyps, and thereupon writing to him with all ſerious importunity, That he would earneſtly pray for and endeavour after a great meaſure of Holineſs, to the mortification of Sin more and more, that thereby he might be prepared to receive a greater meaſure of Divine Illumination, and be as a Veſſel of honour choſen by God to bear and convey his Truth to others, with much more of the like import, concluding with this requeſt, You ſee how how bold I am with you, but let love bury that Exorbitancy, &c. To this his Christian advice Mr. Mede return'd this excellent Answer.

Sir, I thank you heartily for your good Admonitions, and am so far from interpreting your Love Exorbitancy, that I confess myself to have much need of this and more; and therefore desire you to second this your Love with Prayer to God for me, that he would vouchsafe me that his Sanctifying Spirit, and that measure of Grace which may make me capable of such things as he shall be pleased to reveal, and hath in some sort (praised be his Name) already revealed unto me; in the contemplation whereof I find more true Contentment then the greatest Dignities, which Ambition so hunteth after, could ever have afforded me. I have considered what S. Paul saith *, The Natural and Carnal man is altogether uncapable of the things of God's Spirit, neither can he know them, &c. and what our Saviour saith *, If any man will doe his Father's will, he shall (then) know of the doctrine whether it be of God: and I give thanks to Almighty God, who hath made the Light of these his wonderfull Mysteries to kindle that Warmth in my Heart, which I felt not till I began to see them, and which have made me that which they found me not——

* Jo. 7.

This passage out of Mr. Mede's * original Letter I thought very worthy to be made publick and inserted here upon so fit an occasion, both for that excellent and genuine relish of an humble and serious Piety in every line thereof, as also because it is an illustrious Attestation to the forementioned Truth, That an Holy Heart and Life is a necessary Qualification to the right discerning of Divine Mysteries; agreeable whereunto is that in the Greek Version of Prov. 1. 7. (which yet is rather a Paraphrase then a bare Translation, there being more in the Greek then in the Original Hebrew) Ἐυσέβεια εἰς Θεὸν ἀρχὴ αἰσθήσεως.

* The rest of the Letter did not need to be publish-ed; it treating either of private busines, or of what he has in other Letters or Tracts more fully spoken of.

AND now I have passed over the Three long Stages of this Preface. In the last Head of Advertisements I have acquainted the Reader by what Methods and Helps the Author arrived at so great a measure of skill in the Scripture, particularly in the more abstruse and mysterious parts thereof. And thus may others also attain to a considerable Knowledge, and purchase this goodly Pearl, this Treasure hid in the field of Prophetical Scriptures, if they are willing to be at the same cost and bid to the worth of it, and not ignorantly nor sordidly undervalue it: For Wisedome, and particularly this kind of Wisedome and Knowledge, is not to be had at a cheaper rate; it is * πολύτιμος μαργαρίτης a Pearl of great price, *and worthy of all that we have to bestow, to purchase it. crypha; crypha, and mind the Book of Daniel no more then they do the Apocryphal Story of Bel and the Dragon, and therefore exercise not their good parts nor bestow that serious diligence about the δυσνόητα in Scripture as they use to do about other kind of difficulties, whether in Philosophy or other parts of Learning, it's no wonder they complain the Jewel is too dear, when they have no mind to give the full price for it; and that all Labour after such knowledge is either excessively hard or useless, whenas yet through their delicateness and love of their own ease, or for some other reason, they never made any due triall. But in other things Difficulty is no argument, it rather whets and animates men of brave spirits: and that all * Excellent things are hard, is so confess'd a Truth, that it has pass'd into a vulgar Proverb. The first and least therefore that is to be done by such as are of another spirit, and are minded to search these as well as the other Scriptures, is by a frequent attentive reading of the Prophetical Visions to fix the main passages thereof in their minds: (otherwise both the style and matter, the great things of the Prophets (as Hosea speaks of the רבי תורה * the great things of the Law) will be always counted as a strange thing.) This being done, they must (if they would succeed in their search) apply themselves to those Five Means and Instruments of Knowledge, as Mr. Mede did, and prosper'd, and by his Writings hath lessen'd the difficulty of these Studies, and made the way plainer for others then he found it for himself. And as the Study of the Prophetick Scriptures would by an heedfull attending to those Five Directions and Helps prove a successfull labour, and therefore far from being excessively hard or incumbred with invincible difficulties; so would it likewise be far from vain and useless: for these Scriptures, as well as the other, being written for our learning and use, (as I have briefly and (I think) clearly proved in this Preface under the Second Head of Advertisements,) there would accrue to us this peculiar Advantage, (besides many others) That by a right understanding of the genuine meaning of these Prophetick Visions, we should be the better enabled to vindicate the Prophecies from those corrupt Glosses which unlearned and unstable Souls (ill-willers also to the stability and peace of Christian States and Kingdoms) would force upon them, perverting these Scriptures for their own Self-ends to the favouring of their unquiet humours and unpeaceable practices, which being rightly understood are the grand Interest and Concernment of Christendome, and certainly make for the Support and Encouragement of the Reformed part thereof, of which through God's mercy we are Members.

In the Second sort of Advertisements I have observed some few things of the Author and his Writings, and shall not need here to superadde any thing to court the Reader to a due esteem of them; His own works will praise him (I say not, in the Gates, as the phrase is Prov. 31. ult. but) in the private Closets and quiet Retirements of the studious ſtudious enquirers after Truth, if read there with ſerious attention (which is moſt neceſſary in the peruſing of his Labours upon the Prophetical Scriptures) and with a mind as free from prejudice as from diſtractions. It is not to be doubted but that ſome parts of theſe Writings may generally pleaſe and (as the Author of the Book of *Wiſedome obſerves of Manna) agree to every taſt; nor is it unlikely but that ſome other parts, though highly pleaſing to ſome, may be leſs gratefull to others of a different perſuaſion, as Manna itſelf was lothſome to ſome murmuring Iſraelites. But for the better diſpoſing of them to what is fair and ingenuous, this may be fit to be added, That the Author in his life-time did not affect any * dominion over the faith of others, (as if he were Infallible) nor was he ambitious after his death to be Idoliz'd; but this was clearly his diſpoſition, (as he expreſſeth himſelf in a * *Letter to Dr.*T.) not to be affected how much or how little others differ'd from him; and this diſpoſition (*he ſaid) did ſo much the more increaſe in him as he took the liberty to examine either his own or other mens perſuaſions: ſo deſirous he was that the Apoſtle's Rule ſhould in this caſe prevail, Try all things, hold faſt that which is good. And therefore ſuch men would ſhew themſelves very ill-natur'd and ill-bred as well as indiſcreet, and unmindfull of the Fallibility of Humane nature, as alſo unacquainted with ingenuous Learning, (of which the old Verſe is moſt true, Emollit mores, nec ſinit eſſe feros)

if they ſhould unwiſely diſvalue and peeviſhly reject the whole for ſome paſſages not agreeing to their particular Sentiments; or prove ſo rigid and tenacious, as not to afford that Candour and Charity which is but a juſt reſpect, as well eaſy, as fit to be paid to the Labours of Worthy men highly meriting de Republica literaria. *And their Rudeneſs and Incivility would be the greater, becauſe Mr.*Mede doth propound his ſenſe not with any either magiſteriall or provoking language, but with ſuch modeſty, calmneſs and ſobriety, as may deſerve rather a fair reception then any churliſh and unkind uſage in the world.

In the Firſt Head of Advertiſements I have given the Reader (for his fuller ſatisfaction) ſome account of thoſe long and toilſome labours which I could not think too hard and grievous to undergoe both for the honour of the Author's memory and the Reader's greater benefit; chuſing (though at an humble diſtance) to follow that great Labourer in God's Vineyard, Bleſſed S. Paul, who was * ἐν κόπῳ καὶ μόχθῳ, ἐν ϋπνοις, ἐν ἀγρυπνίαις πολλάκις, ἐν νηστείαις πολλάκις, rather then * to doe this work of the Lord negligently. May the Reader with eaſe and delight, with profit and advantage peruſe theſe Writings thus prepared for him with a diligence and induſtry not very ordinary nor over-eaſy, and therefore not over-haſty, and yet not more leiſurely or ſlow then the labour and weightineſs of the undertaking (together with the urgency of other intercurrent cares) did exact.

THE

Of the Reverend and moſt Learned
Joſeph Mede, B.D.

1. IT hath been the practice of the beſt Hiſtorians, ſometimes in ſhort Characters and ſometimes in larger Deſcriptions, to repreſent the Nature, Sayings and Manners of thoſe Perſons whoſe Actions have rendred them Illuſtrious whether in War or Peace. And it is a Cuſtome very commendable; for by this means a juſt Right is perform'd to the Glory of their Memories, their Exemplary Vertues are preſerv'd in the world by Monuments which Time cannot demoliſh, and Ingenuous Readers are highly gratified, who are naturally deſirous to know as much as they can of thoſe of whom they have heard any thing which is extraordinary.

2. The ſame Reaſon hath made it a Cuſtome to write the Lives of Authors eminent for their Learning, and to annex them to their Works. And indeed ſuch Hiſtorical Pictures ſeem no where plac'd more fitly then in the Beginnings of thoſe Books which were deſign'd by their excellent Authors to promote true Religion and Piety in the world: Men being no leſs prepar'd for a chearfull reception of Divine Truth, when they ſee it preſented by a Worthy perſon, then they are apt to give an eaſy credit to good News, when they are perſuaded of the Integrity of him that brings it.

We have therefore attempted to give a Faithfull, though Imperfect, Pourtrait of this Excellent perſon, the Author of the enſuing Diſcourſes; that the Reader may know what he was who in ſo high a degree obliged not onely the Age wherein he lived, but all ſucceeding Generations, by his excellent Studies and exemplary Life. The Hiſtory whereof is briefly as follows.

3. JOSEPH MEDE was born in October 1586. of Parents of honeſt rank, at * Berden in Eſſex, and related (as the learned Mr. Aſſop did particularly remark in his Funeral Sermon) to the Family of Sr. John Mede of Lofts-Hall in the ſame County, who did much pleaſe himſelf in ſo worthy a Kinſman, to whom alſo (when Fellow of Chriſt's College) he ſent his eldeſt Son to be his Pupill; accounting it a ſingular felicity to have him under the care and conduct of ſo worthy and accompliſh'd a Tutor.

*A country-town not far from Biſhops-Stortford.

4. When he was about Ten years old, both he and his Father fell ſick at the ſame time of the Small pox: to the Father it proved mortal, to the Son very hazardous: But Almighty God, who deſigned him for a great Bleſſing to the world, delivered him then out of that, and afterwards out of other Dangers; of which mercifull Preſervations he had by him his thankfull Memorialls, the better to excite himſelf to a due celebration of the Divine Goodneſs.

His Mother afterward married one Mr. Gower of Naſing in Eſſex, by whom he was ſent to School firſt to Hodſden, and after that to Wethersfield in Eſſex. In which time going to London upon ſome occaſion, he bought Bellarmine's Hebrew Grammar. His Maſter, having no skill in that Language, told him it was not a Book fit for him; but he, being of the ſame generous temper with Demonax, who (as Lucian reports) was ὑπ' οἰκείας πρὸς τὰ καλὰ ὁρμῆς καὶ ἐμφύτου πρὸς φιλοσοφίαν ἔρωτος ἐκ παίδων εὐθὺς κεκινημένος, would not be diſcouraged from the peruſal of it; but ſetting upon it induſtriouſly, attain'd no ſmall skill in the Hebrew Tongue before he left the School: by theſe fair Bloſſoms giving an early aſſurance to his Friends of thoſe excellent Fruits which he afterward brought forth being planted in a very fertil Soil, and one of the moſt delightfull Seats of the Muſes, in the Univerſity.

5. His Friends, being encouraged by the pregnancy of his Parts, his aſſiduous Induſtry and Proficiency in Learning, (the beſt grounds of Hope) ſent him, in the year 1602, to Chriſt's College in Cambridge, where he was admitted Pupill to Mr. Daniel Rogers, Fellow of that College. When he had been there three years, Mr Rogers leaving the College, Mr. William Addiſon became his Tutor, to whoſe Pupills, after he was Bachelour of Arts, he us'd to reade, as afterward, when he was Maſter of Arts, he moderated at Dis's, upon the deſire of his Tutor, one of the then Proctors of the Univerſity.

6. The Emprovements which he made in a ſhort time by his induſtrious Wit were ſo conſpicuous, that they drew upon him the eyes not onely of his own College, but of the whole Univerſity; which could not but be the more obſervable in him, becauſe he wanted that felicity of Utterance which uſeth to ſet off ſlight parts, and had ſo great an Heſitation in his ſpeech as rendred his expreſſion painfull to himſelf and leſs pleaſing to others. Which made him decline (as much as he might) all publick Diſputations and other Exerciſes, as not to be perform'd by him without great difficulty; his Labour in them (as he was wont to tell his familiars) being double to that of others, in regard he was put to ſtudy not for matter onely, but for words; not to expreſs his mind, (for ſuch words, the matter being excogitated, do not unwillingly follow, and even offer themſelves,) but for words that he could utter; yea and to take care to diſpoſe them too in that order, that the contexture might ſuit with his Ability. Wherein yet he in time became a rare Example, how much a diſcreet obſervation of ſuch an Imperfection can work toward the cure of it. For by an heedfull inſpection into the nature of his defect, what words he moſt ſtuck at, either ſingle or in conjuncture, and at what times he was more or leſs free, he attain'd ſo great a maſtery over that Infirmity, that he was able to deliver a whole Sermon without any conſiderable Heſitation.

7. That alſo of his own relation is here not unworthy the remembring, That not long after his entrance into Philoſophical ſtudies he was for ſome time diſquieted with Scepticiſme, that troubleſome and reſtleſs diſeaſe of the Pyrrhonian School of old. For lighting upon a Book in a neighbour-Scholar's Chamber, (whether it were Sextus Empiricus, or ſome other upon the ſame Subject, is not now remembred) he began upon the peruſal of it to move ſtrange Queſtions to himſelf, and even to doubt whether the τὸ Πᾶν, the whole Frame of things, as it appears to us, were any more then a mere Phantaſm or Imagination. The Emprovement of this Conceit (as he would profeſs) rendred all things ſo unpleaſant to him, that his Life became uncomfortable. He was then but young, and therefore the more capable of being abus'd by thoſe perplex'd Notions by which Pyrrho had induſtriouſly ſtudied to repreſent the Habitation of Truth as inacceſſible: But by the mercy of God he quickly made his way out of theſe troubleſome Labyrinths, and gave an early proof that he was deſign'd for profound Contemplations, by falling ſo ſoon upon the conſideration of ſubjects ſo ſubtil and curious.

* Anno 1610.

8. By that time he had taken the Degree of * Maſter of Arts, he had made ſo happy a progreſs through all kind of Academical ſtudies, that it was manifeſt to all that that Title was not (as with too many it is) any falſe Inſcription: He was juſtly ſo ſtyled, and was univerſally eſteem'd as one who did well underſtand all thoſe Arts which make up the accompliſhment of a Scholar. He was an acute Logician, an accurate Philoſopher, a skilfull Mathematician, an excellent Anatomiſt, (being uſually ſent for when they had any Anatomy in Caius College) a great Philologer, a maſter of many Languages, and a good proficient in the ſtudies of Hiſtory and Chronology, of which we ſhall give a more particular account in the following part of this ſhort Hiſtory. We mention theſe things not onely to ſhew his indefatigable Diligence, but alſo to declare how great Perfections may be attain'd by an aſſiduous Induſtry, and withall to manifeſt the unreaſonableneſs of that complaint, Ars longa, Vita brevis; by which many think themſelves ſufficiently excus'd who (as Seneca ſaies) ſpend moſt of their life aut nihil, aut aliud, aut malè agendo.

9. His firſt ſhewing himſelf abroad was by an Addreſs he made to that Great Patrone and Example of Learning, D^r. Andrews, (then L. Biſhop of Ely, afterward of Wincheſter) in a Latin Tract De Sanctitate Relativa, &c. A piece of that commendable Learning, that, had it been publiſhed when it was firſt written, would have diſcovered the Author's pregnant Parts, and rais'd his juſt Eſtimation in the world. And though himſelf in his latter time was pleas'd to cenſure it as ſavouring too much of his infancy in Divinity, and firſt thoughts, and affectation of ſtyle, (they were his very words to an intimate friend of his ſolliciting him to publiſh it) and that upon this ſcore (as likewiſe becauſe he had in his elder days and upon mature deliberation publiſhed in [a] another Treatiſe of his (beſides what he had delivered in publick in his [b] Concio ad Clerum) the Summe and ſubſtance of it with farther emprovements of that Notion) he would not permit the fore-mentioned Tract to ſee the light; yet this early Specimen of his Theological ſtudies gain'd the approbation of ſo great a Judgement as his was to whom it was preſented, inſomuch that ſhortly after, he having need of the King's favour concerning his Election to a Fellowſhip, that worthy Biſhop ſtood his firm friend, and not onely maintain'd his Right then, but afterward deſired him for his Houſhold-Chaplain: Which place notwithſtanding he civilly refuſed, as valuing the liberty of his Studies above any hopes of Preferment, ment, and esteeming that freedome which he enjoy'd in his Cell (as he us'd chearfully to terme it) as the Haven of all his wishes.

10. And indeed these thoughts had possess'd him betimes: For when he was a School-boy, he was sent to by his Uncle, M^r. Richard Mede a Merchant, who being at that time without children, offer'd to adopt him for his Son if he would live with him: He accepted not the profer, but shew'd betimes that no worldly allurement was sufficient to entice him from his studies. And here it may not be amiss to observe a parallel memoriall in the * Life of his honoured friend D^r. Jackson. As they both were eminent for their Sweetness of disposition and carriage, their piercing Wit and profound Judgement, their unweariedly-industrious pursuit after such Notions as were out of the vulgar rode of Studies; particularly their Genius prompted them to enquire into the more Abstruse and Mysterious parts of H. Scripture: so they agree'd in this also, that they were in their youth tried with the like Temptations; for agreeably to what was observed of M^r. Mede, was D^r. Jackson sollicited by his friends at Newcastle to a Merchant's life, as being likely to be a more Gainfull course then a Bookish life in a College-retirement. Had they listen'd to such charming suggestions, what gainers soever they might have been by the bargain, to be sure the World had lost those Treasures of Wisedome and Learning which (by the publishing of their learned Labours) it has been happily enrich'd with. But both of them (surely not without a secret guidance and assistance from Heaven) resisted even in those their younger days any attempt to allure them from a Studious life, and chose rather the humble way, to wrap up themselves in a Gown, as the pious and elegant both Poet and Oratour, M^r. G. Herbert, did phrase it, and practis'd accordingly. The All-wise God intended them for better employments and other kind of Traffick then their Friends designed: Through his blessing they traded prosperously in the best Commodities; (for, according to that Arabick Proverb, Ditissimæ sunt divitiæ Intellectûs) and (which is a rare way of growing rich) they emproved their Stock by their free communicating to others, both of them being worthily honoured for their very communicative disposition. In short, to M^r. Mede (as likewise to D^r. Jackson) * the Merchandise of Wisedom was better then the Merchandise of Silver, and the gain thereof then fine Gold: He chose the more solitary way of Knowledge, rather then the so-much-beaten and frequented way of Wealth, and made as much haſt in his Study to become a more then ordinary knowing and learned man, as others abroad in the World do to be rich even to abundance.

11. Wherefore Divine Providence being favourable to his deſign, that he might have a fair opportunity to perfect his own Accompliſhments, and be the better enabled to promote the good of others, and eminently approve himſelf the Servant of CHRIST, he was choſen Fellow of that College upon which the Name of CHRIST is called, to whoſe Service he had ſeriouſly devoted his beſt ſtudies and endeavours. The Fellowſhip into which he was elected was that of K. Edward's foundation, and therein he was Succeſſour to M^r. Hugh Broughton and M^r. Dillingham, both of them famous for Hebrew learning; the firſt abroad, the other at home, being one of thoſe appointed by Royall Authority to tranſlate the Bible. This place was ſupernumerary to the Inſtitution of the Foundreſs, the Lady Margaret; a Society of Divines ſhe intended it, and by a Maſter and twelve Fellows alluded to Chriſt and his College of Apoſtles: Which Conceit (as ſome thought) was intentionally ſpoil'd by the addition of that ſupernumerary Fellowſhip, but however gave occaſion of an ill-placed jeſt againſt M^r. Mede at his Election; one oppoſite to his admiſſion venting this piece of wit without either civility or judgement, We are twelve of the Foundation, and there (ſaid he, pointing to M^r. Mede) ſits the odd Fellow. Which Conceit could have no true ſenſe as touching the quality and character of M^r. Mede, unleſs by odd had been meant ſingular, and that for Piety and Learning; which Eminencies could not make him leſs eligible according to Statute.

12. Being thus choſen Fellow of the College, he was not long after made Reader of the Greek Lecture of S^r. Walter Mildmay's foundation, and held it all his life-time: which rendred that Tongue, as alſo ſeveral others, very familiar to him. For his conſtant Readings upon Homer did not onely make him perfect in that Author, but he being a diligent Collator of the Greek with the Hebrew, Chaldee and Syriack, acquainted himſelf familiarly with the Idiotiſms of all thoſe Languages at once. He had beſides made a Collection of ſuch Greek, Latin and Engliſh words as he had obſerved to have a near ſenſe and like ſound with the Hebrew; as we have been informed by ſome that ſaw in his ſtudy a Book of his in Quarto, containing the Hebrew Radices, &c. with Greek, Latin and Engliſh words derived from many of them: By which means as he made the Language

Language more familiar to him, ſo he conſulted the pleaſure and advantage of his Friends; being from this ſtore furniſh'd with what might render his converſe more acceptable to them in whoſe contentment he had a true ſatisfaction.

13. He preſerv'd his knowledge in Academick Learning by the private Lectures which he read to his Pupills, to whom he was an able and faithfull Guide. For, being a Fellow of a College, he eſteem'd it a part of his Duty to further the Education of young Scholars; which made him undertake the carefull charge of a Tutor: and this he managed with great Prudence and equal Diligence. After he had by daily Lectures well grounded his Pupills in Humanity, Logick and Philoſophy, and by frequent converſe underſtood to what particular Studies their Parts might be moſt profitably applied, he gave them his Advice accordingly: And when they were able to goe alone, he choſe rather to ſet every one his daily Task, then conſtantly to confine himſelf and them to preciſe hours for Lectures. In the Evening they all came to his Chamber to ſatisfy him that they had perform'd the Task he had ſet them. The firſt queſtion which he us'd then to propound to every one in his order was, Quid dubitas? What Doubts have you met in your ſtudies to day? (For he ſuppoſed that To doubt nothing and To underſtand nothing were verifiable alike.) Their Doubts being propounded, he reſolved their Quære's, and ſo ſet them upon clear ground to proceed more diſtinctly: And then having by Prayer commended them and their ſtudies to God's protection and bleſſing, he diſmiſs'd them to their lodgings. Thus carefully did he diſcharge the Truſt of a Tutor, though he well knew and was us'd to ſay That the Office of training up young Scholars in the Univerſity proved oftentimes but a thankleſs buſineſs. In ſhort, He was not for a ſoft and eaſy, ſelf-pleaſing courſe of life; but was moſt willing to ſpend himſelf in a laborious endeavouring the beſt emprovement (not of himſelf onely, but) of others, thoſe eſpecially committed to his care. And here we might take occaſion to recount ſeveral of his Pupills upon whom his excellent Inſtructions were not beſtow'd in vain: Some of them Perſons of Honour and Eminency in the State, Honourable as well for the noble Accompliſhments of their Minds and their exemplary Vertues, as for the height of their Deſcent and Parentage: others of great Merits and Eſteem in the Church, both for their perſonal Endowments, and for their adorning their holy Function by an agreeable Converſation. But we muſt reſpicere titulum, and remember that our preſent buſineſs is to write Mr. Mede's Life and what concerns his Story, rather then the Characters of others, though otherwiſe [a] אנשי השם men of renown and [b] the Glory of their times.

14. To return therefore to our Author: He did ſo entirely devote himſelf to the ſtudy of all excellent Knowledge, that he made even the time which he ſpent in his Recreation ſerviceable to his deſign. He allow'd himſelf little or no Exerciſe but Walking; and oftentimes, when he and others were walking in the Fields or in the College-Garden, he would take occaſion to ſpeak of the Beauty, Signatures, uſefull Virtues and Properties of the Plants then in view: For he was a curious Floriſt, an accurate Herbaliſt, throughly vers'd in the Book of Nature, not unſeen in any kind of ingenuous Knowledges, ſuch eſpecially as were both for delight and uſe. The chief delight which he took in company was to diſcourſe with Learned friends; particularly for ſeveral years he ſet apart ſome of his hours to ſpend them in the converſation of his worthy Friend Mr William Chappell, (afterward Provoſt of Trinity College near Dublin in Ireland, and L. Biſhop of Cork and Roſs) who was juſtly eſteem'd a rich Magazine of Rational Learning, and who again did as highly value the intereſt he had in Mr. Mede and the ſingular advantage of his Converſe. Accordingly when he was to leave the College and prepare for Ireland, he made it his particular requeſt to Mr. Mede, that he would favour him with his Papers, and permit the tranſcribing of them for his private uſe. So high, and yet ſo juſt, an eſteem had he for thoſe Papers richly ſtored with unvulgar, but not unuſefull, Notions. Mr. Mede, who was made up of love and kindneſs, did readily gratify him herein, as he did alſo afterwards, when he wrote to him from Ireland for more of his Papers, deſiring that ſome that had been his Pupills might tranſcribe what he would pleaſe farther to impart to him, who was one that did highly prize all that came from his deliberate pen: They were the very words of his Letter.

15. In his retirement to his private Studies he employ'd himſelf principally in a curious enquiry into the moſt abſtruſe parts of Learning, and endeavour'd for the knowledge of thoſe things which were remote from the vulgar track.

Among other things he ſpent no ſmall pains (in his younger years) in ſounding the depths of Aſtrology, and much paper he blotted in calculating the Nativities of his near Relations and Fellow-ſtudents, having to this Art (as he would ſay) above all other Studies a natural propenſion: Yet did not that propenſion ſo far ſway his Judgement, as not to diſcover the vanity and weakneſs of thoſe grounds upon which the Profeſſors of that pretended Art very often build their too confident Predictions. That which he thought himſelf to have found by all his ſearch was onely this, That the Celeſtial Luminaries having an unqueſtionable Influence upon all ſublunary Bodies, in the like poſition of the Heavens, may reaſonably be thought to have a ſimilitude in their Operation, and thereby to cauſe a Sympathy in things produced under like Conſtellations, and an Antipathy under different. But this not extending farther then a Natural inclination, and being in men alterable by Cuſtome, Education and infinite external impediments, he judged it not (without extreme vanity) to be preſumed upon as any infallibile ground of Prediction of future actions, eſpecially in ſuch things wherein men, acting out of choice, run counter many times to their Natural inclinations. But to give the Reader his poſitive judgement (as near as we can) in his own moſt appoſite and fit words, thus he was wont in familiar diſcourſe to determine touching the Neceſſity and Contingency of theſe Subordinate Cauſes: That the εὐταξία Cœli does beget in man εὐκρασίαν Temperamenti, and this εὐκρασία Temperamenti begets εὐφυίαν Ingenii, in the way of direct and natural ſubordination: But that here the Chain is broken off; becauſe εὐφυία Ingenii does beget or produce εὐπραξίαν Actionis in man onely contingently and without any neceſsity. And thus è contrà, That δυσταξία Cœli does beget δυσκρασίαν Temperamenti, and the δυσκρασία Temperamenti begets δυσφυίαν Ingenii; This naturally as before: But that this δυσφυία Ingenii ſhould beget δυσπραξίαν Actionis, this is from no neceſsity, becauſe it is in mans power and liberty, who is naturally ill-diſpoſed, yet through the emprovements of Art, and eſpecially by the Grace of God, to become good, or better, as the Divine Goodneſs ſhall miniſter opportunity. Which is as much as can be ſaid in ſo few words, and might determine the queſtion to all judicious and knowing men, concerning the power of the Starrs and thoſe Celeſtial Influences into and upon this inferiour world; where their Operations are genuine and natural and properly efficient, and where they have their ſtint and their Nè plus ultrà, nothing at all to doe, unleſs by a remote diſpoſition, which is properly no Cauſe at all. This is enough alſo to vindicate Man, born to Liberty and to command the Starrs, from that ſuppoſed vaſſalage whereunto the jugling Aſtrologers of our days would fain ſubject him, and caſt the credulous world into a Trance of blindneſs, to believe Lies and Follies and groſs Vanities for very Truth.

16. But leaving the hot purſuit of Aſtrological fancies, (the buſy idleneſs of ſome even to their old age) he applied himſelf to the more uſefull ſtudy of Hiſtory and Antiquities, particularly to a curious enquiry into thoſe Myſterious Sciences which made the ancient Chaldeans, Egyptians and other Nations ſo famous; tracing them, as far as he could have any light to guide him, in their Oriental Schemes and Figurative expreſſions, as likewiſe in their Hieroglyphicks, not forgetting to enquire alſo into the Oneirocriticks of the Ancients. Which he did the rather, becauſe of that affinity which he conceiv'd they might have with the language of the Prophets, to the underſtanding of whom he ſhew'd a moſt ardent deſire. His Humanity-ſtudies and Mathematical labours were but Initial things, which he made attendants to the Myſteries of Divinity: and though they were Preparatives, as he could uſe them, yet were they but at a diſtance off and more remote to his aime; for he had more work to doe before he could be Maſter of his deſign. A well-furniſh'd Divine is compounded of more Ingredients then ſo. For Hiſtories of all ſorts, but thoſe eſpecially which concern the Church of God, muſt be ſtudied and well known; and therefore he made his way by the knowledge of all Hiſtories, General, National, Ancient and Modern, Sacred and Secular. He was a curious and laborious ſearcher of Antiquities relating to Religion, Ethnick, Jewiſh, Chriſtian and Mahumetan: the fruits of which ſtudious diligence appear viſibly in ſeveral of thoſe excellent Treatiſes which have paſs'd the Preſs; particularly in his Apoſtaſy of the Latter times, The Chriſtian Sacrifice, his Diſcourſes upon Daniel, his Paraphraſe and Notes upon S. Peter's Prophecy, and in (his great Maſter-piece) thoſe elaborate Commentaries upon the Apocalyps, where the Fata Imperii (i. e. the Affairs of the Roman State) there predicted are to admiration explain'd out of Ethnick Hiſtorians, and the Fata Eccleſiæ illuſtrated with no leſs accuracy out of Eccleſiaſtick Writers. His Writings beſt ſpeak his eminent skill in Hiſtory; yet it may not be amiſs to ſuperadde upon this occaſion the Teſtimony of a very judicious perſon, and one of long and inward acquaintance with M^r. Mede and his ſtudies, (we mean that fore-mentioned ancient Collegue and Conſocius of his, M^r. W. Chappell,) who before his going into Ireland was heard thus to expreſs himſelf, That M^r. Mede was as judicious a man in Eccleſiaſtical Antiquities, and as accurately skilled in the firſt Fathers of the Church, both Greek and Latin, as any man living.

17. Unto Hiſtories he added thoſe neceſſary attendants which to the knowledge of the more difficult Scriptures muſt never be wanting; viz. an accurate underſtanding of the Ichnography of the Tabernacle and Temple, the Order of the Service of God therein performed, as alſo of the City of Jeruſalem, together with an exact Topography of the Holy Land; beſides other Jewiſh Antiquities, Scripture-Chronology and the exact Calculation of Times, ſo far eſpecially as made for the ſolving or clearing of thoſe difficulties and obſcure paſſages that occurre in the Hiſtorical part of Scripture, which the vulgar Chronologers have perplex'd, and the beſt not fully freed from ſcruple. And how great his abilities were for the Sacred Chronology, may appear (to omit other proofs) from that clauſe in a Letter of the then Archbiſhop of Armagh to him—I have entred upon the Determination of the Controverſies which concern the Chronology of the Sacred Scripture, wherein I ſhall in many places need your help. That great and laborious Work which this equally Learned and Humble Prelate was now entred upon, was his Chronologia Sacra, wherein he intended to confirm thoſe diſpoſitions of Years and accounts of Time he had ſet down in his Annals of the Old and New Teſtament, lately publiſhed by him. This Work had exerciſed his induſtry for many years, and he labour'd in it to the laſt minute of health he enjoy'd; but he lived not to finiſh it. Yet that the fruit of all his travels herein might not die with him, ſo much as he had elaborated was publiſhed by the Learned D^r. Barlow, Provoſt of Queen's College in Oxford, whoſe great care and induſtry herein did deſerve in this place an expreſs celebration: For ſuch uſefull Labours juſtly entitle a man to the honour of being a Benefactour to the world.

18. By the fruit of theſe Studies, particularly by his happy Labours upon the Apocalyps and Prophetical Scriptures, what honour our Author purchas'd abroad (beſides what he gain'd at home) among men ſtudious in this way, and therefore capable of judging, is evident by the many Letters ſent him from Learned men in ſeveral parts, expreſſing their own and others high eſteem of his Writings: As, the above-mention'd Primate of Ireland, Archbiſhop Uſher, who alſo acquainted M^r. Mede with the great eſteem that another Archbiſhop in Ireland had for his accurate labours upon the Apocalyps; The judicious and moderate Paulus Teſtardus, Paſtor of the Reformed Church at Blois in France, who was ſo highly pleas'd with his Clavis & Commentationes Apocalypticæ, as to take the pains (amidſt his other preſſing labours) to tranſlate them into French, deſigning the printing of them for the benefit of his Countrymen;

Lud. de Dieu, a ſingular Ornament of the Univerſity at Leiden, famous at home and abroad for his skill in the Oriental Tongues, whoſe Letters to and of Mr. Mede were full of honour and reſpect, and, as a teſtimony of his great reſpect, he preſented Mr. Mede betimes with his Comment upon the Acts of the Apoſtles; Dr. Walæus, Divinity-Profeſſor there, who being one of the principal perſons concern'd in the laſt Belgick Tranſlation of the Bible, and his care (together with ſome aſſociates) being peculiarly employ'd about tranſlating and illuſtrating with marginall notes the New Teſtament, (no part of which bred him more labour then the Apocalyps) did hugely applaud himſelf in the happineſs he had to be acquainted with Mr. Mede's unparallel'd Commentary upon that myſterious Book. The great acceptance and kind entertainment which his Writings found abroad among learned perſons, might be confirm'd alſo from not onely Mr. Hartlib's but Sr. William Boſwell's Letters, who profeſſed It was better then Muſick to him to hear the innumerable commendations of ſo near a Friend. But becauſe we would not exſpatiate in this (perhaps invidious) argument, we ſhall crave leave onely to ſuperadde this, That though ſome at home, leſs affectionate to ſtudies of this nature, for Reaſons beſt known to themſelves, were induc'd to ſpeak ſomewhat diminiſhingly, and below the worth, of his Clavis and Commentary upon the Apocalyps; (a Prophet, and a Prophet's Interpreter, wanting ſometimes their due honour in their own Country) yet Scholars of good note in their Travels beyond the Sea have heard his Name moſt honourably mention'd for thoſe Works. And though he was Anonymus in what he had done upon the Apocalyps; yet when Foreiners travelling into England came to viſit the Univerſity of Cambridge, they would carefully ſeek him out, and endeavoured to gain his acquaintance as much as any others then more eminent in place.

19. And though poſſibly it cannot be ſaid that he attain'd to an infallible Solution of every Point in thoſe Prophetick Myſteries, (they being a Depth which perhaps no Humane underſtanding can reach, till aſſiſted by a more full and clear view of Events;) yet judicious men, who are but in the leaſt candid, cannot but ſay that he proceeded upon grounds never traced by any, and infinitely more probable then any lay'd down by thoſe who before him undertook that task, and ſuch as, though they ſhould not every-where exempt from all poſſibility of erring in the application, do yet afford an incomparable help to the underſtanding of many things otherwiſe

ſcarce diſcernible, and in the mean time do ſtrongly convince the over-daring vanity of very many confident, but unskilfull, Expoſitors. So that upon the whole matter we doubt not to affirm, (and for the truth of it we appeal to judicious and unprejudiced Readers) That if M^r. Mede's Method of interpreting the Apocalyps be freely and carefully compared with the elder (we may adde alſo, the newer) methods of any Annotationiſts whatſoever, it will certainly be acknowledged to be the moſt natural and unſtrained, moſt agreeable to the ſtyle of the Prophets, as likewiſe to Hiſtory and Events; and, in ſhort, that his Clavis Apocalyptica (if compared with other Keys) ſeems moſt worthy to be deem'd Clavis non errans.

20. Nor is this high, but moſt deſerved, character of his Labours upon the Apocalyps to be diſparaged by one or two Exceptions, which the οἱ ἀντιδιατιθέμενοι marvellouſly pleaſe themſelves in, nay one of them they make the petty matter of a poor rejoycing within themſelves: It is their Firſt Exception, grounded upon his Conjecture about the King of Sweden, in his Expoſition of the Fourth Vial. But there needed not ſo much noiſe nor ſuch a-doe to be made about this. For be it granted that the King of Sweden is certainly meant there, (although the Author doth not expreſly name him) yet conſider, Firſt, He doth not poſitively and confidently affirm him to be the perſon whom God deſigned to perform the buſineſs of this Vial; but intimates onely his hope and wiſhes (in behalf of the afflicted Proteſtants in Germany) that it might be ſo: nay inſtead of a confident ſaying it would be ſo, he choſe rather to expreſs himſelf Queſtion-wiſe, which is the more modeſt and allowable way: Annon hic eſt (ſaith he) quem Dominus exercituum ad hujuſce Phialæ opus exſequendum deſtinavit? Which Ingenuity of his might have diſpoſed the leſs-kind Reader to ſome degree of Candour, rather then to the indecencies of an haſty and over-ſevere Cenſure.

Secondly, And the rather may he ſeem to merit the moſt candid and favourable uſage, becauſe in his Epiſtle to the Reader, before his Commentary, he makes it his particular requeſt, That the Reader would not over-rigidly cenſure every paſſage in his Book, but be pleas'd to reade him with that civility and candour and thoſe fair allowances not unuſually afforded to the Writings of well-meaning men, ſuch as are free from arrogancy and impoſing upon others, and are moſt ready to expreſs the ſame Charity and Fairneſs to other Writers. The requeſt is every way Juſt and Neceſſary; conſidering that there are more Depths and Obſcurities in the Prophetical Writings then in any other parts of H. Scripture; and withall, that the Beſt of men are not privileged from all poſſibility of erring, no not in plainer and leſs abſtruſe matters then the Apocalyptick Viſions, thoſe eſpecially about things future and unfulfill'd. And farther, how Neceſſary the requeſt is as well as Juſt, the Author himſelf hath prudently obſerv'd in the fore-mentioned Epiſtle, where, ſpeaking of the Interpretation of Prophecies, &c. he laies it down as a moſt certain and approved Truth, Niſi in hiſce talibus liberiùs paulò ſentiendi, imò & errandi, venia concedatur; ad profunda illa & latentia Veritatis adyta viam nunquam patefactum iri.

Thirdly, Were this miſtake as great a matter as ſome would make it, (which yet was in truth a ſmaller ἥτημα and more venial, becauſe not expreſs'd poſitively and confidently, but onely in the form of a Queſtion,) yet is there not any juſt ground from this ſingle inſtance to diſvalue and reject the Author and his Commentary upon the Apocalyps. For this Conjecture, or rather Quære, of his was no principal or neceſſary part of the Structure, and therefore by its failing as to the Event doth not ſo much as endanger, much leſs demoliſh, the whole Fabrick. His Scheme of Synchroniſms, upon which is grounded his method of interpreting the Apocalyptick Viſions, ſtands firm and entire, and is unconcern'd herein. Nor is there any other part of his Commentary endamaged hereby, the truth and ſolidity thereof not depending upon this Event. Beſides, let it be conſider'd, that it would be the extremeſt Severity, the higheſt Rigour imaginable, to condemn the uſeful labours of Worthy men for ſome one miſapprehenſion in a particular of little or no importance to the whole. And what one Author, ancient or modern, (though never ſo highly meriting) what Book (though never ſo carefully and exactly written) could poſſibly ſcape at ſuch a rate of judging as this? But to ſpeak yet more cloſely to the preſent Exception; Though there was a miſtake in applying the Fourth Vial to that Northern King, yet that miſtake in the particular is no real prejudice to the general and main ſcope of his Interpretation of that part (much leſs of the other parts) of the Viſion: And, conſidering the abſtruſeneſs of the matter, it may be held very laudable not toto cœlo errare in the explication of ſome part of a Viſion, eſpecially when other Learned men are deprehended to doe ſo, not onely in ſome one whole Viſion, but in a manner univerſally in the whole Apocalyps; and that not onely onely in thoſe Viſions which relate to things unfulfill'd and future Events, (about which if a carefull Interpreter be at a loſs ſometimes and chance to miſconjecture, it is more pardonable) but in ſuch Viſions and Prophecies as are already fulfill'd, wherein to miſtake is the leſs excuſable, becauſe Prophecies are ſuppos'd to clear up when accompliſh'd, according to that of Irenæus, (which is ſometimes quoted to an ill purpoſe, viz. to damp all modeſt Enquiries into Prophetical Scriptures) Cùm evenit quod prophetatum eſt, tunc Prophetiæ liquidam habent & certam expoſitionem. And here (if it were not an over-tedious Digreſſion) it would be no hard task to bring in a large Catalogue of groſs Parachroniſms, manifeſt miſapplications and miſtakes of another nature then this ſingle one they urge againſt our Author; and theſe not a few, nor thinly ſcatter'd in their Comments, but to be met with in every page. The reaſon of which Misfortune (in which the Interpreters that goe the new way are as much concern'd as any) is plainly this, Their want of attending to that onely ſafe Rule and Ground-work of Interpretation, the Apocalyptical Synchroniſms; the uſefulneſs and neceſſity of attending to which is fully made out by M^r Mede (to omit other places) in his Corollary at the end of his Clavis Apocalyptica: Without this Clue Interpreters will miſerably loſe themſelves in this Sacred Labyrinth; without this Card to guide them in this Myſtical Sea, they muſt needs, like diſtreſſed Mariners, * reel to and fro, and often be at their wit's end. * Pſal. 107.

Laſtly, Let it be conſidered that this ſhort paſſage, concerning the Application of the Fourth Vial, excepted againſt is not any part of the Author's large and more throughly-concocted Commentary upon the Apocalyps; for that ends with Chap. XIV. And as for the following Chapters, what he has briefly obſerved upon ſome paſſages therein, (as in Chap. XVI. which treats of the Vials) he calls onely Specimina, his Eſſays, and Firſt adventures; intending (if he had health and free leiſure) to goe over them again, and then to perfect his thoughts, and as fully to enlarge himſelf upon them as he had done upon the foregoing Chapters. This he expreſsly advertiſes the Reader of at the end of his Commentary upon Chap. XIV; in the mean while commending theſe Specimina (which at the ſollicitation of ſome Friends he permitted to goe along with his Commentary) to the Reader's Candour and Benignity; perſuading himſelf (as the beſt natures are leaſt apt to ſuſpect any unkindneſs) that what he thus offer'd with his right hand, others would not take with their left.

This is enough to waſh away the ſuppoſed ſtain of this Exception, and and perhaps more then was needfull, but that ſome, devoyd of

* 1 Cor. 13. Charity, and therefore but * tinkling Cymbals, made ſuch a noiſe about it, ſuch as childiſhly affect excitare fluctus in ſimpulo, and love to make ex muſca elephantum, ex feſtuca trabem; in the mean while (through fond ſelf-love and partiality) not minding the more then motes, the great beams in their own eyes, or in the eyes of thoſe whoſe perſons they have in admiration. But to ſuch our Saviour's Counſel is not unſeaſonable, Why beholdeſt thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but conſidereſt not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, firſt caſt out the beam out of thine own eye.

21. Proceed we now (cum bono Deo) to the Vindication of our Author from the other Exception, which in ſhort is this, That he may ſeem to have afforded too much countenance to the Opinion of the Chiliaſts. This Exception (though not the former) is taken notice of by that Reverend perſon, who was familiarly acquainted with M^r. Mede, and wrote that ſhort View of his Life, publiſhed at the end of his Epiſtles. And the Summe of the Anſwer he there returns to this Exception is this, That what M^r. Mede did herein cannot be juſtly counted any blemiſh to his name and honour: For grant that Opinion were an Error, yet (ſaith he) it hath very much to plead its toleration and their pardon that hold it. Whatever it be, it paſt for a precious Truth, even in the pureſt and moſt untainted Ages of the Church, (thoſe next the Apoſtles) for the ſpace of above 300. years, and had the ſuffrages of the moſt eminent Doctors that lived in thoſe times. [viz. Juſtin Martyr, (who lived within 30 years of S. John's death) Irenæus, (who was brought up at the feet of Polycarpus who was S. John's Diſciple;) they both lived and converſed with the Apoſtles immediate Diſciples: as alſo Tertullian, (the moſt ancient of the Latine Fathers now extant) Cyprian Biſhop of Carthage, and Lactantius: beſides ſeveral others, of whoſe Writings we have onely ſome ſmall Fragments; all theſe within 300 years after Chriſt.] Nor was it ever diſcountenanced, till the Church (recovering breath from her Perſecutions) began perhaps a little too much to prize her peace, and (diſvaluing her expectations) to ſet up her reſt in her enjoyed tranquillity. And certainly (not to argue its veriſimilitude from the conſonancy it ſeems to have with the many glorious * Prophecies of Chriſt's Kingdom in the Old Teſtament, which otherwiſe find many cold interpretations among Expositors) a man can hardly, without admitting it, make good sense of those places in the 20 and 21 Chapters of the Revelation, which tell us of a * First and Second Resurrection, and of a Jerusalem descending out of Heaven from God: Which last (I have often heard our Author say) seemed to him extremely harsh to expound of the State of Bliss in Heaven; and to make [descending out of Heaven] to signify [ascending up thither] was more absurd then that of the Canonist, who expounded [Constituimus] by [Abrogamus:] So that he was compelled by that and many other places, against his inclination, to allow so much of Chiliasm as might make sense of those Prophecies; yet alway keeping himself from falling into those dotages which some of that opinion fansied, or at least were charged with; [a] neither denying any necessary Catholick Verity, nor admitting any thing inconsistent with the analogy of Faith; and [b] submitting his Opinion to the judgement of the Church. And within these limits, I never yet learned why he or any other learned man may not have the liberty of his own sense, or in such Problematical points should incurre any censure for dissenting from others.

22. In pursuance of which Argument (to which we hold our selves obliged both from the great zeal we have for the honour of the Author's Memory, and from an honest ambition to endeavour the removing of any the least dissatisfaction which may lodge perhaps in the breasts of some even ingenuous and well-temper'd persons; that so none may be offended in him) it may not be unnecessary to superadde (as a Mantissa) these few particulars.

First, That the Author had not the least fond inclination to this or any other Hypothesis, as those have that affect to be talk'd of for some new or uncommon Theory: (his humble Soul was far from any such design of Vain-glory.) Nay when he first applied himself to the study of the Apocalyps, he came (as he told a Friend of his) with a mind rather possest against it; and (being desirous to differ as little as might be from the sense of others) he tried all ways imaginable to place the Millennium elsewhere, and, if it were possible, to begin the 1000 years at the Reign of Constantine, (for whom he had a great veneration;) which was the commonly-received opinion of thoſe that wrote before him or after him, as Brightman, Grotius and others. But after all his ſtriving he was * forced (as he ingenuouſly confeſs'd) to yield to the light and evidence of this Hypotheſis in a ſober and qualified ſenſe. He was forced to it by the unreſiſtible Law of Synchroniſms; according to which the Millennium could not poſſibly be placed otherwhere then it is by him; which he nothing doubted but he had demonſtrated in his Clavis, Part. 2. Synchron. 4 and 5. Concerning which performance we ſhall onely ſay to the Reader, as the Author himſelf us'd to do, (and it was a great word with him, whenever he brought forth any unordinary and important Notion) Expende, (he would ſay, or elſe) Conſider it. And here it is not unworthy to be remembred, that the late learned Archdeacon of Surrey, * Dr. Hakewell, gives this fair teſtimony of Mr. Mede, that in his Clavis he hath ſhew'd himſelf an able man, and particularly that this part of his Synchroniſms is a very exact piece, and ſuch as gives a marvellous great light to the Prophecies of that Book. Beſides, this would farther forbid him to make the Millennium of Satan's being bound and reſtrain'd from deceiving the world to begin at Conſtantine, namely, That the great deceiving of the world by Mahometiſm (a moſt vile and yet prevailing Impoſture) began before leſs then half of the Millennium from Conſtantine was run out, and ſtrangely proſper'd in the world for the ſpace of 600 years within that Millennium: and not this onely, but Antichriſtian Idolatry and the greateſt Cruelty imaginable againſt the faithfull Servants of Chriſt fell out within the ſame Millennium; wherein the Devil was ſo far from being chain'd and ſhut up, that he never deceived the world more groſsly, nor raged more furiouſly, and conſequently was never more looſe and at liberty to doe miſchief.

* See his Apology, edit. 3. p. 559.

Secondly, Our Author was not fondly deſirous to proclaim this or any other peculiar Sentiment of his before others, as one that was eagerly ſollicitous to get Diſciples or make Proſelytes to his Perſuaſion. No man did ever dictate leſs then he, or propounded his Judgement, with the Reaſons thereof, with more modeſty and ſubmiſſion: none was more averſe from the humour of maſterly impoſing an Opinion upon others: none with leſs impatience and more civility could bear anothers diſſent. It was his own expreſſion, There are few men living who are leſs troubled to ſee others differ in opinion from them then I am. If any man can patiently ſuffer me to differ from him, it nothing affects me how much or how little they differ from me. In ſhort, He was not big with a Paradox, and in pain to be delivered of it, as ſome are when they have diſcover'd (as they think) ſome rare and unvulgar Notion; (which temper in them is a certain ſign of a Weak mind fooliſhly over-pleas'd with its own conceptions:) Nay he was ſo far from proclaiming this or any other new Opinion, that when he was invited by others to ſpeak of it, (for he choſe rather to be led into ſuch diſcourſe then over-forwardly to begin it of himſelf) he would ſpeak but ſparingly and in general, eſpecially before ſuch who for want of age and experience were leſs prepared for ſuch Speculations; and therefore when ſuch proceeded to enquire more particularly concerning his thoughts herein, his way was not to declare himſelf magiſterially, but (having quoted ſuch or ſuch a Text of Scripture) modeſtly to expreſs himſelf thus, What if it ſhould be ſo underſtood? or Why may it not be thus? And when he was urged by Friends to adde at the end of his Commentary upon the Apocalyps ſome Notions of his upon the following Chapters, (that the whole might be the more complete,) he onely publiſh'd a ſhort Specimen or Eſſay about this Hypotheſis, together with ſome ſhort * Notes upon a paſſage in Juſtin Martyr, purporting that it was the General opinion of all Orthodox Chriſtians in the Age immediately following the Apoſtles, and that none were known to deny it then but Hereticks which denied the Reſurrection. Let the whole Specimen be carefully peruſed by any unpaſſionate and judicious perſon, and it will approve itſelf to be a great Inſtance of the Author's both Modeſty and Prudence as to the way of communicating his particular thoughts concerning the Millennial myſtery. And accordingly the Reverend Dr. Charles Potter, ſometime Provoſt of Queen's College in Oxford, a perſon of a very diſcerning and candid ſpirit, (in a Letter to his worthy friend Mr Maſon) gave this fair account of Mr. Mede's proceeding in this abſtruſe Argument, That, whereas others are confident, he does but modeſtly conjecture, (viz. in his Specimen de Mille annis) and that upon other and better grounds then their dreaming heads ever thought of. Whereas others would ſally out into curious and minute deſcriptions of the Οἰκουμένην μέλλουσαν, and venture to ſpeak as particularly of the Quality of that State as Dionyſius the Areopagite (ſo called) does of the Angelical Hierarchy, intruding into thoſe things which they have not ſeen; our Author on the contrary kept himſelf to Generals, induſtriouſly abſtaining from expreſſing himſelf de modo or concerning the particularities of the ſtate of Chriſt's Kingdom, and was far from being definitive in the leaſt as to any circumſtantial account thereof. This was his pious Prudence: He contented himſelf with that more General account the H. Scripture gives of this Millennium, and in his explication of it he kept within the compaſs of that Διατύπωσις or Form of Eccleſiaſtical Doctrine ſet forth by the Firſt Nicene Council, not ſwerving one jot there-from, as he ſomewhere profeſſeth in his * Epiſtles. Yea ſo cautious and carefull was he not to determine poſitively where the Scripture was not expreſs, that he confeſs'd he durſt not ſo much as imagine that Chriſt's preſence in this Kingdom ſhould be a Viſible converſe upon Earth. He was alſo well aware that ſome both of elder and of later times (degenerating from the Piety of the moſt ancient and pureſt Ages of the Church, and ſwerving from that Primitive ſober ſenſe and harmleſs Notion of the Millennium which the Chriſtian Church generally entertain'd in the daies of Juſtin Martyr) had ſhamefully disfigur'd and deformed it with ſeveral erroneous conceits and idle fancies of their own. But herein our Author's name and reputation is not concern'd; he had nothing to doe with the wood, hay and ſtubble, which ſome fooliſh builders had built upon the old foundation, nor with thoſe unſeemly aſſumenta and diſgracefull opinions which ſome (that were miſerable bunglers at the Interpretation of Prophecies) had faſten'd upon the ancient Hypotheſis: He diſavow'd with as much zeal as any one the extravagancies of ſuch men; and yet he would not in a raſh heat wholly reject an ancient Tenet for having ſome Error annex'd to it, for ſo he might ſometime caſt away a Truth; as he that throws away what he finds becauſe it is dirty, (it was his own compariſon) may perchance caſt away a Jewel or a piece of Gold or Silver.

* See Epiſtle LII. pag. 997.

Thirdly and laſtly, (to conclude this argument) His Notion of the Millennial State was both Pure and Peaceable, and therefore not unworthy of a fair conſtruction. Pure and clean it was, altogether free from the leaſt ſuſpicion of Luxury and Senſuality. It was his * expreſs Caution, to beware of groſs and carnal conceits of an Epicurean happineſs misbeſeeming the Spiritual purity of Saints. If we conceit (ſaith he) any Deliciæ, let them be Spirituales, which S. Auſtin confeſſeth to be Opinio tolerabilis, (lib. 20. De Civit. Dei.) And therefore he was juſtly offended with Hierom, who (being, according to his wont, a very unequal relator of the opinion of his Adverſaries) imputed to the moſt ancient Fathers of the Church ſuch an Unſpiritual notion as this, That the Felicity of this State was Beatitudo ventri & gutturi Judaico ſerviens; and in ſeveral parts of his Writings, he has clearly detected the unfaithfulneſs and falſhood of Hierom in loading thoſe Holy Souls with the charge of Judaiſm and Epicuriſm; as foul foul and undeſerved an aſperſion as could be imagined. And verily ſuch a Senſual State is ſo contrary to the character of the Kingdom of Chriſt and the true importance of what is meant by Reigning with Chriſt, that it is no other in reality then the Kingdom of the Devil and a Reigning with him. He well remembred that the proper Character of the New Heavens and the New Earth (that is, of the World renewed) is thus deſcribed in *S. Peter's Prophecy——Ἐν οἷς δικαιοσύνη κατοικεῖ, Wherein dwelleth Righteouſneſs. A greater Increaſe of Piety and Peace then has yet been in the world, is that which makes up the Primary notion of the Felicity of the Οἰκουμένη μέλλουσα or World to come. And what hearty Chriſtian does not moſt affectionately deſire that Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, Peace on earth and Good will towards men may ſpread and obtain more univerſally in the world? Theſe things would as naturally make the world Happy, as the abounding of Iniquity with the decays of Charity in any age makes the world Miſerable. * 2 Ep. c. 3.

Nor was his Notion leſs Peaceable then Pure, as may partly appear by what hath been already obſerved. He was a true Son of Peace, and lived a life of Obedience to the Laws of the Realm, and of Conformity to the Diſcipline of the Church: He* feared both the Lord and the King, and medled not with them that were given to change. And his Writings bear the Impreſs and Character of his Peaceable Spirit and Life; for, not one clauſe, not a ſyllable, not ἰῶτα ἓν ἢ μία κεραία, that naturally tends to blow men up into ſuch furious heats as threaten publick Diſquietneſſes and Embroilments, is to be found therein, as neither in the Writings of Juſtin Martyr, Irenæus, Cyprian and others of utmoſt Antiquity, whoſe Doctrine touching this Point, as alſo their Practices, were far from any ſhew of Unpeaceableneſs, far from provoking to any thing but Love and Good works. As our Author himſelf was a man of a cool Spirit, (* קר רוח) ſo likewiſe is his Notion and repreſentation of the Millennium cool and calm and moderate, not miniſtring to Faction and Sedition, to Tumults and ſubverſion of all Degrees and Orders of Superiority in the publick. And aſſuredly the Happineſs of the Millennial State ſhall take place in the world without that Diſorder and Confuſion which ſome men have extravagantly imagined, men of unhallowed minds and conſciences, who, judging of things according to the luſts of ambition and love of the world reigning in them, have deprav'd and ſtain'd this Primitive Tenet, the ancient, ſober and innocent notion of the Kingdom of Chriſt, as likewiſe every other Myſtery, with not a few carnal conceits and intolerable fancies of their own: And thus * unto them that * Prov. 24. * Prov. 17. * Titus 1.

are defiled is nothing pure. Nor ſhall thoſe [a] Tempora refrigerii ever be brought in by hot fanatick Zelots, men ſet on fire, (in the Pſalmiſt's phraſe) and ready alſo to ſet on fire the Courſe of Nature, (as S. James ſpeaks) ſuch as are skilfull onely to deſtroy and overturn; [b] Deſtruction and Waſting are in their ways, (they are good at making the World a miſerable, uncomfortable and unhabitable place) but the way of Peace they have not known, (as for Peace and Charity, they have no right ſentiments thereof, and know not what belongs to them.) And therefore the Temper and Frame of their ſpirit being perfectly contrary to the Temper and Quality of thoſe Better times, they are thereby render'd uncapable either of furthering and * haſting the Felicities of the New Heavens and Earth, or of enjoying them when the New Jeruſalem ſhall be come down from God out of Heaven, and the Tabernacle of God ſhall be with men. For the primary Character of that Future State being (as was before obſerved) Univerſal Righteouſneſs and Good will, Piety and Peace, it naturally follows, That they who are men of embitter'd paſſions and of a deſtroying Spirit, altogether devoid of civility, gentleneſs and moderation, kindneſs and benignity towards men, and altogether unacquainted with what is lovely, decorous, venerable, praiſeworthy, equitable and juſt, can have no part nor lot in this matter; ſo groſs and courſe a conſtitution of ſpirit as theirs is ſpeaks them unqualified for the Happineſs of this Better State. Nor can they ever be made meet for the World to come and the Kingdom of Chriſt, till they have got the victory over their Self-love and Love of the world, over their Pride and Envy, their Wrath and Bitterneſs, their enormous Affections and the Luſts that war in their members; howſoever they may vainly conceit and fanſy themſelves to be upon eaſier and cheaper terms Kings and Prieſts to God, fit and worthy to reign with Chriſt, though they never ſuffer'd with him, nor was their old man crucified with him, that the body of Sin might be deſtroyed, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. 6.

And thus we have ſeen that our Author's Notion of the Millennium was both Pure and Peaceable, and conſequently right and genuine, (theſe being the two firſt Properties of the Wiſedom from above, in S. [a] James's account:) As for any other repreſentation of it, which is [b] Earthly, Senſual, Deviliſh, (the three Properties of the Wiſedom [c] from beneath) our Author had nothing to doe with it, nor with the Patrons thereof, his Soul came not into their ſecret. And therefore if any ill-temper'd perſons, men of wild Principles and Practices, ſhould abuſe his name to the countenancing of any bad purpoſes and ſelfiſh deſigns; (as Antinomians have in like manner abuſed the names of ſome ancient Proteſtant Worthies to the gracing of their unwholesome Opinions,) if any unlearned and unstable souls wrest S. John's Apocalyps and the Prophetical Scriptures; (as well as some did in S. Peter's time the ἀνόητοι in S. Paul's Epistles, and doe so still) they shall bear their own condemnation, they doe it πρὸς τὴν ἰδίαν αὐτῶν ἀπώλειαν to their own destruction: But in the mean while S. John, S. Paul, the Prophetical Scriptures are holy, harmless and without fault; nor ought our Author and those Protestant Writers to bear the blame of other mens either misapprehensions or misdoings; but let every man bear his own burthen. It is no new thing, but is and hath been an usual artifice of worthless men to derive some reputation to their Opinions and Practices from the pretended authority of some worthy and excellent Writers: and we are the less to wonder at it, since they have not spared in the same kind to abuse the divinely-inspired Prophets and Apostles. Yet should not this (or the like) abuse of S. John's Apocalyps and other Prophecies be deem'd a sufficient ground to dissuade from the study of the Prophetical Scriptures, no more then the abuse of some passages in S. Paul's Epistles to Antinomianism and evacuating of the Law, should be of force to take men off from the study of S. Paul's Writings. Nay rather should all serious and judicious persons, out of an holy indignation against such wrongfull perverting of the Holy Oracles of God, excite and oblige themselves unto a more studious enquiry and diligent search into the genuine meaning of those Scriptures; that thereby they may be the better enabled to detect the falshood of those Glosses which men of corrupt minds have for their own ends put upon them, and by discovering the true importance and scope of such Prophecies put to silence those men of Noise and Confidence rather then of Reason and Judgment. And certainly this would be the happy effect of such studious diligences: For they should find that S. Paul's Epistles afford no favourable countenance to Antinomian principles, nor do in the least disparage the indispensable necessity of internal Righteousness and uniform obedience to the Divine Law. It would also appear to them that S. John's Apocalyps contains nothing that may in the least encourage to disobedience and disorder; but on the contrary represents Christian Kings and Princes (those that are Defenders of the Holy Apostolical Faith) under a fair Character, as * Friends to the Holy and Beloved City, the New Jerusalem, but Enemies to the Whorish City, the mystical Babylon, which they shall * hate and make desolate: They shall doe it; not the People without their Princes, but Kings with the help of their Subjects; so hard a work requiring many hands, and the concurrence of several aids. These Theſe Three Conſiderations (and more ſuch might have been added) may amount (we hope) to a full Anſwer to the ſecond Exception: And theſe ſeverals being laid together may be availeable (through God's bleſſing) to recover ſome from their inward malady of an Uncharitable Cenſorious humour, and to ſweeten others who have ſome diſguſt againſt the Author, and particularly upon the ſcore of this Exception. Nor was this an unneceſſary Digreſſion, (if any Digreſſion at all) it being of ſo grand importance for the vindicating of the Author, in whoſe Story and Character we are now concerned, as alſo of thoſe Holy and moſt Ancient Fathers of the Church, and withall of their ſober and harmleſs Notion of the Millennium, yea and for the vindicating of the Holy Scriptures themſelves, from all unworthy miſconſtruction.

23. Having thus ſomewhat largely (though not without good cauſe) evinced both the great Exquiſiteneſs and the no leſs Uſefulneſs of M^r. Mede's Labours in that Maſter-piece of his, his Key and Commentary upon that myſterious Book of the Apocalyps, (a well-choſen Object for his great Underſtanding to exerciſe itſelf upon;) we proceed now to obſerve to the Reader, That beſides theſe, his Endeavours were happily employ'd in other (though neither eaſy nor ordinary) undertakings. For his noble Genius leading him on to encounter difficulties, he ever ſeem'd moſt delighted with thoſe ſtudies wherein he might ſtrain the ſinews of his brain: And as if he accounted them but Half-ſcholars that did onely ex commentario ſapere, and knew onely ſo much as taken up from others they held in memory, he was not wont to take Expoſitions of Scripture upon the credit of any Author, how great or plauſible ſoever, nor to look upon their Reſolves as if they were Hercules's Pillars with a Nè plus ultrà upon them. And therefore he uſed, as occaſion offered itſelf, to ſet upon thoſe difficult places of Scripture which ſeem'd to be of more uſe and concernment, and much time did he ſpend that way to give light to thoſe δυσνόητα and dark places in Holy Writ; ſo that ſcarce could the queſtion be propounded to him about any obſcure and knotty paſſage therein, whereabout he had not beſtowed many ſerious thoughts beforehand. He was taken notice of by many for his ſingular faculty in this kind, and ſent to by ſeveral Learned men for his reſolution of ſuch Doubts; which was uſually ſo clear, that there was no perſon, who loved Truth and was not addicted to jangling, but would be ſatisfied with his Anſwers, if not as certain and unqueſtionable, yet as ingenious and very probable: inſomuch that Strangers of other Univerſities, who had never ſeen him, gave gave him this high Elogy, That for aſſoiling of Scripture-difficulties he was to be reckoned amongſt the beſt in the World. It is agreeable to this which the learned Mr. Alſop ſpake of him in his Funeral Commemoration before the Univerſity, That if he had been encouraged to write in difficiliora loca Scripturæ, and that God in mercy to the World had been pleaſed to lengthen out his days, aſſuredly he would have out-gone any Author then extant, and probably would have given light to ſome hard places of Scripture which now may remain dark and unaſſoiled till the laſt Day of Judgement.

24. As theſe various Perfections and uſefull Accompliſhments made his company very deſirable to Scholars, ſo the Goodneſs of his Diſpoſition made him equally Communicative and free to impart his Knowledge to thoſe who came to him either out of the ſame Univerſity or from abroad. To theſe he uſed to impart himſelf with that willingneſs, that it ſeem'd queſtionable whether had the greater deſire, they to hear, or he to communicate his Studies to them: Which made a familiar Friend of his once merrily to ſay to one that, having been partaker of his diſcourſe, gave him thanks, That he might ſpare his thanks; for that they were not ſo much beholding to him for delivering himſelf to them, as he was to them for hearing him. For this great advantage he made to himſelf of the Civility which he ſhew'd to others, that by the communication of his Notions to his Friends they became ſo fixed in his memory, that he was afterward able readily to deliver them in a well-form'd diſcourſe, and was wont, as often as he had occaſion to expreſs himſelf in publick, (eſpecially in thoſe College-exerciſes which they call Common-places) to make uſe of the fore-mentioned Diſcourſes, which with a little labour he could put into an apt form. Some of which are thoſe excellent Diatribæ, which with the reſt of his Works are publiſhed for the common Benefit of the Church. Which though but few in compariſon of that great ſtore wherewith ſo rich a magazine was furniſhed, yet even in thoſe few he hath diſcovered more rare pieces of recondite Learning then are to be found in ſome vaſt Volumes of many much-admired Authors.

25. Concerning which Diatribæ this is fit to be advertis'd, That though there are in ſome of them ſeveral things of a ſtrain that tranſcends the capacities of common Readers, yet it would be a great miſtake for that reaſon to ſuſpect this worthy perſon as guilty of Oſtentation or Affectedneſs. For as they were Academical Exerciſes, and not fitted for a vulgar Audience; ſo he himſelf was of all knowing men the greateſt Hater of that vanity.

He always disapprov'd the unnecessary quotations of Authors, and the use of Forein Languages and Terms of Art in popular Sermons; and expressing his dislike of such practices, (too much in use among some, not onely young Fellows of Colleges and other young Preachers, but even those of more age and experience) would sometimes say, That they savoured of as much Inconsiderateness, as if Shoe-makers should bring Shoes to be drawn on with their Lasts in them: judging it a scarce pardonable folly for men going about the instruction of the ignorant, to propound things in such Terms as themselves understood not till they had spent many years at the School or University; and which, how significant soever in themselves and to the Learned, yet were but as so many Stumbling-blocks to common Auditors, or at the best but as Stiles, which though some might possibly leap over, yet they interrupted the progress of their attention.

26. Nay, to give this Excellent person his just right, he was so far from the vanity of Ostentation, that it is hard to say whether he was more eminent for his rare Knowledge, or for his singular Humility and Modesty in valuing his own Abilities; insomuch as he could not without trouble hear of that great Opinion and Esteem which some (deservedly enough) had conceived of his great Learning: he owning onely some diligence, freedom from prejudice and studium partium, as his best abilities; as himself hath excellently express'd it in a * Letter of his to his friend M^r. Samuel Hartlib. To which may be added, That having received some notices of the great value which some Learned men both at home and in a forein University put upon his Apocalyptick Labours, he made onely this modest return to that Friend, who perhaps thought he might highly please him with that news, That he saw no great cause for all that why he should think much better of himself; adding withall, That he had frequently observed it to be the hap of many a Book that had little or no worth in it, to find applause in the world, when in the mean while a well-deserving Book is scarce taken notice of. So far was this Good man from all proud self-reflexions, from glorying in his wisedom and strength of Parts, or in any performance of his own.

* See Ep. 96. p. 1080.

Of this rare Temper of Spirit this also may be remembred as another pregnant Instance, That when he was earnestly importun'd by some to write in difficiliora loca S. Scripturæ, (for which task he was incomparably furnished) he answered with a sigh, No: and being pressed to give a reason; besides many things which he offered, as That it required [1] more time then he could reckon upon he had to live, and [2] more and better Books then he had at present preſent or could command, and [3] that ſuch a work muſt be done in an Age when mens thoughts are not impriſon'd or circumſcrib'd within the pale of over-ruling parties; he added this alſo, [4] That it would require more Learning then he had or was capable of.

27. To omit many other Inſtances of his Humility, (for his life was full of them) we ſhall onely adde The little deſire which he had either to Academical Honours or to great Preferments and worldly Advantages. For the former, this may not unfitly be here remembred, That he was ſtudiouſly regardleſs of Academical Degrees, as being unwilling to make any great noiſe and report in the world: And, but that he was over-power'd to doe it by the then Maſter of the College, he had never ſo far proceeded as to have been * Bachelour of Divinity. Thus he expreſs'd himſelf to ſome in private. A Maſter of Arts he was, and a great Maſter of them too before he was ſo call'd; but more then ſo to be he affected not. An argument that that Grace was eminent in him, wherein others moſt commonly are too ſhort and defective. And for the latter, how far he was from any ambitious and eager purſuing the advantages and great things of this world, appear'd, as by his refuſing the offer made him by his Uncle, and that alſo by the then Biſhop of Ely, (which we intimated before) ſo likewiſe by his modeſt denial of the Provoſtſhip of Trinity College near Dublin in Ireland, to which he was elected upon the recommendation of another great Prelate, the L. Primate of Armagh, and by his unwillingneſs the ſecond time to accept of it, when he was in danger to be put into that Preferment. The height of his Ambition was onely to have had ſome ſmall Donative ſine cura made additional to his Fellowſhip, or to have been placed in ſome Collegiate Church or Rural College: Some ſuch place of quiet retirement from the noiſe and tumults of the world, with a Competency moderated by Agur's wiſh, (Neither Poverty, nor Riches) was the top and utmoſt of his deſires. And yet when he ſpake thus, he would adde, not that he ſhould be reſtleſs or diſcontented till he could obtain ſome ſuch thing, but to ſhew what kind of life he did affect, and in how low an Orb of this world's Preferments he would have been content to be placed. This ſenſe of his mind is clearly expreſs'd by himſelf in a Letter of his to a worthy Friend, (written upon occaſion of certain ungrounded conjectures made by ſome upon his being by the then Archbiſhop of Canterbury admitted into the number of his Chaplains) in which he affirms That he had lived, till the beſt of his time was ſpent, in tranquillitate & ſeceſſu; and now that there is but a little left, ſhould I (ſaith he) be ſo unwiſe (ſuppoſe there were nothing elſe) as to enter now into a tumultuous life, where I ſhould not have time to think my own thoughts, and muſt of neceſsity diſpleaſe others or myſelf? Thoſe who think ſo, know not my diſpoſition in this kind to be as averſe as ſome perhaps would be ambitious.

28. This inward ſenſe of his Soul (which was alſo his moſt deliberate choice) did not ariſe from any ſad melancholy or ſour diſcontent upon ſome great diſappointment, (for he that had no great Ambitions could have no great Diſappointments;) nor did it ſpring out of a fond and over-dear affection to Privacy, or from an unfitneſs for buſineſs and converſe with the world, (the property of ſome who are ſtyl'd Mere Scholars;) for his Collegues, and others who had the happineſs to be acquainted with him, knew him to be a perſon of ſingular Prudence and admirable abilities both for giving pertinent directions and advice in any important caſe, as a Friend, and for the managing of College-affairs, as Fellow, and for diſcharge of his particular Truſt, as Tutor. He was wont indeed to call his Study his Cell; but not as if he meant (according to the lazy and uſeleſs Monaſtick way of life) to immure and ſhut up himſelf there from converſe with others. He was far from affecting ſuch an unprofitable, unactive Solitude: for none was more free and open for Converſe, eſpecially with ingenuous and inquiring Scholars. Let who would repair to him, provided they were not captious and impertinent, he would give them their fill of diſcourſe, and enlarge to ample ſatisfaction; yea he would farther take the pains, if ſo much were deſired, to give his full mind in writing; even himſelf would doe it without the help of an Amanuenſis.

29. There is one thing more to this purpoſe which here offers itſelf to be conſidered, That though our Author loved a retired ſtudious life, yet his Thoughts were not ſhut up within his Cell; but his Soul covered the whole Earth, (to borrow that expreſſion of * Siracides concerning Solomon) his Heart was as large and wide as the Univerſe. He ſo lived and was affected as became a Citizen of the World: More eſpecially, as became a Chriſtian and a member of the Church Catholick, his Thoughts and Cares were particularly concern'd in the affairs of Chriſtendom. And accordingly for the gaining of forein Intelligence (beſides his Letters from ſome knowing Friends with whom he kept correſpondence) he was not unwilling to expend yearly ſomething out of his ſmall Incomes, and when he ſent

it to ſuch as were at charge to furniſh him (weekly for the moſt part) with Intelligence, he us'd in his Letters to them to call it His Tribute, (that was his word, implying his ingenuity and withall his reſpect; not Wages, or any the like word of a mercenary or ſervile ſignification:) and to one of them he was pleas'd once pleaſantly to ſay, I am neither Dean nor Biſhop; but thus much I am willing to ſet apart to know how the World goes; adding that if it were with him as it is with ſome (whoſe Incomes were greater, and who wanted neither Riches nor Honour, but a good Heart and the power to doe good with them in the world) he ſhould doe a great deal more then that he did; as numbering the affairs of Chriſtendom amongſt his beſt concernments, and the gaining a more particular acquaintance therewith (by helping to maintain correſpondencies amongſt Learned and wiſe men in diſtant Countries) amongſt the beſt uſes he could make of that eſtate which God had given him. Herein he alſo verified that of the * Pſalmiſt, The works of the Lord are Great, ſought out of all them that have pleaſure therein. * Pſal. 111.

30. But yet more particularly he had a very pious ſolicitude for the affairs of the Proteſtant Reformed Churches, being heartily deſirous that the Deſign then on foot for procuring Peace amongſt Proteſtants might take effect: And therefore he could not but greatly wonder to ſee ſo little life and affection toward this negotiation for Peace in too many of the Proteſtant profeſſion, yea even in ſome who would ſeem beſt affected to the forein Churches; theſe (he obſerv'd) would profeſs a deſire that ſuch a Pacification could be accompliſh'd, but yet with a kind of heavineſs and deadneſs, as he thought, who in the mean time was not ſo coldly and indifferently affected, it being his heart's deſire and prayer to God that all Proteſtants would follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith each might edify the other; then would not thoſe who were come out of Babylon be ſo unwiſe and deſperate, as manifeſtly to weaken the Proteſtant Intereſt by their fierce animoſities and violent conteſts about ſome Doctrines neither Fundamental nor Neceſſary to Salvation, and conſequently expoſe themſelves as a prey to the common Enemy that breaths out nothing but threatnings and ſlaughter againſt the true Worſhippers, the faithfull Servants of Chriſt, and would triumphantly rejoyce to ſee their memoriall cut off from the earth, that the Name of Proteſtants may be no more in remembrance.

This truely Heroick Deſign for Peace (that was the Epithet our Author gave it) he foreſaw would prove Difficult; but yet he judged it Fecible, and the enterprise was the more Heroick, because accompanied with Difficulties. That which made it Difficult was (as he well observ'd) Prejudice and Studium partium, and a fond esteem of some Opinions peculiar to each side, or contended for by some of note amongst them, who having once drawn bloud in such Controversies, (that was his apt expression, whereby he meant their having publickly engaged and declar'd themselves therein) were therefore the more averse from hearkening to any Overtures of Peace, as fearing some beloved Dogmata (and consequently their Reputation) should thereby receive no little prejudice. But that this Pacifick design was Fecible he nothing doubted; and that it might the better attain an happy issue, he thought in general this was the most compendious and effectual way, viz. That neither side should be roughly press'd or urged to relinquish presently their Opinions of difference, but rather all fair and calm endeavours should first be us'd to persuade both parties That the difference betwixt them is not in Fundamentals, but that they both agree in so much as is necessary to Salvation; and therefore That their differing in other matters of lesser import should not so far prevail to the either causing or continuing any uncharitable Disunions, as their agreeing in other Points, such as are Fundamental and Necessary to Salvation, should oblige and persuade them to Charity and mutual Forbearance, and the owning each other as Brethren and Members of the same Body, whereof Christ is the Head. And by this means when their Affections were once put into a better temper, and the acrimony of their spirits was hereby corrected, they would certainly be in a better disposition to judge of the points of difference between them. Besides, he did not judge it necessary for the procuring and establishing this desireable Union between both parties, that there should be a full Decision of all Controversies in every minute particular thereof; but rather that both of them should abate of that vast distance which their eager contentions had made, not widening the breach, not enlarging, but lessening their differences as much as might be by their candid constructions, fair concessions and condescensions to each other. For except each partie would abate, and cease to maintain stifly their supposed advantage against the other entire, it would be as impossible to attain this Union, as for a Joyner to set two pieces of timber together, without paring something from either: it was the Author's fit comparison.

This in general was the way of Peace which he chalked out for those whom the Love of Christ should constrain heartily to seek and pursue the Peace of the Reformed Religion, the the happy uniting of divided Proteſtants. But as for the more particular methods for carrying on this Pacifick deſign, they are at large diſcours'd of by three Reverend Prelates of our Church, Biſhop Morton, Biſhop Hall, and Biſhop Davenant, and by the laſt eſpecially, who beſides his Tract De Pace inter Evangelicos procuranda, wrote another intituled Ad fraternam communionem inter Evangelicas Eccleſias Adhortatio. Nor was our Author aſymbolus and altogether ſilent: for though at firſt he declin'd upon ſome prudential conſiderations to expreſs himſelf otherwiſe then in general upon this argument, yet after that his Superiors had declar'd themſelves, he was pleas'd alſo to communicate his particular Inſtructions about this affair; as appears by ſeveral Epiſtles of his written to M^r. H. and M^r. D. heretofore * publiſhed, wherein the judicious Reader may obſerve his great Prudence and equal Moderation, and that he was [a] clothed as with Humility (of which we have given ſeveral pregnant Inſtances) ſo likewiſe [b] with a meek and quiet ſpirit, a diſpoſition of near alliance to that of Humility, and an Ornament of as great price and value in the ſight of God, as the outward bravery of Jewels, gay attire and curious dreſſings is highly (but undeſervedly) valued and admired in the eyes of men.

31. But it is not fit we ſhould ſo eaſily goe off from what we laſt intimated, it fairly leading us to offer unto the Reader's obſervation that which added no ſmall luſtre to our Author's Character, we mean His prudent Moderation in the either Declaration or Defence of his private Opinions. He was never forward in any company to catch at hints of diſcourſe, or to take any other occaſion to reveal his particular judgment: So far was he from the Temper of thoſe men who, being puffed up (it may be) with a ſmall knowledge, account it nothing to know, unleſs others know that they do, who muſt talk or burſt; not ſo much for benefit to others, as to diſperſe and publiſh their own praiſe. He knew there was * a time to ſpeak, and a time to keep ſilence; and he knew how to doe both with as much eaſe as any man living. There is that keepeth ſilence, (ſaith Siracides, Chap. 20.) knowing his time: ſo did he. It was a frequent Proverbial ſpeech of our Author's, He that cannot hold his tongue can hold nothing; and he practis'd accordingly. Not that he was a niggard of his Notions, or backward to impart to others what himſelf knew, (for he was moſt communicative both of his Notes and Notions;) but he prudently conſider'd the Character of the Perſons then in preſence and the Temper of the Times; nor did he neglect to follow that other Maxime of the Son of * Sirach in a more more improved ſenſe, Shew not forth wiſedome out of time. He was always more modeſt and ſober then to proſtitute his Thoughts to unworthy perſons; which were to caſt pearls before ſwine: But if any were ſeriouſly deſirous to be informed, and did ſeem out of no ill deſign to ask his opinion, eſpecially if it were in re nova & paradoxa, to ſuch he was not unwilling to communicate his inward Sentiments privately & ſine arbitris. (So the wiſeſt and beſt Philoſophers had their Ἀκροαματικὰ, their Ἐσωτερικὰ and Ἐποπτικὰ, which were not publickly and promiſcuouſly imparted to all (as were their πὰ Ἐκφορα or their Ἐξωτερικὰ) but to thoſe onely who were Μεμυημένοι and prepared for ſuch myſteries. Yea our Bleſſed Saviour himſelf did ſpeak ſome things to his Diſciples κατ' ἰδίαν, and taught them as they were able to bear.) Otherwiſe our Author was well content and ſatisfied without even theſe private communications, not caring to impart any of his peculiar Notions, but (as he would ſay) where he found ſome appetite; nor would he offer them and try whether they had a ſtomach, but they themſelves muſt diſcover it; much leſs would he goe about (as he ſaid) to cramme them. So far was he from being obtruſive unto any, that even ſome of familiar acquaintance with him (he profeſs'd) knew as little of his Notions as any Stranger whatſoever.

Luk. 10. Joh. 16.

Nor did his Modeſty and Good Temper leſs appear in the Defence of his private Opinions: For he would not be offended with others who were not of his mind, nor eagerly contend with thoſe who differ'd from him; having reſolved never to abandon Love in his proſecution of Truth. I never found myſelf prone to change my hearty affections to any one for mere difference in Opinion, was a worthy return of his to one who had oppoſed him with more heat then needed. And therefore onely as occaſion required, having fairly propounded his Judgement and the Reaſons of it, he ingenuouſly left every man to judge for himſelf, without expreſſing the leaſt ambitious zeal to win others to his Opinion. To this purpoſe he expreſs'd himſelf to a tenacious piece he had once to doe with, one that would be always replying, having found out ſome ſhift or other that muſt goe for an Anſwer; It is ſufficient (ſaid he) for a man to propound his Opinion with the ſtrongeſt evidence and arguments he can, and ſo leave it: Truth will be juſtified of her children. He obſerved alſo that in moſt points of Controverſy mens Paſſions are vehemently engaged, and the Diſputants generally argue according to their Intereſts: and therefore when he ſaw men impetuous in the aſſertion of their Opinions, and peremptory in the rejection of other mens Judgements, he commonly anſwer'd ſuch onely with with ſilence; not caring to entertain diſcourſe with them who, in ſtead of a ſober and modeſt Enquiry into Truth, were addicted to a diſingenuous humour of Diſputacity; that was his term, which in his ſenſe ſignified To be always reſolved for the laſt word, (which is the troubleſome temper and practice of ſelf-conceited and pertinacious wranglers.) For after he diſcover'd any to be ſuch, he would give them full leave to have the laſt word and all, becauſe he would ſpeak no more, what-ever he thought.

Nor was he leſs unwilling to allow them alſo the laſt word in writing. Witneſs thoſe Paper-collations between him and M^r. T. H. a great follower of that man of more Reading then Conſideration, M^r. Hugh Broughton. Indeed T. H. had a great opinion of his own performances in this kind, and of the much good might be done by ſuch Conferences, and accordingly did ply M^r. Mede with one Paper after another, who yet was wholly of another mind, and plainly told him, Of theſe reciprocations of diſcourſe in writing, wherein you place ſo much benefit for the diſcovery of Truth, I have often heard and ſeen Truth loſt thereby, but ſeldom or never found. And for this reaſon (as alſo becauſe Conferences by writing were tedious and leſs ſafe, and would take away a great deal of his time) he was averſe from all ſuch Pen-work, (as he call'd it,) deſiring him not to make any Reply, for he was reſolved to anſwer no more, whatſoever he ſhould ſend. And he was as good as his word: for though M^r. H. could not hold, but would needs ſend him another large Paper of the ſame complexion with the former, yet could not this provoke him to recede from his fix'd and well-grounded reſolution againſt all multiplying of unneceſſary and fruitleſs Replies. So true was he to that expreſſion of his, I can with much more patience endure to be contradicted, then be drawn to make Reply; having little or no edge to contend with one I think ſettled and perſuaded, unleſs it were in ſomething that nearly concern'd his Salvation: and withall he added, You know as much of my Opinion and my Grounds for the ſame as I would deſire of any mans; and I think I perfectly underſtand yours: Why ſhould then either of us ſpend our time any farther to no purpoſe?

32. But not to dwell onely in Generals; His Prudent Moderation particularly diſcover'd itſelf in an Inſtance of no ſmall weight and importance: In ſhort thus. When that unhappy difference about the point of Predeſtination and its Appendants (inſtead of a more free, ſedate and Chriſtian-like method of debating it) was blown to ſo high a flame in the Low-Countries, and began to kindle ſtrifes here at home, he would often ſay, he wondred that men would with ſo great animoſity contend about thoſe obſcure Speculations, and condemn one another

*Wiſd.9. with ſuch ſeverity, conſidering that, as the * Wiſe man ſaith, (to whoſe words he would often allude) We hardly gueſs aright at things that are upon Earth, and with labour do we find the things that are before us: But the things that are in Heaven who hath ſearched
*Act.17. out? But if at any time (as it was ſaid of * S. Paul at Athens, παρωξύνετο τὸ πνεῦμα αὐτοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ) his ſpirit was ſtirred within him, it was when he obſerv'd ſome to contend with an unmeaſureable confidence and bitter zeal for that black Doctrine of Abſolute Reprobation; upon which occaſion he could not forbear to tell ſome of his Friends, That it was an Opinion he could never digeſt, being herein much of Dr. Jackſon's mind, That generally the Propugners of ſuch Tenets were men reſolved in their Affections of Love and Hatred, both of which they exercis'd conſtantly and violently, and according to their own Tempers made a judgement of God and his Decrees. To the like purpoſe he expreſs'd himſelf (about two years before his death) in a Letter to an ancient Friend of his, formerly of the ſame College, It ſeems harſh that of thoſe whom God hath elected ad media Salutis, and calls by the preaching of his Goſpel, any ſhould be abſolutely and peremptorily ordain'd to damnation. And afterwards, by way of Reply to the objected authority of S. Auſtin as to ſome part of the Predeſtinarian Controverſy, he added, If thoſe were Hereticks which followed not S. Auſtin, the moſt part of the Fathers before him were in Hereſy, and a great part of the Church after him. Zelots are wont to be over-liberal in ſuch charges. Thus would he ſometimes in private reveal his judgement, but in his publick performances he was reſerved and did purpoſely abſtain from medling with theſe matters. And accordingly we have received this from ſome of old acquaintance with him, That in thoſe days when the Controverſies between the Remonſtrants and Contra-Remonſtrants made ſo great a noiſe in the world, he was wont to bring his Common-places to an ancient Friend and Collegue to be peruſed by him, with a deſire that he would expunge whatſoever did but ſeem to countenance the Poſitions of either party. To which may be added this other Inſtance of his own relating in a Letter to another Friend about four years before his death, viz. That there being great combuſtions and diviſions among the Heads of the Univerſity in preparation to the Commencement, each party being deſirous to get the advantage in the Election of the Anſwerers, and ſo to fit the Queſtions to their mind, and the more Calvinian party having prevail'd upon this occaſion; I went not (ſaith he) to——this week, (as commonly I uſe to doe,)

for

for fear of being taken to be of a ſide. Theſe things we have noted particularly, to ſhew with how much Sweetneſs as well as Prudence the great Learning of this Good man was admirably temper'd.

33. But beſides his Prudent Moderation, there was alſo to be obſerved in him, that which by the Epigrammatiſt is made one main Ingredient of an Happy life, Prudens Simplicitas, a mixture of what our Saviour Chriſt commends as imitable in the wiſe Serpent and in the harmleſs Dove. He was not ſo Imprudent as always to utter all his mind, (that's the property of a Fool, Prov. 29.) or before any company to reveal what new Notion or unvulgar Truth he had diſcover'd: But he was always ſo generouſly Honeſt, ſo Apert and Single-hearted, as not * to ſpeak wickedly for God, or talk deceitfully for him; nor would he apply himſelf to any unwarrantable policies for the promoting or commending of Truth to others. Such little crafts and undue practices were below the Nobleneſs and Integrity of his ſpirit. To this purpoſe we may fitly take occaſion here to remember a ſerious and excellent paſſage of his, I cannot believe that Truth can be prejudiced by the diſcovery of Truth; but I fear that the maintenance thereof by Fallacy or Falſhood may not end with a bleſſing. Thus did he upon occaſion expreſs himſelf, with a juſt reflexion upon ſome who, pretending to Policy, did (prudently, as they thought) adviſe, That for the better ſecuring and advancing ſome Doctrines, men ſhould be born in hand that they were Fundamental, and accordingly were to receive them as ſuch. But our Author (who was a great lover of Truth, (endeavouring to judge and ſpeak of every thing according to the truth of the thing) and who always valued the Jacob-like Plainneſs and Simplicity of ſpirit, a free Openneſs and Singleneſs of heart, in any faithfull Chriſtian, as an high Perfection) look'd upon all ſuch Practices with the greateſt diſguſt and abhorrence; and ſo will every one who is an Iſraelite indeed, in whom there is no guile: And yet, though it be a moſt unworthy, it has been nevertheleſs a too common and uſual artifice among ſome of the divided Churches in Chriſtendom, to heighten Speculative Doctrines and ſuch as are leſs weighty (and ſometimes doubtful and uncertain) into Fundamental Articles, eſpecially when it is for the advantage of the party that they ſhould be deem'd ſuch. But it had been infinitely better if the Moderation of the Church of England as to Articles of Religion had been imitated in other Churches; for want whereof elſewhere Ex Religione Ars facta eſt, cui deinde conſequens fuerit, ut ad exemplum eorum qui turrim Babylonicam ædificabant, affectatio temeraria rerum ſublimium diſſonas locutiones & diſcordiam pareret; as Grotius complains upon a like occaſion in his De Veritate Relig. Chriſt. l. 6.

We might alſo briefly obſerve another Inſtance of his Prudence, and that was as to the choice of the fitteſt and moſt ſeaſonable Time for communicating Truth to others. And indeed this was a point of Prudence which he would adviſe ſhould be moſt carefully conſider'd, as being in his eſteem half the work: otherwiſe ſome Uſefull Notions might, becauſe they were Uncommon, be raſhly condemned, before they were well conſidered and underſtood: and there are none more ready to condemn, then the half-learned and half-witted (which are not the leſs numerous nor the leſs confident) ſort of men, who ſtear not (as he obſerved) by Reaſon, but by another Compaſs, viz. Faction, or Intereſt, or Affection, &c. So true is that of the Comœdian,

Homine imperito nunquam quidquam injuſtius;
Qui, niſi quod ipſe facit, nihil rectum putat.

Whereas men of the greateſt Reaſon, deepeſt Judgement and nobleſt Accompliſhments, are alſo men of the greateſt Civility, Candour and Ingenuity;

Ἀνδράσι γὰ πινυτοῖσι πέλει νόος ἤπιος αἰεί.

34. And now having advanced thus far in the Deſcription of his Vertues, we may not ſilently or ſlightly paſs over his Charity, a Grace that was very eminent and conſpicuous in him; and ſo it ought to be in every Chriſtian, it being the peculiar Badge and Livery of Chriſt's Diſciples, as well as their indiſpenſable Duty and neceſſary Qualification for their doing good here and their receiving a Reward hereafter. And therefore (to allude to that in 1 Cor. 13.) although our Author had great skil in Tongues, and had the gift of * Prophecy, and underſtood Myſteries, and was alſo able to remove Mountains of Difficulties, ſo as to make all become plain and ſmooth, particularly as to the underſtanding of hard paſſages in the more Myſterious and Prophetical Books of H. Scripture; yet (notwithſtanding all theſe Accompliſhments) had he not had Charity, he had been nothing better, nay he had been juſt nothing, (according to thoſe two obſervable expreſſions in that fore-named Chapter, οὐδὲν ὠφελοῦμαι and οὐδέν εἰμι.) His Knowledge, if alone, might have been apt to puff him up; but his Charity, which accompanied it, both diſpoſed and enabled him to edify and build up others in the moſt holy Faith, in ſound Wiſedome and Underſtanding.

* That by the gift of Prophecy (in 1 Cor. 13. and in other places) is meant the gift of interpreting Scripture, is clearly proved by the Learned Dr. Hammond and others.

His

His Charity was of the right kind, and could have approved itſelf ſuch to thoſe that were capable to judge thereof, by all thoſe Fifteen Properties mentioned in that Chapter as the ſure Marks and proper Characters of the genuine Chriſtian Charity. But to inſiſt upon ſo many particulars would be an unreaſonable Excurſion, and an unmercifull uſurping upon the Reader's patience: And beſides, it is not very needfull, ſome of thoſe Properties having been more or leſs ſpoken to already in ſome foregoing Sections. To pretermit therefore his moſt endearing Sweetneſs and obliging Affability in converſe with others, his abſolute Inoffenſiveneſs either in words or behaviour towards all men, his rare Communicativeneſs and ſingular Alacrity in imparting what he knew to thoſe who were of a ſoberly-inquiſitive Genius, (all which were the fair Fruits and excellent Effects of the true Chriſtian Love) we ſhall ſelect onely Two more General Inſtances wherein he expreſs'd his Charity towards men, (for of that we are ſpeaking:) and they were, 1. His carefull * concealing or leſſening of others Failings and Imperfections: So far was he from making the worſt of every thing, as ſome doe, who without making any favourable allowances are extreme in marking what is amiſs. And 2. His free relieving of the Neceſſitous: So far was he from hiding his face and ſhutting up his bowels from the poor and needy in the day of their diſtreſs.

* 1 Cor. 13. 7. Charity covereth (στέγει) all things.

He was ſo perfect in the firſt inſtance, that he would μηδένα βλασφημεῖν ſpeak evil of no man: much leſs would he * watch for their halting, as one that * rejoyced in iniquity. Nay at ſuch a diſtance he was from that evil, but epidemical, humour, that he choſe rather to ſpeak well of thoſe in whom he had onely Hope for a ground of commendation. Nor did he onely conceal and cover the faults of others, even of his Enemies, (as far as the circumſtances would bear, and in caſe it were not a greater Charity ſometimes to diſcloſe them) but he would alſo avoid the company of ſuch as he had obſerved to pleaſe themſelves or thought to tickle ill-minded perſons in paſſing unworthy cenſures upon other men. And thus ſometimes by ſilence, ſometimes by rebuke, and (when it was convenient) by withdrawing from the place and company, he declared he would have no ſhare in the ſin of thoſe who endeavoured to ſhew their uncharitable wit in either diſparaging the parts or vilifying the performances of others. As for himſelf, when his own name was concern'd, he was ſignally Patient, even another Moſes for Meekneſs, * vir mitiſſimus; he knew how to bear perſonal diſreſpects with an untroubled ſpirit, nobly and meekly, and thus (according to that

* Jer. 20.

* 1 Cor. 13. 6. Charity rejoyceth not in iniquity.

* Num. 12.

* Chap. 10. of * Siracides) he glorified his Soul in Meekneſs. An inſtance whereof appears in his civil Reply to the Strictures of Dan. Lawenus, which were not without ſome angry and unhandſome reflexions upon our Author. The man had a long time been poring upon the Apocalyps, and ſeem'd to envie him the praiſe due to him for his Apocalyptick Labours; fearing (belike) that thereby Mr. Mede would increaſe, and his writings muſt proportionably decreaſe in fame and reputation. Nor could any one that look'd upon our Author, his parts or pains with an evil eye, ſpeak ſo meanly and diminiſhingly of him as he would of himſelf; innocently revenging their great Envy, Paſſion or Prejudice with his as great Modeſty and Meekneſs. Thus was he a rare Pattern of Patience, when himſelf was touch'd: But otherwiſe (which was his Vertue and Honour) juſtly Impatient he would be, when any, eſpecially worthy perſons, were reproched and unworthily dealt with in his preſence: Which may be verified by this remarkable and illuſtrious example among many others. After many invitations both by Letters and otherwiſe, he purpoſed to give a viſit to the famous Univerſity of Oxford, and particularly for the ſake of his much honoured and much obliging friend, Dr. Jackſon, Preſident of Corpus Chriſti College; (whoſe Piety and Learning (together with the great Candour and Benignity of his ſpirit) are eminently conſpicuous in the laſting Monuments of his elaborate Works, publiſhed partly by himſelf and partly by the unwearied induſtry and care of the Religious and Learned Mr. B. Oley.) There he was entertain'd (together with ſome of his quondam Pupills, who attended him from Cambridge) very civilly and nobly by the fore-mention'd Doctor, whoſe Courteſy was moſt obſervable in this, (to omit other particulars) That ſome choice and eminent men of the Univerſity were deſir'd by the Doctor to accompany Mr. Mede during his ſtay in Town. It chanced at dinner one day that the Theme of their diſcourſe was diſpleaſing to this Good man; for, by the liberty which was taken, ſome were criticizing upon and ſpeaking (as he thought) but unduly, or at leaſt not up to the worth of their Learned and worthy Profeſſour Dr. Prideaux, (afterwards the R. Reverend Biſhop of Worceſter.) Mr. Mede could not hold, but (as ſome then preſent have made the report) brake out into theſe or the like words; Gentlemen, I beſeech you deſiſt; the man of whom you now ſpeak deſerves far better words. It was his Infirmity, let it be admitted, in this to be overſeen: But he hath Vertues and great Accompliſhments far more then enough to make up this defect. That he is both Learned and Pious, it may not be queſtion'd; and one

Infirmity

Infirmity amidſt ſo many Perfections is not to be regarded nor ever made mention of by one Chriſtian towards another. Let me therefore take the boldneſs to crave this at your hands, that you would deſiſt from this diſcourſe, and fall upon ſome other more profitable argument. A noble example and moſt worthy of imitation. Proceed we to that other inſtance of his Charity.

35. As he was thus Chriſtianly carefull to conceal or leſſen the Failings and Imperfections of others; ſo he was no leſs diligent to expreſs his Charity in relieving thoſe Wants which could not be conceal'd. For as to his Temper, he was * συμπαθὴς and εὔσπλαγχνος, inwardly ſympathizing and affected with the tendereſt of Compaſſions towards others in their ſtreights and difficulties, as feeling in himſelf their very griefs, and reſenting their calamities and hardſhips as his own. And agreeable to this Temper was his Practice: For as became him that was ſo Chriſtianly affected, and was therefore * εὐμετάδοτος and κοινωνικὸς, he forgat not to doe good and to communicate upon all juſt occaſions. And he was the more exactly carefull to obſerve all the due ſeaſons and objects of Beneficence, becauſe he look'd upon Charity and Almes-giving not as an arbitrary thing, left to mens choice or diſcretion to be done or omitted; (under which Notion too many conſider it, for what ends it is eaſy to gueſs) but as a neceſſary and indiſpenſable Duty. It was an ingenious obſervation of his to this effect, That the word for Almes (in the language which our Saviour ſpake) was צדקה, which imports Righteouſneſs, and conſequently carries an Obligation with it. And farther he conſider'd Almes under the Notion of a Lords-rent and Tribute of Thankſgiving, which God the Lord of all (whoſe is the Earth and the Fulneſs thereof) juſtly requires from us, that thereby we may teſtify our acknowledging of God as our Great Landlord, and our ſelves his Tenants, that hold all we have, of him. And thus [a] He that hath mercy on the poor, honoureth his Maker; and [b] He that giveth Alms, ſacrificeth praiſe. Moved therefore to this great Duty of Charity by theſe and other Conſiderations, (as that it is expreſsly commanded and earneſtly inculcated in very many places of H. Scripture, and withall enforced from that Equity (and it is the greateſt Equity imaginable) which ſhines out in that *Royal Law, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf; as alſo from ſome peculiar Motives which the Goſpel propounds whereby a Chriſtian's obligation to this Duty is rather increas'd and heighten'd) he perſever'd and was not weary in doing good even unto all men, as he had opportunity or * ability; wiſely contriving to proportion and and ſuit his Charitable reliefs anſwerably to the Neceſſities of others.

Nor would he be diſcouraged and taken off from ſuch acts of mercifull Beneficence by the unworthy returns he ſometimes met with from ſome diſobliging perſons. One inſtance whereof it may not be amiſs here to inſert. There was one in Cambridge to whom M^r. Mede had ſhewed favour in lending him money at a time of need; but he being put in mind of his engagement, inſtead of making due payment, repay'd M^r. Mede onely with undue words to this effect, That upon a ſtrict and exact account he had no right to what he claim'd. No right? anſwered he. No, no right, it was told him, becauſe he was none of God's children, for that they onely have right who are gracious in God's ſight. Ungracious and Unthankfull Sectary! His name might be mentioned, but let him be Anonymus, as fit to be numbered onely among the בְּלִי שֵׁם, as Job doth expreſs men of a vile character. Chap. 30. The Story was related by M^r. Mede upon the occaſion of ſome Intelligence received from London, That there was at that time a more ſtrict examination there of thoſe who came to take Holy Orders, concerning that ſtrange Poſition, Dominium temporale fundatur in gratia; at which one then in company being aſtoniſhed, as ſuppoſing none would be ſo impudent as to aſſert it, M^r. Mede replied that he had particular experience of the evil effect and conſequence of ſuch Doctrine, as in the fore-mentioned Story. Yet notwithſtanding ſuch unworthineſs (which ſome perhaps would have made a gain of, as fanſying themſelves thereby excus'd from Charity) he was not * ſlothfull nor tired out in well-doing, but, as became a Follower of God, (the Higheſt Pattern of Charity) who is [a] kind even to the unthankfull and to the evil, he continued patiently in doing good, chuſing rather [b] to overcome evil with good, then to be overcome of evil. Other Charities ſeem'd to him but low and eaſy and common, ſuch as even * Publicans and Sinners (thoſe of the worſt note in the world) do perform, who love thoſe that love them and doe good to thoſe who doe good to them: But the Charity which is extended to All, even to Enemies, to thoſe who are contrary to us in either Judgement or Affection, is the more noble, God-like, unordinary: and ſuch was our Author's; for were men of different perſuaſions from him, and at as great a diſtance from one another as from Rome to Geneva or Amſterdam, &c. yet even all theſe might more or leſs upon occaſion be influenc'd upon by his Charity.

36. As his Charity was thus largely Extenſive and Univerſal, ſo was was it likewiſe accompanied with the greateſt Chearfulneſs. He ſo ſhew'd mercy as one that indeed [a] loved mercy; and by giving chearfully he made it appear that he well remembred that of the Apoſtle, [b] God loveth a chearfull giver; not forgetting that of [c] Siracides, Ἐν πάσῃ δόσει ἱλάρωσον τὸ πρόσωπόν σου. He ſo gave, as one poſſeſs'd with the grand importance of that noble Maxime of our Saviour, (not recorded in the Goſpels, but preſerved from oblivion by S. Luke in the Acts Chap. 20.) IT IS MORE BLESSED TO GIVE THEN TO RECEIVE. He gave with a * chearfull heart and ἐν ἀγαθῷ ὀφθαλμῷ with a chearfull eye, as if he ſenſibly and feelingly knew the Deliciouſneſs of that inward Joy and Satiſfaction which ariſes from the conſcience of doing good, ſo as to reſcue others by a ſeaſonable Charity from ſorrow and miſery. For beſides the great Gains and rich Advantages that come in by Charity in this life, (as well as the Promiſe of a great Reward and an unſpeakable and glorious Joy hereafter) there is an incomparable Pleaſure that attends it here, and renders the very work and labour of Love its own Reward: and upon this ſcore does that Prince of Divine Poets, M^r. G. Herbert, not impertinently in his Church-porch (a piece enrich'd with moſt Divine Morality) perſuade to a chearfull and frank Beneficence,

37. His Charity was large as well for the Meaſure and Proportion thereof as for its Extenſiveneſs: It was not wrung or ſqueez'd out of him by ſlow and ſmall drops, (for he gave neither grudgingly nor ſparingly) but freely and bountifully flow'd from him, who was (as the * Prophet ſpeaks of the Mercifull man) like a Spring of water, whoſe waters fail not. He remembred and follow'd the Apoſtle's advice for * ſowing bountifully, and was not for an ἀδάπανος εὐσέβεια, that cheap and eaſy and ſaving Religion, affected by moſt men; a Saving Religion indeed, but how? of their Purſes onely, not of their Souls: and yet not Saving neither, as they imagine; for very often is verified that of Solomon in Prov. 11. There is that withholdeth more then is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. But from ſuch Illiberal, and in the end Improvident and diſadvantageous, courſes our Author was far removed: With him it went for a great Imperfection and Blemiſh in a Chriſtian to be attentior ad rem quàm ſat eſt; and the more of that Worldly ſpirit and Earthy temper in a man, the leſs a Chriſtian, the leſs a Wiſe man; for Covetouſneſs betrays men to many Indecencies, to ignoble and unbecoming practices, and withall blinds their eyes that they ſee not thoſe Indecencies in themſelves which are eaſily eſpied by others. In his account it was unworthy and diſhonourable for a Chriſtian to expreſs his Charity in a parſimonious and ſcant meaſure, whenas the promiſed Reward is ſet forth by our Lord ſo fully and ſignificantly under the ſimilitude of * Good meaſure, preſſed down, and ſhaken together, and running over.

Nay ſo far he was from that poor deſign of gaining hereby a thin reward of Aiery applauſe from the world, that he ſtudied as much to keep it ſecret, as the Phariſaick Hypocrites contriv'd to doe their Alms with noiſe and all the pomp and obſervation imaginable; for they did all * to be ſeen and to receive glory of men, and ſo were no leſs Beggars then thoſe they gave to; Praiſe and Applauſe was the Alms they begg'd of men, while they were ſolemnly and publickly (after their ſounding the Trumpet) giving Alms to others.

38. The ſame noble proportion of Charity is recorded (though too briefly) of that Religious young Lord, the Lord Harington, in the Sermon preached at his Funerals by Mr. Stock, where this is ſaid for a Memorial of him, That (beſides his Occaſional Charities) he gave the Tenth of his yearly revenue to the poor. The ſame is particularly remembred of the Learned and Pious Dr. Hammond, among ſeveral other Excellencies worthy of celebration, in his Life. The like is alſo recorded (though but * briefly mentioned) in the Life of that Practical Preacher Mr. W. Whately, one of the ſame College and Contemporary with Mr. Mede. And herein theſe Iſraelites indeed, the ſpiritual ſeed of Jacob, followed that high Pattern which of old that holy Patriarch Jacob had ſet the world, who devoted the Tenth part of his eſtate to God, Gen. 28. Nor did he loſe by it, for God bleſs'd him exceedingly: And thoſe that have been followers of Jacob, as in his Plainneſs and Singleneſs of heart, ſo likewiſe in the Largeneſs of his Charity, have found it true, and upon their experience have deliver'd it for a moſt certain Aphoriſm, That ſuch Giving is the ſureſt way of Getting, and That thus to ſcatter* is the ſafeſt means of increaſing. * Prov. 11.

And for a yet more particular and pregnant proof hereof, it is worthy here to be remember'd what the Reverend Mr. Gataker delivered in his * Sermon preached at the Funeral of Mr. John Parker, Merchant and Citizen of London, a perſon eminent for his Exemplary Beneficence, (as alſo for all other Chriſtian Vertues) and therefore worthy to be added to thoſe other Charitable Heroes mentioned by us. In ſhort thus: "At his firſt "effectual Call, this, among other things he then reſolved upon, "was one, To ſet apart every year a Tenth of his Gain for the relief "of the poor. Hereunto he was induced by this Reaſon, (be- "ſides others ſet down by him in his Memorials) That he might "ſhew his Love and Thankfulneſs unto God, as for raiſing him from a "mean condition to that Wealth he then had, ſo eſpecially for his Spiritual "Goodneſs to him. This proportion he conſtantly ſet apart, and "out of this Treaſury it was that he ſo liberally diſpens'd upon "all juſt occaſions. This was his Practice, and it was agreeable "to his daily Prayer, That as God increas'd him in Wealth, ſo he would "be pleaſed withall to increaſe in him Humility, Thankfulneſs, together "with a conſtant Perſeverance in that lovely Grace of Charity. But "what was the iſſue of all? God heard his Prayers, and rewarded "his Alms: but he would firſt try him. For (which is not to "be unremember'd) he reported it himſelf, that for ſome ſpace "of time (ſome three or four years) after that his reſolution "of ſetting apart the Tenth of his Gain for Charitable purpoſes, "he found no increaſe, nor did it appear that he thrived in the "world: yet was he not thereby diſcouraged, but ſtill gave "bountifully and chearfully. And this he did (to uſe his own "words) out of love to God; freely leaving Proſperity in Temporal "things to God's good pleaſure, and conceiving that God in Wiſedom and "Goodneſs proſper'd him not, thereby to try his Sincerity to him and his "Charity to others; yea and that he himſelf might thereby have ex- "perience of his Love to God, his Faith, Patience and Conſtancy: nor "would he forgoe thoſe Evidences hereof that thereby he gain'd for ten "thouſand times ten thouſand times more then they coſt him. And thus "God recompenſed his patient continuance in doing good with

But from that time forward (after "this proving of him for a ſeaſon) God abundantly advanced "his Temporal eſtate, ſo that he profeſs'd he found experimen- "tally thoſe gracious Promiſes of God to be true, of his bleſſing "him that [a] diſperſeth and giveth to the poor, and of the [b] repayment of "that with intereſt that is lent unto the Lord, and of the [c] finding "again after many days with increaſe the bread that is caſt upon "the Waters.

"This was his Conſtant and Stated Charity, beſides what over "and above all went out of his Poors-purſe, which he never car- "ried out empty, that he might ever be doing good. Nor did "he in all this ſeek his own Praiſe, but God's, that ſo his Cha- "rity might occaſion * many thanksgivings unto God. And there- "fore, when he himſelf gave to others, his uſual word was, "Praiſe God; or when he ſent to others any ſumme to be diſtri- "buted among the poor, his manner was to adde in his Letter, "Will them to praiſe God for it: Juſt according to the mind of the Religious M[r]. G. Herbert, who in his Character of the Country-Parſon doth thus expreſs himſelf; When-ever he gives any thing, and ſees men labour in thanking of him, he exacts of them to let him alone, and ſay rather, God be praiſed, God be glorified; that ſo the Thanks may goe the right way, and thither onely where they are onely due.

* 2 Cor. 9.

Theſe excellent Memorials of this Mercifull mans Charity we thought good to excerp out of the fore-named Funeral Sermon, and to preſent them here, though in a more contracted form, they being ſo highly Exemplary and Uſefull, and therefore worthy to be made more publick; too good to be loſt, as elſe they might be, that Sermon being printed many years ſince, and by itſelf, and not extant in the Volume containing his other Sermons.

39. But to return to M[r]. Mede; There were not a few that wonder'd at his Diffuſive Charity, conſidering his Incomes were not great, (for he had nothing but what his place in the College afforded him, no Dignity or advantageous Preferment abroad.) But their wonder might have been leſſen'd, had they either ſeriouſly conſidered the Promiſes of Plenty and outward Bleſſings in this life made by God peculiarly to this Grace of Charity, or had they known how great a Summe the prudent charitable man is able to lay up for the poor by a Frugal management of a little Stock. But our Author knew it well and by Experience, which is the mother of Wiſedom, the ſureſt way of knowing for our ſelves ſelves and of convincing others. Experimentis optimè creditur. Accordingly to this purpoſe (upon an occaſion which proved expenſive to him through the diſingenuity of ſome who yet were obliged to eaſe him) he thus expreſs'd himſelf——I take it patiently, and put it among my Erogations of Charity; and I thank God I have not been ſo ill a husband of a poor Fellowſhip, but I can ſpare ſo much for pious uſes. He warily therefore avoided the occaſions of unneceſſary expences, and when he ſaw others laviſhly ſpending beyond their Income, and not wiſely proportioning their Expences to their Receipts, he us'd to ſay, (with a pleaſant alluſion to that Philoſophick terme) They wanted the Eſtimative Faculty. And indeed in Prudence it was not leſs then needfull for him to husband well his ſmall Stock, who employ'd his thoughts and cares, his ſtudies and beſt diligences about other things then Wealth, Honour and Pleaſure, which yet are the things that not a few men purſue eagerly and induſtriouſly, with all their mind and heart, with all their ſoul and all their ſtrength; to the diſhonour of their Function, if any Clergy-men ſhould be ſo Secular and Unſpiritual in their Diſpoſition and Practice, as alſo to the diſhonour of the Doctrine of the Holy Jeſus deliver'd in his Sermon in the Mount, be they Chriſtians of what denomination ſoever. Beſides that this πλεονεξία or Plurihabitio, this covetous ambition greedily hunting after more and more ſtill, is contrary to the great and many obligations of our Religion, to that High, Holy and Heavenly Calling wherewith Chriſtians are called, as alſo to the expectation of that * better and enduring ſubſtance, that great recompence of Reward, reſerved in Heaven. * Hebr. 10.

His honeſt Thrift and Frugality was the more able to adminiſter to his Charity, becauſe it was accompanied with a conſtant Temperance. His feeding for the moſt part was rather to ſuffice Nature then to allow any pleaſure to his Appetite, which, being uſually good, ſometimes (though very ſeldom) he would gratify with making a larger meal; but his ordinary was his College-commons (to which no man was more conſtant) with the ſmaller ſort of Beer, (the Wine which he drank at the Communion being uſually more then he drank all the year beſides:) Which made him merrily to tell them who obſerv'd the thriving of his Body, (which in his latter years was very apparent) that They might ſee what College-commons could doe.

And in his both Frugality and Temperance he verified that of the Pſalmiſt, * A good man will guide his affairs with diſcretion: It being a moſt approved and experienced Truth, That for the enabling a man to a free and chearfull exerciſe of Chriſtian Charity * Pſ. 112.

it is abſolutely neceſſary that he retrench and cut off all needleſs expences either about Apparel or Diet, Building or Sports and Recreations, &c. Otherwiſe Frequent or Expenſive Treatments, Pride and Curioſity about Attire and Dreſſings will ſoon make Charity bare and cold, make it look pale and meagre, and at laſt quite ſtarve it. Where much is laid out upon Back or Belly, there will be but little ſpared for Beneficence. Where a man, through his Voluptuouſneſs and Senſuality, finds himſelf too dear for himſelf, ſo that it becomes difficult to maintain his deliciouſneſs, it will be thought too grievous to maintain good works for neceſſary uſes, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Tit. 3. Such a one will be greedily ſcraping for himſelf, that he may have to conſume upon his Luſts, rather then μεταδιδόναι τῷ χρείαν ἔχοντι to diſtribute (proportionably to his eſtate) to him that needeth. Where ſo much is ſolemnly offer'd in Sacrifice (as eſpecially at great Feaſts) to that falſe God, the * Belly, (and the beſt and fatteſt is offer'd up, and withall the ſweeteſt, for large Drink-offerings, to that mortal and periſhing God,) there will be but little reſerv'd for the * Sacrifices of communicating and doing good, with which the Eternal and onely true God is well pleaſed. But Chriſtian Religion (as it deſigns to cheriſh and advance every thing that is worthy, lovely, and uſefull for the good of man) is excellently prepar'd and accommodated to ſecure the Grace of Charity, by obliging to Modeſty and Humility, ſober Frugality and Temperance, and (in order thereunto) to the ſubjugating of all inordinate Affections, to the reſolute denying of the clamorous cravings and impetuous deſires of the Senſitive Powers; the ſubduing whereof is a great inſtance of Spiritual Valour, inward Health and Strength: as on the contrary it is a great Imperfection and Weakneſs, and withall a diſhonourable thing, for one that owns the name of Chriſtian, not to have power over his Senſual appetites, but to have impatient deſires, vehement affections for ſuch or ſuch delicacies, and as vehement delights in them, to be over-curious and ſtudious for pleaſing his Appetites, to be enſlaved to his Palate, [a] enſlaved to Wine, and [b] ſerving various pleaſures, as the Apoſtle deſcribes the temper of ſome unworthy Chriſtians. Beſides, it argues a man not to have had ſo true a * Guſt of the powers of the world to come, nor to be as he ought affected with the Hope of thoſe pure and permanent Felicities in the Future Life, which Chriſtianity (over and above the preſent eaſe and pleaſure that accompanies Humility and Temperance here) hath more fully brought to light and ſet before us: For were theſe cordially believed, they would work in men a generous diſregard of thoſe Senſual enjoyments which too many many (ſuch is the courſneſs of their Temper) count their Felicity, making themſelves hereby like the Beaſts that periſh, who (if this were Felicity) enjoy as much or more of it then Man himſelf. To conclude: If men are not ſo much under the Power of Religion as to deny the ſollicitations of their inordinate Appetites, and bring in ſubjection the Fleſh with the Paſſions and Luſts thereof to the Spirit, they do but Parrot-like, and as they are taught, talk of Self-denial and Mortification; and being * φιλήδονοι μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόθεοι, Lovers of Pleaſures rather then Lovers of God and their Neighbour, they plainly and in reality deny the Power of Godlineſs, though they may have the Form of it. Whereas if they were under the power and energy of Religion, they would find themſelves throughly furniſhed and chearfully diſpos'd to every good work. * 2 Tim. 3.

* Heb. 6. 5.

So true a Friend is Frugal Temperance, ſo hurtfull an Enemy is a Delicious, Soft and Luxurious (as well as the Covetous) humour to that Divine, Amiable, and univerſally-Beneficial Grace of Charity!

40. And now having ſpoken of his Charity or Love towards men, it aptly falls into this place that we ſhould obſerve ſomething of his Love towards God; wherein yet we need not be ſo large as in the former Inſtances; for what we have already obſerv'd of his Character doth abundantly prove it. His Meekneſs, Patience, Chriſtian Prudence and Moderation, and (thoſe Two bright Graces of the Greateſt magnitude) his Humility and Charity are pregnant evidences and real demonſtrations of the Love of God dwelling in him. Where theſe Fruits of the Spirit grow and flouriſh, it's a ſure ſign that ſuch a Chriſtian is * ἐν ἀγάπῃ ἐῤῥιζωμένος rooted in Love. To be Meek and Patient, Humble and Lowly in ſpirit, to have an Heart full of Charity, and melted into all compaſſionate endeavours for the good of others, even of Enemies, theſe are higher and harder things then to talk of Religion, [a] to ſay, Lord, Lord, [b] to ſhew much love with their mouth, to abound in the external obſervances of Religion; for ſo did the Phariſees, who therefore by their outward ſpecious profeſſion gain'd a great reputation of Sanctity from the world, but yet of them our Saviour Chriſt pronounces freely and ſmartly, * I know you, that ye have not the Love of God in you: a ſtartling and grievous word to the Phariſees then, and the like it would be to the Phariſaick Chriſtians to be told ſo now. In brief, He teſtified his Love to God in that which is the moſt eminent and genuine expreſſion of it, viz. an Entire, Sincere, Uniform and Conſtant Obedience to his Commandments, * Epheſ. 3. [a] Matth. 7. [b] Ezek. 33. * Jo. 5. 42. ments, * For this is the Love of God, that we keep his Commandments; or (according to those two main Characteristicks of the Pure and Undefiled Religion in S. * James) in Unspottedness from the world and Charity to the poor and desolate. What's less then this is but Lip-devotion, religious Courtship, insignificant and empty Complements. And whereas he obsery'd that too many seem'd to make conscience of the Duties of the First Table, but had little or no care of the Duties of the Second; he had * respect unto both: For (said he) None can be truly Religious towards God, that is not truly Honest in his conversation towards his Neighbour. Thus he believ'd, and thus he practis'd.

* 1 John 5.

* Ch. 1. 27.

* Ps. 119. 6.—I have respect unto all thy Commandments.

41. But to superadde some other particular Instances of his Love to God; He farther shew'd the Tenderness of this Affection by the Zeal he had for the Honour of God, and by the dear regard he express'd to every thing wherein he thought the Divine Interest was concern'd. He could in no wise brook the bestowing Religious Worship upon Creatures, and therefore with a just severity he would equal the practices of the present Roman Church in their Saint-worship and Image-worship with those of the Israelites in following the * ways of Ahab and Jeroboam; and constantly asserted That the Great Apostasy or Antichristianism did (as to one main part thereof) consist in Spiritual Fornication or Idolatry. Nor need any Protestant be disturb'd at the word Antichristian or Antichrist so frequently used by our Author when he has to doe with the Roman Polity and the Chief thereof: For (to obviate any impertinent λογομαχία and contest about the word as used in S. John's Epistles) our Author was well aware that the Antichrist and Antichrists mention'd there might particularly and primarily respect some * Impostors that began then to appear in the world about the end of the Jewish State; but withall he thought that what was said of those Antichrists [in chap. 2. 22, &c.] might interpretatively (though not explicitely and directly) be verified of the Great Antichrist then not in being, but to come, and by no unnatural consequence be applied to him, of whom those other Antichrists were in some sense Figures or Forerunners: For this was his Notion in this particular, He that sets up and substitutes in the room of Christ Saints and Angels, as so many Mediators between us and God, (agreeably to the practice of the Heathens, who of old set up Dæmons as Agents between the Sovereign Gods and Men) eo ipso negat Jesum esse Christum, does thereby really deny that Jesus is the Christ; as he that worships more Gods then one, does ipso facto denie that Jehovah he is God. And in pursuance of this his

* See Discourse 42. pag. 320.

* See Book V. Chap. 7. which seems to be an Essay or First Draught of his Notions upon that Subject.

his Notion he had this not improper Obſervation, viz. That after S. John had ſaid concerning Chriſt, This is the true God, and eternal life*, he immediately addes, Little children, keep your ſelves from Idols; intimating (ſaid he) thereby, That in that Fatal and Great Apoſtaſy which was to ſurpriſe the Church, Chriſtians would worſhip Idols (i. e. falſe Chriſts and Mediators) in ſtead of Chriſt, and thus deny the Lord that bought them, the Lord Chriſt, the true and onely Mediator between God and men. * Chap. 5. 20.

Not being fondly addicted therefore to the uſe of this word, he does frequently in his Commentary upon the Apocalyps make choice of other Forms of ſpeech, and ſuch as were ſuggeſted to him from the ſtyle of that Myſterious Book, [as, Beſtia Bicornis, Pſeudo-propheta Romanus, Meretrix Babylonica, Beſtia Pſeudo-prophetica ſeu Pontificia, Cæſar Papanus, Regnum Pontificale, &c.] when he has occaſion to ſpeak of the Roman Polity and the Head thereof: yet withall he was not ſo weakly nice as wholly to decline that word [Antichriſt] in his Apocalyptick labours; as appears in his Comment. upon what concerns the Third Trumpet in Chap. 8. —— Epiſcopus Romanus——nihil aliud effecit quàm ut hoc quaſi oppanſo velo, nè ipſe pro Capite Noviſſimo, id eſt, Antichriſto, tandem à minùs perſpicacibus tam liquidò haberetur; as alſo in his Comment. upon Chap. 14. verſ. 17, &c. Nos qui Occidentalem Antichriſtum aſſerimus, &c. and (to name no more) in his Specimina upon Chap. 16. are to be found Beſtia Antichriſtiana, Terra in Univerſitate Antichriſtiana deſignat Scabellum Antichriſti, Univerſitas Pontificia, Mundus Antichriſtianus, Juriſdictio Antichriſtiana, Mare Antichriſtianum eſt Ditionis Pontificalis ambitus, with other expreſſions of the like import, concerning which the Reader without an Oedipus may know the Author's mind, and to whom they are there applied. Wherefore though this Title was properly and primarily meant (in S. John's Epiſtles) of ſome Impoſtors and Hereticks that appear'd about that Age: yet ſeeing the ancient Fathers made uſe of this word to ſignify and characterize ſome other Enemy of Chriſt yet to come, (whether a more open Enemy of Chriſt, or a more cloſe one that is rather againſt the Intereſt of Chriſt though he pretends to be for him;) and ſeeing that after-Writers have taken the word from the Fathers, and (it being a compendious ſignificant expreſſion) have made uſe of it in their Writings, as well Papiſts, who apply it to one that is to come at the end of the world, as Proteſtants, who apply it to ſome in being; our Author was not ſo ſcrupulous as to decline a word that was become thus currant and paſſable in all Ages, (and as allowable, if not unfitly uſed, as any Technical word in any Faculty) though ſometimes it were improperly and unworthily uſed by raſh Zelots, to the gratifying of their pride and paſſion. And accordingly whoſoever has been converſant in the Writings of the Renowned Arch-biſhop Whitgift againſt T. C. and the Diſciplinarians, will find that more then once he makes uſe of this word when he has occaſion to ſpeak of the Roman Church, although T. C. and his Adherents were over-apt to call things not onely innocent, but laudable and decorous alſo, Antichriſtian: wherein they expreſs'd a Zeal not leſs Imprudent then Uncharitable; for hereby as they did the Common Enemy no ſmall credit and ſervice, ſo they likewiſe weakned the true Intereſt and hazarded the ſafety of the Proteſtant Reformed Religion. Which was piouſly and prudently obſerv'd by the fore-mentioned Arch-biſhop, and accordingly he tells them faithfully and plainly, * I know that Sects and Hereſies gave ſtrength unto Antichriſt, and at the length were one ſpecial means of placing him in his Throne; even as I am alſo perſuaded that he worketh as effectually at this day by your ſtirrs and contentions, whereby he hath and will more prevail againſt this Church of England then by any other means whatſoever. Therefore it behoveth you to take heed how you divide the Army of Chriſt, which ſhould unanimiter fight againſt that Antichriſt. By which paſſage (to omit others) it appears this Reverend Prelate was Semper idem, of the ſame judgement in his elder days and in his greateſt Height, as when formerly he maintain'd this Theſis at the publick Commencement, anſwering for his Degree of D. D. Papa eſt Ille Antichriſtus, as S^r. George Paul relates in the Hiſtory of his Life.

* See his Defence of the Anſwer to the Admonition, pag. 349.

And therefore our Author, in applying that Title to the Papal or Roman Hierarchy ſo miſerably degenerate, was not alone, but did tread in the ſteps of thoſe who were of greateſt eminency in our Church, and (not to mention thoſe other great Names) particularly in the ſteps of the Renowned Biſhop Andrews, his ancient and conſtant Friend, whoſe multifarious reading and great judgment did abundantly qualify him for an able and moſt accompliſh'd Guide in this affair. What his Sentiments were herein appears by ſeveral paſſages in his Tortura Torti, [particularly in pag. 183 to pag. 188.] where he proves againſt the cavils of that buſy Romaniſt, That by Babylon in Apocal. ch. 17. & ch. 18. is meant non Roma Ethnica, ſed Antichriſtiana; and withall evinces the vanity of that poor ſubterfuge, (and yet made uſe of (as that other alſo of Roma Ethnica) by H. Grotius in his Annotations) That by the Deſtruction of Babylon there foretold is to be underſtood the Burning of Rome by the Goths and Vandals about the year year 455. as afterwards [in pag. 312, 315.] he makes it clear that Idolatry (the great Character of Antichriſtianiſm, or that Token of Antichriſt's Kingdom, as the ſumptuous decking of Images is ſtyl'd in the Homily againſt the Peril of Idolatry) is juſtly charged upon the Roman Church: and in the ſame place likewiſe he detects the impertinency of that trivial ſhift of the Romaniſts in diſtinguiſhing between Idolum and Imago; with much more of the like import in that Treatiſe of his, which the Learned Iſ. Caſaubon worthily ſtyles * Exactiſſimæ fidei & diligentiæ Scriptum.

* In Ep. ad Fr. Ducæum.

To conclude, It may not be amiſs here to adde a ſhort ſtory not impertinent to the argument in hand. M^r. Mede having lately preach'd a Sermon at * S. Marie's in Cambridge upon Eccleſ. 5.1. about the Reverence of God's Houſe, a young M^r. of Arts took the freedom ſome time after to tell him (as who might not be free with him, a perſon of ſuch exemplary Humility and Condeſcenſions?) That from ſome paſſages in that Diſcourſe the world concluded that he had changed his Opinion, and that he did not now think as formerly that the Pope was the Hoghen Moghen, (that was his drolling expreſſion.) No? replied M^r. Mede, But I do, and ſhall think ſo as long as I live, for all this.

* Febru. 25. 1633.

That learned Tract of his about the Numbers in Dan. 12. is call'd by him Revelatio Antichriſti; it was finiſhed by him 3 years before his death. And in Epiſtle 98, written within leſs then 2 months before his death, it is plain whom he means there by the Man of Sin and Antichriſt. See pag. 1082. & pag. 1023.

42. And here we have a fair occaſion to repreſent another of thoſe worthy Qualities that adorn'd his Character, His well-grounded Conſtancy and Unchangeableneſs of Judgement. We ſay, Well-grounded; otherwiſe for a man to perſiſt reſolvedly in an Opinion, becauſe it has been his Opinion, is neither Vertue nor matter of Praiſe, but rather a piece of troubleſome Stiffneſs and Pertinacity, uſually accompanied with fond Self-conceitedneſs and a deſign to ſecure his fame and ſome emolument he receives from his eaſy admirers: From which humour none was more free then our Author, who would profeſs That (ſo far as he could judge of himſelf by experience) he was as willing to embrace Truth, when he ſaw evidence for it, as any man living; as well conſidering that it is the part of a true Chriſtian, (as Ariſtotle obſerves it to be of a true Philoſopher) ὅτι σωτηρία τῆς ἀληθείας ἐστὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα ἀναιρεῖν, for the intereſt and advancement of Truth to forgoe and quit his own private conceits and ſpeculations, how dear ſoever they were formerly unto him; and on the contrary, an argument of a low and ſervile ſpirit, δουλεύειν τῇ ὑποθέσει, to be either fondly addicted or enſlaved to any Hypotheſis and Opinion either of his own or others. Our Author was not indeed light of belief, nor would he eaſily take up an Hypotheſis: But when any new Notion was preſented to him by others, or offer'd itſelf to his thoughtfull mind, he would firſt make a ſtand and pauſe well upon it, ſtrictly examining the Grounds thereof; and if, upon a ſerious and due weighing of all that was fit to be taken into conſideration, he found it to be a ſolid Truth, he was not apt * σαλευθῆναι ἀπὸ τοῦ νόος to be ſhaken from his judgement; a right τέλεγωνος ἀνὴρ, (as Ariſtotle both in his Ethicks and Rhetorick ſtyles a Vertuous man) or, in the Apoſtle's language, [a] ἑδραῖος, ἀμετακίνητος, [b] ἐστηριγμένος ἐν τῇ παρούσῃ ἀληθείᾳ, ſtedfaſt, unmoveable, and eſtabliſhed in the preſent Truth: Yea he was ever ſo impartial and conſtant a Lover of Truth, that nothing but the Holy Scripture and ſound Reaſon could prevail upon him. 'Tis true, To conceal his judgement, not to divulge every thing that was Truth to him, he was not hard to be perſuaded. The remembrance of the Apoſtle's Rule (Rom. 14.) Haſt thou faith? have it to thy ſelf, as alſo his own Charity, Prudence and Peaceableneſs of ſpirit, did diſpoſe him to it, εἰ δέον ἐστὶ and where it was convenient: But neither Friends, nor Intereſts, nor any worldly Allurements whatſoever were of force to corrupt his affections, or pervert his judgement; much leſs could they prevail with him unworthily to deny any Truth, how unplauſible ſoever it was to ſome men, and therefore diſadvantageous to himſelf. For a proof of his conſtant and unremovable affection to Truth, as alſo of his patient enduring the contradiction of others againſt himſelf, take this Inſtance, viz. That in the revolution of about twenty years by-paſt (the ſaying was his own) he had by the ſelf-ſame perſons been look'd upon, and accordingly reported of, as Popiſh, Proteſtant, and Puritane; and yet he would proteſt it, as in the preſence of God, that to his knowledge he had not in the leaſt receded from his very firſt perſuaſions: So that all the while he was the ſame without wavering, although varied to their appearance, becauſe they ſailing with the tide and wind varied towards him. Thus they in the Veſſel under ſail, being always in motion, think the Land moves, (ſo it ſeems to their erring ſenſe) which yet is never the leſs fixed and unmoved for their thinking amiſs. But our Author, as he conſider'd that Precept in Siracides, (chap. 5. 10.) Ἴσθι ἐστηριγμένος ἐν συνέσει σου, Be thou ſtedfaſt in thy underſtanding; ſo he knew likewiſe that the ready way to attain to this eſtabliſhment was this, (according to the counſel in the foregoing verſe) not to wimow, or * ſail, with every wind.

But we muſt not indulge ourſelves the liberty of enlarging upon every thing in our Author which render'd him juſtly exemplary, emplary, worthy of praiſe and imitation: Return we therefore from this Digreſſion to what has a near affinity to our former argument: In ſpeaking to which and the remaining particulars we muſt ſtudy to be ſhort, and take the neareſt way to our journey's end, leſt we over-drive the more infirme, and therefore the more querulous, ſort of Readers, and wear out their patience; otherwiſe, to thoſe that are of ſounder and ſtronger judgements (and conſequently capable to value and honour and * love the Author) we doubt not but a larger Narrative then this would ſeem not tediouſly long, but too ſhort rather, as indeed the moſt enlarged Hiſtory of his Life, his Piety and Learning, is in itſelf and upon a true account a ſhort Hiſtory, too ſhort, if we conſider the great Worth and manifold Perfections of the Perſon; of whom though we ſhould ſpeak much, we ſhall yet certainly come ſhort, if we may here uſe in an inferiour ſenſe what is ſaid of God by the Son of Sirach, chap. 43. To proceed then,

* Non patiar me quicquam neſcire de eo quem amem. Plin.

43. As he abhorr'd Idolatry and Superſtition, ſo he likewiſe abhorr'd Sacrilege and all Profanation of Holy things. As for Sacrilege, his judgement is well known to thoſe who have read his Works with attention: amongſt which (to omit ſeveral paſſages in his other Diſcourſes) there is one Diatriba wholly ſpent upon the Story of Ananias and Sapphira in Acts 5. wherein the nature and proper notion of the Sin there mentioned is clearly explain'd, as alſo the hainouſneſs and danger of Sacrilege is fully proved from ſeveral Examples of ſpecial remark in H. Scripture, all eminently verifying that of Solomon, * It is a ſnare to the man who devoureth that which is holy. With the conſideration whereof our Author being deeply affected, as alſo of the great diſſervice done hereby to any Intendment of Pious Charity, and the no leſs diſhonour done to Religion, when what is devoted to Pious purpoſes is leſs ſecure from the evil eye and rapacious hands then what is given to any other uſe or ſervice whatſoever, yea though it were to the ſervice of Vanity, Luxury or any other Luſt; he could not but heartily wiſh that ſome of the Proteſtant Churches would ſeriouſly lay it to heart, and approve themſelves more and more Reformed, in the cleanſing and purifying themſelves from any the leaſt ſtain of Sacrilege; from which yet (ſo tempting is this Sin with the ſeeming advantages it preſents) they that call themſelves Catholicks are not free neither, yea even he that is peculiarly ſtyl'd Rex Catholicus is wont to be accurſed and excommunicated at Rome on Maundy-Thurſday for detaining part of S. Peter's Patrimony, as they are pleas'd to call it.

* Prov. 20. 25.

And it is as well known how much he abhorr'd any kind of Sacrilegious profanation of what is Relatively holy, whether Times, Places, or Things Sacred, as Bona Eccleſiaſtica, the Sacred Revenues and the like; and that in more then a few Diſcourſes he hath largely aſſerted the Diſtinction between Things Sacred and Common, and that therefore what is Sacred, and conſequently is become God's by a peculiar right, ſhould be uſed appropriately and with a different reſpect from things Common: ſuch an appropriation and diſcriminative uſance of Holy things being a juſt teſtimony and expreſſion of the reſpect and honour due unto Almighty God, whoſe Name is called upon them. The like Zeal he had particularly for God's Houſe, his Worſhip and Service therein; that all things might be done there [a] εὐσχημόνως and [b] τῆς οἰκοδομὴν, decently (for the honour of God,) and to edification (for the benefit of our Neighbour.) Which two Rules of the Apoſtle excellently ſcore out the way, and exactly contain, even in external and indifferent things, what courſe is to be taken, as the Religious and Prudent Mr. G. Herbert * hath ſtated the caſe; who hath alſo in his Poem [The Britiſh Church] elegantly and fully expreſs'd the very ſame Sentiments that our Author had touching the εὐπρέπεια of God's Houſe, the keeping the mean between Superſtition and Slovenlineſs, between the painted looks, laſcivious gaudineſs of the Church upon the Hills, and the careleſs neglected dreſs of ſome Churches in the Valley. Both our Author and this Good man were after David's heart, (the man after God's heart) who thus breath'd forth his affection, Domine, dilexi decorem Domûs tuæ, and thought it unworthy that the Ark of God ſhould dwell within curtains, whenas he himſelf dwelt in an houſe of Cedar; nor was he of ſo ungenerous a diſpoſition in Religion as to ſerve the Lord his God of that which did coſt him nothing. So agreeable is it to a Soul that is eſtabliſh'd with a religious and free ſpirit, as well as it is agreeable to the Light of Nature, That God, the Beſt of Beings, ſhould be ſerved and honoured with the Beſt: Which was ſhadowed out of old in the Sacrifices and Drink-offerings; In the Peace-offerings, wherein God did feaſt with the people, the Fat upon the inwards, &c. was God's Meſs, his לחם or Food; All the Fat is the Lord's; and was therefore to be burnt upon the Altar and offer'd unto the Lord. Nor were the Drink-offerings to be of any ſort of Wine, but of Shecar, the beſt Wine, Num. 28.

Nor had our Author herein any ambitious deſign to pleaſe men, and thereby to advantage himſelf in the world, (as ſome that leſs knew him were apt raſhly to impute unto him Time-ſerving;) for this juſt right was done to him in print by one better better acquainted with him, though of a different perſuaſion, That he had, many years before the Times did reliſh thoſe Notions, declar'd himſelf to the ſame purpoſe, inſtancing in his Concio ad Clerum, which particularly treated De Sanctitate Relativa & Veneratione Sacra: and to the ſame effect he had expreſs'd himſelf in an early Specimen or firſt Draught of his Thoughts, which he preſented to the R.R. 44. With his zeal for God's honour and Church-decorum, we may not unfitly joyn his mindfull obſervance of the Apoſtle's Precepts, [a] Honour the King, and [b] Obey them that have the rule over you, and ſubmit your ſelves; for they watch for your Souls, as they that muſt give account: and herein he ſhew'd himſelf a true Son of peace, as we obſerv'd before, and ſhall now farther adde, That he had ſo great a value and ſo hearty an affection for the Peace of our Jeruſalem, and, in order thereunto, for ſubmitting to every ordinance of man for the Lord's ſake, whether to the King as Supreme, or unto Governours as thoſe that were ſent by him; that when he received notice of the evil that was then breaking forth out of the North, to apply that of Jeremy, (chap. 1.) who elſewhere complains in the ſame note, * Behold, the noiſe of the bruit is come, and a great commotion out of the North-country; upon this intelligence of warrs and rumours of warrs, his righteous and meek Soul was grieved within him, and in a Letter of his written to a Friend within leſs then three moneths before his death he thus expreſs'd his reſentments, concluding in a ſtrain almoſt Prophetical, If the Scotiſh buſineſs be no better then you write, I pray God both they and others have not cauſe to curſe the time at length when ſuch courſes were firſt reſolved upon, and that in the event the cauſe of Religion pretended be not advanced thereby as it is in Germany, and no better. I am firmly perſuaded there will never come good of it. God avert his judgements, and make them wiſer.

* Chap. 10.

His reverential regard to the eſtabliſh'd Government and Diſcipline of the Church was well known to them that knew him; and they that knew not his Perſon, may know it from his Writings, theſe teſtify of him, how great a Lover he was of Unity, Peace, all good and decent Order, and whatſoever might make for the beauty and ſtrength, the honour and ſafety of the Proteſtant Reformation both here at home and abroad; as conſidering that (thoſe Characters of † Carnal and Unſpiritual temper) Envying, and Strife and Diviſions, and (the conſequents thereof) * Confuſion and Diſorder, would at once both weaken and diſhonour the Proteſtant Cauſe, and occaſion the Grand Enemy to triumph, who, ſeeing much of his work done for him him by thoſe who would ſeem to be moſt averſe from him, while they bite and devour one another, claps his hands, ſaying, Aha, Aha, Our eye hath ſeen it, So would we have it. But our Author thought it his becoming duty to ſtudy Obedience for peace and good order's ſake, and not to expoſe the Proteſtant Intereſt to danger and ruine.

'Tis true, There were not wanting even in his days ſome who, breaking themſelves off from the Great Congregation, were apt to ſay, Lo, here is Chriſt; Behold, he is in the ſecret chambers: as if Chriſt were not where the Name of God is call'd upon in publick, through the Mediation (not of Saint or Angel, but) of the One Mediator Chriſt Jeſus; and where the Word of Chriſt (not unwritten and uncertain Traditions and fabulous Legends) is publickly read and preach'd, and hath proſper'd (through God's bleſſing) to the converſion and ſalvation of many thouſand Souls. But our Author (being a ſtrong and adult Chriſtian, one that could ſee into the nature and reaſons and conſequences of things, one that had * look'd into the perfect Law of liberty, and was * eſtabliſh'd with a free ſpirit) well knew the ſlight inſignificancy of what is pretended by ſome for their uncharitable Separations, and that their way was not Perfection, but Weakneſs, an argument of a low, narrow and Jewiſh ſpirit, that would engroſs Meſſias onely to themſelves, and confine him to their particular modes; and no leſs an argument of a weak, ſervile and really Superſtitious ſpirit, to be unreaſonably ſcrupulous about things of an indifferent nature, to forbid themſelves ſuch things as God hath no-where forbidden, and to put a greater ſtreſs upon the doing of ſome things and the not-doing of other things then either the Scripture hath or the nature of the things will bear. And therefore the Scripture repreſents thoſe of this temper as Weak in the faith, in oppoſition to the Strong, who as they manifeſt themſelves to be ſuch in a not being over-ſollicitous about thoſe little things, (though in the mean while moſt mindfull and ſtrictly obſervant of the neceſſary and ſubſtantial things of Religion, which are all clearly declar'd in the H. Scripture) ſo likewiſe in that they can better bear the cenſurings and ſometimes unhandſome dealings of thoſe that are Weak, and find it more eaſy to treat ſuch civilly, and to look upon them with a more benign and clear aſpect then the οἱ ἀσθενεῖς doe, at leaſt ſome of them, if we may judge of men by their behaviour. But of that better temper was our Author, a perſon that did not proudly or paſſionately deſpiſe or behave himſelf unſeemly to thoſe that diſſented from him; (for then of Strong he had become Weak;) nor would he doe any thing that was uncivil or unhumane unto any: he could say in a very good sense (to borrow that of the Comœdian) Homo sum, humani à me nihil alienum puto.

45. Before we conclude this argument, it may be Operæ-pretium to superadde one usefull Observation and Notion of our Author's, not impertinent to the present business. There were some in his time who thought themselves excused for non-compliance with the establish'd Liturgy and Orders Ecclesiastick, by a vulgar (yet false) notion of Scandal, as if To Scandalize were To displease or aggrieve others, or To occasion the dislike or anger of others, as of such particularly who had formerly entertain'd a good opinion of them and their Ministery. Now as these things came sometimes to be mention'd in discourse, he was wont to express his Thoughts concerning the right and genuine notion and importance of that word to this sense; "That the word σκανδαλίζειν (being Verbum καταβατικὸν and "having a Transitive signification, as words in the Conjugation "Hiphil have in Hebrew, and therefore well render'd To make "to offend, 1 Cor. 8. 13. and so in the margin, Matth. 5. 29.) "is (according to the style of the Scripture) genetally this, "By our actions to induce another to sin in imitation of our evil example, "and so to put a Stumbling-block in the way of piety; and therefore "Σκάνδαλον is fitly render'd Stumbling-block in Revel. 2. 14. where "Balaam is said to have taught Balak βαλεῖν σκάνδαλον to cast a "Stumbling-block before the children of Israel, &c. or when it is join'd "with πρόσκομμα a Stumbling-block, it is as fitly render'd an oc-"casion of falling, Rom. 14. 13 *. Nor is this sense much distant "from the Etymon of the word, ἀπὸ τῦ σκάζειν à claudicando; "and accordingly To Scandalize is to make or to occasion one to fall, "or some way or other to hinder one from walking evenly, steddily and "regularly as he ought. And agreeable to this sense is that ob-"servable description of Scandal given by [a] Tertullian, Scandalum "(ni fallor) non bonæ rei, sed malæ exemplum est, [b] ædificans ad "delictum. This our Author did apprehend to be the proper "notion of the word, rather then that which the other did pre-"tend, viz. To doe that which may displease or grieve or vex others. "For some are angry without a cause, and are offended and dis-"pleas'd sometimes at that which is not in itself evil; yea are "grieved and vexed when another is doing his duty; and "being so affected are therefore far from being induced and em-"boldened to the practice of that which the other accounts his "duty, and consequently far from being Scandaliz'd, according to "the general sense of the word in Scripture; onely they are

* In 1 Jo. 2. 10. it's render'd an occasion of stumbling.

[b] Alluding perhaps to the οἰκοδομηθήσεται, &c. in 1 Cor. 8. 10.

" displeas'd, offended and angry, but without any juſt cauſe, and " therefore not to be juſtified in that humour, as neither are the " Miniſters upon that ſcore to think themſelves excus'd from " their duty. For a man to neglect his Duty (and ſuch as " the performance whereof is accompanied with the advan- " tage of being inſtrumental to the beſt good of others) is " plainly to diſpleaſe and offend God, who is never diſpleas'd " but juſtly. But to offend man is not always to ſin againſt " our Brother; and to doe that which may diſpleaſe or diſlike " others (and how is it poſſible, in ſuch a contradiction " of humours and vaſt contrariety of fancies, not to be diſ- " pleaſing unto ſome?) is not neceſſarily to Scandalize in the " Scripture-idiom. Beſides what the great Apoſtle ſaith would " be ſeriouſly conſider'd, * Do I ſeek to pleaſe men? For if I yet pleaſed " men, I ſhould not be the Servant of Chriſt?

* Gal. 1. 10.

To this purpoſe has our Author been known to expreſs himſelf in familiar diſcourſe with ſome Friends: And much-what the like Notion did the Learned D^r. Hammond happily light upon, as appears by his elaborate Tract of Scandal.

46. HITHERTO we have endeavour'd (though in a rude and imperfect draught) to repreſent the rich Endowments of his Mind, together with thoſe Vertues and Graces that adorn'd and beautified his Inward man, and made his Soul a meet Habitation for the Divine Shechinah, which loves to reſt in ſuch Souls as are Holy, Humble and Meek, full of Charity and Good will towards men. It remains now, before we conclude this Narrative, that we adde ſomething concerning the Frame and Temper of that Body wherein this excellent Soul dwelt, that Earthen Veſſel wherein theſe Heavenly Treaſures were depoſited, and which onely of him was capable of Mortality; and thence paſs to the laſt Scene and Epilogue of his Life.

His Body was of a comely proportion, rather of a tall then low ſtature. In his younger years (as he would ſay) he was but ſlender and ſpare of body; but afterwards, when he was full grown, he became more fat and portly, yet not to any ſuch exceſs as did diminiſh but rather encreas'd the goodlineſs of his preſence to a comely decorum. His Eye was full, quick and ſparkling. His whole Countenance compoſed to a ſedate ſeriouſneſs and gravity; Majeſtas & Amor were well met here, an awfull Majeſty, but withall an inviting Sweetneſs. His Behaviour was friendly and affable, intermixt with a becoming chearfulneſs and inoffenſive pleaſantry. His Complexion was a little a little ſwarthy, as if ſomewhat over-tinctur'd with Melancholy, which yet rather ſeem'd to ſerve the deſign of his ſtudious Mind, then to clogge it with thoſe Infirmities which commonly attend the predominancy of that Humour. And as for the whole Conſtitution and Temperament of his Body, it could not be obſerved but his Vitals were ſtrong; and yet it was noted of him that there was an aſymmetry and diſproportion in the ſubſervient Faculties, as not all duly performing their particular offices in ſo exact time and meaſure as ordinary; and yet Nature was ſo faithfull in her compenſations, that there were no ſuch irregularities in her Oeconomy as made him fall ſhort of that chief deſire of all wiſe men, the having Mentem ſanam in Corpore ſano.

The like is related in the life of F. Paul of Venice (a perſon of eminent parts, of a clear Head and profound Judgement) concerning the conſtitution of his body, D' ordinario ſtava trè giorni, alle volte tutta la ſettimana, ſenza che le parti naturali deſtinate all' eſpulſione de gl' eſcrementi faceſſero il lor' offitio, &c.

47. He was patient of Cold, and well able to goe through a Winter without much Fire; ſo that his rule was for divers years together to have no Fire made in his Chamber before All-Saints day; and then after that but ſome times, now and then (and not conſtantly) as the weather did require. But that year in which he died he found an alteration, being ſomewhat chill and indiſpoſed a moneth or two before; ſo that he was forced to alter his cuſtome, and could not ſtay for a Fire till November, becauſe he found himſelf indiſpos'd and not perfectly well. His expectation was in the interim that Nature by ſome way or other would have relieved herſelf: which encouraged him to goe on in his attending upon thoſe Offices which were performable in his place, and the rather becauſe his Aguiſh indiſpoſition was not conſtant.

48. Upon the 29th day of September, being Saturday, 1638. (the day of the weekly Accounts, when (according to the laudable cuſtome of that College) the Manciple after Dinner was to give up the particulars of all the Expences of the whole College that week to the Maſter and Fellows then preſent, amongſt whom Mr. Mede never fail'd to be one, unleſs detain'd by ſome extraordinary occaſion) he appear'd in the Hall at dinner-time as uſually. But before all was ended, he was forced to riſe up and to haſt to his Chamber, being ſick and ill at eaſe. Thither when he was come and ſet down in his chair, he preſently fainted away and ſunk down upon the hearth: and the poſture that he was found lying in was not without ſome danger to one of his Leggs from the Fire. A Mr. of Arts of that College, a Friend to Mr. Mede and who honoured him very much, comes upon a particular occaſion to his Chamber, (ſo the good Providence of God did order it;) who ſeeing him lie in that poſture, at which he was ſurpriz'd with no little aſtoniſhment, put to all his ſtrength to recover him to his ſeat: and that he did indeed, but with very much adoe. Being a little come to himſelf, he complain'd he was ill. And ill it proved for him, (or rather for the ſurviving) that it happened to be ſo at a time when the beſt noted Phyſicians were from home; (the Univerſity being then the more thin by reaſon of the Plague which had been in Cambridge that Summer.) An Apothecary being ſent for, he went to Dr. N. an ancient, learned and very judicious Phyſician, but leſs fit for practice, being gouty and bed-ridd. He preſcribed a Clyſter to be preſently adminiſtred him. But the Apothecary unacquainted with the ſtate of his Body (not having that ſpecial regard to the tenderneſs of thoſe parts, which, had he been acquainted with before, he ſhould reaſonably have had) did ſo irritate his Hæmorrhoïd Veins, that they ſwell'd up immediately; and ſo angry they grew, that they ſhut up the paſſage. And now this Good man began to be in extremity of pain; for the Clyſter working inwardly (becauſe no paſſage downward was to be found) tormented him exceedingly. But the next day, being Sunday, and the laſt of September, the adventurous Apothecary (whether with the foreſaid Doctor's advice or not, it could not clearly be reſolved) adventured upon a farther experiment, and ſo gave him a ſtrong Purge; imagining (it's likely) that this would force all downward. But contrary to that fancy it wrought ſtill but within, and ſo procured more torment and ſickneſs to the diſtreſſed Patient. All that day he continued very ill and out of order, worſe and worſe ſtill, as 'twas eaſy to obſerve. But to thoſe that were Eye-witneſſes of his pain and great affliction, it was as eaſy to obſerve his Chriſtian Patience at this time. We may eaſily conceive the exquiſiteneſs of the pain he endur'd by reaſon of the Phyſick tearing him within: but ſome then preſent have profeſs'd that they could not but admire his Incomparable Patience under this ſore trial, and that he lay under the extremity of his diſtemper with ſo much Meekneſs and quiet Submiſſion to the hand of God, that they never knew the like. Thus had[a] Patience her perfect work in him: and as he[b] poſſeſs'd his Veſſel (his Body) in ſanctification and honour, having lived a life of Chaſtity and Purity; ſo he likewiſe * poſſeſs'd his Soul in patience, while he poſſeſs'd it in this earthen and brittle Veſſel of the Body; and hereby gave an illuſtrious proof that he had well learn'd that great Leſſon of Self-denial and Reſigning up himſelf to the Will of his Heavenly Father: It was, in the time of his Health, his Meat and Drink to doe his Will; and now to be enabled meekly to ſubmit to it was his Cordial. Thus was he ſtill and ſilent before God, * committing himſelf to him as unto a Faithfull Creatour, and unto Chriſt Jeſus, that * Mercifull and Faithfull High-Prieſt, who ever liveth to make interceſsion for us, the Glory and Prerogative of whoſe Sole Mediation at the Right hand of God he had always faithfully aſſerted in his * Diſcourſes.

* See this more largely diſcourſed of in his Apoſtaſy of the Latter Times.

49. In the Night following his ſpirits began to fail; yet being in perfect memory, an hour or two before day-break he deſired to have M^r John Alſop ſent for, (a moſt worthy Conſocius of that Learned Society;) who being come, M^r. Mede told him he hoped he ſhould doe well, for that now he perceived his Phyſick to work downward. But M^r. Alſop, by what he ſaw, was fearfull of the worſt, ſuſpecting (as it proved true) that that purging downward proceeded not in that caſe from any activity or ſtrength of Nature, but rather from debility and weakneſs: thereupon, like a wiſe and good man, he adviſed him, however it might pleaſe God to deal with him, to ſet his Houſe in order, and to diſpoſe of by Will whatſoever God had given him. It was readily accorded to by M^r. Mede, and M^r. Alſop was by him conſtituted the Executor of his Will, whereby he gave to the poor of the Town of Cambridge an Hundred pound, and to the College whereof he was a Member all the remainder of his Eſtate, (after ſome Legacies to his Kindred) amounting to Three hundred pounds, (a large Legacy out of a Scholar's purſe) for and towards the New building then intended, as alſo for the adorning of the Chappel; nor was he unmindfull of the Library, for he knew well the excellent uſe of good Books. This he did in way of a Gratefull return for the Mercies he had ſo long enjoy'd in that College, the enlarging and encreaſe of whoſe proſperity and good eſtate was his great deſire and endeavour, and that which he * preferr'd above his chief joy.

* Pſ. 137.

50. And now having finiſhed the care of his Secular affairs, he compoſed his Soul for its addreſs into the Divine preſence with holy Thoughts and humble Prayers; deſiring alſo to ſtrengthen his Faith and heighten his Love, whilſt by the participation of the Sacred Euchariſt he made a thankfull Commemoration of his Saviour's Death, by which he hoped for an Entrance into the Happineſs of an Eternal Life. But in this he was prevented (ſhall we ſay?) by the ſudden approach of Death; or not rather more ſuddenly and in an higher meaſure ſatisfied in his deſire by the Love of his Saviour, who, inſtead of giving him a taſt of the Bread of Life here on Earth by Faith, received him into the preſent poſſeſſion and more full participation of the ineffable Joyes in Heaven?

51. Thus died this Religious and Learned perſon, upon Monday-morning, about break of day, the firſt of October 1638. having lived Fifty two years, and ſpent above two thirds of his time in that College, to which, whilſt he lived, he was ſo great and illuſtrious an Ornament, and which, now he is dead, is his Monument.

The next day in the Evening (being October 2.) he was decently carried to his Grave by the Fellows of the Houſe, and there in the Inner Chappel of the College, about the middle of the Area on the South-ſide, cloſe to the Bachelors or Sophiſters Seats, he lies interred; his Memory being embalm'd with his Vertues, (of more force to preſerve his Name then the Spices which the Hebrews or Egyptians uſed for the embalming of Bodies) and having left his moſt Learned Writings as his trueſt Picture and beſt Hiſtory.

* Upon Febr. 1. 163⅝.

52. [redacted] ſome time after (againſt which time he had gathered in ſome ſcattered debts and paid out ſome Legacies) preach'd his Funeral Sermon in a full Congregation of Regents and Non-Regents at S. Marie's, before the whole Univerſity, with high approbation of all that heard it, upon that Text in Geneſ. 5.24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him. A thouſand pities it is that that excellent Sermon miſcarried in the late Troubles; had it ſurvived to have been printed with theſe Works, it would have been for its own ſake very acceptable to the world, being a Texture (as all his were) of an accurately-ſpun thread: And that part of it which particularly commemorated M^r. Mede was ſo full and expreſſive to the life, as might have made any after-endeavours to repreſent this Great Author leſs neceſſary.

53. We will onely obſerve one thing more concerning the Time of his Death, That he was taken away from the Evils that were then ready to come upon this Iſland: a Favour which God vouchſafes to many of the righteous (Eſay 57. 1.) So of good Joſiah it is ſaid, * He ſhould be gather'd to his grave in peace, and not ſee all the evil which God would bring upon Jeruſalem. So Poſidonius in the life of S. Auſtin relates that he was taken away by death when the Goths and Vandals had begun to beſiege Hippo, ſo that he ſaw not the direfull Miſeries that were coming upon that place.

Thus

Thus that good God who had favour'd our Author with a life of Tranquillity and Freedom from worldly encumbrances, made his Death a preſervative againſt thoſe approching Evils which then hover'd over this Kingdom, and cloſed his eyes that he ſaw not thoſe dreadfull Calamities which were ſo grievous and afflictive unto all meek and humble Chriſtians to behold.

'Tis true, he beheld them at a diſtance, and by the preſage of his own divining ſpirit he gueſſed at what afterwards came to paſs. For, about a year or two before he died, he would ſometimes mention an Obſervation of his upon that in Judg. 3. 30. The Land had reſt fourſcore years, (the longeſt period of time (as he noted) that the people of Iſrael ever enjoy'd it, and then which ſcarcely any other Nation ever enjoy'd a longer) Such a reſt (would he ſay) from the beginning of Bleſſed Queen Elizabeth's Reign we of England have enjoy'd, and who knows whether our period be not near at hand? And whether it be ſo or not, whoſoever ſhall live but a year or two may know it certainly. It happen'd accordingly; and what havock the devouring Sword made amongſt us, after God had ſent it to revenge our abuſe of his Mercies, is well known, and can never be remembred without horrour. That God who maketh warrs to ceaſe, and by his miraculous Providence in the peacefull reduction of his Sacred MAJESTY hath diſſipated thoſe Storms of fire and dried up thoſe Shours of bloud, he of his Goodneſs grant that, whilſt we all offer up our due Thanks for his ſo great and undeſerved Mercies, we may ſo carefully avoid the Sins which drew down our late Puniſhments, and ſo zealouſly make up the defects of our former Omiſſions, that God may be pleas'd not onely to perpetuate the Felicity of our preſent Peace, but alſo to increaſe it by the accumulation of all neceſſary Bleſſings.

The Preface to Mr. Herbert's Remains obſerves of thoſe 3 pious perſons, Dr. Jackſon, Mr. Herbert, Mr. Ferrar, that they ſpake Prophetically of the like Events.

Some Additionalls to Mr. Mede's LIFE, by One who had the Honour and Happineſs to be intimately known to him many years.

UNderſtanding what rich Materialls are prepared for Mr. Mede's Life, and into what accurate Hands they are come for the Compoſure; I can never give my conſent that theſe courſe and ragged Papers be admitted otherwiſe then Poſt-ſcript-wiſe, or as a Codicill (which may paſs through any ordinary hand) annexed to an exactly-penn'd Teſtament: yet ſo, as that the one may juſtly pretend to the ſame Veracity and Authenticknes with that of the other.

Upon this condition I proceed, and in this Order, contriving what I have to ſay into certain diſtinct Particularities: Which I humbly conceive will be leſs unacceptable to the Reader.

As for the Purpoſe,

1. Remarkables concerning Mr. Mede's Election into his Fellowſhip, together with the Occaſion of his devoting the Tenth of his Eſtate to Pious uſes.

MR. Mede had now continued in the Univerſity untill after he took the Degree of Maſter of Arts, and had already received ſome ſtrange Preteritions at Elections, Dr. Carey, (after Biſhop of Exceter) the then Head of the College, entertaining a very cauſeleſs Jealouſy of him, that he looked too much towards Geneva. About this time a worthy Gentleman in the North earneſtly invited him to live with him, and upon very handſome Terms. Yet Mr. Mede took time to conſider of it. It was then Sturbridge-Fair, and there in a Stationer's ſhop Mr. Mede lighted on a Book of Mathematicks which he had great uſe of, and had long thirſted after. The loweſt price was 50ˢ. He thought the Book worth the money: But the great Queſtion was, Whether the taking ſo much Money out of his Purſe would not be as the taking away too much Bloud from an extraordinary weak Body. Hereupon he, retiring into a private walk hard by, entered into a ſerious Conſultation with himſelf what he ſhould doe; whether he ſhould buy the Book and leave the Univerſity, (embracing the Gentleman's noble Propoſal) or elſe whether he ſhould leave the Book and continue there longer. For his ſlender Income would not allow him to enjoy both Conveniencies together, nor could have poſſibly afforded his Continuance in the College ſo long, had it not met with the great felicity of ſo Frugal and Prudent a Manager of it as himſelf was. Whileſt he was buſily pondering and weighing Conveniencies and Inconveniencies, one againſt another, on both ſides, who ſhould accidentally paſs by but that Excellent Perſon and his very dear Friend, Sir William Boſwell, then Fellow of Jeſus College, and a rare Ornament to the whole Univerſity? He, perceiving who it was that walked there in ſuch a deep ſtudy, drew near to him, cloſed with him, and (as he mought well doe it) demanded the Reaſon of that his ſolicitous Thoughtfulneſs. Mr. Mede, glad of the Opportunity, readily diſcloſed all to him. Mr. Boſwell (that was his Title then) at firſt encouraged him to accept of the Gentleman's Propoſitions, whom himſelf knew to be a Worthy Perſon, Noble, Ingenuous, Learned, and Maſter of a well-furniſhed Library: alleging farther, that the good Leiſure, the good Converſation, the now good Competency, (that honeſt Salary being twiſted with what he had of his own) and other good Accommodations he ſhould there enjoy, would enable him to doe the Church and Commonwealth of Learning more ſervice with his Pen, then perhaps his Impediment of Speech would ſuffer him to doe in the Pulpit. Mr. Mede eaſily conſenting to the Advice of ſo great and good a Friend, parted from him with a Reſolution to goe that way. He was not gone many ſteps, when Mr. Boſwell called him back again; But, Joſeph, (ſaith he) it is great pity though that thou ſhouldſt leave us for want of a Book: Lo, here is all my ſtock at preſent, (ſhewing him 5 pieces;) but come, we will divide, Goe and buy thy Book. Mr. Mede began modeſtly to refuſe this Courteſy, as too great to be received, and objected, How ſhall I be able to be ſolvent in convenient time? Mr. Boſwell as importunately forced it upon him with theſe friendly words, I pray thee take no care of re-payment; let that be when thou canſt, or in what ſmall parcels thou wilt, or whether it be ever or never, it will be all one to me. And ſo now Mr. Mede is poſſeſſed of his Book, and become a Continuer again.

Within a ſhort time after, the College had privy notice of a Stranger who had got a Mandamus for a Fellowſhip, either Fallen or Falling. This news haſtened them to a preventing Election; and now the Maſter is contented to hear of Mr. Mede. He is choſen, but conditionally and proviſionally, that if the Mandamus be not diverted and ſhall be over-powerfully urged, he muſt recede. Mr. Mede therefore maturely makes his Applications to that Great both Oracle of Learning and Protector of Learned men, the thrice Renowned L. B. Andrews; by whoſe propitious Aſſiſtence he is now confirmed Fellow of that College to which he owed his Education, and for which he had ſo Filial a Dearneſs. This Signal Providence and Goodneſs of Almighty God Mr. Mede was ſo piouſly ſenſible of, that he ſolemnly vowed (and as Religiouſly kept that Vow) to lay aſide every Tenth ſhilling he ſhould ever receive in the College, and to dedicate it to Pious uſes. This Story (to me not inconſiderable) left ſo deep an Impreſſion in me, that I am able to warrant not onely the Subſtance, but even almoſt every Circumſtance of it, as I have related it. And as to the Interlocutory part, I verily believe I ſcarce vary in a word, as I received it (and all the reſt) immediately from the lips of that Miracle of Worth, (whether as a Scholar, or a Stateſman, or a Friend, or a Patriot, or a Chriſtian) Sir William Boſwell, whiles he was Ambaſſador Reſident in the Nether-lands.

As concerning this ſtrange Vow, I had heard of it accidentally in Mr. Mede's life-time, and once I took the freedom to ask him about it. He ſtartled at it, that I ſhould come to the knowledge of it; and, after a pauſe, he onely ſaid this, I charge you as a Friend to keep it to your ſelf: which I faithfully did, till after his death.

And now, if the Reader will not think his Patience too much impoſed upon, I could furniſh him with another like Inſtance, and that out of Mr. Mede's own College, one who was Contemporary with Mr. Mede, (but a long and early Diſcontinuer) and one, I think, not unknown to him; I am ſure, a great Admirer of him. And this was Mr. William Whately, ſometime Vicar of Banbury, that famous and perfect Preacher, and that not onely ad Populum, as ſome great Wits have liberally acknowledged, who would often ſlip out of Oxford on purpoſe to hear him, and came at firſt with prejudice enough. This Rare Preacher (and therefore the Rarer becauſe ſo Frequent) had in his Pulpit (upon a Holy-day, when there was a very full Auditory) with great Zeal, and with as great Solidity of Reaſon and Embroidery of Rhetorick, preſſed (as his Theme led him) Works of Charity. Among other paſſages he exhorted his Hearers to make this Experiment; When they had received good gain by Traffick

Traffick or Bargain, &c. to take 6^{d} or 4^{d} in the Pound, and put it in a Purse by itself, for works of Piety. This (he warranted) as it would be very beneficial to their Estate, so it would take away all secret Grudgings: For now they had lay'd so much aside for such a purpose, they would rather wish for an Opportunity of disbursing it, &c.

After Sermon, being visited by a neighbour-Divine, (and one allied to him) they presently fell into discourse about that Subject, and Mr. Whately's Judgment was desired more particularly concerning the Quota pars to be so devoted. As for that (saith he) I am not to prescribe to others; but since here are none but very good friends, and we are all so private, I will tell you what hath been my own practice of late, and upon what occasion. You know, Sir, some years since I was often beholden to you for the Lone of 10^{l} at a time: The truth is, I could not bring the year about, though my Receipts were not despicable, and I was not at all conscious to my self of any vain Expences or of Improvidence. At length I began to examine my Family what Relief was given to the Poor: And although I was assured that was not done niggardly, yet I could not be so satisfied, but resolved instantly to lay aside every Tenth shilling of all my Receipts for Charitable uses. And (to let you see how well I have thrived this way in a short time) now, if you have occasion to use an 100^{l} or more, I have it ready for you. Just Mr. Mede's Method, and with a like prosperous Success. This I can avouch, for I was present both at the Sermon and at the Conference.

Neither do I conceive I have been wandering far from Mr. Mede all this while; these two Persons meeting so near in so many Respects: Both of them of the same House in the University; both Contemporaries; both Eminent, though in far distant ways; both inviolably kept their Principles of Loyalty to their Prince and of Obedience to their Mother the Church; both suffered injuriously; some (when time was) made themselves too (Poetically) merry with Mr. Whately's Name; both met in the same practice of Charity, for which chiefly the latter was instanced in; lastly, both of them were peaceably and honourably Interred a little before the late unnatural War.

I do not ask the Reader's Pardon for this seeming Impertinency, because I rather expect his Thanks for helping him to so rare a Project how he may no less certainly then Piously improve his Estate, if he please to make due Trial of it. However, I shall make him amends, as to Brevity, in the ensuing Particularities. Whereof the next is

2. Concerning Mr. Mede's Communicativeness.

AS to be Communicative of Good is a Royalty and Beam of Glory, even in the Divine Majestie itself: so upon what Person soever this shall be more or less shed and diffused, it must needs render him proportionably God-like. Now that such a Quality was eminently conspicuous in this divine Person is altogether as unquestionable as Whether there ever was such a Man as Mr. Joseph Mede.

I shall not instance in his Writings, wherewith he hath blest the world; concerning which (I speak of those few then extant) (if the commending of them would not be but as the Gilding of Gold and the Painting of Rubies) I could give you the opinion of * one (among many others) who was Master of as great a Treasure of choice Learning, and of as curious a Pen and Tongue, as few Ages have seen; which he hath often expressed to me in these words, I never in all my life met with such a Usefull Critick as Mr. Mede, with many other Encomiums.

* Dr. Steward, late Dean of the Royal Chappell, &c.

That I have now to ſpeak to is his Communicativeneſs in ordinary Diſcourſe. And this indeed he made the main of his Divertiſement and Recreation. I never heard he uſed any other, unleſs it were in and upon the Fellows Orchard; the Beautifying whereof he took great delight in, and towards that would not onely lend his handſome and happy Contrivances, but alſo diſburſe Money before-hand, till the College-Audit. Here he hath been found very buſy (at due hours) and ſometimes knuckle-deep, when he would ſay ſmiling; Why? this was Adam's work in his Innocency. But then, inſtantly, taking for his Theme either a Plant, or a Weed, or almoſt any thing next hand, he would fall into ſome very ſignificant diſcourſe. All his Diſcourſes (to ſpeak it once for all) were extremely diſtant from any thing that looked like either Levity, or Vanity, or Pedantry.

Theſe Charitable works of his Tongue, (for ſo I call Mr. Mede's Diſcourſes) as well as thoſe other of his Hand, proved no leſs Gainfull to himſelf then they were Beneficial to others. A double Gain, he hath often acknowledged, came in to him this way.

One, That his Notions, by often Repeating them, became more fixed and rivetted in his Memory: And therefore he would merrily ſay to a Familiar, whoſe Studies lay quite another way, (and in that kind of Learning was confeſſedly incomparable and unmatchable) when he ſeemed not ſo attentive to ſome of his Diſcourſes, Chuſe (ſaith he) whether you will hear me or no; I love to repeat what I have been gathering, though it be but to the Walls, for my own Memorie's ſake.

The other Gain was, That hereby his Notions were better ſhaped and formed, and ſo more accommodated to uſe. For (ſaid he) every time I am imparting them to others, it is great odds but ſome fitter and clearer Expreſſion will caſually come out of my Mouth then at firſt came into my Mind. So that his Notions always lay by him ready, in good Currant Coin, whiles others (who too much affect the hoarding up) have theirs at the beſt but in the Barre and Ingot, and perhaps ſometimes but in the Ore.

Wherefore I am apt to believe it was not a mere Complement of Mr. Mede's, when he thanked thoſe for Hearing him, who thought they had a great deal more reaſon to thank him for his ſo Edifying them; becauſe he knew his own Gains hereby were ſtill multiplied.

When my Acquaintance with him was of that Standing as to take the Degree of one of his Familiars, he would treat and entertain me in this manner.

After ſome ſhort preluſory talking of News and Occurrences, Come now, (ſaith he) what be your Queſtions? Which as I was never to come unprovided of, ſo was he always much more provided to reſolve them to my unſpeakable ſatisfaction. Yea more then that, (ſuch was his Obligingneſs) he would ſometimes fetch out of his Study divers of his College and Publick Exerciſes; and ſometimes one peculiar Paper-book, wherein he was wont to write ſundry knotty Queſtions and difficult Texts of Scripture, and under them ſet down in brief his preſent Conjectural thoughts, which afterwards (at better leiſure) he would bring to the Teſt, and purſue with more Accurateneſs. Pitching upon ſome of theſe, he hath done me the honour to promote me to be his Amanuenſis: And then firſt cauſing me to turn to Texts in the Hebrew Fountain and in the LXX, he would Critically give the Importance of the words, and here drop many a rich Obſervation. That done, he would take down many of the Ancients, whether Church-Hiſtorians or Fathers, Greek and Latin, &c. and directing me to what places I ſhould turn, make me reade them to him: Upon which again he would, by the By, give out very conſiderable Notes; and ſtill as he had done with each Author would ſay,

You

You ſee it holds yet, and yet, &c. So at laſt, one of thoſe Conjecturalls and What Ifs (as he call'd them) became an adopted Verity. And this he called Hunting of Notions. At this Sport, no leſs profitable then pleaſant, we have, upon Faſting-days, continued from three after Mid-day untill the knocking of the College-gates at Night, and then he has diſmiſſed me richly laden.

3. Of his Advice to young Students in Divinity.

TO thoſe who intended Curam Animarum he would give, among many other, theſe Three Counſells.

1. That they familiarly acquaint themſelves with and conſtantly make uſe of that Golden Obſervation of Iſ. Caſaubon, viz. Univerſam Doctrinam Chriſtianam Veteres diſtinguebant in τὰ ἐκφορα, id eſt, ea quæ enunciari apud omnes poterant, & τὰ ἀπόῤῥητα, arcana temere non vulganda. It is in his Exercit. XVI. ad Annal. Eccleſ. Which whole Exercitation he would commend to their often reading, and indeed the whole Book.

And here he would ſadly complain, to the ſame effect, and almoſt in the ſame words, with the Admired Lord Verulam, "It is a Point of great Incon- "venience and Perill, to entitle the People to hear Controverſies and all kinds "of Doctrine. They ſay no part of the Counſel of God is to be ſuppreſſed, "nor the People defrauded: So as the Difference which the Apoſtle maketh "between Milk and Strong Meat is confounded; and his Precept, That "the weak be not admitted unto Queſtions and Controverſies, taketh "no place. In his Advertiſements touching the Controverſy of the Church of England.

Upon neglect of which ſage Counſel we have lately ſeen thoſe Diſmall and Tragicall Conſequences, which Mr. Mede did indeed Prophetically preſage would be thereupon. And for the preſent he gave ſome Inſtances (but not without Indignation) of them who, under pretence of Revealing the whole Truth to the People, would make choice of ſtrange Texts, in Leviticus and elſewhere, and out of them vent ſuch Stuffe as no modeſt Eare could endure to hear.

2. His next Counſel was, That with other Practicall Doctrines they ſhould not forget to preach and preſs Charity: and this not in a ſlight perfunctory manner, but Studiedly and Digeſtedly to give the People the true Nature of it, the full Latitude of it, the abſolute and indiſpenſable Neceſſity of having it, (both Præcepti and Medii) and (as the * L. Verulam hath expreſs'd it) "to bring "down Doctrines and Directions ad Caſus Conſcientiæ; otherwiſe the Word, "the Bread of Life, they will but toſs up and down, and not break it. * Ibid.

3. His laſt Counſel was, When they had ſome Neceſſary Truths to deliver, againſt which the preſent Humour of the Times ran counter, that in this caſe they ſhould goe Socratically to work: as to lay down at a convenient diſtance, firſt one Poſtulatum, and then another (that will be clearly inferred from the former,) and ſo a third, and a fourth, &c. ſtill depending upon and ſtrengthning each other. A Truth brought in thus Backward (ſaith he) will be ſwallowed down unawares: Whereas if you firſt ſhew its Horns, there will be ſuch ſtartling and flinging, that there will be no coming near with it.

4. How far he was from Ambition.

FOR proof hereof we cannot deſire a clearer Evidence or Demonſtration then his ſo conſtant declining Preferments even then when they ſought him out.

Witneſs his * Anſwer to the Letter of the Fellows of Trinity College near Dublin. And, by the way, that Election into that Provoſtſhip was ſo firm, * See Book 4. Epiſt. 2.

as well as free, that he was desired to make a formal Resignation before his * Successour could be elected and admitted into it: which he did, as himself hath told me more then once.

* Mr. Bedel, afterwards B. of Kilmore.

Witness again his * Third Letter to the then Lord Primate, what time some new hopes began to be raised of his acceptance of the same Provostship, upon the remove of Bishop Bedel.

* See Book 4. Epist. 29.

To all this I can adde two more Instances, which I believe are not known to many.

One, That divers years after the refusal of the Provostship, he received a Letter from a Friend in Ireland, assuring him there was then kept for him a Dignity worth at the least 1000*l per annum*, and staied onely for his acceptance. To persuade him to which, he used many potent arguments; among the rest this, The great Freedom from molestations and incumberances that place would indulge him in, &c. This Letter he was pleased to communicate to myself, when freshly received, concealing indeed the Name subscribed, though that was not hard to guess at. But here again his Modesty proved inflexible.

The other Instance is this: When he newly related to his then Grace of Canterbury, and now glorious Martyr, (neither of whom, I believe, had seen each others face in all their lives, I am sure he told me so not long before his death) he desired me to tell him freely what I heard men say concerning his Chaplainship, &c. The summe of my Answer was, That I perceived he was looked upon as a Rising man, and that many rejoyced at it because of his known merits, &c. To the latter part of my Answer he replied, I am much beholden to my Friends for their good opinion of me, &c. But no man knows my Defects so well as my self. And this was but the native Language and Dialect of his innate Modesty. But when he came to reply to the former part, which spake him a Rising man, here he used more then ordinary Solemnity, and with a grave, composed countenance uttered these words; As to my Rising,—come now, I will make you my Confessor. I can safely appeal to that Infinite Majestie who hears me, (which words were accompanied with a gesture of great Reverence) that if I might obtain but a Donative sine cura, (sine cura, he repeated it) which I may keep with my Fellowship, I would set up my staffe for this World. And the reason why I desire this is, that I mought be able to keep a Nag for my Recreation sometimes, in taking the aire, and in visiting my friends in the Country, since this my Corpulency (then growing upon him) makes me unwieldy for walking.

In pursuance of this discourse, I chanced to smile at a Conceit then coming into my mind; which he quickly observed, and was very earnest to know the reason of it. After a pardon obtained for my freedom, I thus declared; That I thought in one case he would be perswaded to accept of a Bishoprick for all this. Why think you so? rejoyned he suddenly, and with some warmth. Presuming upon the licence granted me, I shall tell you, replied I, and, more then that, I believe you will acknowledge as much your self. At this he began to bungle at being angry, for indeed that Passion was so great a stranger to him and so little in favour with him that, unless it came in the company of (or rather attending upon) true Zeal to God-ward, he would not endure its presence.

In short, I remembred to him, how often I heard him wonder why none of our Christian Kings had ever erected a Bishoprick in S. Alban's, that Martyr being of such Fame and Antiquity, and the Place so many ways convenient, &c. And then I propounded this case:

That if our then present Sovereign (who afterwards, in spight of Hypocrisy and Treason, became indeed so Glorious a King, that of all Kings He was the First Martyr) should resolve upon an Erection of a Bishoprick at S. Alban's, upon this one onely condition, That Mr. Mede will be perswaded to be the First Bishop Biſhop there, otherwiſe there ſhall be no Biſhoprick at all; I ask whether, in this caſe, Mr. Mede would not be willing to accept of a Biſhoprick. Hereat he laughed heartily, and ſaid at firſt, Now thou putteſt me to it indeed. But by and by recollecting himſelf, he concluded gravely to this purpoſe: As there is no great fear of ſuch a Temptation, rebus ſic ſtantibus; ſo I dare re-aſſume my former Proteſtation. A Donative ſine cura with my Fellowſhip will confine the utmoſt of my Ambition in this life. Then Clouds began to gather in the North.

5. Of his Zeal againſt Sacrilege.

WHich had it been heightned to a ſuperlative degree, yet in him of moſt men living would have been leaſt to be wondered at and moſt to be juſtified; becauſe few men of his (or any) Age could pretend to that abſolute ſovereignty over themſelves, in point of Intereſt or ambitious Deſigns, which he had; and, becauſe none was more punctual in paying his Homage and Rental to Almighty God then he was. But yet that his Zeal was according to knowledge, and guided with great Judgement and Diſcretion, will manifeſtly appear unto all men who will but caſt their eyes upon ſome of the Principles and Grounds he went upon. E. g. See his Diſcourſe upon Acts 5. 3, 4.

1. That, according to the common Law of Nature, the great Land-lord of the whole World ought to receive Homages from his Tenants and Dependents.

This God claimed in Paradiſe itſelf, when Man was in the Zenith of his Perfection. For (would he ſay) the Prohibited Tree there was a Sacred and a Sacramental Tree. Wherefore he was poſitive and dogmatical in determining that the Formalis ratio and ſpecifical Nature of Original Sin was Sacrilege. Whereunto by the way he annexed this grave and ſerious Meditation: Adam was turned out of his Paradiſe for Sacrilege; and do we not frequently ſee many men turned out of their Paradiſes likewiſe (their fair Eſtates) for the very ſame ſin?

This, again, hath been imprinted in the breaſts of all Mankind, who naturally and univerſally have ever abhorred Sacrilege. Why then ſhould Chriſtians (ſaid he) preſume more upon their God in this caſe then others? why more then the Pagans, or Jews? Here he quoted that of Malachi 3. ver. 8. Will a man rob God? Durſt ever any man entertain ſuch a thought? And that of 1 Corinth. 9. ver. 13, 14. See how dextrouſly he hath handled that Scripture in a ſet and juſt * Diatribe. As alſo that, Revel. 5. ver. 12. in that New ſong, Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain to receive Power, and Riches, and Strength, &c. Lo here (ſaid he) is mention of Riches due to the Lamb that was ſlain. But what need hath He of our Riches? True, no more then a great rich Land-lord hath need of a Pepper-corn. But yet, as it is an Homage, it is expected from the Tenant, and may not be neglected by him without the Forfeiture of the whole. And then for thoſe who confidently deny Tithes to be due under the Goſpel, they do not conſider how in ſo ſaying they muſt deny alſo Chriſt to be a Prieſt for ever after the Order of Melchizedek: For as Tithes were paid to Melchizedek long before Aaron; ſo are they due to Him who is a Prieſt after that Order, now after Aaron. * See Book 1. Diſcourſe 21.

2. And this minds me of another of his Grounds, viz. God's ſo favourably dealing with Men in requiring but the Tenth; which is, in truth, (ſaid he) the leaſt part of our Goods, according to the firſt diviſion. For as Ten is the Periodical number of things of a fixt and ſubſtantial nature; ſo when we proceed beyond Ten, we begin to make a new diviſion; as Eleven is Ten and one, Twelve Ten and two, &c. Thus likewiſe God contents himſelf with the leaſt part of our Time, when he demands but the Seventh, as the number Seven is the Periodical number of Time, &c.

3. A third Ground was, That the chiefeſt things now dedicated to God are, for the moſt part, laden with a חרם. Here he related at large with what Solemnity many of thoſe Ancient Deeds and Writings (ſpecifying Goods and Lands devoted to the Service of God) were wont to be offered at the Altar; and what Vollies of all the hideous Curſes imaginable, touching either Body, or Soul, or Eſtate, or Poſterity, were enumerated in thoſe Writings, and denounced againſt any who would offer to alienate them.

Upon this occaſion he was wont to diſcourſe very gravely How that, at the firſt Reformation in England, if the violent heat of ſeeming Zeal, but indeed of Intereſt, would have admitted ſo much of Conſideration, thoſe Church-Lands of Abbies, &c. mought have been moſt happily diſpoſed of in ſome ſuch manner.

If one Part had been allotted to the Advancement of Learning, and to the Augmentation of ſmaller Salaries for Cures, and to the Reparation and beautifying of Churches, Colleges, &c.

If another Part had been for Proviſion of Clergy-Mens Widows and Orphans: which God took ſpecial care of in the time of the Legal Prieſthood, (the Sons being to inherit their Fathers Places, and the Daughters to be matched as well as their Mothers before them) and which is not neglected by any of the Reformed Churches abroad.

If a third Part had been reſerved for Bellum Sacrum, in the defence of Church and Kingdom.

By this means (purſued he) our Kings would not have needed ſuch Subſidies, &c. from their Subjects, and the Church had kept her Patrimonie, and very many great Families (who too greedily poſſeſſed themſelves of Church-lands) had not been totally ruined and extinct.

4. And this leads me to a fourth Ground, which was the Series of Puniſhments which have conſtantly purſued this Sin.

It is to be obſerved (ſaid he) that God did always ſet a ſpecial Mark of his Diſpleaſure upon every one who durſt Firſt preſume upon a notorious Sin, thereby to give Warning to all others. As, upon Cain the firſt Murtherer, upon Corah and his Complices who firſt moved a Sedition upon the point of Equality in the Prieſthood, upon Abſolom the firſt unnatural Rebell, &c. But now for this Sin of Sacrilege, as God began to puniſh it very early, even in Paradiſe itſelf, (ut ſuprà) ſo hath he continually purſued and hounded this Sin; as in Achan in the Old Teſtament, in Ananias and Sapphira in the New, that no man may pretend the Antiquateneſs of the Old Teſtament, &c. And in latter Ages, beſides what the learned Pens of Sr. Henry Spelman and others have publiſhed, he had collected many rare Inſtances of his own private Obſervation, which upon prudential Conſiderations I forbear to recite.

And now after all this, Is it not admirable to conſider, how ſtrangely the ſeeming preſent Profit of this Sin doth infatuate men? That though they daily experiment theſe Truths, yet they will not be perſuaded either from Venturing on the Sin, or from Continuing in it? What doth this but betray in Men the ſame Shortneſs and Shallowneſs of Underſtanding that we ſee in Rooks and Martins and other ſilly Fowls, which will needs be building every year in thoſe very places where they are ſure to be diſturbed, and endangered themſelves, and to have their Neſts demoliſhed, and their Young deſtroyed; or if any chance to eſcape, yet they always lie at the mercy of every Paſſenger?

6. Of his becoming Facetiouſneſs.

THoſe his ſo grave, knotty and crabbed ſtudies did not at all render him Sour or Moroſe, but in due Time and Place he knew how to be Pleaſant and Facetious. To give the Reader a Taſt of this, for Divertiſement: By this this time perhaps he will but need it, having tired himſelf with reading theſe dull and flat Narratives.

1. The Chamber he kept in was known to be a Ground-chamber juſt under the College-Library. Partly for the benefit of that, (for the Library was his other Study and Cloſet)and partly for the conveniency of having no Students over him to diſturb him by walking, &c. he continued there very many years. His Bed-chamber-window opened into the Street, and in the Summer-time, when the Evenings were clear and ſerene, he would leave his Window open all night for freſh aire. This was not long un-obſerved by the Hooker, who once began to draw away his Bed-cloaths whiles he lay awake. Nay, friend, (ſaid he) I pray thee ſtay till I am aſleep, &c. With that the Hooker ran away, and he ſlept ſecurely with his window ſtill open. Not long after the ſame (or another of his Tribe) came again; and then he was aſleep. But when the Fellow was plucking away the Cloaths, he ſoon awakened, and then ſaid, Oh friend, if thou takeſt away my Bed-cloaths, (his wearing-cloaths he had ſecured well enough) I ſhall take cold, &c. And ſo he was rid of his Chapman again, and never heard more of him, though his windows were ſtill continued un-ſhut. With which pretty Confidence of his he overcame that of the Hookers, and made himſelf very merry with the ſtory among his friends.

2. In the Vacations he was wont to be invited into the Country by a Kinſman and a Knight. At his firſt coming thither, (being then a young Mr. of Arts) he in curioſity ſtood obſerving the Falconer feeding his Hawk, and in way of complaiſance began to praiſe the Hawk: As firſt, What a brave ſharp Bill ſhe had. Bill? ſaid the Falconer, it is a Beak, Sir. By and by, What notable Claws ſhe had. Claws, Sir? ſaid he, they are Pounces. Anon he commended her fine Feathers? Feathers, Sir? they are Plumes. After that, her goodly Tail. Tail, Sir? it is a Train.

Mr. Mede not a little abaſh'd that he ſhould be thus miſtaken all along in thoſe Terms of Art, and believing the Falconer would expoſe him for his Ignorance to his fellow-ſervants, he ſtudied this innocent piece of Revenge: The Falconer, he ſaw, uſed to wait at Table, and therefore taking his time, three or four days after, when he thought the thing was quite forgotten, he ſets them all at the Table on reading of Riddles. And when they were well in, he turning to the Falconer, asked him, Friend, What kind of Bird is that which hath neither Bill, nor Claw, nor Feathers, nor Tail? The Falconer was utterly poſed, and ſtood mute. Why then (ſaid Mr. Mede) I will tell you: It is your Hawk. That hath no Bill, but a Beak; no Claws, but Pounces; no Feathers, but Plumes; no Tail, but a Train. There I was even with him, would he ſay triumphingly.

3. Such Fellow-commoners who came to the Univerſity onely to ſee it and to be ſeen in it, he called The Univerſity-Tulips, that made a Gaudy ſhew for a while, &c.

To theſe might be added many more; whereof ſome perhaps would taſt a little too ſalt to ſome, but all of them would reliſh well enough to younger Palats.

But I muſt remember the Gravity of the Perſon I am ſpeaking of, and whiles I am upon this pleaſant Argument, ſhall endeavour to imitate his Practice, which was, to make his Facetionſneſs always uſher in ſomething that was Serious. To the next then.

7. Some of his handſome and ſerious Sayings.

SO I call them, rather then Apophthegms, though ſome of them may poſſibly lay claim to that Title.

1. It

1. It was often in his Mouth, Over-doing always undoes; very applicable many ways.

2. To that ſtale triumphing Demand of the Romaniſts, Where was your Church before Luther? he anſwered with another Queſtion, * Where was the fine Flour when the Wheat went to the Mill?

* And ſometimes thus, Where was the Meal before the Corn was ground?

3. Where there is Siding and Studium partium, the prevailing Party always makes the other complain: "Juſt as it is at the great Crowding in the Commence- "ment-Houſe when an extraordinary Prævaricator comes up; the Crowd "ſways ſometimes on one ſide, then they that are cruſhed to the walls cry out, "Oh, Oh, and being ſenſible of the pain, they ſet their feet againſt the walls, "and with their backs and all their ſtrength cauſe the Preaſs to turn as much to "the other ſide; and then theſe cry out as faſt, Oh, Oh, as the other did before: "and ſo alternis vicibus.

4. To that old Complaint, (now newly dreſſed up and followed with ſuch noiſes and Hubbubs) Is it not great pity that men ſhould be ſilenced and laid aſide onely for their not Subſcribing? his anſwer was, So it is great pity that ſome goodly fair Houſes in the midſt of a populous City ſhould take fire, and therefore muſt of neceßity be pulled down, unleſs you will ſuffer the whole Town to be on a flame and conſume to aſhes.

5. That which followeth cannot properly be called a Saying, but rather a Diſcourſe, reſembling a rich Jewell made up of divers coſtly Gemms.

After he had been ſpeaking very Judiciouſly and very Piouſly what great reaſon we all had to pray earneſtly for our Governours in the Church, That God would direct and aſſiſt them, as in many other things, ſo in this, viz. in their Choice of or Recommending Perſons to thoſe Dignities in the Church which do ipſo facto make them Convocation-men; Becauſe (ſaid he) as the Convocation is properly the Clergie's Parliament, ſo ſuch Men are the laſting Members of that Houſe, and therefore a ſpecial care to be had that they be well qualified; not onely of good Learning and good Life, but of good Experience, good Temper, and of good Repute with the Gentry. This laſt he added, and gave good reaſons why, and then proceeded, Although it is poßible, yea very probable, that ſome who ſit high in the Church, enjoying the benign Aſpect and happy Influence of a Good and Gracious Prince, may very much advantage and advance the Church in other reſpects; yet, without a great regard had of fit Convocation-men, all the reſt will be but as building high without Buttreſſes, and it may ſuddenly tumble down again.

8. What opinion Strangers had of Mr. Mede and of ſome others of our Country-men; with a modeſt Advertiſement.

FOrein Teſtimonialls are held to be the more conſiderable, becauſe they are ſuppoſed to be leſs partial, as proceeding rather from right Judgment then from any byaſſed Affection. I ſhall not here repeat any thing out of Sir William Boſwell's Letters, or out of thoſe of Lud. de Dieu and of others; but I ſhall tell you what I have received from the mouths of ſome Grandees in Repub. Literaria. They pronounced him not onely "a moſt Judicious and Profound "Divine, but a Perſon Eminent in almoſt all variety of choiceſt Learning, be-"ſides Languages. And therefore they did not doubt to rank him with the "Lord Verulam and with Mr. Thomas Lydiat. To which three Perſons (I ſpeak ſtill of men of great variety of Learning; for otherwiſe they had an exceeding high Veneration for very many of our Divines, and for others of other Faculties: but to theſe three) they gave ſuch a Preeminency as was given to David's three firſt Captains in the Liſt of his Worthies.

Here

Here I cannot conceal what dropp'd from one of their mouths, because I wiſh good uſe may be made of it at home.

Inquiring what Fortunes theſe men had, and underſtanding they were but ordinary, eſpecially that of Mr. Lydiat; he burſt out into this ſpeech, You in England deſerve not to have ſuch Brave men among you, ſince you make no more of them.

That his Zeal for good Worth had been the more excuſable, had it not exceeded ſo much as not to ſuffer his Judgement to conſider what afterwards he was minded of.

1. That the L. Verulam was advanced to as high a Place in the State as a Subject is capable of: but how he loſt his footing, no ingenuous man is willing to remember.

2. That ſome men, who are very Bookiſh and Studious, uſually prefer their Leiſure and Liberty before all Preferments whatſoever. Which was Mr. Mede's and Mr. Lydiat's caſe. The former of whom mought have been much higher then he was, if he had pleaſed *; and was as high as he deſired to be, had he lived to get but a Donative to his Fellowſhip. And in that his Condition (ſuch as it was) he thrived ſo well, as to become a conſiderable Benefactor to his College.

* Of the preferment in Ireland that was offer'd him, Vide ſuprà.

3. But now concerning Mr. Lydiat, (for whoſe ſake chiefly that ſmart ſpeech was uttered) here the Difficulty riſes higher and grows more perplex'd.

His great Worth hath been celebrated enough by thoſe his rare Pieces now extant. In his many Chronological Diſquiſitions he conflicted, as with Chriſtoph. Clavius, and with the whole College of Romiſh Mathematicians, ſo with that great Goliah of Literature, Joſeph Scaliger, whom yet he ſo manifeſtly worſted, as to make him forſake his Weapon, and to betake himſelf unmanly to his Tongue. When the news of his Death came beyond Sea, I knew a certain great Mecænas and Patron of Learning there', whoſe Induſtry travelled very much to collect what of his Papers might be had, and to that end employed divers, (among the reſt my ſelf,) with a Reſolution to have them fairly and faithfully printed at his own charges. But they were not to be retrived.

Now let us ſee what Favours and Encouragements were afforded to a Perſon of ſo great Merits.

It is true, Prince Henry, of Famous and Glorious Memory, took ſo much notice of him, as to receive him into His Service, and to have him reade to Him. Here queſtionleſs he had found a very Bountifull and Royal Maſter, had not that Peerleſs Prince been cropt juſt in his Bloom and Bloſſome. But now, alas! Mr. Lydiat's Hopes ſaw their own Funeral in that of his Royal Maſter's. Wherefore retiring into a ſmall obſcure Living at Alkerton in the Edge and Fringe of Oxfordſhire, there he ſolaced himſelf in his private Study, untill, being unhappily engaged for the Debts of one nearly allied to him, he was thrown into Priſon, where he lay a long time. At length, partly by the aſſiſtence of Sir William Boſwell, (never to be named without very great Honour) and partly by the helps of the excellent Dr. Pinke, (that moſt worthy Warden of New-College, whereof Mr. Lydiat had been ſometime Fellow, as I have heard) and by the noble bounty of ſome other Friends of that Univerſity, he was reſtored to his Liberty, and returned to his little Living, wherein (maugre all the Diſaſters he had felt before, and all that ſalvage uſage he after ſuffered for his Loyalty in the late Troubles) he left behind him at his Death a very neat and ſubſtantial Parſonage-houſe, with Barns and Stables, Garden and Orchard ſutable, all which he built and raiſed from the ground, as alſo a new Chancel (of his own building likewiſe,) wherein he lies buried, as in his own proper Tombe and Monument.

But to ſay the Truth, when all is ſaid that can be ſaid, It were heartily to be wiſhed

That

That Publick Spirits would come up a little thicker in the World. It was a memorable Passage of an Italian Ambassador here in England, who, having taken his leave, and being now under sail homeward, stood upon the Deck, and looked wistly towards our Country as long as he could wel discern it, and then for a Vale uttered these words, O troppo felice Isola, &c. O too happy Island, if thou hadst but some more Publick Souls in thee. This I have heard frequently repeated, and most feelingly, by as great a States-man, and as good a Commonwealths-man, and as sound a Christian, as our Nation hath bred in many Ages *.

* The thrice Renowned Sir Thomas Rowe, who, after so many Ambassages to almost all the Princes and States in Christendom, and to the greatest Emperours beyond Christendom, (all which were managed with admirable Dexterity and Success and Satisfaction) was last of all Ambassadour extraordinary to Ferdinand III. Emperour of Germany, who gave him this Character, I have met with many Gallant Persons of many Nations; but I scarce ever met with an Ambassadour like you.

It were to be wished again, That there were not too much of Truth in a speech that fell from a through-Scholar and Divine,— Many (by their fine Arts and Methods) get into Preferments, whiles Scholars (of good deserts) are hard at their Studies. It was not the least Rubie or Diamond in that fair Brooch stuck upon the Memory of the ever-Blessed B. Andrews, * That he sent for men of Note that he thought wanted Preferment, and gave them Prebends and Benefices under Seal before they knew of it; as to Mr. Boys, Mr. Fuller, &c. And I can never forget with what a Gusto that Brave Sir William Boswell was wont to relate this (among the infinite more observable Passages) in the Happy Reign of Q. Elizabeth, That She gave a strict Charge and Command to both the Chancellors of both Her Universities, to bring Her a Just, True and Impartial List of all the Eminent and Hopefull Students (that were Graduates) in each University, to set down punctually their Names, their Colleges, their Standings, their Faculties wherein they did eminere, or were likely so to doe. Therein Her Majestie was exactly obeyed, the Chancellors durst not doe otherwise: and the use She made of it was, That if She had an Ambassadour to send abroad, then She of Her self would nominate such a Man of such an House to be his Chaplain, and another of another House to be his Secretary, &c. When She had any places to dispose of, fit for Persons of an Academical Education, She would Her self consign such Persons as She judged to be pares Negotiis. Sir William had gotten the very individual Papers wherein these Names were listed, and marked with the Queen's own hand, which he carefully laid up among his Κειμήλια. Now (as Sir William pursued) this could not be long concealed from the young Students, and then it is easy to be imagined (or rather it is not to be imagined) how this Consideration, that their Sovereign's Eye was upon them, (and so Propitious upon the Deserving among them) how this, I say, would switch and spurre on their Industries.

* See the Funeral Sermon, &c.

I end these Additionalls to Mr. Mede's Character with that plain ordinary Vote, wherein yet, I believe, I shall have very many joyn with me, Sic mihi contingat vivere, sicque mori!

God grant we may all in some proportion live as humbly, as faithfully, as fruitfully and Christianly, and then die as peaceably and comfortably as he did. Amen.

THE END.

If any one should scruple my Fidelity in relating some speeches of M^r. Mede's, because spoken so many years since; he may please to satisfie himself with this, That it was my Custome, presently when I went from M^r. Mede's Chamber, to set down in writing what I conceived observable: which writings I have yet by me, and consulted with them in these my Narratives.

DISCOURSE I.

S. MATTHEW 6. 9.

Οὕτως οὖν προσεύχεσθε ὑμεῖς· Πάτερ ἡμῶν, &c.

Thus therefore pray ye; Our Father, &c.

IT was well hoped, after the question about the lawfulness and fitness of a set Form of Prayer had been so long debated in our Church, that the Sect of those who opposed it had been ere this well-nigh extinguished: But experience tels us the contrary, that this Fancy is not only still living, but begins, as it were, to recover and get strength afresh. In which regard my Discourse at this time will not be unseasonable, if, taking my rise from these words of our Saviour, I acquaint you upon what grounds and example this practice of the Christian Church hath been established, and how frivolous and weak the Reasons are which some of late do bring against it.

To begin therefore; You see by the Text I have now read, that our Blessed Saviour delivered a set Form of Prayer unto his Disciples, and in so doing hath commended the use of a set Form of Prayer unto his Church: Thus therefore (saith he) pray ye; Our Father which art in heaven, &c.

Is not this a set Form of Prayer? and did not our Saviour deliver it to be used by his Disciples? They tell us, No. For Thus, say they, in this place is not thus to be understood; but for, in this manner, to this effect or sense, or after this pattern; not in these words and syllables. To this I answer, It is true that this form of Prayer is a Pattern for us to make other Prayers by; but that this only should be the meaning of our Saviour's Thus, and not the rehearsall of the words themselves, I utterly deny: and I prove it out of the eleventh Chapter of S. Luke, where the same Prayer is again delivered in these words, Ὅταν προσεύχησθε, λέγετε, When you pray, say, Our Father which art in heaven—— that is, doe it in hac verba,

Matth. 6.9.

verba, in theſe very words. For what other phraſe of Scripture is there to expreſs ſuch a meaning, if this be not? Beſides, in this of S. Luke the occaſion would be conſidered. It came to paſs (ſaith he) as Jeſus was praying in a certain place, that when he ceaſed, one of his Diſciples ſaid unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John alſo taught his Diſciples. From whence it may not improbably be gathered, that this was the cuſtome of the Doctours of Iſrael, to deliver ſome certain Form of Prayer unto their Diſciples, to uſe, as it were a badge and Symbolum of their Diſcipleſhip; at leaſt John Baptiſt had done ſo unto his Diſciples: and thereupon our Saviour's Diſciples beſought him, that he alſo would give them in like manner ſome Form of his making, that they might alſo pray with their Maſter's ſpirit, as John's Diſciples did with theirs. For that either our Saviour's or John's Diſciples knew not how to pray till now, were ridiculous to imagine; they being both of them Jews, who had their certain ſet houres of prayer, which they conſtantly obſerved, as the third, ſixth, and ninth. It was therefore a Form of Prayer of their Maſter's making, which both John is ſaid to have given his Diſciples, and our Saviour's Diſciples beſought him to give them.

For the fuller underſtanding whereof, I muſt tell you ſomething more, and the rather, becauſe it is not commonly taken notice of; and that is, That this delivery of the Lord's Prayer in S. Luke is not the ſame with that related by S. Matthew, but another, at another time, and upon another occaſion: That of S. Matthew in that famous Sermon of Chriſt upon the Mount, whereof it is a part; that of S. Luke upon a ſpeciall motion of the Diſciples at a time when himſelf had done praying: That of S. Matthew in the ſecond; that of S. Luke in the third yeare after his Baptiſme. Conſider the Text of both, and you ſhall finde it impoſſible to bring them into one and the ſame. Whence it follows, that the Diſciples, when it was firſt uttered, underſtood not that their Maſter intended it for a Form of Prayer unto them, but for a pattern or example only, or, it may be, to inſtruct them in ſpeciall in what manner to ask forgiveneſs of ſins. For if they had thought he had given them a Form of Prayer then, they would never have asked him for one now. Wherefore our Saviour this ſecond time utters himſelf more expreſly, Ὅταν προσεύχησθε, λέγετε, When ye pray, ſay, Our Father which art in heaven——Thus their inadvertency becomes our confirmation: For as Joſeph ſaid to Pharaoh, The dream is doubled unto Pharaoh, becauſe the thing is eſtabliſhed by God; ſo may we ſay here, the delivery of this Prayer was doubled unto the Diſciples, that they and we might thereby know the more certainly that our Saviour intended and commended it for a ſet Form of Prayer unto his Church.

Thus much of that ſet Form of Prayer which our Saviour gave unto his Diſciples, as a precedent and warrant to his Church to give the like Forms to her Diſciples or members; a thing which from her infancy ſhe uſed to doe. But becauſe her practice is called in queſtion, as not warranted by Scripture, let us ſee what was the practice of the Church of the Old Teſtament, then whoſe example and uſe we can have no better rule to follow in the New.

Firſt therefore, we find two ſet Forms of Prayer, or Invocation, appointed by God himſelf in the Law of Moſes. One, the Form wherewith the Prieſts were to bleſs the people: Num. 6. 23, 24, 25, 26. On this wiſe, ſaith he, ſhall Aaron and his ſons bleſs the children of Iſrael, ſaying unto them, The Lord bleſs thee and keep thee; The Lord make his face ſhine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee; The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. Is not this a ſet Form of Prayer? For what what is to bless, but to pray over or invocate God for another?

Matth. 6.9.

The second is the Form of profession and prayer to be used by him who had paid his Tithes every third yeare: Deut. 26.13. O Lord God, I have brought away the hallowed things out of mine house, and also have given them unto the Levite, and unto the stranger, and fatherless, and unto the widow, according to all thy commandements which thou hast commanded me: I have not transgressed thy Commandements, nor have I forgotten them. 14. I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I taken away thereof for an unclean use, &c. 15. Look down from thy holy habitation, from heaven, and bless thy people Israel, and the Land which thou hast given us, as thou swarest to our Fathers, a Land that floweth with milk and honey.

But what need we seek thus for scattered Formes, when we have a whole Book of them together? The Book of Psalms was the Jewish Liturgie, or the chief part of the Vocall service wherewith they worshipped God in the Temple. This is evident by the Titles of the Psalms themselves, which shew them to have been commended to the severall Quires in the same, To Asaph, To the sonnes of Korah, To Jeduthun, and almost forty of them To the Magister Symphoniæ the Prefect or Master of the Musick, in generall. The like we are to conceive of those which have no Titles; as for example, of the 105 and 96 Psalms, which, though they have no such Inscription in the Psalm-book, yet we finde 1 Chron. 16. 7. that they were delivered by David into the hands of Asaph and his Brethren for formes to thank the Lord. This a man would think were sufficient to take away all scruple in this point; especially when we our selves, and all the Reformed Churches, use to sing the same Psalms, not only as set Forms, but set in Metre, that is after a humane composure. Are not the Psalms set Forms of Confession, of Prayer, and of Praising God? And in case there had been no Prayers amongst them, yet what reason could be given, why it should not be as lawfull to pray unto God in a set Form, as to praise him in such a one?

What therefore do they say to this? Why, they tell us, that the Psalms are not sung in the Church unto God, but so rehearsed for instruction of the people onely, namely, as the Chapters and Lessons are there read, and no otherwise. But if either we do, ought, or may sing the Psalms in the Church with the same end and purpose that the Church of the Old Testament did, (and it were absurd to say we might not,) this Exception will not subsist. For what is more certain then that the Church of Israel used the Psalms for Forms of praising and invocating God? What mean else those Forms, Cantemus Domino, Psallite Domino, Let us sing unto the Lord, and, Sing ye unto the Lord, and the like so frequent in them? But there are more direct and expres testimonies. In 1 Chron. 25. 3. it is expresly said of Jeduthun and his sonnes, that their office was to propheste with a Harp, to give thanks, and to praise the Lord. In the second of Chron. 30. 21. we read, that the Levites and the Priests praised the Lord day by day, singing with loud Instruments unto the Lord. And, as ye heard even now, out of 1 Chron. 16. David, at the time when he brought up the Ark unto Jerusalem, then first delivered the 105 and 96 Psalms into the hands of Asaph and his sonnes to confess or give thanks unto the Lord. And lastly, to leave no place for farther doubt, we read Ezra 3. 10, 11. that the Levites the sonnes of Asaph were set with Cymbals to praise the Lord, after the ordinance of David King of Israel: and that they sung together by course, in praising and giving thanks unto the Lord, because he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever. For this reason, the four and twenty Courses or Quires into which the Singers of the Temple were divided by King David to serve in their turns consisted each Matth. 6.9. of them of twelve, according to the number of the Tribes of Iſrael; that ſo every Tribe might have a mouth and voice to praiſe and to give thanks unto God for him in the Temple.

Thus we have ſeen what warrant to pray and call upon God in a ſet Form hath from the practice of the Church of God in the Old Teſtament. And, if Reaſon may have place, in the publick ſervice of God, where one is the mouth of many, there is none ſo proper and convenient. For how can the Miniſter be ſaid properly to be the mouth of the Congregation in prayer unto God, when the Congregation is not firſt made acquainted and privy to what he is to tender unto God in their names? Which in a voluntary and extemporary form of Prayer they are not, nor well can be; I am ſure neither ſo properly nor conveniently as in a ſet Form, which both they and the whole Church have agreed upon, and offer unto God at the ſame time, though in ſeverall places, in the ſelf-ſame form and words. And this may be a ſecond Reaſon, I meane from Uniformity: For how can the Church, being a Myſticall Body, better teſtifie her unity before God, then in her uniformity in calling upon him? eſpecially our Saviour telling us, that if but two or three ſhall agree together on earth, as touching any thing that they ſhall ask, it ſhall be done unto them of his Father which is in heaven. So prevailable with Almighty God is the power of Conſent in Prayer.

Let us now, in the laſt place, ſee what Reaſons they bring who contend altogether for voluntary Prayer, and would have no ſet Forms uſed.

1. Firſt, they ſay, It is the ordinance of God, that the Church ſhould be edified by the gifts of her Miniſters as well in Praying as Preaching. Ergo, their Prayers ſhould be extemporary or voluntary; becauſe in reading a ſet Form of Prayer this gift cannot be ſhewn.

To this I anſwer, Firſt, That there is not in this point the ſame reaſon for Prayer and for Preaching: for in Prayer (I mean publick) the Miniſter is the mouth of the Church unto God, and therefore it were convenient they ſhould know what he puts up to God in their names; but in Preaching he is not ſo. Secondly, Why ſhould not the Paſtours and Miniſters of the Church edify the Church by their gift of Prayer, as well in compoſing a ſet Form of Prayer for her uſe by generall agreement, as in uttering a voluntary or extemporary Prayer in a particular Congregation? Thirdly, Are not the members of the Church to be edified as well by the ſpirit of the Church, as the Church or ſome part thereof by the ſpirit of a member? But how can the Church edifie her members by her gift of Prayer, otherwiſe then by a ſet Form agreed upon by her conſent? Fourthly, Oſtentation of gifts is one thing, but Edification by them another. Oſtentation of the gift of Prayer is indeed beſt ſhewn in a voluntary or extemporary Prayer; but the Church may be edified as well by a ſet Form. Yea, ſuch a Form in the publick ſervice of God is more edificative then a voluntary: And that, both becauſe the Congregation is firſt made acquainted therewith; and ſecondly, becauſe they are better ſecured from being ingaged in ought that might be unfit to ſpeak unto God, either for matter or manner, or ſuch as they would not have given their conſent to if they had been aware of it. For now, that extraordinary aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, which was in the Primitive and Apoſtolicall times, is long ſince ceaſed; and all men, to whom that office belongeth to ſpeak to God for others, are not at all times diſcreet and well adviſed, when they ſpeak to him at will and extempore, but ſubject to miſcarriage. Laſtly, I anſwer, That the Church is to be edified by the gift of her Miniſters in voluntary Prayer, loco & tempore, in fit place and upon fit occaſions, not in all places and upon all occaſions. And thus much to this Objection.

Matth. 6.9.

But they object ſecondly, That the Spirit ought to be free and unlimited, and that therefore a Book or ſet Form of Prayer, which limits the Spirit in praying, is not to be tolerated or uſed. 2.

To this I anſwer, It is falſe, that the acting of the Spirit in one Chriſtian may not be limited or regulated by the ſpirit of another; eſpecially, the ſpirit of a particular man in the publick worſhip, by the Spirit of the Church whereof he is a member. For doth not the Apoſtle tell us 1 Cor. 14. 29, 30. that even that extraordinary Spirit of prophecy, uſuall in his time, might be limited by the ſpirit of another Prophet? Let the Prophets, ſaith he, ſpeak two or three, and let the other judge: If any thing be revealed to another that ſitteth by, let the firſt hold his peace. Is not this a limiting? He gives a reaſon v. 32. For the ſpirits of the Prophets, ſaith he, are ſubject to the Prophets. Beſides, are not the ſpirits of the people as well limited and determined by a voluntary Prayer, when they joyn therein with their Miniſter, as they are by a ſet Form? True, the ſpirit of the Miniſter is then free; but theirs is not ſo, but tied and led by the ſpirit of the Miniſter as much as if he uſed a ſet Form. But to elude this, they tell us, that the Queſtion is not of limiting the ſpirit of the people, but of the Miniſter onely: For, as for the people, no more is required of them but to joyn with their Miniſter, and to teſtifie it by ſaying Amen; but the ſpirit of the Miniſter ought to be left free, and not to be limited. But where is this written, that the one may not be limited as well as the other? We heard the Apoſtle ſay even now, The ſpirit of the Prophets is ſubject to the Prophets: If in propheſying, why not in praying? And what ſhew of Reaſon can be given, why the ſpirit of a particular Miniſter in the publick worſhip of the Church may not, yea ought not to be limited and regulated by the ſpirit of the Church Repreſentative, as well as the ſpirit of a whole Congregation by the ſpirit of a particular Miniſter? For every particular Miniſter is as much ſubordinate to the ſpirit of the Church Repreſentative, as the ſpirit of the Congregation is to his. So much for this Objection.

There remaineth yet a third, which may be anſwered in two or three words. No ſet Form of Prayer, ſay they, can ſerve for all occaſions. What then? yet why may it not be uſed for all ſuch occaſions as it ſerves for? If any ſudden and unexpected occaſion happen, for which the Church cannot provide, the ſpirit of her Miniſters is free: Who will forbid them to ſupply, in ſuch a caſe, that by a voluntary and arbitrary form, which the Church could not provide for in a ſet Form? And this is what I intended to ſay of this Argument. 3.

DISCOURSE II.

MATTHEW 6. 9. LUKE 11. 2.
Sanctificetur Nomen tuum.
Sanctified, or Hallowed, be thy Name.

Matth. 6. 9. Luke 11. 2.

ALthough I make no queſtion but that which we ſo often repeat unto Almighty God in our daily prayers, is for the generall meaning thereof by the moſt of us in ſome competent meaſure underſtood: yet becauſe by a more full and diſtinct explication the knowledge of ſome may be improved, and the meditations of others occaſioned to a further ſearch; I hope I ſhall not doe amiſs, nor be thought to have choſen a Theme either needleſs or not ſo fit for this Auditory, if I ſhall enquire What that is we pray for in this firſt Petition of the Prayer our Lord hath taught us, when we deſire that God's Name may be ſanctified: For perhaps we ſhall finde more contained therein then is commonly taken notice of.

The words are few, and therefore ſhall need no other Analyſe then what their very number preſents unto us, viz. God's Name, and the ſanctifying thereof; Sanctificetur Nomen tuum. I will begin firſt with the laſt in order, but firſt in nature, Nomen tuum, God's Name. By which, according to the ſtyle of Holy Scripture, we are to underſtand in this place, Firſt of all, God himſelf, or His ſacred Deity, to wit, abſtractly expreſſed, according to the ſtyle of eminency and dignity, that is, Dei ἀξίωμα, the Divine Majeſty: as we are wont for the King to ſay, His Majeſty, or the King's Majeſty, and of other perſons of honour and eminency, their Highneſs, their Honour, his Excellency, and the like; ſo of God, His Name, and ſometimes, with the ſelf-ſame meaning, His Glory; as Jer. 2. 11. Hath any nation changed their Gods, which yet are no Gods? but my people have changed their Glory (that is, their God) for that which is good for nought. So Pſalme 106. 20. of the Calf made in the wilderneſs, They changed their Glorie into the ſimilitude of an Oxe that eateth graſs: And S. Paul, Rom. 1. 23. They changed the Glory (that is, the Majeſty) of the incorruptible God into an Image made like to corruptible man, &c. Such is the notion, but much more frequent, of God's Name. In a word, Nomen Dei in this kinde of uſe is nothing elſe but Divinum Numen. Whence it is that in Scripture, to call upon the Name of God, to blaſpheme the Name of God, to love his Name, to ſweare by his Name, to build a Temple to his Name, for his Name to dwell there; and in the New Teſtament, to believe in the Name of the Lord Jeſus, to call upon the Name of the Lord Jeſus; theſe, I ſay, and the like expreſſions have no other meaning, then to doe theſe things to the Divine Majeſty, to the Lord Jeſus, whoſe is that Name above every name, whereat every knee muſt bow. Accordingly here, Sanctificetur Nomen tuum, Hallowed be thy Name, is as much as to ſay, Sanctificetur Numen tuum, Sanctified be thy Divine Majeſty.

Secondly, Under the Name of God here to be ſanctified or hallowed, underſtand, beſides the Majeſty of his Godhead, that alſo ſuper quod invocatum eſt Nomen ejus, whereupon his Name is called, or that which is called by his Name, (as we in our Bibles commonly expreſs this phraſe of Scripture;) that that is, all whatſoever is God's, or God is the Lord and owner of by a peculiar right; ſuch as are Things ſacred, whether they be Perſons, or whether Things by diſtinction ſo called, or Times, or Places, which have upon them a relation of peculiarneſs towards God. For ſuch as theſe are ſaid in Scripture, to have the Name of God called upon them, or to be called by his Name; that is, to be His. Thus we read in Scripture of an Houſe which had the Name of God upon it, or which was called by his Name, that is, God's Houſe, 1 Kings 8. 43. Jer. 7. 10, &c. Of a City upon which the Name of God was called or named, to wit, the Holy City, Jeruſalem, the City of the great King, the Lord of hoaſts, Jer. 25. 29. Dan. 9. 18. Of an Ark upon which the Name of God the Lord was called, 1 Chron. 13. 6. 2 Sam. 6. 2. that is, the Lord's Ark, or the Ark of his Covenant, as it is elſewhere named. Of a People upon which the Name of the Lord was called, or which were called by his Name, Deut. 28. 10. Dan. 9. 19. and elſewhere; that is, were his peculiar and holy people; as is ſaid in like manner, and with like meaning, of the Church of the New Teſtament, James 2. 7. Acts 15. 17. I repreſent not theſe places of Scripture at large, becauſe I know that every eare that is acquainted with Scripture can beare witneſs unto them. And for the meaning of this expreſſion of God's Name to be called upon a thing, or a thing to be called by his Name, that it is all one as to ſay it to be His, (beſides the evidence of the matter whereabout it is uſed,) appeares by the ſame phraſe uſed in two other places, of the like relation of men to that which is theirs: as Gen. 48. 16. where Jacob bleſſing Joſeph's ſons ſaith, The Angel which redeemed me from all evil, bleſs the lads, and let my name be called upon them; that is, let them be mine, namely, as Reuben and Simeon are mine, as he ſaith a little before; for they are words of adoption. Again, in the 4. of Eſay 1. where it is ſaid, that ſeven women ſhould take hold of one man, and ſay, We will eat our own bread, and weare our own apparell; onely let thy Name be called upon us, to take away our reproach; that is, Do thou own us, or let us be thine, that it may not be a reproach unto us that we have no husband. The Ancients were wont to ſet the Names of the Owners upon their houſes and other poſſeſſions; which they called Tituli, Titles. Chryſologus Serm. 145. Sicut dominos prædiorum liminibus affixi Tituli proloquuntur, As the Titles fixed to doors do ſpeak the owners of the poſſeſſions. S. Auguſtine in Pſal. 21. Quando potens aliquis invenerit Titulos ſuos, nonne jure rem ſibi vendicat, & dicit, Non poneret titulos meos, niſi res mea eſſet? When any great man ſhall ſpy his own Titles, does he not juſtly challenge the goods, and ſay, No man would put my Titles to it, unleſs the thing were mine? Whether this phraſe of Scripture, of God's Name to be called or named upon a thing, hath reference unto any ſuch cuſtome, I cannot affirme; but ſurely the meaning is the ſame, to wit, that God is the Lord and Proprietary of them. And thus ye have heard what is this Name of God we pray here to be ſanctified; to wit, a twofold Name: firſt, his Name and Majeſty which we call upon; ſecondly, that alſo which is called by his Name: The firſt we may call his Perſonall, the other his Denominative or Participated Name.

Matth. 6. 9. Luke 11. 2.

HAVING learned what Nomen Dei importeth, and ſo cleared the Object of what we pray for; let us next enquire what that is which the word Sanctifie, or To be ſanctified, implieth, being that which our vote witneſſeth ought to be done thereunto. And this I intended for the main and principall Argument of my preſent Diſcourſe, being a matter not ſo well traced as the former, and perhaps not altogether freed of obſcurity and difficulty to be underſtood.

For our more certain and aſſured diſcovery whereof, we will firſt examine the abſtract thereof, Sanctity, and finde out the true notion of it, namely, what is the ratio formalis, the formall ſtate or nature of that which the Scripture entituleth in the generall קדוש or ἅγιον, that is, Holy; not regarding what notion the Greeks or Latines had reſpect to in their Languages, but what the Holy Scripture properly intendeth under that name. For becauſe to be ſanctified can have but theſe two ſenſes, either to be made holy, or to be uſed and done unto according to, or as becometh, its holineſs; and that the Majeſty of God, which is the prime object of this Act, is not capable of the firſt ſenſe (viz. to be made holy) but of the ſecond onely: if we therefore once rightly underſtand what is the condition and property of Sanctity according to the notion of Scripture, we ſhall not be long ignorant what it is either for the Name or Majeſty of God, or that which is called by his Name, to be hallowed or ſanctified, namely, to be done unto according to their Holineſs.

Now R. David Kimchi upon the 56 of Eſay, ver. 2. Bleſſed is the man that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, hath theſe words, "קדוש שבת להבדילו משאר הימים To ſanctifie the Sabbath is to ſeparate or diſtinguiſh "it from other daies; כי כן כל לשון קדושה הוא ענין הבדלו מאחר במעלה "Becauſe all words of Sanctity import a thing ſeparated or divided from "other things by way of preeminence or excellency. Thus the Rabbi. And that this which he ſaith is true, namely, That Sanctity conſiſts in a diſcretion and diſtinction from other things by way of exaltation and preeminence, may appeare by theſe inſtances and examples which I ſhall now produce out of Scripture.

And firſt from that Law touching the Holy oyl, Exod. 30. 31. where, after the compoſition thereof deſcribed, This (ſaith the Lord) ſhall be an holy anointing oyle unto me. What is that? why, it follows, v. 32. Upon mans fleſh ſhall it not be poured, neither ſhall ye make any other like it, after the compoſition thereof. It is Holy, therefore it ſhall be Holy unto you. That is, As this Oyle is holy and diſcrete from other Oyles, ſo ſhall it accordingly by you be uſed with difference and diſcrimination: For the Text goes on v. 33. Whoſoever compoundeth any like it, or putteth any of it upon a ſtranger, (that is, upon any beſides thoſe it was appropriated to,) ſhall be cut off from his people. What elſe meanes all this, but that this Oyle ſhould be a ſingular or peculiar Oyle, ſet apart and diſtinguiſhed from all other Oyles both in its compoſition and uſe; and that to be ſuch, was to be Holy or Sacred?

The like we ſhall finde in the 35. verſe of the ſame Chapter, concerning the Holy Perfume there deſcribed: Thou ſhalt make it, ſaith he, (to wit, the ingredients he afore mentioned) a perfume, a confection, after the art of the Apothecary, tempered together, pure and Holy. Verſe 37. You ſhall not make to your ſelves (that is, not for your own uſe) according to the compoſition thereof: It ſhall be unto thee Holy for the Lord. Ver. 38. Whoſoever ſhall make the like unto it, to ſmell thereto, ſhall be cut off from his people.

But above all others this notion of Sanctity or Holineſs is moſt expreſſely intimated and taught us in thoſe divine Periphraſes or circumlocutions which the Lord himſelf more then once makes of an Holy People: as Lev. 20. 24. ſpeaking on this manner; I am the Lord your God which have ſeparated you from other people.-- Ver. 26. And ye ſhall be Holy unto me: for I the Lord am Holy, and have ſevered you from other people, that ye ſhould be mine. Mark here, that to ſeparate is to make Holy; and that to be Holy is to be ſeparated from others of the ſame rank. Again, Deut. 26. 18, 19. The Lord hath avouched thee (to wit, Iſrael) this day to be his peculiar (or appropriate) people, as he hath promiſed thee: —— And to make thee high above all nations which he hath made, in praiſe, in name, and in honour; namely, that thou maieſt be an Holy people unto the Lord thy God, as he hath ſpoken. Now what is this but Rabbi Kimchi's definition almoſt verbatim? that to be ſacred or Holy is to be ſeparated or ſet apart from other things by way of excellence; or, which is all one, to be ſet in ſome ſtate of ſingularity or appropriatedneſs, whereby it is advanced above the common condition of things of the ſame order. He that will, may compare alſo two other paſſages, Deut. 7. 6. & 14. 2. parallel to thoſe I have produced; where to be an Holy, and to be a Peculiar people, are made one and the ſame, or the one expounded by the other. Matth. 6. 9. Luke 11. 2.

all

It may be yet further confirmed by comparing Deut. 19. 2, 7. with Joſhuah 20. 7. For whereas in the former of theſe places it is ſaid concerning the Cities of refuge, Thou ſhalt ſeparate, חבדיל, three Cities for thee in the midſt of thy land: in Joſhuah, where this commandement is put in execution, we read in ſtead of ſeparated, יקדשו, i. they ſanctified three Cities, Kedeſh, Shechem, and Hebron. Where that the one is equivalent to the other, the Seventy ſo well underſtood, that even in this place of Joſhuah, for יקדשו, which is, Sanctificârunt they ſanctified, they rendred * διέστειλαν, ſeparârunt, or diſcreverunt, they ſeparated or ſet apart.

* By which they are wont otherwiſe to render the verb ברל, or הבדיל.

The ſame notion of Holineſs may be gathered from the Antitheſis or oppoſite thereunto, to wit, Unholy or Unclean, which the Scripture is wont to expreſs by the name of Common. So S. Peter in his Viſion, Acts 10. 14. Lord, ſaith he, I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean, Οὐδέποτε ἔφαγον πᾶν κοινὸν ἢ ἀκάθαρτον. For know, that becauſe that which is Holy ought to be kept pure and cleane; or rather, becauſe Cleanneſs imports a ſeparation from filth, as Holineſs doth from common; thence Clean and Holy, and ſo alſo Unholy and Unclean, are uſed the one for the other: whence 1 Cor. 7. 14. Unclean and Holy are oppoſed. But to goe on; The voice from heaven anſwers S. Peter in the ſame language v. 15. What God hath cleanſed, (that is, ſanctified,) σὺ μὴ κόινου, account not thou common. So in 1 Mac. 1. 47. κτήνη κοινὰ are unclean beaſts; and v. 62. φαγεῖν κοινὰ, to eat unclean things.

The like Antitheſis of Holy and Common is to be found Heb. 10. 29. where the Apoſtle ſaith of a Believer or Chriſtian that lives an ungodly and wicked life, He hath troden under foot the Son of God, and counted the bloud of the Covenant wherewith he was ſanctified, κοινὸν, as a common thing; that is, he had profaned it. Our tranſlation rendreth it an unholy thing; the oppoſition thereof to ſanctified witneſſing that to be the meaning. Now then, if to be Unholy or Unclean be to be Common; ſurely it follows by the Law of oppoſition, that to be Holy is to be ſeparated from the common, or to be ſingular and appropriate in ſome manner or other.

Laſtly, it is to be obſerved, that whereas in the Law given Numbers 6. concerning the Vow of Nazariſme (which word ſignifies ſeparation, of Nazar, to ſeparate) the words, to ſeparate, and Separation, come very often in the Text; the vulgar Latine renders for them above ten times, conſecrare, conſecratio, ſanctificare, and ſanctificatio: which ſhews, that this notion, namely, that Holineſs conſiſts in a ſtate of ſeparation, is no new conceit, but ſuch as Antiquity took notice of.

As the LXX. once or twice in this place, and elſewhere ſometimes render the ſame word.

The nature of Holineſs, wherein it conſiſteth, according to the idiome of Scripture, being thus found out and cleared, that which was aimed at in this inquiſition, to wit, what the ſame meaneth by to ſanctifie, and to be ſanctified, will be no hard matter to reſolve. For Sanctity and to ſanctifie being Conjugates or Denominatives, as Logicians call them; the one openeth the way to the knowledge of the other. If therefore Sanctity or

Holineſs

Matth. 6, 9. Luke 11. 2.

Holineſs be a condition of diſcretion and diſtinction from other things, as we have ſhewed it to be; then to ſanctifie muſt either be to put a thing into that ſtate, which we call, to conſecrate; or if it be ſuch already, to uſe and doe unto it as becomes the ſanctity thereof: that is, habere cum diſcrimine, to put a difference between it and other things by way of excellency, or in a dignifying wiſe, by appropriating and ſevering it in the uſe thereof from things of ordinary and common rank; or, which is all one, to uſe it ſingularly, appropriately, and, in a word, uncommonly. For not to uſe it ſo, it being ſuch, were to abuſe it, which the Scripture cals to prophane; to ſanctifie and to prophane being oppoſites. Whence Ezek. 22.26. to prophane is expounded by not putting a difference: The Prieſts (ſaith the Lord) have violated my Law, and have prophaned my holy things; they have put no difference between the holy and prophane.

This to be to ſanctifie, all the places almoſt which I have alledged out of the Law for the notion and nature of ſanctity do apparently proclaim: for the one is ſo nearly linked to the other, that they could not well be ſeparated. Thus was Iſrael, God's holy people, to ſanctifie themſelves by a diſcriminative manner of living or uſance, becauſe the Lord their God had diſcriminated or ſeparated them from other people. So Lev. 20.24,25,26. I am the Lord your God, which have ſeparated you from other people. Ye ſhall therefore put difference between clean beaſts and unclean, and between unclean fowles and clean: and ye ſhall not make your ſouls abominable by beaſt or by fowl, or by any manner of living thing that creepeth on the ground, which I have ſeparated from you as unclean. But ye ſhall be holy unto me; for I the Lord am holy, and have ſevered you from other people, that ye ſhould be mine.

After the ſame manner were the Holy Oyntment and the Holy Perfume or Incenſe to be ſanctified by a diſcriminative, ſingular, appropriate uſance of them, and not to be uſed as other Oyntments & Perfumes: to wit, the one not to be poured upon mans fleſh, nor the other uſed for mans ſmelling unto; yea none of the like compoſition to the one or the other to be made for any prophane or common uſe, upon pain of his being cut off from his people who ſhould dare to doe it. That is, not the particular or Individuum onely, but even the whole kinde of that compoſition was to be accounted ſacred: otherwiſe this caution needed not; ſince for the Individuall, all ſacred things ought to be appropriate and incommunicable in their uſe.

And to this notion it is not altogether improbable but the Apoſtle may allude, 1 Cor. 11.29. when he expreſſeth the prophanation of the Holy Supper in coming to it, and uſing it as a common banquet, by μὴ διακρίνειν σῶμα τοῦ Κυρίου, not differencing the Lord's body; that is, not ſanctifying it, or uſing it as became ſo holy a thing.

Hitherto I have conſidered the words of my Text apart: but now let us put them again together, and ſee How the Name of God ought to be Sanctified in the manner now ſpecified, both in it ſelf, and in the things which it is called upon; as in the beginning I diſtinguiſhed. For the better underſtanding of which, we are to take notice of a twofold Holineſs; one Originall, Abſolute, and Eſſentiall in God; the other Derived or Relative in the things which are His, properly (according to the uſe of the Latine) called Sacra, Sacred things. Both theſe have their ſeverall and diſtinct Sanctifications belonging unto them. For whatſoever is Holy, ought to be ſanctified, according to the condition and proportion of the Holineſs it hath.

To ſpeak of them diſtinctly. The firſt, Originall or Abſolute Holineſs,

is

is nothing elſe but the incommunicable Eminency of the Divine Majeſty, exalted above all, and divided from all other ἀξιώματα or Eminencies whatſoever. For that which a man takes to be, and makes account of as, his God, (whether it be ſuch indeed, or by him fancyed onely) he aſcribes unto it, in ſo doing, a condition of Eminency above, and diſtinct from all other Eminencies whatſoever, that is of Holineſs. Hence it comes that we find the Lord the God of Iſrael, and the onely true God, in Scripture ſo often ſtyled Sanctus Iſraelis, the Holy One of Iſrael, that is, Iſrael's moſt Eminent and Incommunicable One, or, which is all one, His God: as namely Pſal. 89. 18. The Lord is our defence, the HOLY ONE of Iſrael is our King. Eſay 17. 7. At that day ſhall a man look unto his Maker, and his eyes ſhall have reſpect to the HOLY ONE of Iſrael. Habak. 1. 12. Art not thou from everlaſting, O Lord my God, mine HOLY ONE? Agreeably whereunto the Lord is ſaid alſo now and then to ſwear by his HOLINESS, that is by Himſelf: as in the Pſalm before alledged v. 35. Once have I ſworn by my HOLINESS, that I will not lie unto David, &c. Amos 4. 2. The Lord God hath ſworn by his HOLINESS, that lo, the dayes ſhall come upon you that he will take you away with hooks, &c. According to this ſenſe I ſuppoſe alſo that of Amos 8. 7. is to be underſtood; The Lord hath ſworn by the Excellency of Jacob (that is, Jacob's moſt Eminent and Incommunicable One, or by Jacob's HOLY ONE) Surely I will never forget any of their works, &c. For indeed the Gods of the Nations were not properly and truly Holy, becauſe but partially and reſpectively onely; foraſmuch as the Divine eminency which they were ſuppoſed to have was, even in the opinion of thoſe who worſhipped them, common to others with them, and ſo not diſcriminated from, nor exalted above all: But the God of Iſrael was ſimply and abſolutely ſuch, both in himſelf and to them-ward who worſhipped him, as who might acknowledge no other; and therefore κατ' ἐξοχὴν, and by way of diſtinction from all other Gods, called Sanctus Iſraelis, The Holy One of Iſrael; that is, that ſole abſolute, and onely incommunicable One, or ἀκοινώνητον Ὄνομα (as the Author of the Book of Wiſdome cals him, chap. 14. 21.) That God exalted above all, and divided from all, without pareil; there being no other ſuch beſides him. There is none Holy as the Lord, (ſaith Hannah) for there is none beſides thee; [Lxx. none Holy beſides thee;] neither is there any Rock like our God. Wherefore it is to be obſerved, that although the Scripture everywhere vouchſafes the Gentiles Damons the name of Gods; yet it never, I think, calls them Holy Ones, as indeed they were not. Thus you ſee that as Holineſs in generall imports a ſtate of eminency and ſeparation; ſo this of God, as I have deſcribed it, diſagrees not from that generall notion, when I affirm it to conſiſt in a ſtate of peerleſs or incommunicable Majeſty: for that which is ſuch, includes both the one and the other. But would you underſtand it yet better? Apply it then to his Attributes whereby he is known unto us, and know that The Lord is Holy, is as much as to ſay, He is a Majeſty of peerleſs Power, of peerleſs Wiſdome, of peerleſs Goodneſs, and ſo of the reſt. Such a one is our God, and ſuch is his Holineſs.

Matth. 6. 9. Luke 11. 2.

See Eſay 14. 14. Micah 4. 3.

1 Sam. 2. 2.

Now then to Sanctify this peerleſs Name or Majeſty of his, muſt be by doing unto him according to that which his Holineſs challengeth in reſpect of the double importance thereof: namely, to ſerve and glorifie him, becauſe of his Eminency; and to doe it with a ſingular, ſeparate, and incommunicated worſhip, becauſe he is Holy. Not to doe the former is Irreligion and Atheiſme, as not to acknowledge God to be the Chief and Soveraigne Eminency; not to obſerve the ſecond is Idolatry. For as the Lord our God is a ſingular and peerleſs Majeſty, diſtinguiſhed from and exalted above above all things and eminencies elſe whatſoever; ſo muſt his Worſhip be ſingular, incommunicable, and proper to him alone. Otherwiſe, (ſaith Joſhuah to the people) Ye cannot ſerve the Lord. Why? For (ſaith he) He is an Holy God, He is a jealous God, (that can endure no corrivall,) He will not forgive your tranſgreſſions nor your ſins. If ye forſake the Lord and ſerve ſtrange gods, &c.

Matth. 6. 9. Luke 11. 2. Josh. 24. 19.

Whence in Scripture, thoſe who communicate the Worſhip given unto him with any beſides him, or together with him, by way of Object, that is, whether immediately or but mediately, are deemed to deny his incomparable Sanctity, and therefore ſaid to prophane his Holy Name. See Ezek. 20. 39. and chap. 43. 7, 8. Levit. 18. 21.

In a word; All that whole immediate Duty and Service which we ow unto God, whether inward or outward, contained under the name of Divine Worſhip, (when either we confeſs, praiſe, pray unto, call upon or ſwear by his Name) yea all the Worſhip both of men and Angels, is nothing elſe but to acknowledge in thought, word and work, this peerleſs preeminence of his Power, of his Wiſdome, of his Goodneſs and other Attributes, that is, His Holineſs; by aſcribing and giving unto him that which we give and aſcribe to none beſides him, that is, to ſanctifie his moſt Holy Name. This is that the Holy Ghoſt would teach us, when deſcribing how the Seraphims worſhip and glorifie God, Eſay 6. 3. he brings them in crying one unto another, Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord God of hoſts, the whole earth is full of his glory; that is, Sanctifying him. From whence is derived that which we repeat every day in the Hymne, To thee all Angels cry aloud, the heavens and all the powers therein; To thee Cherubim and Seraphim continually do cry, Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God of Sabaoth; Heaven and earth are full of the Majeſty of thy Glory.

And becauſe the pattern of God's holy worſhip is not to be taken from earth, but from heaven; the ſame Spirit therefore in the Apocalyps expreſſeth the Worſhip of God in the New Teſtament with the ſame form of hallowing or holying his Name which the heavenly Hoſte uſeth. For ſo the four Animalia, repreſenting the Catholick Church of Chriſt in the four quarters of the world, are ſaid when they give glory, honour and thanks to him that ſitteth upon the throne and liveth for ever and ever, to doe it by ſinging day and night this Triſagium, Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God Almightie, which was, and is, and is to come: that is, the ſumme of all that they did was but to agnize his Sanctity or Holineſs, or, which is all one, to Sanctifie his holy Name. When therefore the ſame four Animalia are afterwards brought in chanting, Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain, to receive power, and riches, and wiſdome, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing; and again, Bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto him that ſitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever: all is to be underſtood as comprehended within this generall Doxologie, as being but an exemplification thereof; and therefore the Elogies or blazons mentioned therein, to be taken, according to the ſtyle of Holineſs, in an excluſive ſenſe, of ſuch prerogatives as are peculiar to God alone.

Apoc. 4. 8. Ch. 5. 12. V. 13.

And according to this notion of ſanctifying God's Name which I contend for, would the Lord have his Name ſanctified Eſa. 8. 12, 13. when he ſaith, Fear ye not their Fear (that is, the Idolaters Σεβάσματα or Gods; for ſo Fear here ſignifies, to wit, the thing feared) neither dread ye it: But ſanctifie the Lord of Hoſts himſelf, and let him be your Fear, and let him be your Dread; that is, your God.

As Gen. 31. 42, 53. Pſal. 76. 11. So the Chaldee uſes their דחילא, and more then once renders JAH the name of God by it.

Again chap. 29. 23. They ſhall ſanctifie my Name, (ſaith he) even ſanctifie the Holy One of Jacob, and ſhall fear the God of Iſrael. The latter words ſhew the meaning of the former.

The

The like we have in the first Epistle of S. Peter chap. 3. vers. 14, 15. Φόβον αὐτῶν (i. Gentilium) μὴ φοβηθῆτε, μηδὲ ταραχθῆτε, &c. Fear ye not their Fear, nor be in dread thereof: (that is, Fear not nor dread ye the Gods of the Gentiles which persecute you) But sanctifie the Lord God in your hearts, that is, Fear and worship him with your whole hearts. For that this passage (howsoever we are wont to expound it) ought to be construed in the same sense with that of Esay 8. before alledged, and the words to be rendred suitably, I take it to be apparent for this reason, because they are verbatim taken from thence, as he that shall compare the Greek words of S. Peter with the LXX. in that place of Esay will be forced to confess. Matth. 6. 9. Luke 11. 2.

Besides this evident and express use of the word Sanctifie, in the notion of religious and holy worship and fear of the Divine Majesty, there is yet another expression sometimes used in Holy Scripture which implieth the self-same thing; that, namely, to worship God with that which we call holy and divine worship, is all one with to agnize his holiness, or to sanctifie his Name. Those speeches, I mean, wherein we are exhorted to worship the Lord, because he is Holy. As Psal. 99. 5. Exalt ye the Lord our God, and worship at his foot-stool; for he is Holy. Again, in the end of the Psalm, Exalt the Lord our God, and worship at his holy hill; for the Lord our God is Holy. The same meaning is yet more emphatically expressed by those that sing the Song of victory over the Beast, Apoc. 15. 3, 4. Great (say they) and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy waies, thou King of Nations. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorifie thy Name? ὅτι μόνος * ΑΓΙΟΣ, (for that I believe is the true reading, not ὅσιος) for thou only art Holy; therefore all the Nations shall come and worship before thee: that is, they shall relinquish their Idols and plurality of Gods, and worship thee as God onely. For this was the Doctrine both of Moses in the Old Testament, and of Christ Jesus the Lamb of God in the New; That one God onely, that made the heaven and the earth, was to be acknowledged and worshipped, and with an incommunicable worship. In respect whereof, as I take it, these Victors are there said to sing the Song of Moses, and the Lamb; that is, a gratulatory Song of the worship of one God, after that his * Ordinances were made manifest. For otherwise the Ditty is borrowed from the 86. Psalm, the 8, 9, and 10. verses, where we reade, Among the gods there is none like unto thee, O Lord, neither are there any works like unto thy works. All Nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord, and shall glorifie thy Name. For thou art great, and dost wondrous works: Thou art God alone; that is, Thou onely art Holy. Compare Jer. 10. ver. 6, 7.

* Δικαιώματα, jura.

I have one thing more to adde before I finish this part of my Discourse, lest I might leave unsatisfied that which may perhaps seem to some to weaken this my explication of the sanctification of God's Name. For the word, to sanctifie, or be sanctified, is sometimes used of God in a more generall sense then that I have hitherto specified, namely, as signifying any way to be glorified, or to glorifie; as when he saith, He will be sanctified in the destruction of his enemies, or in the deliverance of his people, and that before the Heathen, and the like; that is, he would purchase him glory, or be glorified thereby. I answer, It is true, that to be sanctified is in these passages to be glorified, but yet alwayes to be glorified as God, and not otherwise. Namely, when God by the works of his Power, of his Mercy, or Justice extorts from men the confession of his great and holy Godhead, he is then said to sanctifie, or make himself to be sanctified amongst them; that is, to be glorified and honoured by their conviction and acknowledgement of his Power and Godhead. For although men may be also said to glorifie, or purchase honour unto themſelves, when by their noble acts they make their abilities and worth known unto the world: yet, for ſuch reſpect, to be ſaid to be ſanctified, is peculiar unto him alone whoſe Glory is his Holineſs, that is, unto God.

THUS we have learned How the Name or Majeſty of God is to be ſanctified perſonally or in it ſelf; which is the chiefeſt thing we pray for, and ought ſo to be in our endeavour; namely, To worſhip and glorifie him incommunicably, according to his moſt eminent and unparallel'd Holineſs: and ſo, ô Lord, Hallowed be thy Name. But there is another Sanctification or Hallowing of God's Name yet behinde, which muſt be joyned therewith; which is, To ſanctifie him alſo in the things which have his Name upon them, that is, are ſeparate and dedicate to his ſervice, or, in a word, which are His, namely, by a peculiar relation. For otherwiſe it is true, The whole earth is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof, the World and thoſe that dwell therein. But there are ſome things His not as other things are, and ſo as they are no longer Ours; ſuch as according to the ſtyle of Scripture (as I have already noted) are ſaid to be called by his Name, or to have his Name called upon them. Theſe are things ſacred. Therefore I told you before of a twofold Sanctity or Holineſs: the one Originall, Abſolute, and Eſſentiall in God; the other Derived or Relative, in that which is ſet apart to be in a peculiar and appropriate manner His. For whatſoever belongeth unto him in this manner, is divided from other things with preeminence, whether they be Things or Perſons which are ſo ſeparated. For in ſuch ſeparation we ſhewed the nature of Sanctity in generall to conſiſt. Now as the Divine Majeſty it ſelf is ſeparate and holy; ſo know, it is a part of that honour we owe unto his moſt Sacred Name, that the Things whereby and wherewith he is ſerved ſhould not be promiſcuous and common, but appropriate and ſet apart to that ſacred end. It is an honour which in ſome degree of reſemblance we afford unto Kings, Princes, and other perſons of dignitie, (of infinite leſs eminency then God is) to interdict the uſe of that to others which they are wont to uſe; ſometimes the whole kinde, ſometimes the individuall onely. As we know in former times, to weare purple, to ſubſcribe with the Ink called Encauſtum, of a purple colour, and other the like, which the diligent may finde, were appropriate to the uſe of Kings and Emperours onely. In the Book of the Kings we reade of the King's Mule, ſo appropriate to his uſe, as to ride upon him was to be made King, 1 Kings 1. 33, 44. In the Book of Eſther, Chap. 6. 8. of the Horſe that King Ahaſuerus uſed to ride upon, put in the ſame rank with the Crown and royall apparell, which none but the King might weare. And of individuall Utenſils thus appropriated, and as it were dedicated to the alone uſe of perſons of eminency, our owne times want not examples. Whence naturall Inſtinct may ſeem to prompt unto us, that ſuch appropriation is a teſtimony of honour and reſpect. Sure I am, that Almighty God hath revealed it to be a part of that Honour we owe unto him. Thus all the Utenſils of the Tabernacle and Temple were ſacred and ſet apart to that uſe; and not the Utenſils of the Altar onely, but even the Inſtruments of Muſick, which David ordained to praiſe the Lord with in the Temple, were not common, but conſecrated unto God for that end: whence they are called, 1 Chron. 16. 42. כלי שיר האלהים, Inſtrumenta muſica Dei, the muſicall Inſtruments of God, that is, ſacred ones; and 2 Chron. 7. 6. כלי-שיר יהוה, the muſicall Inſtruments of the Lord. Agreeably whereunto thoſe who ſung the fore-alledged ſong of victory over the Beaſt are ſaid to have had in their hands κιθάρας τοῦ Θεοῦ, the harps of God, that is, not prophane or common, but ſacred Harps, the Harps of the Temple; for there they ſung this their Antheme, theme, ſtanding upon the great Laver or Sea of glaſs which was therein.

Nay, our Bleſſed Saviour, Mark 11. 16. would not ſuffer a prophane or common veſſell to be ſo much as carried through his Father's Houſe, accounting it as great a prophanation as to buy and ſell there. And yet was not this abuſe (which is a thing well to be marked) within thoſe Septs of the Temple which the Jews accounted ſacred, but in the outmoſt Court, called Atrium gentium & immundorum, the place whither, together with ſuch as were unclean, the Gentiles and uncircumciſed were admitted to pray; as that of the Prophet cited by our Saviour, rightly rendred, intimates, My houſe ſhall be called a houſe of prayer, to (or for) ALL NATIONS. Conſider Eſay 56. 6, 7. This Court therefore the Jews made no other account of then as of a prophane place: but our Saviour proved by Scripture, that this Gentiles Oratory was alſo part of his Father's houſe, and accordingly not to be prophaned with common uſe. Laſtly, There was never any age of the Chriſtian Church (till of late) wherein it was not commonly believed, that God was to be honoured by ſuch appropriation or conſecration as we ſpeak of; that is, that God's Name was in this manner to be ſanctified. But are there any (will you ſay) now that deny it? Yes, there are ſome in our age ſo far carried away into a contrary extreme to that they flie from, that they hold that no oblation or conſecration of things unto God by the devotion of men in the New Teſtament, whether of Utenſils, Goods, Times, or Places, ought to be eſteemed lawfull; but that all diſtinction between ſacred and prophane in externall things by virtue of ſuch conſecration (excepting onely the Sacraments) is flat ſuperſtition. Yet to him that ſeriouſly conſiders it, it cannot chuſe, methinks, but ſeem ſtrange and abſurd to affirme, (as this aſſertion doth,) that men now in the time of the Goſpel are exempted and freed from agnizing God to be Lord of the creature, by giving ſome part thereof unto him; then which no part of Divine Worſhip is more naturall, and which hath been uſed by mankinde ever ſince the beginning of the world. Yea, in the ſtate of Paradiſe, among all the Trees in the Garden, which God gave man freely to enjoy, one Tree was Noli me tangere, and reſerved to God as Holy, in token he was Lord of the Garden. So that the firſt ſin of Mankinde, for the ſpecies of the fact, was Sacrilege, in prophaning that which God had made holy.

Matth. 6. 9. Luke 11. 2.

They ſay, It is true, that in the Old Teſtament this way of honouring and acknowledging God was warranted by the Divine Law; but in the New we finde no precept given concerning it, nor confirmation of that which was before. Now God is not to be worſhipped with any worſhip but what he hath himſelf preſcribed in his Word. I anſwer, What though there be no particular precept in the New Teſtament for this, no more then for divers other duties which a Chriſtian is bound to? yet if a generall warrant be, the particular needs not. But our Saviour ſaith in his Goſpel, in that Evangelicall Sermon he preached upon the Mount, that he came not to diſſolve the Law and the Prophets, but to fulfill or perfect them: Think not (ſaith he) that I am come to diſſolve the Law and the Prophets, [that is, to take away the obligation of that Rule of the duty of man to God and his neighbour, given firſt by Moſes in the Law, and afterwards repeated and inculcated by the Prophets; for ſo Prophets are here to be * underſtood, and not of predictions] ἀλλὰ πληρῶσαι, but to fulfill them,

* According as in that Matt. 22. 40. On theſe two Commandements [viz. To love God above all, and our neighbour as our ſelves] hang all the Law and the Prophets; and in that Luke 16. 29. They have Moſes and the Prophets.

Matth. 6. 9. Luke 11. 2.

that is, to ſupply, accompliſh, or perfect thoſe Rules and Doctrines of Juſt and Unjuſt contained in them, by a more ample interpretation, and other improvement befitting the ſtate of the Goſpel. For ſurely this muſt be the meaning of this ſpeech of our Saviour, if we be more willing (as we ſhould) to take a ſenſe from Scripture, then to bring one to it. Doth not the whole context following evince it? Indeed the Law, that is, the Legall Covenant or Covenant of works, (as Law is oft taken in the New Teſtament) together with all the Rites depending thereon, is diſſolved by the coming of Chriſt; and a better Covenant with new Rites eſtabliſhed in ſtead thereof: But the Law, that is, the Doctrine and Rule of life, given by God, contradiſtinct from thoſe ordinances which were onely appendages of that Covenant, (though theſe were alſo in ſome ſenſe perfected, by bringing the truth and ſubſtance in ſtead of the figure and ſhadow thereof) is not diſannulled, but confirmed and perfected by him, in ſuch manner as became the condition of the Covenant of the Goſpell. For that this confirmation is not to be reſtrained to the Decalogue onely, is manifeſt, becauſe our Saviour in the following words inſiſts upon other Precepts beſides it. If it be ſaid, they are reducible thereto; this will not ſerve the turn, for ſo are all the reſt of God's Commandements. Unleſs therefore it can be ſhewn, that to honour God by an oblation of his creature is no part of the Law here confirmed by our Saviour, let no man be ſo daringly bold as to exempt himſelf and others from the obligation thereof; unleſs he means to be one of them of whom our Saviour ſpeaks immediately, ſaying, Whoſoever therefore ſhall break one of the leaſt of theſe Commandements, and ſhall teach men ſo to doe, (mark it) he ſhall be called (i. he ſhall be) the leaſt in the Kingdome of heaven. The word is λύσῃ, that is, looſe, or diſ-binde, as he doth both that abrogates, and that obſerves it not; much more he that affirmeth it unlawfull to be obſerved.

Nay, how dare we diſ-bind or looſe our ſelves from the tye of that way of agnizing and honouring God, which the Chriſtian Church from her firſt beginnings durſt not doe? Irenæus, witneſs of that age which next ſucceeded the Apoſtles, is plaine. Lib. 4. c. 34. Offerre oportet Deo (ſaith he) primitias creaturæ ejus; ſicut & Moſes ait, Non apparebis vacuus ante conſpectum Domini Dei tui.——Et non genus oblationum reprobatum eſt: oblationes enim & illic, (ſc. in V. T.) oblationes autem & hîc; ſacrificia in populo, ſacrificia & in Eccleſia: ſed ſpecies immutata eſt tantum; quippe cum jam non à ſervis, ſed à liberis offeratur. Unus enim & idem Dominus; proprium autem character ſervilis oblationis, & proprium liberorum, uti & per oblationes oſtendatur indicium libertatis.——It behoveth us (ſaith he) to offer unto God a preſent of his creature; as alſo Moſes ſaith, Thou ſhalt not appeare before the Lord thy God emptie.——For offerings in the generall are not reprobated: there were offerings there, (viz. in the Old Teſt.) there are alſo offerings here in the Church: but the ſpecification onely is changed; foraſmuch as offerings now are not made by bond, but free-men. For there is one and the ſame Lord ſtill; but there is a proper character of a bond or ſervile offering, and a proper character of free-mens, that ſo even the offerings may ſhew forth the tokens of freedome.——Now where in Scripture he believed this doctrine and practice to be grounded, he lets us know in the 27. chap. of the ſame Book: Et quia Dominus naturalia Legis, per quæ homo juſtificatur, (quæ etiam ante legiſdationem cuſtodiebant qui fide juſtificabantur, & placebant Deo) non diſſolvit, ſed extendit, ſed & implevit, ex ſermonibus ejus oſtenditur. That is, That our Lord diſſolved not, but enlarged and perfected the naturall precepts of the Law, whereby a man is juſt (which alſo before the Law was given they obſerved who were juſtified by faith, and pleaſed God,) is evident by his words. Then he cites ſome of the paſſages of that his Sermon upon the Mount, *Mat.*5.20,&c. And a little after addes, Neceſſe fuit auferre quidem vincula ſervitutis quibus jam homo aſſueverat, & ſine vinculis ſequi Deum; ſuperextendi verò decreta libertatis, & augeri ſubjectionem quæ eſt ad Regem, ut non retrorſus quis renitens indignus appareat ei qui ſe liberavit.——Et propter hoc Dominus, pro eo quod eſt, Non mœchaberis, nec concupiſcere præcepit; & pro eo quod eſt, Non occîdes, neque iraſci quidem; & pro eo quod eſt, Decimare, omnia quæ ſunt pauperibus dividere. That is, It was needfull that thoſe bonds of ſervitude which man had before been inured to ſhould be taken off, that ſo he might without Gyves follow God; but that the laws and ordinances of freedome ſhould be extended, and his ſubjection to the King encreaſed, leſt that drawing backward he might appeare unworthy of him that freed him.——And for this reaſon our Lord, inſtead of, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery, commands not ſo much as to luſt; inſtead of, Thou ſhalt not kill, not ſo much as to be angry; inſtead of, To tithe, to diſtribute all we have to the poor, &c. All which, ſaith he in the ſame place, are not ſolventis Legem, ſed adimplentis, & extendentis & dilatantis, not of one that diſſolves the Law, but fulfils, extends and enlarges it: alluding ſtill to that in our Saviour's Sermon upon the Mount. Matth. 6 9. Luke 11. 2.

pleaſed

Beſides, thoſe who are acquainted with Antiquity can tell, that the Primitive Chriſtians underſtood the holy Euchariſt to be A commemoration of the Sacrifice of Chriſt's death upon the Croſs, in an oblation of Bread and Wine. 'Tis witneſſed by the Fathers of thoſe firſt Ages generally. Whereupon the ſame Irenæus alſo affirmeth, that our Saviour by the inſtitution of the Euchariſt had confirmed Oblations in the New Teſtament: Namely, to thankſgive or bleſs a thing in way to a ſacred uſe, he took to be an offering of it unto God. And was not David's Benediction and thankſgiving at the preparation for the Temple an Offertory? Where note well, That as he, upon that occaſion, bleſſed the Lord, ſaying, Thine, O Lord, is the greatneſs, and the power, and the glory——all that is in heaven and earth is thine, thine is the Kingdome——Both riches and honour come of thee——Ergo, becauſe all things come of thee, of thine owne have we given thee: ſo do Chriſt's redeemed, in their Euangelicall Song, Apoc. 5. aſcribe no leſs unto him, ſaying, v. 12. Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain to receive power, and riches, and wiſdome, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing. Yea, the 24. Elders, which are the Chriſtian Presbytery, expreſſing (ch.4.11.)the very argument and ſumme of that Hymnologie which the Primitive Church uſed at the offering of Bread and Wine for the Euchariſt, worſhip God, ſaying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power: for thou haſt created all things, and for thy pleaſure they are, and were created. 1 Chron. 29. 11,&c.

TAKING therefore for granted that which the Practice of the Church of God in all ages, yea, I think, I may ſay the Conſent of mankinde from the beginning of the world, beareth witneſs to; that among thoſe duties of the Sanctification of God's Name, wherewith his Divine Majeſty is immediately and perſonally glorified, (of which I have before ſpoken) this is one, and a principall one, to agnize and confeſs his peerleſs Soveraignty and dominion over the creature, by yielding him ſome part thereof toward his worſhip and ſervice, of which we renounce the propriety our ſelves; and that accordingly there are both Things and Perſons now in the Goſpel(as well as were before the Law was given) in this manner lawfully and acceptably ſet apart and ſeparated, by the devotion of men, unto the Divine Majeſty, and conſequently relatively Holy(which is nothing elſe but to be God's by a peculiar right:)I ſay, that theſe are likewiſe to be done to according to their degree of ſanctity, in honour of him whoſe they are: not to be worſhipped with divine worſhip, or the worſhip which we give unto God, communicated to them; (farre be it from us to deferre to any creature the Honour due unto the Divine Majeſty, either together with him, or without him;) but yet habenda cum diſcrimine, to be regarded with a worthy and diſcriminative uſance, that is, uſed with a ſelect and differing reſpect from other things: as namely, if Places, not as other places; if Times, not as other times; if Things by way of diſtinction ſo called, not as other things; if Perſons ſet apart unto the ſervice and worſhip of God, neither to be uſed by others, nor they to carry themſelves in their faſhion of life, as other perſons, (for that which in other things ſacred is their uſe, in perſons ſacred is their converſation, demeanour or carriage of themſelves;) But all to be ſanctified with a ſelect, appropriate, or uncommon uſage; that as they are God's by peculiar relation, and have his Name called upon them; ſo to be ſeparate, as far as they are capable, from common uſe, and imployed as inſtruments and circumſtances of his worſhip and ſervice: which is the higheſt and moſt ſingular honour that any creature is capable of. Nay, (as I have ſaid before) even this is to the honour of God, That as himſelf is that ſingular, incommunicable and abſolutely Holy One, and his ſervice and worſhip therefore incommunicable; ſo ſhould that alſo which hath his Name thereon, or is conſecrated to his ſervice, be in ſome proportion incommunicably uſed, and not promiſcuouſly and commonly, as other things are. They are the words of Maimonides the Jew, but ſuch as will not misbecome a Chriſtian to make uſe of, concerning that Law, Levit. 5. 15. If a ſoul commit a treſpaſs, and ſinne through ignorance in the holy things of the Lord; then he ſhall bring unto the Lord for his treſpaſs a Ram, &c. "Behold, ſaith he, how great weight there is in the Law touching ſacri-

"legious tranſgreſſion. And what though they be wood and ſtone, and duſt and "aſhes? when the Name of the Lord of all the world is called upon things, they "are ſanctified (that is, made holy.) And whoſo uſeth them to common uſe, he
"tranſgreſſeth therein; and though he doe it through ignorance, he muſt needs
"bring his atonement. Yea, it is a thing worthy to be taken ſpecial notice of, that that ſo preſumptuous and moſt dreadfully vindicated ſin of Korah, Dathan, Abiram and their company, in offering incenſe unto the Lord, being not called thereunto, did not diſcharge their Cenſers of this diſcriminative reſpect due unto things Sacred. For thus the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, after that fire from heaven had conſumed them for their impiety, Speak unto Eleazar the Son of Aaron the Prieſt, that he take up the Cenſers out of the burning, and ſcatter thou the fire yonder; for they are hallowed: The Cenſers of theſe Sinners againſt their owne ſoules; let them make of them broad plates for a covering of the Altar: for they offered them before the Lord, therefore they are hallowed, or holy.

Matth. 6. 9. Luke 11. 2.

Numb. 16. 37, 38.

Now that by this diſcriminative uſance or ſanctification of Things ſacred the Name of God is honoured and ſanctified, according to the tenour of our petition, is apparent, not onely from Reaſon, which tels us that the honour and reſpect had unto ought that belongs unto another, becauſe it is his, redounds unto the owner and Maſter; but from Scripture, which tels us that by the contrary uſe of them his name is prophaned. Heare himſelf, Lev. 22. 2. Speak unto Aaron (ſaith he) and his ſons, that they ſeparate themſelves from the Holy things of the children of Iſrael, and that they prophane not my Holy Name in the things which they hallow unto me. Alſo in the Chapter next before, v. 6. the Prieſt that ſhould not diſcriminate himſelf according to thoſe ſingular obſervations or differing rules there preſcribed him, is ſaid to prophane the Name of his God. Again, Ezek. 22. 26. when the Prieſts prophaned God's holy things, by putting no difference between between the Holy and Prophane; I (ſaith the Lord) am prophaned amongſt them. Likewiſe chap. 43. 7. Together with other abominations there mentioned, the Lord ſaith, that his Holy Name had been polluted, or prophaned, by the carkaſſes of their Kings, that is, of Manaſſeh and Amon, buried in the King's Garden hard by the walls of the Temple: for ſo by the Hebrews and others that place is underſtood. See 2 Kings 21. 18, 26. By the pollution of the Temple the Lord eſteemed his own Name prophaned. Take in alſo, if you will, that of Malachi chap. 1. where the Lord ſayes of thoſe who deſpiſed and diſhonoured his Table or Altar, by offering thereon for ſacrifice the lame, blinde, and ſick, which the Law had made unclean and polluted, that they had prophaned his Holy Name. But if the Name of God be prophaned by the diſeſteem and miſuſage of the things it is called upon; then ſurely it is ſanctified when the ſame are worthily and diſcriminatively uſed, that is, as becometh the relation they have to him. Matth. 6. 9. Luke 11. 2.

I HAVE already ſpecified the ſeverall Kinds of Sacred things which are thus to be ſanctified: yet leſt ſomething contained under ſome of them might not be taken notice of by ſo generall an intimation, it will not be amiſs a little more fully and particularly to explicate them then I have yet done. Remember therefore that I ranged all Sacred things under four heads. Firſt, of Perſons Sacred; ſuch as were the Prieſts and Levites in the Old Teſtament, and now in the New the Chriſtian Clergy or Clerus, ſo called from the beginning of Chriſtian Antiquity, either becauſe they are the Lord's κλῆρος or Portion, which the Church dedicateth unto him out of her ſelf, (namely, as the Levites were an offering of the Children of Iſrael, which they offered unto him out of their Tribes,) or becauſe their inheritance and livelihood is the Lord's portion. I preferre the firſt; yet either of both will give their Order the title of Holineſs, as doth alſo more eſpecially their deſcent which they derive from the Apoſtles, that is, from thoſe for whom their Lord and Maſter prayed unto his Father, ſaying, Father, ἁγίασον αὐτοὺς ἐν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ σου; [ἐν for εἰς] Sanctifie them unto, or for, thy Truth: thy Word is Truth; that is, Separate them unto the Miniſtery of thy Truth, the word of thy Goſpel, which is the truth and verification of the promiſes of God. It follows, As thou haſt ſent me into the world, ſo have I alſo ſent them into the world, (this is the key which unlocks the meaning of that before and after.) And for them I ſanctifie my ſelf, that they might be ſanctified for thy Truth; that is, And foraſmuch as they cannot be conſecrated to ſuch an Office without ſome ſacrifice to atone and purifie them, therefore for their conſecration to this holy function of miniſtration of the new Covenant, I offer my ſelf a Sacrifice unto thee for them, in lieu of thoſe legall and typicall ones wherewith Aaron and his ſons firſt, and then the whole Tribe of Levi, were conſecrated unto thy ſervice in the old. An Ellipſis of the firſt Subſtantive in Scripture is frequent. So here ἀλήθεια onely is put for διακονία τῆς ἀληθείας, Truth, for the Miniſtery of Truth. John 17. 17. V. 18. V. 19.

Now that the Chriſtian Church (for of the Jewiſh I ſhall need ſay nothing) hath alwayes taken it for granted, that thoſe of her Clergy ought, according to the ſeparation and ſanctity of their Order, to be diſtinguiſhed and differenced from other Chriſtians, both paſſively in their uſance from others, but eſpecially actively, by a reſtrained converſation and peculiarneſs in their manner of life, is manifeſt by her ancient Canons and Diſcipline. Yea, ſo deeply hath it been rooted in the minds of men, that the Order of Church-men binds them to ſome differing kind of converſation and form of life from the Laity; that even thoſe who are not willing to admit of the like diſcrimination due in other things, have ſtill in their opinions ſome relick thereof remaining in this, though perhaps not altogether to be acquitted of that imputation which Tertullian charged upon ſome in his time, to wit, Quum excellimur & inflamur adverſus Clerum, tunc unum omnes ſumus, tunc omnes Sacerdotes; quia Sacerdotes nos Deo & Patri fecit. Quum ad peraquationem Diſciplinæ Sacerdotalis provocamur, deponimus infulas, & impares ſumus. When we vaunt and are puffed up againſt the Clergie, then we are all one, then we are all Prieſts; for he made us Prieſts to God and his Father. But when we are called upon to equall in our lives the example of Prieſtly Diſcipline, then down goe our Mitres, and we are another ſort of men.

De Monogamia cap. 12.

Another ſort of things Sacred which I named, was Sacred Places, to wit, Churches and Oratories, as the Chriſtian name Κυριακὰ implieth them to be, that is, the Lord's. A third, Sacred Times, that is, dedicated and appointed for the ſolemn celebration of the worſhip of God, and Divine duties: ſuch are with us (for thoſe of the Jews concern us not) Κυριακαὶ ἡμέραι, our Lord's dayes, with other our Chriſtian Feſtivals and Holy-dayes. Of the manner of the diſcrimination from common, or ſanctifying both the one and the other, by actions ſome commanded, others interdicted to be done in them, the Canons and Conſtitutions of our Church will both informe and direct us. For holy Times and holy Places are Twins, (Time and Place being, as I may ſo ſpeak, pair-circumſtances of action;) and therefore Lev. 19. 30. and again 26. 2. they are joyned together, tanquam ejuſdem rationis, there being the ſame reaſon of both; Keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my Sanctuary.

The fourth ſort of Sacred things is of ſuch as are neither Perſons, Times, nor Places, but Things in a ſpeciall ſenſe, by way of diſtinction from them. And this ſort containeth under it many particulars, which may be ſpecified after this manner.

1. Sacred Revenues of what kinde ſoever: which in regard of the dedication thereof, as they muſt not be prophaned by ſacrilegious alienation, ſo ought they to be ſanctified by a different uſe and imployment from other Goods; namely ſuch a one as becometh that which is the Lord's, and not man's. For that Primitive Chriſtian Antiquity ſo eſteemed them, appears by their calling them τὰ κυριακὰ, as they did their Place of Worſhip κυριακὸν, and their Holy day κυριακὴ· all of the Lord, as it were Chriſtening the old notion of Sacred by a new name. So Can. Apoſtol. XL. Manifeſta ſint Epiſcopi res propriæ (ſi quidem res habet proprias) & manifeſta ſint τὰ κυριακὰ, i. res Dominicæ——Let it be manifeſt what things are the Biſhop's own, (if he have any things of his own,) and let it be manifeſt what things are the Lord's. Author Conſtitut. Apoſt. Lib. 2. c. 28. al. 24. Epiſcopus ne utatur τοῖς κυριακοῖς, Dominicis rebus, tanquam alienis aut communibus, ſed moderatè——Let not the Biſhop uſe the things that are the Lord's, as if they were another's or as if they were common, but moderately and ſoberly. See alſo Balſamon in Can. 15. Concilii Ancyrani, and the Canon it ſelf.

2. Sacred Utenſils, as the Lord's Table, Veſſels of miniſtration, the Books of God, or Holy Scripture, and the like. Which that the Church, even in her better times, reſpected with an holy and diſcriminative uſance, may be learned from the ſtory of that calumnious crimination deviſed by the Arrian Faction againſt Athanaſius, as a charge of no ſmall impiety, namely, that in his Viſitation of the Tract of Mareotis, Macarius, one of his Preſbyters, by his command or inſtinct, had entered into a Church of the Miletian Schiſmaticks, and there broken the Chalice or Communion-Cup, thrown down the Table, and burnt ſome of the Holy Books. All which argues that, in the generall opinion of Chriſtians of that time, ſuch acts were eſteemed prophane and impious; otherwiſe they could never have hoped (as they did) to have blaſted the reputation of the holy Biſhop by ſuch a ſlander.

Touching

Touching the Books of God, or Holy Scripture, (which I referred to this Title) eſpecially thoſe which are for the publick ſervice of God in the Church, I adde this further; That under that name I would have comprehended the ſenſes, words and phraſes appropriated to the expreſſion of Divine and Sacred things; which a Religious eare cannot endure to heare abuſed with prophane and ſcurrilous application. Matth. 6.9. Luke 11.2.

3. Under this fourth head of Things Sacred I comprehend Sacred Acts; ſuch as are the Acts of God's holy worſhip and adminiſtration of his Sacraments. For albeit theſe Acts are duties of the firſt and perſonall Sanctification of God's Name, whereof the immediate object is God; yet are the Acts themſelves Sacred things, and therefore have ſome ſanctification due to them alſo, as other Sacred things have: of which although it be moſt true that the unfeigned devotion of the Heart (as before him who alone knoweth the Hearts of the children of men) be the main and principall requiſite; yet unleſs, even in the outward performance, they be for the manner and circumſtances diſcriminated from common acts by a ſelect accommodation befitting their holineſs, their ſanctification is defective, and by ſuch defect, if voluntary, God's Name is prophaned, even then when we are worſhipping him. How much more when our carriage therein cometh ſhort even of that wonted reverence wherewith we come before an earthly Potentate? May not God here juſtly uſe the ſame expoſtulation with us, that he did with thoſe in the Prophet Malachi, who preſented themſelves before him with ſuch an offering as was, in regard of the blemiſhes, unworthy of and unbefitting ſo great a Majeſty, and therefore to be accounted rather an affront then an act of honour and worſhip? Te have, ſaith he, deſpiſed and prophaned my Name——Offer it now unto thy Governour; will he be pleaſed with thee, or accept thy perſon?——yet I am a great King, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. And this is the document or leſſon which this place naturally and unavoidably miniſtreth to us; That to come before the Divine Majeſty with leſs reverent and regardfull deportment then we do before earthly Kings and Potentates, is to deſpiſe and prophane his holy Name. And not that, which ſome would ſhelter under this Text, and leane too much upon; namely, That the Acts of God's externall worſhip ought to be wholly conforme to the uſe of the ſemblable actions performed unto men, and not differ from them; and upon this ground charge the Chriſtian Liturgies with abſurdity in their formes of praying and praiſing God with reſponſals, ſinging by turns, and ſpeaking many together. For this principle is directly repugnant to the nature of Sanctification, which conſiſts in diſcrimination and difference. And therefore, though the materiall of our geſtures and other expreſſions, vocall or viſible, be borrowed from the uſe and cuſtome of men; yet for the formality of them, not onely they may, but ought to be differenced from them. Moreover, touching this reproof of the Prophet, take notice that it is grounded upon the Law, Levit. 22. where we are taught, that when that is not obſerved concerning the Rites of God's ſervice which the Sanctity of them requireth, as in other particulars, ſo in this of a not defective or unblemiſhed offering, his Name is thereby prophaned. See verſe 32. with the reſt of the Chapter foregoing it. And if ſo, then by the contrary it is ſanctified. Malach. 1.6,8, 12,14.

Laſtly, Unto this head of Sacred Acts I reduce Oaths and ſacred Covenants, that is, ſuch as are made either with God, or between men, God's Name being called upon; which therefore 1 Sam. 20.8. are ſtyled Covenants of the Lord. For that the obſervance due touching both is a ſanctifying of them, as things upon which the Name of the Lord is called, is apparent; foraſmuch as when they are violated by falſhood they are ſaid to be prophaned, phaned, as Levitic. 19. 12. Pſalm 55. 20. Jerem. 34. 15, 16.

Matth. 6. 9. Luke 11. 2. Thus, together with my Explication of theſe ſeverall ſorts of Sacred Things, I have briefly and in generall pointed at that alſo wherein the proper Sanctification of each conſiſteth: which though farre ſhort of ſuch a tractation as the matter requireth; yet if it may ſerve onely but to give occaſion to others, who are better able, to bend their thoughts upon this Argument (which perhaps the Times call for,) I ſhall fully attain the end I aimed at. For mine owne part, to deſcend to particulars would be a task too high for me, and (as I ſuſpect) not very acceptable. For it is ten to one (if the grounds I have lai'd be true) but that the moſt of us would be found faulty in ſome things, and ſome of us in all. Well, the ſumme of my argumentation hath been this; Is there any thing in the New Teſtament God's by a peculiar right? To ſay there is not, is abſurd, and againſt the perpetuall tradition of Chriſtianity. If there be, then it is holy; if holy, then to be ſanctified; if ſanctified, then to be diſcriminated in the uſance and reſpect thereof from that which is of common condition.

NOW out of this Diſcourſe which I have hitherto made you may ſee and take notice, that (contrary to the vulgar opinion) the Prohibition of Idolatry, and the diſcriminative obſervance of things ſacred, not to prophane them by a promiſcuous and common uſe, are derived both of them from one and the ſame principle, namely, God's Incommunicableneſs, which derives a ſhadow and reſemblance upon the things which have his Name called upon them, to wit, a ſtate of appropriateneſs and ſingularity. Wherefore the Apoſtle, Rom. 2. 22. not without good reaſon, compares together the tranſgreſſions of the one and the other kind, as parallel ſins or ſins of affinity: Thou that hateſt Idols, (ſaith he) doſt thou commit Sacriledge? Where by Sacriledge underſtand not onely the uſurpation of things ſacred, but the violation of that which is ſacred in generall. And it is as if he had ſaid, Thou haſt mended the matter well indeed; for ſtill thou daſheſt againſt the ſame principle. For it is one of the exemplifications of that he ſaith in the beginning of the Chapter: He that judgeth or condemneth another, and doth the ſame or the like himſelf, is inexcuſable. By this it appears how much they are miſtaken who, under pretence of avoiding Idolatry and Superſtition, cannot endure that any diſtinction ſhould be made between things Sacred and Common. Is not this to unhallow God's Name one way, that ſo we might not prophane it another? Farre be it from me to be a patron of Idolatry or Superſtition in the leaſt degree: yet I am afraid leſt we, who have reformed the worſhip of God from that pollution, (and bleſſed be his name therefore,) ἀμετρίᾳ τῆς ἀνθολκῆς, as S. Baſil ſpeaks, that is, by bending the crooked ſtick too much the other way, have run too farre into the contrary extreme, and taken away (ſome of us) all difference in a manner between Sacred and Prophane; and by this our tranſgreſſion in doing God's work made our ſelves lyable to that upbraid of the Apoſtle, Tu qui idola abominaris, ſacrilegium admittis? Thou that abhorreſt Idols, doſt thou commit Sacriledge? that is, prophaneſt thou God's Name by violating that which is ſacred?

Let no man think it ſtrange or incredible that ſuch an enormity ſhould be committed, or an occaſion at leaſt given thereof, in the manage of ſo holy and glorious a work; ſeeing the experience of all ages ſufficiently witneſſeth how prone the nature of man is, in flying one extreme, to run too far towards the other. Why then ſhould we think it unlikely, or rather not think it very likely, that we alſo may have miſcarried in the ſame manner? unleſs we will arrogate unto our ſelves that priviledge of infallibility and freedome from error, which we condemne as intolerable preſumption in our Adverſaries.

Beſides,

Beſides, it is to be taken notice of, becauſe of the prejudicate miſpriſion of many to the contrary, That the meaſure of Truth and Falſhood, Beſt and Worſt, is not the greater or leſſer diſtance from Popery, (foraſmuch as Popery alſo containeth much of Chriſtianity;) nor that which is moſt deſtructive of the Man of Sin, always moſt warrantable and ſafe to be embraced. If it were, there be ſome in the world (whoſe religion we would be loth to admit of) that would be found more orthodox and better reformed Chriſtians then any of us all. Matth. 6.9. Luke 11. 2.

Nay, give me leave, without offence, for the better awakening of ſome out of their deafneſs to whatſoever elſe may be ſaid to this purpoſe, to propound ſuch a Demand as this; Who knoweth whether this tranſgreſſion I ſpeak of be not a main and principall ingredient of that guilt which the Divine Majeſty admoniſheth us to take notice of in this his ſo long and ſo ſevere viſitation of our neighbours and brethren? whether he doth not viſibly, or, if ſome paſſages be conſidered, almoſt vocally, upbraid them, Thou that hateſt Idols, doſt thou commit Sacriledge? I know right well, that raſhly to aſſigne the particular cauſes of God's judgements, without rule or precedent of Scripture, is a ſin of preſumption, and a bold intruſion into God's ſecrets; and therefore I affirme not, but demand onely, whether there be not here ſome cauſe which may miniſter ſuch a ſuſpicion. But whatſoever it be, the compaſſion of their woſull affliction calls upon me rather to pray for them, then to follow this harſh and unpleaſant paſſage any further. Onely thus much, If that which the Apoſtle ſaith in particular of the things which befell the Iſraelites, God's firſt people, in the Wilderneſs, Theſe things happened unto them for enſamples, and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come, if this be to be extended alſo unto thoſe puniſhments and their analogy which befell them afterwards; then may perhaps two things further not unſeaſonably be enquired into. Firſt, For what other ſins it is remembred in Scripture that God gave his people, during that his firſt Covenant, (eſpecially after they came to dwell in their own Land) under the ſword of an externall enemy, or his worſhip thereby at any time to be troden under foot, beſides theſe two, Idolatry, and Prophanation of that which was holy, or Sacriledge. Examples of the firſt who knows not? Of the ſecond, ſee the Story of Achan, Joſh. 7. of Eli's ſons, 1 Sam. 2. the puniſhment of the Sacriledge of the ſeventh or Sabbaticall year, 2 Chron. 36. and the parallel places; for by the Law every ſeventh year, not onely the whole Land, but all ſervants and debts were holy unto the Lord, and therefore to be releaſed, Lev. 25. 2, 4. Deut. 15. Exod. 21. Secondly, What was that Tranſgreſſion, after the return from Babylon, mentioned in that Propheſie of Antiochus Epiphanes, Dan. 8. 12. for which it is there foretold that An hoſt ſhould be given him againſt the daily Sacrifice, and that it ſhould caſt down the truth unto the ground, and practiſe and proſper. Perhaps the Story in the 2, 3, and 4. Chap. of the ſecond Book of Maccabees will tell us. 1 Cor. 10. 11.

To that which is commonly alledged, That ſuch diſtinction and reverent regard of things Sacred as we contend for opens a way for Idolatry, I anſwer, No otherwiſe then the eſchewing of Idolatry may alſo, through the perverſeneſs of men, be made a bridge to prophaneneſs, that is, by accident, not from its own towardneſs, but our diſtemper. Otherwiſe this Diſcrimination or Diſtinction, if we would underſtand or heed the ground thereof, prompts the clean contrary. For we ſhould reaſon thus: If the things which are God's, eo nomine, in that name and becauſe they are His, are therefore to be held ſegregate in their uſe; then ſurely God himſelf, who is the Fountain of Holineſs, ought to have a prerogative of ſegregation in in the moſt eminent and abſolute manner; namely, ſuch an one, as that the worſhip due unto him muſt not be communicated with any thing elſe beſides him. And indeed, unleſs both be done, God's Name is neither fully nor rightly ſanctified.

AND here I ſhould now make an end, but that there is one thing yet behind of principall conſequence, which I have deferred hitherto, becauſe I could not elſewhere bring it in conveniently without ſomewhat diſturbing the coherence of my Diſcourſe. There is an eminent ſpecies or kind of Sanctification which I may ſeem all this while to have neglected, foraſmuch as it ſeemeth not to be comprehended under this notion of diſcretion and ſeparation, wherein I place the nature of Holineſs; and that is Sanctification, or Holineſs of life. To which I anſwer, That all notions of Sanctity and Sanctification in Scripture are derived from diſcretion and ſeparation, and that this now mentioned is likewiſe derived thence. For it is to be reduced to the Sanctification of Perſons Sacred and ſet apart unto God. By which though in the ſtrict and proper ſenſe are intended onely Prieſts and ſuch as miniſter about Holy things; yet in a larger ſenſe, and, as it were, by way of reſemblance, the whole body of the People of God are a Royall Prieſthood and * Holy Nation, which the Almighty hath ſelected unto himſelf out of the reſt of the world, and ſet apart to ſerve him in a peculiar and different manner from the reſt of men: For you have heard it is a requiſite of that which is Holy, to be uſed in a peculiar and ſingular manner, and not as things common. Hence it is, that the obſervation of that peculiar and different form of life which God hath commanded thoſe whom he hath called and ſet apart from the world unto himſelf, in Scripture carries the name of Holineſs or Sanctity, (eſpecially in the New Teſtament) that is, of ſuch as becometh thoſe that are Holy; according to that, Be ye Holy, as I am Holy. And here I might have a large field of diſcourſe, to ſhew how the Name of God is ſanctified by the lives of his Children, when they * conform not themſelves to the faſhions of the world, but, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, are crucified thereto, and keep themſelves unſpotted from the pollutions and vanities thereof.

But this I leave to be ſupplied by your meditations, according to the generall intimation given thereof.

* Hence in the Creed the Church is called Ἡ ἁγία καθολικὴ ἐκκλησία, the Holy Catholick Church.

DISCOURSE

DISCOURSE III.

There associated themselves to Paul and Silas of the worshipping Greeks a great multitude.

PAUL and Silas preaching in the Jewish Synagogue at Thessalonica, and proving out of the Scriptures that Messiah or Christ was to suffer, and to rise again from the dead, and that Jesus was that Christ; it is said, that some of them which heard believed; and that there associated themselves to them a great multitude ΤΩΝ ΣΕΒΟΜΕΝΩΝ Ἑλλήνων of the worshipping Greeks. Of these Σεβόμενοι there is elsewhere mention in the Acts of the Apostles more then once; but what they were our Commentators do not so fully inform us; nor can it be understood without some delibation of Jewish Antiquity. The explication whereof will give some light not to this passage onely, but to the whole Story of the Primitive Conversion of the Gentiles to the Faith, recorded in that Book.

We must know therefore, that of those Gentiles which embraced the worship of the God of Israel, (commonly term'd Proselytes) there were two sorts. One of such as were circumcised, and took upon them the observation of the whole Law of Moses. These were accounted as Jews, (to wit, facti, non nati, made, not born so) bound to the like observances with them, conversed with as freely as if they had been so born; neither might the one eat, drink, or keep company with a Gentile more then the other, lest they became unclean. They worshipped in the same Court of the Temple where the Israelites did, whither others might not come. They were partakers with them in all things, both divine and humane. In a word, they differed nothing from Jews, but onely that they were of Gentile race.

This kind the Jewish Doctors call גרי צדק, Proselytes of Righteousness, or גרי ברית, Proselytes of the Covenant, namely, because they took upon them the signe thereof, Circumcision. In the New Testament they are called simply Proselytes, without addition. Of which Order was Uriah the Hittite, Achior in the Book of Judith, Herod the Idumaan, Onkelos the Chaldee Paraphrast, and many others both before and in our Saviour's time.

But besides these there was a second kind of Gentiles, admitted likewise to the worship of the true God, the God of Israel, and the hope of the life to come; which were not circumcised, nor conformed themselves to the Mosaicall rites and ordinances, but were onely tied to the observation of those Precepts which the Hebrew Doctors call The Precepts of the sons of Noah; namely, such as all the sons of Noah were bound to observe.

These Precepts are in number Seven, recorded in the [a] Talmud, [b] Maimonides and others, under these following titles. First, the precept of עבודה זרה, to renounce Idols and all Idolatrous worship. Secondly, ברכת השם, to worship the true God, the Creator of Heaven and Earth. Thirdly, שפיכות דמים, Blood-shed; to wit, to commit no Murther. Fourthly, גלוי עריות, detectio nuditatum, not to be defiled with Fornication, nication, Inceſt, or other unlawfull conjunction. Fifthly, גול, Rapine, againſt Theft and robbery. Sixthly, דינים, concerning adminiſtration of Juſtice. The ſeventh, אבר מן החי, Membrum de vivo; ſo they call the Precept of not eating the fleſh with the bloud in it, given to Noah when he came out of the Ark; as Maimonides expreſly expounds it, and adds beſides; Whoſoever ſhall take upon him the obſervation of the Seven precepts of the ſons of Noah, he is to be accounted מחסידי אמות העולם one of the pious men of the nations of the world, and ſhall have a portion in the world to come. Note that he ſaith [one of the pious men of the nations of the world, or of the pious Gentiles,] for this kind were ſtill eſteemed Gentiles, and ſo called, becauſe of their uncircumciſion; in reſpect whereof (though no Idolaters) they were, according to the Law, unclean, and ſuch as no Jew might converſe with: wherefore they came not to worſhip into the Sacred Courts of the Temple, whither the Jews and circumciſed Proſelytes came; but onely into the outmoſt Court, called Atrium Gentium & immundorum, the Court of the Gentiles and of the unclean, which, in the ſecond Temple, ſurrounded the ſecond or great Court, whereinto the Iſraelites came, being divided there-from by a low wall of ſtone made battlement-wiſe, not above three Cubits high, called (ſaith Joſephus, from whom I have it) in the Hebrew Dialect Γεῖσος, in the Greek Θρίγκος, that is, Loriea; cloſe by which ſtood certain little pillars, whereon was written in Greek and Latin letters, Μὴ δεῖν ἀλλόφυλον ἐντὸς τοῦ Ἁγίου παρέναι, In atrium ſanctum tranſire alienigenam non debere, That no alien or ſtranger might goe into the inner or holy Court. And this, I make no queſtion, is that which S. Paul, Epheſ. 2. 14. alludeth unto, when he ſaith, that Chriſt had broken down the μεσότοιχον τοῦ φραγμοῦ, the partition-wall, (namely, that Lorica which ſeparated the Court of the Gentiles from that of the Circumciſion) and ſo laying both Courts into one, hath made the Jews and Gentiles Intercommoners; whereby thoſe that were ſometime far off, were now made nigh, and as near as the other, unto the Throne of God. But in Solomon's Temple this Court of the Gentiles ſeems not to have been, but in the ſecond Temple onely; the Gentiles formerly worſhipping without at the door, and not coming within the Septs of the Temple at all.

Acts 10. 28. & ch. 11. 3.

De Bello Judaico lib. 6. ca. 6. Græc. 18.

This ſecond kind of Proſelytes the Talmudiſts call גרי שער, Proſelytes of the Gate, or גרים תושבים, Proſelyte-inhabitants; namely, becauſe they were under the ſame condition with thoſe Gentile-ſtrangers which lived as inquilini in the Land of Iſrael. For all Gentiles dwelling within the Gates of Iſrael, whether they were as ſervants, taken in warre, or otherwiſe, were bound to renounce their falſe Gods, and to worſhip the God of Iſrael: but not to be circumciſed, unleſs they would; nor farther bound to keep the Law of Moſes then was contained in thoſe Precepts of the ſons of Noah. Theſe are thoſe mentioned (as often elſewhere in the Law, ſo) in the fourth Commandement by the name of the Stranger within thy gates: whereby it might ſeem probable, that the obſervation of the Sabbath-day (ſo farre as concerneth one day in ſeven) was included in ſome one or other of thoſe Precepts of the ſons of Noah, namely, in that of worſhipping for their God the Creator of Heaven and earth, and no other; whereof this conſecration of a ſeventh day, after ſix dayes labour, was a badge or livery; according to that, The Sabbath is a ſigne between me and you, that I Jehovah am your God: becauſe in ſix daies the Lord made heaven and earth, the ſea, and all that in them is; and reſted the ſeventh day. See Exod. 31. 16, 17. Ezek. 20. 20. But this obiter and by the way. From the example of theſe Inquilini, all other Gentiles, whereſoever living, admitted to the worſhip of the God of Iſrael upon the ſame termes, were called גרי שער, or גרים תושבים, Proſelyti Portæ, or Proſelyti inquilini; of which ſort there were many in all Cities and places of the Gentiles where the Jews had Synagogues, and uſed to frequent the Synagogues with them, (though in a diſtinct place) to hear the Law and the Prophets read and expounded. Acts 17. 4.

But in the New Teſtament they are found called by another name, to wit of Σεβόμενοι or Worſhippers, ſo often mentioned (though not obſerved) in the Acts of the Apoſtles. For firſt, theſe are thoſe meant in that of Acts 17. 4. alledged at my entrance into this Diſcourſe, where it is ſaid that τῶν Σεβομένων Ἑλλήνων πολὺ πλῆθος, a great number of the worſhipping Greeks believed, and adhered to Paul and Silas; which the Vulgar rightly tranſlateth, de colentibus Gentilibus multitudo magna, a great multitude of the worſhipping Gentiles, taking the name of Greeks here, as elſewhere in the New Teſtament, to be put for Gentiles in generall. And this place will admit of no evaſion: For that they were Gentiles, the name of Ἑλλήνων betokeneth expreſly, being given them by way of diſtinction from the Jews then and there preſent alſo.

That they were worſhippers of the true God, the God of Iſrael; their coming into the Synagogue, their name Σεβόμενοι, their capableneſs of S. Paul's diſcourſe, (which was to prove out of the Scriptures, that Meſſiah was to ſuffer death, and that Jeſus was he) argue ſufficiently, yea abundantly. For who could have profited by ſuch a Sermon as this, but thoſe who already had knowledge of the true God, and believed the reward of the life to come? This place therefore may ſerve as a Key to all the reſt of the places in this Book where theſe Σεβόμενοι are mentioned.

To that in the ſame Chapter, ver. 17. where it is ſaid that S. Paul in the Synagogue at Athens διελέγετο τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις καὶ τοῖς Σεβομένοις, diſcourſed to the Jews and the worſhippers.

To that in Acts 16. 14. where S. Paul preaching the Goſpel in the Jews Proſeucha or Oratory at Philippi, a woman named Lydia, a ſeller of purple, of the City Thyatira, Σεβομένη τὸν Θεὸν, a Proſelyte-worſhipper, was converted unto the faith, and baptized with all her houſhold.

In like manner, to that in Acts 18. 4. when S. Paul is ſaid at Corinth to have reaſon'd in the Synagogue every Sabbath, and to have perſwaded the Jews and the Greeks: For theſe Greeks were Σεβόμενοι, what did they in the Synagogue elſe ſo regularly every Sabbath-day? True, the name of Σεβόμενοι is here wanting; but it preſently follows, when the Jews oppoſed Paul, (there teſtifying Jeſus to be the Chriſt) and blaſphemed, that he ſhook his rayment, and ſaid, Your bloud be on your own heads: from henceforth I will goe to the Gentiles. And he departed thence, ſaith the Text, and entred into the houſe of one Juſtus, Σεβομένου τὸν Θεὸν, a Gentile-worſhipper, whoſe houſe joyned hard to the Synagogue.

But above all, that narration Acts 13. deſerves our conſideration and attention. There verſ. 43. it is ſaid, that S. Paul having preached the Goſpel in the Jews Synagogue at Antioch of Piſidia, there followed him πολλοὶ τῶν Ἰουδαίων καὶ τῶν Σεβομένων Προσηλύτων, many of the Jews and worſhipping Proſelytes: and v. 42. that when the Jews were gone out of the Synagogue, the Gentiles, that is, the Σεβόμενοι, beſought the Apoſtles that the ſame things might be preached unto them the next Sabbath; which being accordingly done, and many of the other Gentiles (who were not Σεβόμενοι,) upon the fame of ſuch a new Doctrine unwontedly aſſembling with them, it is ſaid, that the Jews when they ſaw the multitude, were filled with envy, contradicted and blaſphemed, v. 45. that then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and ſaid, It was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould firſt be

Acts 13.46. ſpoken unto you; but ſeeing you put it from you, and judge your ſelves unworthy of eternall life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles: for ſo hath the Lord commanded us, ſaying, I have ſet thee to be a light to the Gentiles, &c. v. 46, 47. that when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of God; καὶ ἐπίστευσαν ὅσοι ἦσαν τεταγμένοι εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, and there believed as many as were τεταγμένοι to eternall life, v. 48. that is, the Σεβόμενοι, who were already in procinctu and in the poſture to eternall Life. The Jews blaſphemed; the reſt of the Gentiles were uncapable; onely the Σεβόμενοι, (who were already Candidati vitæ æternæ, Candidates of eternall life, having been inſtructed in the worſhip of the true God, and hoping for the reward to come) they believed. Yet perhaps not all of them neither, (the words require not * ſo much, but that none but ſuch:) And it follows, v. 50. that the Jews found out ſome Σεβομένας γυναῖκας καὶ εὐσχήμονας, worſhipping women, ſuch as were of faſhion, (who yet perhaps had not been at the Apoſtles Sermon,) by whoſe means they ſtirred up the chief men in the City, and raiſed perſecution againſt Paul and Barnabas. This I take to be the true and genuine meaning of this paſſage, upon which no charge of Pelagianiſme can be faſtened; nor needeth it any ſpinous Criticiſms for its explication. The uſe of the word τάττω, de acie & collocatione militum, de aſcriptione in ordinem vel claſſem, as it relates to an army, the diſpoſing or marſhalling of ſouldiers, the being liſted or enrolled into ſuch a ranke or company, (in which ſignification the Paſſive is moſt frequent) is well enough known. According to which ſenſe and notion, the words might be rendred, Crediderunt quotquot nomina ſua dederant vitæ æternæ; or, [per Ellipſin Participii] qui de agmine & claſſe fuerant ſperantium, vel contendentium ad vitam æternam; otherwiſe, qui in procinctu ſtabant ad vitam æternam; or moſt fitly, (ſenſu modò militari, non deſtinationis) quotquot ordinati fuerant ad vitam æternam. The ſenſe whereof is in brief this; There believed as many as had liſted themſelves, or were of the company of thoſe that did hope or earneſtly labour for eternall life; or, were in a ready poſture and diſpoſed to or for eternall life. But of this let the learned judge, and ſuch as are free from faction and partiality.

* For ὅσοι is often put for οἱ, and the ſenſe then but indefinite.

Ἐμαυτὸν τάττω εἰς τὸν βουλόμενος, Xenophon. In eam claſſem me aſcribo. Plutarch. in Solone, Αὐτὸν ἐν τῇ πρὸς πενήτων μερίδι τάττει, In pauperum ordinem ſe redigit, inter pauperes ſe numerat. Τοσοῦτος εἰς μάχιμος τάττεται, tot ſunt milites, unde & τεταγμένοι appellantur: τοσοῦτος εἰς ἄνδρας, eſt in numerum virorum aſcribi. Compare the 1 Cor. 16. 15. εἰς διακονίαν τοῖς ἁγίοις ἔταξαν ἑαυτούς· They ſet themſelves to the Miniſtery of the Saints.

Beſides, it will not be impertinent, as a Mantiſſa to theſe quotations for Σεβόμενοι, to note That the ſame perſons are otherwiſe (namely, twice) characteriſed by the title of Φοβούμενοι τὸν Θεὸν, thoſe that fear God. As firſt of Cornelius, concerning whom there is no queſtion but he was a Gentile-worſhipper, the Text ſaith, * There was a man in Cæſarea, called Cornelius, a Centurion of the Italian Band, Εὐσεβὴς καὶ φοβούμενος τὸν Θεὸν, i.e. Θεὸν Ἰσραὴλ, a pious man, and one that feared God, (i.) the God of Iſrael. Again in that 13. of the Acts (whereon we have dwelt ſo long) S. Paul ſpeaking at firſt to that mixt multitude aſſembled in the Synagogue, conſiſting partly of Jews and partly ἐκ τῶν Σεβομένων προσηλύτων of the worſhipping Proſelytes, he compellates them both diſtinctly in theſe words, v. 16. Ἄνδρες Ἰσραηλῖται, καὶ οἱ φοβούμενοι τὸν Θεὸν, ἀκούσατε, Ye men of Iſrael, and ye that fear God, give audience. By the former meaning the Jews; by the latter, the Σεβόμενοι or Gentile-worſhippers.

* Acts 10. 1, 2.

Of this kinde of Converts (as I have in part already intimated) were in our Saviour and his Apoſtles time very many in every Nation and Citie where the Jews lived and had their Synagogues; yea, farre more in number then of that other ſort of Proſelytes which were circumciſed. The reaſon being, becauſe it was the more eaſie condition, and not ſo prejudiciall to their outward liberty as the other; inaſmuch as they might notwithſtanding ſtill live and converſe with their friends, kindred and Countrymen, beare office and enjoy honours among them, (as Naaman the Syrian Syrian did, who was of this kinde,) which the other might not doe.

These impediments being out of the way, The Hope of the Resurrection from the dead, and the Reward of the life to come, were powerfull Inducements to draw many to the worship of that God, who onely among the Gods * at that time promised this reward to such as worshipped and served him, and no other: which was the bait wherewith the Jews allured them; and that to their own no small emolument, this kinde, as it were to recompence their want of Circumcision, seeming to have been very bountifull towards their Nation; as may be gathered both from Cornelius, who is said to have given much almes to the people, (namely of the Jews;) and from the Story of that Centurion, Luke 7. 4, 5. whom the Jews besought our Saviour so instantly for, alledging, that he loved their Nation, and had built them a Synagogue, and therefore deserved that favour they sued for on his behalf.

Acts 17. 4.

* For since then, the Devil hath been God's Ape.

Acts 10. 2.

NOW, out of this Discourse, besides the clearing of the passages afore-mentioned, we may learn two things: One, How so many of the Gentiles, by the preaching of the Apostles, could so soon and so readily be converted to the faith of Christ. It was because they had already embraced the Principles which led thereunto. For we are to take notice, that the foundation of the Church among the Gentiles was laid of these Σεβόμενοι, who had already embraced the worship of the true God, had knowledge of his Promises, believed, and hoped for the life to come. For was not S. Peter (to whom the Instructions for this Embassage were first given) sent first to Cornelius a Centurion, a Gentile of this order? wherefore? but that this might be for a pattern for them, with what kinde of men they were first to deale in this great work; namely, with such as were idonei Auditores Euangelii, fit and capable hearers of the Gospel; those which were puri puti Gentiles, mere Gentiles, being not so, as who knew nothing of the Principles requisite thereto. This will appear, if we consider well the tenour of the Apostles Sermons to such Gentiles as they converted; which we shall observe to presuppose that they already knew the true God, and the promise of eternal life to such as worshipped him; and so had no more to learn but the way and means now revealed by God for attainment thereof, which was by the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The other thing we may learn is, What was the true state of the Question which the Apostles met to decide in the Council at Jerusalem; Whether the Gentiles which believed in Christ were to be circumcised or not, and so bound to keep the whole Law. It was this, To resolve that, whereas all such as embraced the worship of the God of Israel conformed to one of these two kinds of Proselytes, to whether of them the Gentiles which had or should receive the Gospel of Christ were to conform themselves; whether to the Proselytes of the Covenant, or to the Σεβόμενοι and Proselytes of the Gate. S. Peter standing up in the Council, demonstrates it to be the will of God that they should conform to the latter, and not to the first; and that upon this ground, Because that Cornelius, the first Christianed Gentile, unto whom himself was sent by Divine Commission, was no circumcised Proselyte, but a Proselyte of the Gate or a Σεβόμενος a worshipper onely; yet received he no Commission to circumcise him: yea, the Holy Ghost, as he was Preaching, fell upon him and his housholds being uncircumcised, as it did upon those of the Circumcision; whereby it appeared, that God would have the rest of the Gentiles which embraced the Faith to be after the pattern of Cornelius, and to have no more imposed upon them then He had. And Acts 17. 4. accordingly the Council defines, That no other burden ſhould be laid upon them, but onely to abſtain from pollutions of Idols, from bloud, from things ſtrangled, and from fornication, and (as ſome copies * have it) ὅσα ἂν μὴ θέλωσιν ἑαυτοῖς γενέσθαι, ἑτέροις μὴ ποιεῖν, not to doe that to others, which they would not ſhould be done to themſelves; that is, they ſhould as Σεβόμενοι obſerve the Precepts of the ſons of Noah, which here [by a σχῆμα ὀνδείας] are briefly reckoned up.

DISCOURSE IV.

2 PETER 2. 4.

For if God ſpared not the Angels which ſinned, [ἀλλὰ σειραῖς ζόφου ταρταρώσας, παρέδωκεν εἰς κρίσιν τετηρημένους]——but caſt them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkneſs, to be reſerved unto Judgement, &c. ſo we tranſlate it:

To which of S. Peter anſwers that of S. Jude, (as almoſt that whole Epiſtle doth to this) verſe 6. And the Angels which kept not their firſt eſtate, [or principality,] but left their own habitation, he hath reſerved in everlaſting chains under darkneſs unto the Judgement of the great Day.

THeſe two places are brought to prove, That the Devils, or Evil ſpirits, are now in Hell, before the Day of Judgement: Which I cannot ſee how it can poſſibly ſtand with the reſt of the Scripture, which teſtifies every where that they have yet their manſion in the Aire, and here about the Earth, where they tempt, ſeduce, and doe all the miſchief they can to mankinde: hence their Chieftain Satan is ſtyled, The Prince of the power of the Aire, that is, of the Aiery Dominion or Princedome. Therefore hither they were with their Prince exiled from Heaven, and no further, nor ſhall be untill the Day of Judgement. And of this I ſhall ſpeak at this time: Firſt, to clear theſe Texts, which ſeem to make for the contrary; ſecondly, to enquire what was the opinion of the Ancients about this point.

Ephes. 2. 2.

As for this place of S. Peter, and that imitation thereof in the Epiſtle of S. Jude, I can believe the tranſlation of neither. Piſcator (not conceiving how that of S. Jude (eſpecially becauſe of the word [ἀϊδίοις] eternall) could be reconciled with other Scripture, and Experience, which ſhews us that the Evil ſpirits are not yet bound with eternall chains, having ſo much liberty of gadding about) ſupplies in the Text vinciendos, as if there were an Ellipſis, reading it thus, Judicio magni illius Dici vinculis aternis (vinciendos) reſervâſſe; He hath reſerved them (to be bound) in eternall chains at the Judgement of the great Day.

In

In that of S. Peter, if I underſtand him, he takes σειραῖς ζόφου not for Dativus inſtrumenti, with chains of darkneſs, but as Dativus acquiſitionis, for chains of darkneſs; and conſtrues it with παρέδωκεν, as if it were, He delivered them for chians of darkneſs; namely, ſuppoſing a trajection of the words. 2 Pet. 2. 4.

But for my part I take both σειραῖς ζόφου in S. Peter, and δεσμοῖς ἀϊδίοις in S. Jude, to be neither of them Dativus Inſtrumenti, but both Acquiſitionis or Finis, and governed the one of τετηρημένους, and the other of τετήρηκεν: that is, σειραῖς to be put for εἰς σειρὰς, and δεσμοῖς for εἰς δεσμούς.——As in the Hebrew, the prepoſition ל ſerves both for the prepoſition εἰς and for the Dative Caſe, whoſe propriety the ſtyle of the Greek Teſtament every where imitates, and why not in this? σειραῖς therefore and δεσμοῖς are here למוסרים, not במוסרים; for (not, with) chains. Nay, among the Greek Grammarians we find obſerved, that the Dative Caſe is ſometimes put for the Accuſative with the prepoſition εἰς: as in this example, ὁρμᾷ διὰ τῷ ἀέρῳ τῇ πόλει, that is, εἰς πόλιν: much more in the ſacred Greek, which ſo frequently imitates the Hebrew Conſtruction.

Next for the word ταρταρώσας in S. Peter, it is ἅπαξ λεγόμενον, but once uſed, and ſo not bound by any uſe or example to the ſignification which we here give it, to wit, caſting down to hell. I would therefore render it, ad pœnas tartareas damnavit, he hath adjudged them to helliſh torments, to wit, thus, Angelos qui peccaverunt, cum ad tartari ſupplicium damnaſſet, catenis caliginis ſervandos tradidit ad Diem Judicii; Having adjudged the Angels that ſinned to hell-torments, he delivered them to be kept or reſerved (in the Aiery region, as in a priſon) for chains of darkneſs at the Day of Judgement. For κρίσις Judgement here is ἡμέρα κρίσεως the Day of Judgement, as S. Jude hath it: So alſo Matth. 12. 42. The Queen of the South ſhall riſe in Judgement with this Generation, that is, in, or at the Day of Judgement. Or if I would render it, not caſting down to hell, but caſting down to hell-ward, ſo the meaning in both places will be, That the wicked Angels were caſt down from heaven to this lower Orb, there to be reſerved for chains of darkneſs at the Day of Judgement: Which ſenſe the ninth verſe in this Chapter of Peter plainly intimates by way of reddition; Novit Dominus pios in tentatione eripere, The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly in temptation, as he did Noah and Lot; Injuſtos verò in diem Judicii cruciandos ſervare, But to reſerve the unjuſt unto the Day of Judgement to be puniſhed, as he doth the wicked Angels. Moreover verſe 17. where the ſame helliſh-darkneſs is ſpoken of, it is ſaid to be reſerved for the wicked, οἷς ὁ ζόφος τοῦ σκότους εἰς αἰῶνα τετήρηται, to whom that hideous darkneſs is reſerved for ever; whence it is probable that S. Peter, in the foregoing paſſage of Angels, referred alſo thoſe chains of darkneſs to reſerving, and not to delivering; that is, not that the evil Angels were now already delivered to chains of darkneſs, but reſerved for them at the Day of Judgement.

AND thus much for clearing of the words of theſe two parallel Texts. Now what hath been anciently the current opinion about this point? And firſt, for the Jews, it is apparent to have been a Tradition of theirs, That all the ſpace between the Earth and the Firmament is full of Troops of Evil ſpirits and their Chieftains having their reſidence in the Aire; which I make no doubt but S. Paul had reſpect to, when he calls Satan the Prince of the power of the Aire. Druſius quotes two Authors, one the Book called מנחה חדשה, another one of the Commentators upon Pirke Aboth, who ſpeak in this manner; Debet homo ſcire & intelligere, à terra uſque ad firmamentum omnia plena eſſe turmis & præfectis, &c. A man is to know and underſtand, that all from Earth to the Firmament is full (and no place is Ephes. 2. 2.

empty) of Troops of Spirits together with their Chieftains and ſuch as are Præpoſiti; all which have their reſidence and fly up and down in the Aire: ſome of them incite to peace, others to warre; ſome to goodneſs and life, others to wickedneſs and death. By Præpoſiti, I ſuppoſe, he means ſuch among the Spirits as are ſet as Wardens over ſeverall charges, for the managing of the affairs of mankind ſubject to their power. This was the Opinion of the Jews, which they ſeem to have learned by Tradition from their ancient Prophets; for in the Old Teſtament we find no ſuch thing written, and yet we ſee S. Paul ſeems to approve it.

Now for the Doctors of the Chriſtian Church, S. Hierome upon the ſixth of the Epheſians tels us, that their Opinion was the ſame; *'Tis the opinion of all the Doctors, (ſaith he) that the Devils have their Manſions and reſidence in the ſpace between the heaven and the earth.* And that the Fathers of the firſt 300 or 400 years nor did, nor could, hold the evil Angels to have been caſt into Hell upon their ſin, is evident by a ſingular Tenet of theirs. For Juſtin Martyr, one of the moſt ancient, hath this ſaying; That *Satan before the coming of Chriſt never durſt blaſpheme God, and that (ſaith he) becauſe till then he knew not he ſhould be damned.* The ſame is approved by Irenæus in his fifth Book and twenty ſixth Chapter; Præclarè (ſaith he) dixit Juſtinus, quòd ante Domini adventum Satanas nunquam auſus eſt blaſphemare Deum, quippe nondum ſciens ſuam damnationem: Poſt adventum autem Domini, ex ſermonibus Chriſti & Apoſtolorum ejus diſcens manifeſtè quoniam ignis æternus ei præparatus ſit;——per hujuſmodi homines blaſphemat eum Deum qui judicium importat. It was a worthy ſaying of Juſtin, That Satan before the coming of our Lord never durſt blaſpheme God, as not till then knowing he ſhould be damned: But after the coming of our Lord, he clearly underſtanding by the Diſcourſes of Chriſt and his Apoſtles that everlaſting fire was prepared for him——by theſe men (Irenæus means thoſe Hereticks who blaſphemed the God of the Law) he blaſphemes that God who brings that puniſhment upon them. Euſebius 4. Hiſt. Cap. 17. cites the ſame out of both, with approbation: So doth Oecumenius upon the laſt Chap. of the firſt of S. Peter. Epiphanius againſt Hereſie 39. gives the ſame as his owne aſſertion, almoſt in the ſame words with Juſtin and Irenæus, though not naming them. Οὐδαμῶ πρὸ τῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ παρουσίας ἐτόλμησεν εἰς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ δεσπότην φθέγξασθαι βλάσφημόν τινα λόγον, &c. Before the coming of Chriſt the Devil did not dare to ſpeak a blaſphemous word againſt his Lord; for being in expectation of the coming of Chriſt, he imagined he ſhould obtain ſome mercy. I will not enquire how true this Tenet of theirs is, but onely gather this, that they could not think the Devils were caſt into Hell before the coming of Chriſt: For then how could they but have known they ſhould be damned, if the execution had already been done upon them?

Saint Auguſtine, as may ſeem, intending to reconcile theſe places of Peter and Jude with the reſt of Scripture, is alledged to affirm, that the Devils ſuffering ſome Hell-like torment in their Aiery Manſion, the Aire may in that reſpect in an improper ſenſe be called Hell. But that the Devils were locally or actually in Hell, or ſhould be, before the Day of Judgement, it is plain he held not; and that will appear by theſe two paſſages in his Book de Civitate Dei. Firſt, where he ſaith, Dæmones in hoc quidem aëre habitant, quia de Cæli ſuperioris ſublimitate dejecti, merito irregreſſibilis tranſgreſſionis, in hoc ſibi congruo velut carcere prædamnati ſunt. Lib. 8. Cap. 22. The Devils indeed have their habitation in this Aire; for they being caſt out of the higheſt heaven, through the due deſert of their unrecoverable apoſtaſy and tranſgreſſion, are fore-condemned and adjudged to be kept in this Aiery region, as in a priſon priſon very congruous and fit for ſuch tranſgreſſours. The other (in the ſame Book, ch. 23.) where he expounds that of the Devils * Matth. 8. Art thou come to torment us before the time? that is, (ſaith he) ante tempus Judicii, quo aeternâ damnatione puniendi ſunt, cum omnibus etiam hominibus qui eorum ſocietate detinentur; before the time of the laſt Judgement, when they are to be eternally puniſhed, together with all thoſe men who are entangled in their ſociety.

2 Pet. 2. 4.

* Videatur etiam Origen. in Numer. c. 22. Non vult Deus Dæmonum genus ante tempus damnare; Sciunt enim & ipſi Dæmones, quia tempus eorum præſens hoc ſeculum continet: Propterea & Dominum rogabant, ut non torqueret eos ante tempus, &c. Et ob hoc neque Diabolum removit à principatu hujus ſeculi, &c.

The Divines of latter times, the School-men and others, to reconcile the ſuppoſed Contrariety in Scripture, divide the matter; holding ſome Devils to be in the Aire, (as Saint Paul and the Hiſtory of Scripture tell us,) ſome to be already in Hell, (as they thought Saint Peter and Saint Jude affirm'd:) which opinion ſeems to be occaſioned by a Quære of Saint Hierom's upon the ſixth of the Epheſians, though he ſpeaks but obſcurely, and defines nothing. But what ground of Scripture or Reaſon can be given, why all the Devils which ſinned ſhould not be in the ſame Condition? eſpecially that Satan, the worſt and chief of them, ſhould not be in the worſt eſtate, but enjoy the greateſt liberty? It follows therefore that theſe places of S. Peter and S. Jude are to be conſtrued according to the ſenſe I have given of them; namely, That the evil Spirits which ſinned, being adjudged to helliſh torments, were caſt out of Heaven into this lower Region, there to be reſerved, as in a priſon, for chains of darkneſs at the Day of Judgement.

DISCOURSE V.

1 Cor. 4. 1.

Let a man ſo account of us as of the Miniſters (ὑπηρέτας) of Chriſt, and Stewards of the Myſteries of God.

A Man would think at firſt ſight, that this Scripture did exceedingly warrant our uſe of the word Miniſter in ſtead of that of Prieſt, and leave no plea for them who had rather ſpeak otherwiſe. Howſoever I intend at this time to ſhew the contrary, and (even out of this Text,) that we have very much ſwerved herein from the Apoſtles language, and abuſe that word to ſuch a ſenſe as they never intended, nor is any where found in Scripture. I favour neither ſuperſtition nor ſuperſtitious men; yet truth is truth, and needfull to be known; eſpecially when ignorance thereof breedeth errour and uncharitableneſs. My Diſcourſe therefore ſhall be of the uſe of the words Prieſt and Miniſter; wherein ſhall appear how truly we are all Miniſters in our Apoſtle's ſenſe, and yet how abuſively and improperly ſo called in the ordinary and prevailing uſe of that word.

I will begin thus. All Eccleſiaſticall perſons or Clergy-men may be conſidered in a Threefold relation: Firſt, to God; ſecondly, to the People; thirdly, one toward another. In reſpect to God, all are Miniſters of what degree ſoever they be; becauſe they doe what they doe by commiſſion from him, either more or leſs immediate: for a Miniſter is he qui operam

1 Cor. 4. 1. operam ſuam alicui, ut ſuperiori aut domino, præbet, who ſerves another as his Superiour or Maſter. In reſpect of the People all are Biſhops, that is, Inſpectores or Overſeers, as having charge to look unto them. But laſtly, compared one to another, he whom we uſually call Biſhop is onely Overſeer of the reſt, Inſpector totius Cleri. Deacons are onely Miniſters to the reſt, Miniſtri Presbyterorum & Epiſcoporum: and in that reſpect have their name Διάκονοι.

There are properly but two Orders Eccleſiaſticall, Presbyteri & Diaconi: the one the Maſters, Prieſts; the other the Miniſters, Deacons. The reſt are but diverſe degrees of theſe Two. As Biſhops are a degree of Preſbyters of divine ordinance, to be as Heads, Chiefs, and Preſidents of their Brethren: So Sub-deacons, Lectors, and indeed any other kind of Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters, whether in Eccleſia or Foro Eccleſiaſtico (I mean whether they attend divine Duties in the Church, or Juriſdiction in Eccleſiaſticall Courts) are all a kind of Deacons, being to the Presbyters, either ſingle or Epiſcopall, as the Levites were to the Sacerdotes in the Old Teſtament, namely, to miniſter unto or for them. Thus when we ſay, Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons, we name but two Orders, yet three Degrees.

Theſe grounds being forelaid and underſtood,

1. I affirm, firſt, That Presbyters are by us unnaturally and improperly called Miniſters either of the Church, or of ſuch or ſuch a Pariſh: we ſhould call them, as my Text doth, Miniſters of God, or Miniſters of Chriſt, not Miniſters of men.

Firſt, Becauſe they are only God's Miniſters, who ſends them; but the People's Magiſtri, to teach, inſtruct and overſee them. Were it not abſurd to call the Shepheard the Sheeps Miniſter? If he be their Miniſter, they ſurely are his Maſters. And ſo indeed the People by occaſion of this miſappellation think they are ours, and uſe us accordingly. Indeed we are called Miniſters, but never their Miniſters, but, as you ſee here, God's Miniſters, Chriſt's Miniſters, who imployeth us to diſpenſe his Myſteries unto his Church.

There are Three words in the New Teſtament tranſlated Miniſter, Διάκονος, Ὑπηρέτης, Λειτουργός: the firſt is moſt frequent; but not one of them is given to the Apoſtles, in the whole Scripture, with relation to the Church or People: you ſhall never find them called Διάκονοι, or Ὑπηρέται τῆς Ἐκκλησίας, Miniſters of the Church, which is ſo frequent with us, but Miniſters of God, 2 Cor. 6. 4. 1 Theſſ. 3. 2. Miniſters of Chriſt, as in my Text, and 2 Cor. 11. 23. Col. 1. 7. Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Tim. 4. 6. or Miniſters of that which they miniſter, as Miniſters of the New Teſtament, 2 Cor. 3. 6. Miniſters of the Goſpel, Epheſ. 3. 7. Coloſſ. 1. 23. But not Miniſters of them to whoſe behoof they miniſter. Yet might this ſpeech, Miniſter of the Church, if rightly conſtrued, be admitted; namely, if it be ſpoken by an Ellipſis, for Miniſter of God for and over the Church: ſo the Apoſtle Coloſſ. 1. 7. A faithfull Miniſter of Chriſt for you, that is, Chriſt's Miniſter, not theirs; yet not for Chriſt, but for them. But thoſe who uſe this ſpeech commonly mean otherwiſe.

Secondly, Angels are called miniſtring ſpirits, but not our Miniſters, but God's Miniſters to us-ward, or for our behalf: So Miniſters of the Goſpel, not the People's or Congregation's Miniſters, but God's Miniſters for their behoof.

Thirdly, This ſpeech [Miniſter of the Church, or, of this or that Church] is ſo much the more incommodious, becauſe it hath begotten (as incommodious and unapt ſpeeches do) an erroneous conceit, not onely among the vulgar, vulgar, but ſome of better underſtanding, namely, That a Miniſter is not lawfully called, unleſs he be choſen by the People, becauſe he is their Miniſter, and ſo to be deputed by them. And indeed if he be their Miniſter in proper relation, they are his Maſters, and ſo it is good reaſon they ſhould appoint him, as Maſters do thoſe who are to ſerve them: But if in proper relation they are God's Miniſters, and not theirs, (though for them) then God is to appoint them, or ſuch as he hath put in place to doe it. It is an erroneous conceit that ſome maintain, That the power of Sacred Order, and of the Keyes is given by God immediately to the body of the Congregation; and that they depute him who is their Miniſter, to execute the power which is originally in them: That power is conferred by God immediately to thoſe who are Biſhops and Paſtors, and by and through them belongs to the whole body, and no otherwiſe. Sed tantum potuit incommodi ſermonis uſus. 1 Cor. 4. 1.

Some perhaps will object againſt my whole Aſſertion that of S. Paul, 2 Cor. 4. 5. We preach not our ſelves, but Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, (to wit, to be the Lord) and our ſelves your ſervants for Jeſus ſake: If the Apoſtles were the Churches Servants, why not their Miniſters? I anſwer, the Apoſtle ſayes not they were the Corinthians ſervants, but that he had made himſelf ſo, in his Preaching to them. So he ſayes expreſly 1 Cor. 9. 19. For though I be free from all men, yet I have made my ſelf a ſervant to all, that I might gain the more. Yet he confeſſes the Corinthians began to vilifie him for this condeſcent, 2 Cor. 11. 7. Have I committed an offence in abaſing my ſelf that you might be exalted, becauſe I have preached unto you the Goſpel of God freely? This was that wherein he carried himſelf toward the Corinthians as a Servant, but to other Churches he did not ſo. It would be a ſtrange aſſertion to ſay the Apoſtle were the Corinthians Servant in a proper relation: we know he ſayes, Gal. 1. 10. If I pleaſed men, I ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt; and Rom. 6. 16. Know ye not that to whom ye yield your ſelves ſervants to obey, his ſervants ye are to whom ye obey?

2. I come now to a ſecond Aſſertion, which is, That howſoever any Eccleſiaſticall perſon may be rightly called a Miniſter, (ſo it be in a proper relation to God-ward,) yet the word Miniſter is again moſt unfitly uſed by us for a name of diſtinction of one Eccleſiaſticall Order from another: as when we call thoſe which are Presbyters, Miniſters, by way of diſtinction from Deacons; for ſo we ſpeak Miniſters and Deacons, in ſtead of Prieſts and Deacons.

The reaſon we thus ſpeak is to avoid the name Prieſt, which we conceive to ſignifie Sacerdos, that is, one that ſacrificeth, ſuch as were thoſe in the Law: But our Curates of holy things in the Goſpel are not to offer Sacrifice, and therefore ought not to be called Sacerdotes, and conſequently not Prieſts. This is the reaſon. But if it be well examined, Prieſt is the Engliſh of Presbyter, and not of Sacerdos; there being in our Tongue no word in uſe for Sacerdos: Prieſt, which we uſe for both, being improperly uſed for a Sacrificer, but naturally expreſſing a Presbyter, the name whereby the Apoſtles call both themſelves and thoſe which ſucceed them in their charge. For who can deny that our word Prieſt is corrupted of Presbyter? Our Anceſtors the Saxons firſt uſed Preoſter, whence by a farther contraction came Preſte and Prieſt. The high and low Dutch have Prieſter, the French Preſtre, the Italian Prete; but the Spaniard onely ſpeaks full Presbytero. But, to come more near the point, our men in uſing the word Miniſter for a diſtinctive name in ſtead of Prieſt, incurre four Soleciſms; I mean, when we uſe the word Miniſter (not at large, but) for a diſtinction from the Order of Deacons, ſaying Miniſters and Deacons.

First,

1 Cor. 4. 1.

First, We run into that we sought to avoid. For we would avoid to call the Presbyters of the Gospel by the name of the Sacrificers of the Law; and yet run into it in such sort, that we style those of the Gospel by the Legall name, and those of the Law by the Evangelicall name. The Hebrew calls them of the Law Cohanim, of כהן, which properly signifies to minister, and thence comes the Greek word κονίω, and Ἀκονίω· but we call those of the Gospel Cohanim, when we style them Ministers. On the contrary, the Apostles style those of the Gospel Presbyteri; but we transferre that name to those of the Law, when we call them Priests. This is counterchange;

Incidit in Scyllam qui vult vitare Charybdim.

Secondly, It is a confusion or Tautology, to say Ministers and Deacons, that is, Ministers and Ministers; for Deacon [Διάκονος] is, in Greek, a Minister; the one is Minister in Latine, the other in Greek: as if one should say, Homo and Ἄνθρωπος, or Diluvium and Cataclysmus, and think so to distinguish things of severall natures or conditions.

Thirdly, We impose upon that Order a name of a direct contrary notion to what the Apostles gave them: The Apostles gave them a name of Eldership and Superiority in calling them Presbyteri; we of Inferiority and Subordination in calling them Ministri. The Jews had no name more honourable then that of Elders, πρεσβύτεροι, for so they called their Magistrates: so we read of Elders of the people, and Elders of the Priests and Levites, meaning the chief in both sorts. This honourable name the Apostles gave as a name of distinction to the Evangelicall Pastors; whereby they dignified them above those of the Law, whose name in the Hebrew (as I said before) is but a denomination of Ministry: And we have rejected the name of Dignity, of Fathership, of Eldership; and assumed in stead thereof a name of under-service, of subjection, of Ministery, to distinguish our Order by: I say, to distinguish our Order; for in a generall sense and with reference to God, we are all his Ministers; and it is an honour unto us so to be, more then to be other mens Masters, as our Apostle in my Text intimates.

Fourthly, In the Reformed Churches beyond the Seas there is a worse Solecisme by reason of this misapplied speech. They have a kind of Officers who are the Pastors assistants in Discipline, much like to our Churchwardens, these they call Elders, we style them Lay-Elders: These are but a kind of Deacons at the most, and of a new erection too, say our Churchmen; and yet these are dignified by the name of Elders and Presbyters, who are indeed but Deacons or Ministers; and the Pastor himself is called a Minister, who in the Apostles style is the onely Presbyter or Elder. For so they speak, The Minister and his Presbyters or Elders.

To conclude, it had been to be wished that those whom the terme of Priest displeased, as that which gave occasion by the long abuse thereof to fancy a Sacrifice, had rather restored the Apostolicall name of Presbyter in the full sound, which would have been as soon and as easily learned and understood as Minister, and was no way subject to that supposed inconvenience. But the mis-application of the word Presbyter in some Churches to an Order the Apostles called not by that name, deprived those thereof to whom it was properly due. Howsoever when they call us Ministers, let them account of us as the Ministers of Christ, and not of men: not as deputed by the Congregation to execute a power originally in them, but as Stewards of the Mysteries of God.

DISCOURSE

DISCOURSE VI.

S. JOHN 10. 20.

He hath a Devil, and is mad.

IT is a matter of greater moment then perhaps every man thinks of, under what notions Things are conceived, and from what property or Character the Names we call them by are derived. For hereby not ſeldome it comes to paſs, that the ſame things, preſented to us under different notions, and names derived therefrom, are not taken to be the ſame they are: Even as he that meets a man well known unto him, in an exotick diſguiſe or antick habit, takes him to be ſome other, though he knew him never ſo well before. For example; a man would wonder that a Comet, (as we call it) being ſo remarkable and principall a work of the Divine power, and which draws the eyes of all men with admiration towards it, ſhould no where be found mentioned in the Old Teſtament: neither there where the works of God are ſo often recounted to magnifie him, (whenas Hail, Snow, Rain and Ice, works of farre leſs admiration, are not pretermitted;) neither by way of alluſion and figured expreſſion, in the Prophets predictions of great calamities and changes, whereof they were taken to be preſages; eſpecially when we ſee them borrow ſo many other alluſions both from heaven and earth to paint their deſcriptions with. Should a man therefore think there never appeared any of them in thoſe times or to thoſe Countreys? It is incredible: Or that the Jews were ſo dull and heedleſs as not to obſerve them? That is not like neither. What ſhould we ſay then? Surely, they conceived of them under ſome other notions then we do, and accordingly expreſſed them ſome other way. As what if by a Pillar of fire, ſuch a one perhaps as went before the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs? Or by a Pillar of fire and ſmoke? as in that of Joel 2. 30. I will ſhew wonders in the heavens, and in the earth, Bloud and Fire and Pillars of Smoke: Or by the name of an Angel of the Lord, (whereby no doubt they are guided?) according as it is ſaid of that Pillar of Fire which went before the Iſraelites, that the Angel of the Lord, when they were to paſs the Red Sea, came and ſtood between them and the Ægyptians, when that Pillar did ſo. And who knows whether that in the 104. Pſalm v. 4. may not have ſome meaning this way? He maketh his Angels Spirits (or winds,) and his Miniſters a Flame of fire, to wit, becauſe they are wont to appear in both. It comes in in the Pſalm, among other Works of God, in a fit place for ſuch a ſenſe, both in regard of what goes before and follows after. Theſe, I ſay, or ſome of theſe may be deſcriptions of thoſe we call Comets; which becauſe they are diſguiſed under another notion, and not denominated from Stella or Coma, hence we know them not.

Now to come toward my Text; a like inſtance to this I take to be that of the Dæmoniacks ſo often mentioned in the Goſpel. For I make no queſtion but that now and then the ſame befals other men whereof I have experience my ſelf, to wit, to marvel how theſe Dæmoniacks ſhould ſo abound in and about that Nation, which was the People of God;

John 10,20. (whereas in other Nations and their writings we hear of no ſuch;) and that too, as it ſhould ſeem, about the time of our Saviour's being on earth onely, becauſe in the time before we finde no mention of them in Scripture. The wonder is yet the greater, becauſe it ſeems notwithſtanding all this, by the Story of the Goſpel, not to have been accounted then by the people of the Jews any ſtrange or extraordinary thing, but as a matter uſuall; nor beſides is taken notice of by any forein Story.

To meet with all theſe difficulties, (which I ſee not how otherwiſe can be eaſily ſatisfied) I am perſwaded (till I ſhall hear better reaſon to the contrary,) that theſe Dæmoniacks were no other then ſuch as we call Madmen and Lunaticks, at leaſt that we comprehend them under thoſe names; and that therefore they both ſtill are, and in all times and places have been, much more frequent then we imagine. The cauſe of which our miſtake is that diſguiſe of another name and notion then we conceive them by; which makes us take them to be diverſe which are the ſame.

That you may rightly underſtand this my Aſſertion (before I acquaint you with the Reaſons which induce me thereunto) you muſt know, that the Maſters of Phyſick tell us of two kinds of Deliration or alienation of the Underſtanding. One ex vi morbi, that, namely, which is from or with a Fever, called Delirium or Phrenitis (the latter being a higher degree then the former:) Another kind ſine Febre, when a man, having no other diſeaſe, is craſed and diſturbed in his wits.

And this they ſay is either ſimple dotage, proceeding from ſome weakneſs of the Brain or Intellective faculty; or Melancholia and Mania, which they deſcribe and diſtinguiſh thus: Both of them to be when the Underſtanding is ſo diſturbed, that men imagine, ſpeak, and doe things which are moſt abſurd and contrary to all reaſon, ſenſe, and uſe of men: but their difference to be in this, that Melancholia is attended with fear, ſadneſs, ſilence, retiredneſs, and the like ſymptoms; Mania with rage, raving and fury, and actions ſutable; which is moſt properly ſtyled Madneſs. Now when I ſay that thoſe Dæmoniacks in the Goſpel were ſuch as we call Madmen, underſtand me to mean not of Deliration ex vi morbi, or of ſimple dotage, but of thoſe two laſt kinds, Melancholici and Maniaci; whereunto adde morbus Comitialis or falling ſickneſs, and whatſoever is properly called Lunacy.

Such as theſe, I ſay, the Jews believed (and ſo may we) to be troubled and acted with evil Spirits, as it is ſaid of Saul's Melancholy, that an evil Spirit from the Lord troubled him; and therefore, paſſing by all other Cauſes or Symptoms, they thought fit to give them their Name from this, calling them בעלי שדים or Δαιμονιζόμενοι. An occaſion of the more frequent uſe of which expreſſion in our Saviour's time and the ages immediatly before him then formerly had been, may ſeem to have been given by the Sect of the Sadducees, which, after the time of Hyrcanus, had much prevailed, and affirmed (as S. Luke tells us) that there was no reſurrection, neither Angel, nor Spirit. Acts 23. 8. To affront and cry down whoſe errour, it is like enough the Phariſees, and the reſt of the right-believing Jews who followed them, affected to draw their expreſſions (whereſoever they could) from Angels and Spirits; as preſently they did, in the * Acts, when S. Paul awakened their faction in the Council, ſaying, I am a Phariſee, and the ſon of a Phariſee, &c. We find no evil, ſay they, in this man; but if a Spirit or an Angel hath ſpoken unto him, let us not fight againſt God. * Ch. 23. 6. 9.

Having thus ſufficiently ſtated and explicated my Aſſertion; now you ſhall hear what grounds I have for the ſame. Firſt, therefore, I prove it out of the Goſpel it ſelf, and that in the firſt place from this Scripture which which I have choſen for my Text, Δαιμόνιον ἔχει, καὶ μαίνεται, He hath a Devil, and is mad. Where I ſuppoſe the latter words to be an explication of the former. Secondly, I prove it out of Matt. 17. 14, 15. where it is ſaid, There came to our Saviour a certain man kneeling down to him, and ſaying, Lord, have mercy on my ſonne, ὅτι σεληνιάζεται, becauſe he is Lunatick and ſore vexed: for oft-times he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water. That this Lunatick was a Dæmoniack, it is evident both out of the 18. verſe of this Chapter, where it is ſaid, Our Saviour rebuked the Devil, and he departed out of him, and the child was cured from that very houre: as alſo out of the 9. of the Goſpel of S. Luke, v. 39. where it is ſaid of the ſelf-ſame perſon, Lo, a ſpirit taketh him, and he ſuddenly cryeth out, and it teareth him that he foameth again, and bruiſing him, hardly departeth from him. By comparing of theſe places, you may gather what kind of men they were which the Scripture calls Δαιμονιζόμενοι, Dæmoniacks. John 10. 20.

Now I come to other Teſtimonies. And firſt, take notice that the Gentiles alſo had the like apprehenſion of their Mad-men, whence they called them Larvati and Cerriti: where Larvati is as much as Larvis, id eſt, Dæmonibus, acti: ſo Feſtus, Larvati, ſaith he, furioſi & mente moti, quaſi Larvis exterriti. And for Cerriti, they were ſo called, quaſi Cereriti, hoc eſt, à Cerere percuſſi. And therefore you may remember that when Menæchmus in Plautus feigns himſelf mad, and talks accordingly; the Phyſician who was ſent for to cure him asks the old man who came to fetch him, whether he were Larvatus or Cerritus. If the Gentiles thought thus of their Mad-men, ſhould we think it ſtrange the Jews ſhould? I could tell you here, that the Turks conceit of their Mad-men is not unlike this; but that they ſuppoſe the Spirit that works in them to be a good rather then an evil one. But I let this paſs.

My next Teſtimony ſhall be out of Juſtin Martyr, who in his ſecond Apology ad Antoninum, to prove (at leaſt to a Gentile) that the Souls of men have exiſtence and ſenſe after death, brings for an Argument their Necromancy and their callings up the ſpirits of the deceaſed, together with other the like, and in the laſt place this of Dæmoniacks; where by his deſcription of them, we may eaſily gather what kind of people they were which were ſo taken to be. They alſo (ſaith he) which are ſeiſed upon by the Spirits of the deceaſed (for ſuch were theſe Dæmonia taken to be) and are caſt and tumbled upon the ground, οὓς δαιμονολήπτους καὶ μαινομένους καλοῦσι πάντες, which all call Dæmoniacks and Mad-men. Δαιμονόληπτοι therefore and μαινόμενοι were all one, as men then conceived. Note here, that theſe Δαιμόνια were taken to be the Souls of men deceaſed, and that not among the Gentiles onely, but (as may ſeem) among the Jews alſo. For Joſephus in his ſeventh Book De Bello Judaico, Chap. 25. mentioning theſe Δαιμονιζόμενοι upon occaſion of a certain Herb ſuppoſed to be good for them, ſaith expreſly by way of Parentheſis, ταῦτα δὲ (ſcil. Δαιμόνια) πονηρῶν ἐστιν ἀνθρώπων πνεύματα τοῖς ζῶσιν εἰσδυόμενα, theſe Dæmonia are the Spirits or Souls of the worſt ſort of men deceaſed, which are gotten into the bodies of the living. I tell not this with a meaning to avouch it for true; but onely that you might underſtand how Juſtin Martyr's argument proceeds, to prove that Souls have exiſtence after Death, from the Dæmoniacks.

My laſt proof is taken from thoſe Energumeni (which are all one with Δαιμονιζόμενοι) ſo often mentioned in the Church-Liturgies, in the ancient Canons, and in other Eccleſiaſticall writings, many Ages after our Saviour's being on earth; and that, not as any rare and unaccuſtomed thing, but as ordinary and uſuall. They were wont to ſend them out of the Church when the Liturgie began; as they did the Pœnitentes, Auditores, and Catechumeni, which might not be partakers of the Holy Myſteries. If thoſe were not ſuch as we now-a-days conceive of no otherwiſe then as Mad-men, ſurely the world muſt be ſuppoſed to be very well rid of Devils over it hath been; which for my part I believe not. Nay, that theſe Ἐνεργέμενοι poſſeſſed with the Devil, or Δαιμονιζόμενοι Dæmoniacks, were ſuch as I ſpeak of, Balſamon and Zonaras both in their Scholia upon the Canons of the Church will, I think, inform us: For, to reconcile two Canons concerning theſe Energumeni or poſſeſſed, which ſeem contradictory; * one (called of the Apoſtles) in theſe words, Ἐάν τις δαίμονα ἔχῃ, μὴ χειροτονείσθω κληρικὸς, ἀλλὰ μηδὲ τοῖς πιστοῖς συνευχέσθω, If any hath a Devil, or is mad, let him not be made a Clergy-man, nor let him be admitted to pray with the faithfull; another of Timotheus ſometime Patriarch of Alexandria, ſpeaking thus, Ἐὰν πιστὸς δαιμονίζηται, ὀφείλει μεταλαμβάνειν τῶν ἁγίων μυστηρίων, If any of the faithfull be a Dæmoniack, he ought to partake of the holy Myſteries: To reconcile theſe, I ſay, they affirm the former (which admits them not,) to be meant [a] περὶ τοῦ διηνεκῶς or [b] δι' ὅλου μαινομένου, of him that is continually and always mad, namely, [c] ἵνα μὴ φαῦλά τινα ἢ ἄσεμνα διαπραττόμενος, &c. leſt one ſo affected ſhould, either by ſome indecent actions and foul miſcarriages of his own, or by his dæmoniacall clamours, diſturb the people of God and the Church-ſervice; but that of Timotheus, that admits them, to be underſtood περὶ τοῦ ἐκ διαλείμματος μαινομένου, of him that is mad but by fits, and hath his Lucida intervalla. And thus I have acquainted you with what I have obſerved to confirm me in this opinion, and make no doubt but there are more paſſages yet to be found this way then I have met with.

DISCOURSE VII.

PROVERBS 21. 16.

The man that wandreth out of the way of underſtanding, ſhall remain in the Congregation of the Dead, בקהל רפאים, in cœtu Gigantum.

IT is a queſtion ſometimes moved amongſt Divines, and worth reſolving, How and by what name the place and condition of the damned (which in the Goſpel is called Gehenna) was termed or expreſſed in the Old Teſtament before the Captivity of Babylon, and whilſt the firſt Temple ſtood. For preſently after the Return the afore-mentioned name Gehenna began to be frequented: as appears both by the ſecond of Eſdras, the Chaldee Paraphraſt, and other Jewiſh writings, where that name is often found; as alſo by the Goſpel, where our Saviour uſeth it as then vulgarly known amongſt the Jews. But it is as certain that before the Captivity or ſecond Temple (for ſo the Jews call the time of their ſtate after their return) this name was not in uſe: both becauſe it is no where to be found in the Canonicall Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, which were all written within that time; and eſpecially, becauſe the ground and occaſion thereof was not till about that time in being, which was the pollution of the valley of the ſons of Hinnom, or Tophet, by King Joſiah, and the dreadfull execution of divine vengeance in that Place: Hence it became to poſterity to be a Name of execration, and applied to ſignifie the Place of eternall puniſhment.

For this valley of Hinnom (Gehinnom, or, as afterward they pronounced it, Gehenna) was a valley near Jeruſalem, in a place whereof called Tophet the Children of Iſrael committed that abominable Idolatry, in making their Children to paſs through the fire to Moloch, that is, burnt them to the Devil. For an eternall deteſtation whereof King Joſiah polluted it, and made it a place execrable, ordaining it to be the place whether dead Carkaſſes, Garbage, and other unclean things ſhould be caſt out: for conſuming whereof, to prevent annoiance, a continuall fire was there burning. Yea, not man only, but the Lord himſelf as it were conſecrated this place to be a place of execration, by making it the field of his vengeance both before and after. For firſt, this was the place where the Angel of the Lord deſtroied the hoſt of Sennacherib King of Aſſyria, and where one hundred and eighty thouſand of their Carkaſſes were burnt, according to that, Eſay 30. 31. Through the voice of the Lord ſhall the Aſſyrian be beaten down. V. 33. For Tophet (this was a place, I told you, in the valley of Hinnom) is ordained of old; yea for the King it is prepared: he hath made it deep and large, the pile thereof is fire and much wood, the breath of the Lord like a ſtream of brimſtone doth kindle it. This was alſo the place where the Idolatrous Jews were ſlain and maſſacred by the Babylonian armies when their City was taken, and their Carkaſſes left, for want of room for buriall, for meat to the fowls of heaven and beaſts of the field; according to the word of the Lord by the Prophet Jeremy, in his ſeventh and nineteenth Chapters, The Children of Judah have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the ſon of Hinnom, to burn their ſons and daughters in the fire, Jer. 7. 31, 32, 33. and ch. 19. v. 4, 5, 6.

Prov. 21.16. fire, which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart. Therefore behold, the daies come, ſaith the Lord, that it ſhall be no more called Tophet, nor the valley of the ſon of Hinnom, but the valley of ſlaughter: For they ſhall bury in Tophet till there be no place. And the carkaſſes of this people ſhall be meat for the fowls of heaven and the beaſts of the field, and none ſhall fray them away.

Hence, as I ſaid, this place being ſo many waies execrable for what had been done therein, eſpecially having been as it were the gate to eternall deſtruction, by ſo remarkable judgements and vengeance of God there executed for ſin, it came to be tranſlated to ſignifie the place of the damned, as the moſt accurſed, execrable, and abominable place of all places; the inviſible valley of Hinnom. For ſuch was the property of the Jewiſh Language, to give denominations unto things unſeen from ſuch analogicall and borrowed expreſſions of things viſible. By all which it is apparent that this notion of that name took its beginning after the Captivity, and was not in uſe before.

Still therefore we are left to ſeek, by what other name and under what other notion this place of the damned was expreſſed before the word Gehenna or Gehinnom came to be uſed. I anſwer, out of my Text, it ſeems to have been called Domus or Cœtus Gigantum. Vir qui erraverit à via intelligentiæ, in Cœtu Gigantum commorabitur, The man that wandreth out of the way of underſtanding, ſhall remain in the congregation of the Giants; in the Hebrew בקהל רפאים in Cœtu Rephaim, which word [Rephaim] properly ſignifies Giants, and to that ſenſe is alwaies rendred by the Seventy, γίγαντες, γιγενεῖς, πιπῶνες, or ἀσεβεῖς: though we and the later Interpreters, both in this and ſome other places, take it for manes or mortui, the Souls of the deceaſed: but the ancient, I think, deſerve the more credit, eſpecially it being confeſſed that the word elſewhere ſo ſignifies. In Cœtu Gigantum therefore, that is, of thoſe Giants and Rebels againſt God of whom we read Gen. 6. thoſe mighty men and men of renown of the old World, whoſe wickedneſs was ſo great in the earth, that it repented and grieved God he had made man; and to take vengeance upon whom he brought the generall Deluge upon the earth, and deſtroyed both man and beaſt from the face thereof. Vir qui erraverit à via Doctrinæ, The man that wandreth out of the way of underſtanding, ſhall goe and keep them company; that is, goe to that accurſed place and condition which they are in.

1. That this conſtruction of Cœtus Rephaim is not improbable, may appear, Firſt, by the gloſs of Rabbi Solomon upon this Text, In Cœtu Rephaim, that is, ſaith he, בעדת גהנים, In cœtu Gehennæ. This notion therefore is not altogether new.

2. Secondly, It is ſtrengthened by comparing with it other places of Scripture where the like expreſſion is uſed; as twice more in this Book of the Proverbs. Firſt, Chap. 2. 18. where we read according to the Vulgar, Domus mulieris alienæ inclinata eſt ad mortem, & ad inferos ſemitæ ipſius, The houſe of the ſtrange woman is inclined unto death, and her paths unto Hell. Here for ad inferos, unto Hell, the Hebrew hath אל רפאים, to the Giants; and the Seventy render it with an Exegeſis, ἔθετο παρὰ τῷ ᾅδῃ μετὰ τῶν γιγάντων τὰς ἄξονας αὐτῆς, She hath put, or ſet, her paths in Hades, or Hell, with the Giants. Again, Chap. 9. 17, 18. Aquæ furtivæ dulciores ſunt, & panis abſconditus ſuavior: Et ignoravit quòd ibi ſint Gigantes, & in profundis Inferni conviva ejus: Stollen waters are ſweeter, and hidden bread is more pleaſant: But he knoweth not (namely, he that goes in to a Strange woman) that the Giants are there, and that her gueſts are in the depths of Hell. Here in ſome Editions of the Vulgar are added theſe words; Qui enim applicabitur cabitur illi, deſcendet ad inferos; & qui abſceſſerit ab illa, ſalvabitur: For he that is joyned to her, ſhall goe down to Hell; but he that departs from her, ſhall be ſaved. An Argument how this place hath been underſtood; for the meaning of both theſe places ſeems to be no other, but, that the ſtrange woman will bring them who frequent her to hell, to keep the Apoſtate Giants company. Prov. 21.16.

There is another place in the Hagiographa where theſe Rephaim are mentioned, to wit, Job 26. 5, 6. which though of a more ambiguous ſenſe and ſcope, yet as it is tranſlated by the vulgar Latin, and well enough to agree with the Hebrew, ſeems to be no other then a deſcription of Hell, with the former. Gigantes, ſaith he, gemunt ſub aquis, & qui habitant cum eis: Nudus eſt infernus coram illo (id eſt, Deo) & nullum eſt operimentum perditioni. The meaning hereof ſeems to be this; The place where the old Giants mourn or wail under the waters, and their fellow-inhabitants, the reſt of the damned with them, even Infernus, and the place of Perdition it ſelf, is naked and open to the eyes of God, from whom nothing is hid. Which is agreeable to that, Proverbs 15. 11. Hell and Deſtruction are before the Lord: how much more then the hearts of the children of men? In this place the Jews take the word Abaddon, which we render Deſtruction, for Gehenna; that is, Elliptically, for Beth Abaddon, the Houſe of Deſtruction. And why then ſhould not the ſame word be ſo taken in that place of Job; and Nullum eſt operimentum perditioni, There is no covering for Deſtruction, be as much as, Nullum eſt operimentum loco perditionis, or Gehennæ, There is no covering for the Houſe or Place of Deſtruction, or for Hell?

Compare with theſe places in the Hagiographa two in the Prophets: One in the 14. of Eſay v. 9, 10. where by way of a Poeticall or Propheticall hypotypoſis of the deſtruction or fall of Babylon, the King thereof is brought in coming to the Rephaims or Giants in the other world. Hell (ſaith the Text) from beneath is moved for thee, to meet thee at thy coming: it ſtirreth up the Rephaims for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth. And they ſhall ſay unto thee, Art thou alſo become weak as we? art thou become like unto us?

The other is the 32. of Ezekiel, concerning the fall of Egypt, where their ſlain are beſtowed in like manner in the nethermoſt parts of the earth, with the Gibborim; which ſignifies not onely mighty men, but Giants, and ſo is rendred in this place by the Seventy. And thus much from compariſon of places of Scripture.

A third Argument to make this notion probable which I have repreſented is this; Becauſe all the expreſſions almoſt in Scripture whereby this place of eternall puniſhment is repreſented, relate and allude to ſome places or Stories remarkable for God's exemplary vengeance executed upon ſinners. As that of Gehenna to the notorious Judgements of God in the valley of the ſons of Hinnom, for Idolatry and Blaſphemy: that of the Lake of fire and brimſtone, ſo often mentioned in the Apocalyps, to the Lake Aſphaltites, the laſting monument of thoſe ſhowrs of fire and brimſtone from heaven, wherewith Sodome and Gomorrah with the reſt of the Cities of the Plain periſhed for their abominable Luſts. Our Saviour's expreſſion in his ſentence of condemnation, [Go ye curſed into everlaſting fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels] ſeems to relate to the puniſhment of the Apoſtate-Angels, who for their rebellion were delivered unto chains of darkneſs againſt that great day.

And was not the deſtruction of the old world by the generall Deluge of water as famous as any of theſe? yea, not to be parallel'd by any but that ſecond Deluge of fire at the laſt Judgement? How improbable is it then,

Prov. 21. 16. that this ſhould not lend a denomination to the place or ſtate of eternall puniſhment as well as the reſt?

Nay, which is more, S. Peter in his ſecond Epiſtle and ſecond Chapter recites theſe laſt three together, as if they had been intended as Patterns of the eternall Judgement and puniſhment of ſinfull men. V. 4. For (ſaith he) if God ſpared not the Angels that ſinned, but caſt them down to Hell, and delivered them to chains of darkneſs, to be reſerved unto judgement; 5. And ſpared not the old world, but ſaved Noah the eighth perſon, a Preacher of righteouſneſs, bringing in the Floud upon the world of the * ungodly, (that is, of the Rephaim, for ſo the Seventy ſometimes turn it;) 6. And turning the Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into aſhes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an Enſample or Pattern (mark it well) μελλόντων ἀσεβεῖν, (i.e.) τὸ κολάσεως πῦρ μελλόντων ἀσεβεῖν, of the puniſhment of ſuch as ſhould after live ungodly; (Hence, as I told you, was the Lake Aſphaltites, or the Lake of fire and brimſtone, borrowed by S. John for a denomination of Hell) 7. And he delivered juſt Lot, vexed with the filthy converſation of the wicked: (If God did this) 9. He knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reſerve the unjuſt unto the day of Judgement, to be puniſhed. Ye ſee the application or reddition; and accordingly how prone the deſtruction of the world of the Rephaim or ungodly by the Deluge is to give denomination to the puniſhment of Hell, as well as the other two.

* ἀσεβῶν.

And now, I ſuppoſe, you look for my Application and putting of the whole Text together; which I ſhall diſpatch quickly, but wiſh it may be laid to heart often. He that goeth aſtray from the way of underſtanding, (that is, He that wandereth from the Law and Diſcipline of God: for that indeed is the true Wiſdome, Timor Domini principium ſapientiæ, The fear of God is the prime Wiſdome, (that's the meaning) or, to ſpeak after our Academicall notion, the chief Philoſophy; whence, through all this Book of the Proverbs, the wicked man, who hath no skill in this Divine Philoſophy or Diſcipline of God, goeth for a Fool, and ſo is called) muſt one day goe even to his Fellow-giants; who, as Baruch ſayes in his third Chapter, v. 28. were deſtroyed becauſe they had no wiſdome, and periſhed through their own fooliſhneſs. Vir qui erraverit à via Doctrinæ, in Cœtu Gigantum commorabitur. Are there then any of theſe Fools amongſt us, who profeſs the ſtudy of wiſdome, but who ſhake off the yoke of Diſcipline, giving themſelves to debauched courſes, and neglecting the fear of the Lord? Here they may ſee whither they muſt one day goe; even to thoſe Rephaims of the old World, whoſe true ſons they are, that is, unto the place of everlaſting puniſhment: From which God deliver us.

DISCOURSE

DISCOURSE VIII.

GENESIS 49. 10.

The Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah, nor a Law-giver from between his feet, untill SHILOH come, and unto him ſhall the gathering of the People be, וְלוֹ יִקְהַת עַמִּים

IT is a Propheſie of the coming of Chriſt and the time thereof; namely, when the Scepter ſhould depart from Judah, then ſhould the coming, reigne and Scepter of Meßiah begin, and not till then: the end of the one ſhould be the beginning of the other. Whence ariſeth our Demonſtration againſt the Jew; If the Scepter be already departed from Judah, as we know it is many hundred years ſince, then muſt Chriſt needs be come. For the Scepter was not to depart from Judah, nor a Law-giver from between his feet, untill Shiloh came.

For, that Shiloh here is the name of Meßiah, appears by the ſubjunction annexed, that the People or Nations (for it is עַמִּים in the plurall number) ſhould be gathered, or be obedient, unto him: Ergo, He is to be a King of the Nations; and who ſhould this be but Chriſt?

That the ancient Jews ſo underſtood it, appears by all the three Targums or Chaldee Paraphraſts. The Targum called of Jeruſalem renders expreſly, Until the time when מלכא משיחא King Meßiah ſhall come. Jonathan, Untill the time when Meßiah ſhall come, a little one of his ſons, that is, of Judah's ſons; which one of the late Rabbies (ſaith Buxtorf) expounds, Rex Meßiah, qui venit ex David, &c. The King Meßiah, who came of David, who was the leaſt among the ſons of Jeſſe his father. Onkelos, Untill Meßiah come, whoſe is the Kingdome. Likewiſe in their Talmud, Shiloh is reckoned among the names of Meßiah.

Thus we and the ancient Jews agree about the aime and purport of this Scripture. But we Chriſtians believe further, that it is long ſince fulfilled; howſoever for the very Point of Time when this Scepter departed from Judah, we vary in our opinions. Some will have it to have been when Pompey firſt brought the Jewiſh State under the Romane ſubjection. Others a little after, when Herod, an Idumæan ſtranger, yet formerly incorporated into the Jewiſh State and bloud, was by the Romans inveſted to be their King, and the Haſmonæan or Maccabaan race (which till then had born the chief rule) by him extinguiſhed. Others, not till the deſtruction and finall diſſolution of the Jewiſh State by Titus.

Theſe are principall moments of time to be pitched upon. But againſt the firſt, the ſubjecting of the Jewiſh State to the Romans, is objected, Firſt, That it anticipates the time of Chriſt's birth too much, being ſixty years before it. Secondly, That it might as well be affirmed, that the Scepter departed from Judah when Nebuchadnezzar carried them captive to Babylon, or when they were ſubject to the Perſian and Greek Monarchies, as when they were made ſubject to the Romans.

Againſt the ſecond, of Herod, lies the ſame exception that did againſt the former, That it was too early, being thirty years and more before the birth

Gen. 49.10. birth of Chriſt; and more then twice as much before his Paſſion and Aſcenſion, at what time he began his Kingdome. Secondly, That under the reigne of Herod the Scepter of Judah might ſeem rather to be advanced then departed, foraſmuch as they had then a King of their own reigning over them; and though not of Jewiſh originall, yet a Proſelyte, and ſo one of their own body. And if the Scepter were departed from Judah, becauſe one not of their own Tribe had the ſoveraign rule over them; why was it not departed all the time the Haſmonæan or Maccabæan families, who were Levites, reigned? No man would ſay that the Scepter were departed from Poland, though the Polanders ſhould chuſe a Swede, a German, or a Frenchman for their King: So neither from Judah, though a Levite, or Idumæan Proſelyte were their Prince.

Againſt the laſt point of time, the diſſolution of the Jewiſh State by Titus, is excepted, That it is as much too long after either the Nativity or the Paſſion of Chriſt, as the other two were before it, to wit, ſeventy years after the one, and near forty after the other.

I mean not to enlarge my ſelf any further, in acquainting you with each particular paſſage agitated concerning theſe differing opinions, or alledged in the diſputing of them; leſt I ſhould confound rather then inſtruct the younger ſort, who I deſire might have ſome ſmack of theſe ſpeculations betimes, leſt all their life-time after they neglect them, as many doe. I have therefore ſelected onely ſo much as I thought requiſite for the underſtanding of what I aim at, which is, to ſhew you ſuch a conſtruction of theſe words, with but a little alteration of the common tranſlating, as, being admitted, will leave no more place for thoſe difficulties wherewith this Queſtion is entangled.

FOR the handling whereof, I will divide the remainder of my Diſcourſe into theſe two parts: Firſt, I will unfold the words of my Text which ſeem to have any difficulty or obſcurity in them; ſecondly, I will apply them to the time wherein they were fulfilled.

For the firſt; I begin with the word Scepter: which is not to be reſtrained to Kingly Dominion only, but ſignifies any Power or Majeſty of Government, under what form or name ſoever; whereof a Rod or Staffe was anciently the enſigne; whence every Tribe is called שבט, (by the word here uſed) as being united together under one ſtaffe or power of Government. The meaning therefore is not, that Judah ſhould never ceaſe from having a King, or being a Kingdome; but that it ſhould not ceaſe from being a State, a body Politick, or Common-wealth, having a power of Government and Juriſdiction within it ſelf, untill Meßiah came: wherefore the Seventy here for Sceptrum or שבט, tranſlate Ἄρχων a Ruler, not Βασιλεὺς a King; Οὐκ ἐκλείψει, ſay they, Ἄρχων ἐξ Ἰούδα, There ſhall not fail a Ruler from Judah. For it is certain that Judah was ſo farre from being a continued Kingdome untill Meßiah ſhould come, that there was no Kingly Royalty in that Tribe for more then two third parts of that time, namely, not till David, nor after Zedekiah, ſaving that of the Maccabees (who were Levites) and of Herod (by originall an Edomite,) which both put together will not make eighty years; yet were they never without ſome Ruler or Rulers of their own all that time.

The next word I conſider is Law-giver; which it will not be hard to underſtand, if we mark well what is implied by Scepter: for מחוקק, the word here tranſlated Law-giver, ſignifies not onely a maker of Laws, but qui jus dicit, he that exerciſeth Juriſdiction; and ſo differs not much from the former, if they be not altogether Synonyma's.

As for the phraſe, from between his feet, it means nothing elſe but of his poſterity: for ſo the Scripture modeſtly expreſſeth the place of generation; as it it doth alſo by the word ירך, the thigh. For where we read in Geneſis 46. 26. and again in Exodus 1. 5. All the ſouls that came out of the loins of Jacob, were ſeventy ſouls, in the Hebrew it is, all the ſouls that came out of his thigh: whence, by the way, you may obſerve the occaſion of that Fable, that Bacchus or Dionyſius was born ex femore Jovis, out of Jupiter's thigh, which according to the Orientall expreſſion (whence that whole ſtory of Bacchus came) implied no more then that he was Jupiter's ſon; but the Greeks, not underſtanding the meaning, converted it into that Fable which you all know. Gen. 49. 10.

Now for the word Shiloh, if we derive it as I think we ſhould, it will ſignifie a Peace-maker, or Saviour, of the verb שלה, which ſignifies Tranquillus, Pacificus, or Salvus fuit. And if the Maſorites had ſo pleas'd, they might have pointed it שִׁלָּה, which was the name of the eldeſt ſon of Judah that ſurvived; and in the Hebrew Etymology can ſignifie nothing elſe but Peaceable or Peace-maker. And whether the Patriarch Jacob, or the Holy Ghoſt directing him, might not chuſe this name before any other, to deſigne Meßiah in this Prophecy, in reſpect of the alluſion it had to one of Judah's ſons, I will not affirm, but leave to your better conſideration. Others, following the Jewiſh Rabbies, go farther about, to bring the word Shiloh to ſignifie Filius ejus, his Son, that is, Judah's, conſtruing the Prophecy thus; The Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah, till his ſon (namely, Meßiah) come. For ה they will have put for the affix Vau, as ſometimes it is elſewhere; שיל to be for שִׁלְיָה, Secundina, (that wherein the Infant is wrapped in the womb) and ſo by a Metonymie to ſignifie here the Child it ſelf. In a word, they will have שילה to be for שִׁלְיָתוֹ, Secundina ejus; and that to mean Filius ejus. But this, methinks, is ſomewhat too ambiguous, and therefore leſs probable: but let every one follow his own judgement.

AND now I am come to the Application, to ſhew at what Point of Time this Prediction was fulfilled. To make the way plain whereunto, I muſt firſt alter a little the conſtruction of the remaining words, namely, And unto him ſhall the gathering of the People, or the Nations, be. For here the word [ſhall, or ſhall be] is not in the Hebrew, but added in tranſlating, and ſo may be left out; the words in the Originall being onely, וְלוֹ יִקְהַת עַמִּים, Et ei aggregatio, or obedientia, populorum, And to him the gathering, or the obedience, of the people. I conſtrue therefore the word עד כי or Untill עַד כִּי יָבוֹא שִׁילֹה, as common to this with the former ſentence, namely thus; The Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah, &c. untill Shiloh come, and the gathering of the people be to him; that is, Untill Meßiah come, and the People or Nations be gathered unto him, the Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah, &c. Where note, that two things are ſpecified to come to paſs before the Scepter depart from Judah, or Judah ceaſes from being a Commonwealth: Firſt, The coming of Chriſt or Shiloh into the world; ſecondly, The gathering of the Nations or Gentiles unto him. For I conſtrue the word Untill, as I told you, as common to both ſentences, Untill Shiloh come, and, Untill the Nations be gathered unto him.

And now, methinks, your thoughts might almoſt prevent me in deſigning the Time when this Prediction was fulfilled. Namely, neither when the Jews came firſt under the Romane ſubjection; for then Shiloh was not yet come: nor under Herod, or (as ſome will) ſeven years after him, when, his ſon Archelaus being baniſhed, Judæa was reduced into a Province; for though Chriſt was then born, to wit, in the end of Herod's reign, yet were not the Nations or Gentiles yet gathered unto him. But at the deſtruction of the Jewiſh State by Titus, when both theſe things were come

Gen. 49. 10. to paſs, (Chriſt being come, and the Gentiles converted unto his obedience,) then did the Scepter depart from Judah, and they ceaſe from being any more a Commonwealth.

That this is the true Application of this Prediction, beſides the evidence of the Event, appears by our Saviour's Propheſie of this Deſtruction of the Jewiſh State in the Goſpel of S. Matthew; where, after he had named ſome other things to precede it, he addes this for the laſt Signe, And this Goſpell of the Kingdome (ſaith he) ſhall be preached in all the world for a witneſs unto all Nations, and then ſhall the End come, that is, the end of the Jewiſh State. When the Gentiles, by the preaching of the Apoſtles, ſhould be gathered unto Chriſt, then ſhould the Jewiſh Church and Commonwealth be utterly diſſolved; which till then had continued united under ſome Polity and form of Government from its firſt beginning. For ſo it pleaſed the wiſdome of Almighty God, when he would reject the Jews, not to diſſolve their State, till he had erected him a new among the Gentiles.

Ch. 24. 14.

DISCOURSE IX.

PSALM 8. 2.

Out of the mouth of Babes and Sucklings thou haſt ordained ſtrength, becauſe of thine Enemies; that thou mighteſt quell the Enemy and the Avenger.

THESE words are alledged by our Bleſſed Saviour, Matth. 21. 16. and three more of the verſes following this by S. Paul, to prove that Chriſt muſt reign till he had ſubdued all his enemies under his feet: As Heb. 2. 6, &c. fully; v. 4. What is man, that thou art mindfull of him? or the ſon of man, that thou viſiteſt him? 5. For thou haſt made him little lower then the Angels, and haſt crowned him with glory and honour. 6. Thou haſt made him to have dominion over the works of thine hands; thou haſt put all things under his feet. Again, 1 Cor. 15. 24. Chriſt (ſaith he) ſhall deliver up the Kingdome to God the Father, when he ſhall have put down all rule and all authority and power. 25. For he muſt reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. 26. The laſt enemy that ſhall be deſtroyed is Death. 27. For he hath put all things under his feet. This is the quotation; for it follows preſently, When he ſaith, All things are put under him, it is manifeſt that he is excepted which did put all things under him.

How principall a part of the Argument of this Pſalm, what is in theſe two places cited by S. Paul contains, every man may ſee that reads and compares them. But how it ſhould be conſonant to the meaning of the Pſalm, ſeems very difficult to apprehend. For he that reads the whole Pſalm, would think it were nothing elſe but a deſcription of Man's excellency, whom God had made next to the Angels in Dignity, and given him dominion dominion over all things he had made. For ſo after thoſe words, Thou haſt put all things under his feet, it follows immediatly, All ſheep and oxen, yea and the beaſts of the field, the fowls of the Aire, and the fiſhes of the Sea, and whatſoever paſſeth through the paths of the Sea. But what is the dominion over theſe to ſubduing of Enemies, which the Apoſtle cites it for? or how is that which is a deſcription of mankind in generall, a Prophecy of Chriſt in ſpeciall?

Pſal. 8. 2.

Some therefore, as in other citations of the Old Teſtament, ſo here alſo, betake themſelves to the covert of an Alluſion; namely, That the Apoſtle onely borrows the words of the Pſalmiſt, to expreſs his own, and not the Pſalmiſt's, meaning. But howſoever this may have place in ſome other allegations of the Old Teſtament, which are for Illuſtration or Exornation onely; yet when the Teſtimony is brought for proof and Demonſtration, as this is, it can in no wiſe be admitted. For how can that Teſtimony be of force to conclude any thing, where not the Author's meaning is brought, but his words onely made uſe of? Others therefore ſay, That whatſoever is ſpoken of the Dignity and Excellency of Man in generall, is to be underſtood by way of eminency of Chriſt, the chief of the ſons of men. This indeed is ſomething, but not enough. For what is the Dignity of man in regard of his Dominion and Lordſhip over the creature, to conquering and ſubduing of Enemies? which is that the Apoſtle ſeeks to demonſtrate thence.

Well, to hold you no longer in ſuſpence, the Key of the interpretation of this Pſalm, and the ground of S. Paul's accommodation of that paſſage [Thou haſt put all things under his feet] to Chriſt's victory, is to be ſought in the words I have now choſen; Out of the mouth of Babes and Sucklings, &c. which being firſt alledged by our Saviour in the Goſpel, in defence of that acclamation given unto him by his followers, Hoſanna, (that is, Save now) to the Son of David; (which the Phariſees thought too high an attribute to be deferred to fleſh and bloud) this application thereof by Chriſt himſelf gave the Apoſtle good warrant to interpret the Pſalm as he did, and to ground a Demonſtration thereon.

I ſhall therefore divide my Diſcourſe into two parts: Firſt, I will ſhew the meaning of the words as they ſtand in the Pſalm; and ſecondly, make it appear that our Saviour in the Goſpel cites them according to that meaning.

The whole drift therefore of the Pſalm is, to praiſe and glorifie God for the dignity wherewith he hath inveſted Man: What is man (ſaith he) that thou art mindfull of him? or the ſon of man, that thou viſiteſt him? For thou haſt made him a little (or not much) lower then the Angels, and haſt crowned him with glory and honour. This glory and honour is exemplified in two particulars: Firſt, in that God hath ordained Man, even that weak and feeble creature, Man, to ſubdue and conquer his Enemies; which is that my Text expreſſes in the words before named, Out of the mouth of Babes and Sucklings thou haſt ordained ſtrength, becauſe of thine Enemies, that thou mighteſt quell the Enemie and the Avenger. Secondly, in that he hath made man the Lord of all his Creatures; Thou haſt made him (ſaith he) to have dominion over the works of thine hands: then follows, as it were the ſumming up of both, In a word, Thou haſt put all things under his feet. For having ordained him both the Champion to conquer thine Enemies, and made him at his Creation the Lord and Ruler of the works of thine hands, Quid reliquum eſt? what honour couldſt thou have given him which thou haſt not? Lord, (therefore) what is man, that thou art mindfull of him? or the ſon of man, that thou viſiteſt him? Where is to be obſerved, ſerved, that the Corollarie, Thou haſt put all things under his feet, comes in before his time, namely, before the deſcription of this exemplification of man's dominion over the creature was fully ended; as if the Prophet, out of admiration, could hold no longer from telling us the ſumme of that Dignity wherewith man was inveſted. Thou haſt made him (ſaith he) to have Dominion over the works of thine hands, and ſo, one way or other, Thou haſt put all things under his feet. Then follows the other part of the Deſcription, All Sheep and Oxen, over theſe thou haſt made him have Dominion, the Beaſts of the field, the Fowls of the Aire, and the Fiſhes of the Sea: whereas in direct order it ſhould have ſtood thus; Thou haſt made him have Dominion over the works of thine hands, over all Sheep and Oxen, the Beaſts of the Field, and Fowls of the Aire, and Fiſhes of the Sea; and ſo in the upſhot, Thou haſt put all things under his feet.

For this laſt particular of man's Dignity, to have Dominion over the Creatures, it is ſo plainly and evidently intended in the Pſalm, that I ſhall need ſpeak no more of it: I return therefore to the former, to make it clear alſo, That God ordained man, not onely to exerciſe Dominion over the viſible creatures, but to be the Champion to conquer and ſubdue his Enemies: Which is the drift of the words I have choſen for my Text.

Out of the mouth of Babes and Sucklings (ſaith he) that is, of Mankind, who ſprings from ſo weak and poor a beginning as of Babes and Sucklings; namely, out of the mouths of Babes, not in ſenſu compoſito, but diviſo, of ſuch whoſe condition is to be Babes and Sucklings: Not that they ſhould exerciſe this ſtrength he ſpeaks of, to quell the Enemy and the Avenger, while they were Babes; but that this power ſhould be given to ſuch whoſe condition was to be ſuch. And this is marvellous enough, that God ſhould advance ſo weak a creature, and of ſo deſpicable a beginning, to ſuch a power, as to grapple with the Enemy and overcome him. But behold, there is yet ſomething more admirable, namely, that this ſhould not be done by the ſtrength of his Arme, but by the breath and power of his Mouth; Out of the mouth of Babes and Sucklings thou haſt ordained ſtrength, becauſe of thine Enemies, &c. What Enemies? Thine, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, and ſuch too as are Ultores, Avengers, the Enemies of both God and Mankind. And who are thoſe but Satan and his Angels, thoſe Principalities and Powers of the Aire, thoſe Κοσμοκράτορες, and Rulers of the Darkneſs of this world, as S. Paul ſpeaks? For when Mankind is the one party, what can the other be but ſome Power that is not of Mankind? Beſides, who are the Enemies both of God and Mankind but theſe? and of mankind eſpecially; I will put enmity (ſaith God to the Serpent) between thee and the woman, and between thy ſeed and her ſeed: hence he is called Satan, the Adverſary or Fiend, and the Enemy κατ' ἐξοχήν. Behold, I give you power, (ſaith our Saviour to the ſeventy Diſciples, Luke 10. 19.) to tread on ſerpents and ſcorpions, and over all the power of the Enemy; Your Adverſary the Devil (ſaith S. Peter.) And this is he (as I conceive) who is here called the אויב ומתנקם, the Enemy and the Avenger; man's tormentor: which words being found again in the 44. Pſalm v. 16. may, for ought I know, by warrant of this place, be taken for the ſame Enemy, and the uſuall diſtinction altered, and the place read thus, By reaſon of the Enemy and the Avenger, all this (to wit, the Calamity and confuſion he ſpake of before) is come upon us; that is, by the malice of Satan. Now that ſuch Enemies as theſe ſhould be ſubdued by an Arm, yea, by a Mouth of fleſh, is a thing which might juſtly make the Prophet cry out, Lord, what is Man, &c.

1 Ep. 5. 8.

Now that this which I have given is the true meaning of this place, may be gathered from S. Paul's inculcating the word Enemy, when

(1 Cor. 15. 24, &c.) he demonstrates out of this Psalm, that Christ, before the end, shall abolish πᾶσαν ἀρχὴν, καὶ πᾶσαν ἐξουσίαν, καὶ δύναμιν, all rule, and all authority, and power; For he must reign, saith he, till he hath put all Enemies under his feet: The last Enemy which shall be destroyed is Death: and then he alledges for his proof that Corollary in this Psalm, For he hath put all things under his feet. But in all this Psalm there is no mention of Enemies, or subduing them, but onely in the Verse I have in hand; which unless it be thus expounded, S. Paul's allegation from hence will be too narrow to prove what he intendeth. Psal. 8. 2.

HAVING thus cleared the words I chose for my Theme, I shall not need spend much time to shew you how directly and literally the purport of them was fulfilled in our Blessed Saviour's Incarnation: You have, in part, heard such Scriptures already as do evince it. The summe is this: The Devil by sin brought mankind under thraldome, and became the Prince of this world, himself with his Angels being worshipped and served every where as Gods; and the service and honour due to the great God, the Creatour of heaven and earth, cast off and abandoned: and all this to receive at last, for reward, eternall woe and everlasting death. To vanquish and exterminate this Enemy, and redeem the world from this miserable thraldome, the Son of God took upon him, not the nature of Angels, (which might have been the Enemies matches) but the nature of weak and despicable Man, that grows from a babe and suckling. Who, (saith Esay, in that famous Prophecy of Messiah) hath believed our report? and to whom is the Arme of the Lord revealed? (namely, that works such powerfull things by weak means:) For he shall grow [כיונק] as a tender plant or sucker; (it is the very word here used in my Text for a sucking child, and translated by the Seventy ὡς παιδίον) and as a root out of a dry ground, that is, a small and little one. Chap. 53. 1, 2.

This is that whereof S. Paul discourses so divinely in the Epistle to the Hebrews: To which of the Angels said he at any time, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool? For unto the Angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak: but unto him of whom it is said, What is man, that thou art mindfull of him, &c? Again, We see Jesus, who was made little lower then the Angels, (that is, was made man; that's the meaning) for the suffering of death, crowned with Glory and Honour: what can be so plain as this? It is the Son of man by whom in part we are, and more fully shall be, delivered out of the hands of our enemies, that we might serve the true God without feare; as Zachary sayes in his Benedictus. It is the Son of man that delivered us from the power of darknesse, Col. 1. 13. The Son of man, that spoiled Principalities and Powers, and made a shew of them openly, Col. 2. 15. It was no Angel that did all this, but the Son of man; even as was prophesied from the beginning, when the Devil first got his Dominion, that the Seed of the Woman should break the Serpent's head. Heb. 1. 13. Chap. 2. v. 5. V. 6. V. 9. Luke 1. 74.

Nor is this all; For this Son of man enables also other Sons of men, his Disciples and Ministers, to doe the like in his name. The seventy Disciples in the Gospel returned with joy, saying, Lord, even the Devils are subject to us through thy name: Yea, not these onely, but as many as fight under his Banner against these Enemies have promise they shall at length quell and utterly subdue them; yea, at that great Day shall sit with their Lord and Master, to judge and condemn them. Do ye not know, saith S. Paul, that the Saints shall judge the world? know ye not that we shall judge Angels? Luke 10. 17. 1 Cor. 6. 2, 3.

Lastly, This victory, as for the event, so for the manner of atchieving it, is agreeable to our Prophecy: Forasmuch as Christ our Generall nor fights nor conquers by force of Armes, but by the power of his Word and Spirit, which is the power of his Mouth, according to my Text, Out of the mouth of Babes, &c. Hence, in the * Apocalyps, Christ appears with a sword going out of his mouth: In the 2 Thess. 2. 8. it is said, He shall consume that wicked one (that is, Antichrist) with the Spirit of his mouth: Esay propheſies, Chap. 11. 4. that the Branch of Jesse should smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips should slay the wicked; that is, he does all nutu & verbo, by his word and command, as God made the world: By the word of the Lord were the Heavens made, and all the Hoast of them by the breath of his mouth, Psal. 33. 6. So doth Christ vanquish his enemies, and enable his Ministers to vanquish them, Verbo & Spiritu oris, by his Word and the Spirit of his mouth, according to that Hos. 6. 5. I have hewed them by my Prophets, and slain them by the words of my mouth.

Psal. 8. 2.

* Chap. 1. 16. & chap. 19. 15, 21.

Matth. 21. 15, 16.

I come now to the Second thing I propounded; namely, to shew that our Saviour in the Gospel, when he cited this place, alledged it for and according to this, and no other, meaning. The Evangelist relates it thus; When the chief Priests and Scribes saw the wonderfull things that Jesus did, and the children in the Temple crying, and saying, Hosanna to the Son of David, they were sore displeased, and said unto him, Heareſt thou what these say? how they ascribe the power of salvation (which is God's peculiar) to thee who art a Son of man? Is that solemn acclamation of Save now, wherewith we are wont to glorifie God, fit to be given to thee? Our Saviour answers, Yes; For have ye not read, (saith he) Out of the mouth of Babes and Sucklings thou hast ordained strength? Consider what that means: You will wonder, perhaps, that a thing so plain could be taken in a differing meaning; for it is commonly supposed to be alledged onely to prove that children should glorifie Christ, whilest the great ones of the world despised him. And there are two things which have occasioned this mistake, and drawn the sense awry. The first is, because the Seventy (according to which the Evangelist reads this place) in stead of strength translate here αἶνον praise, Out of the mouth of Babes and Sucklings thou hast ordained praise. Secondly, because those that made this acclamation are said to have been παῖδες Children, When they saw the wonderfull things which Jesus did, καὶ τοὺς παῖδας κραζοντας ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, and the Children crying in the Temple. To the first I answer, Our Saviour alledged not the words of the Psalm in Greek, but in Hebrew; where it is עֹז, Strength, which is the constant signification thereof through the whole Bible, and never Praise: nor do the Seventy themselves ever translate it otherwise, save, as it seems, in this place. But whatsoever the use of the word αἶνος be otherwise, it must be here regulated by the Hebrew verity, according to which our Saviour alledged it, and must signifie not simply Praise, but Robur prædicandum, or Robur laude dignum, Robur celebrandum, Strength worthy to be celebrated or praised, or the like. To the second, That they are called παῖδες Children who made this acclamation of Hosanna to our Saviour, I answer,

1. Be it so; yet I am sure they were no Babes and Sucklings, but of reasonable years: How then would our Saviour's quotation have in such a sense been

2. pertinent? Besides, young children are not properly called παῖδες, but

3. παιδία. Again, The Pharisees found no fault with the speakers, but with the thing spoken, which they thought too much for a man; and therefore our Saviour, when he alledged this Scripture, answered to that, and in-

4. tended not to apologize for the speakers. Fourthly, In all reason, those who cried here Hosanna in the Temple, were the same company that brought him crying Hosanna all the way thither: But these (saith S. Mark) were of the multitude which followed him; as S. Luke, of the multitude of

Mark 11. 9. Luk. 19. 37.

the

the Disciples; who also tells us, that the * Pharisees, who were offended thereat, bad him rebuke his Disciples. Παῖδες therefore here signifies either Christ's Disciples, or the retinue which followed him, and brought him up thither as a King: Take which ye will, you shall not fasten upon παῖδες any notion other then usuall. I shall not need to tell you, that the Disciples of the Prophets are called the Sons of the Prophets, that is, οἱ τῶν προφητῶν παῖδες· or that Herod's Courtiers, Matth. 14. 2. are termed his παῖδες· He said τοῖς παισὶν αὐτοῦ, This is John the Baptist, &c.

DISCOURSE X.

Zachariah 4. 10.

These Seven are the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth.

IT is hard to keep a mean; which as it appears in many things else, so in the Doctrine and Speculation of Angels, whereunto men were heretofore so much addicted, as they pursued it not onely to vain and ungrounded Theories, but even to Idolatry and Superstition. There were in the Apostles times who intruded into things they had not seen. There were then who beguiled men with a voluntary humility in worshipping of Angels, Col. 2. 18. What after-times brought forth, I shall not need speak. That ancient and high-soaring (though counterfeit) Dionysius describes the Hierarchy of Angels as exactly as if he had dwelt amongst them, delivering unto us nine Orders of them out of nine words, found partly in the Old, partly in the New Testament; Seraphims, Cherubims, and Thrones; Powers, Hosts, and Dominions; Principalities, Arch-angels, and Angels; and tells us the severall natures, distinctions, and properties of them all. Whereas it cannot be shewn out of Scripture, either that some of these names concurre not, (as Angels not to be a common name to all the rest, especially to comprehend Arch-angels) or that these are denominations of the natures of Angels, and not of their offices and charges onely: yet have these nine Orders passed for current through so many Ages of the Church.

But we, who together with divers Superstitions have justly rejected also these vain and ungrounded curiosities, are fallen into the other extreme, having buried the Doctrine of Angels in silence, making little or no enquiry at all, what God in his Word hath revealed concerning them: Which yet would make not a little for the understanding of Scripture, wherein are so many passages having reference to them, and therefore questionless something revealed concerning them.

I shall not therefore doe amiss, if I chuse for my Discourse at this time a particular of that kind which Dionysius in all his Speculations hath not a word of, and yet seems to have strong footing in Scripture: It is this.

The Jews have an ancient Tradition, that there are Seven principall Angels which minister before the Throne of God, and are therefore called Zach. 4. 10.

Arch-angels; some of whose names we have in Scripture, as Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and in the second Book of Esdras mention is made of Jeremiel the Arch-angel. This Tradition we shall find recorded in the Book of Tobit (whose antiquity is before the Birth of our Saviour:) For there the Angel who in the shape of Azariah had accompanied his son into Media, when he discovers himself, speaks in this manner, I am Raphael, one of the Seven Angels which stand and minister before the Holy Blessed One, (that is, God.) The Greek hath οἱ προσαναφέρουσι τὰς προσευχὰς τῶν ἁγίων, &c. which present the Prayers of the Saints, and goe in and out before the Glory of the Holy One. But neither S. Hierome, who translated it out of the Chaldee, nor the ancient Hebrew Copy set forth by Paulus Fagius, (and in likelihood translated out of the same Chaldee Originall) hath any such matter, but read as I first quoted. And therefore it seems to be an addition, or liberty of the Greek Translator, who thought their Ministry to consist in presenting the Prayers of the Saints, and so translated accordingly.

Chap. 4. 36. Et respondit Jeremiel Archangelus, &c.

Chap. 12. 15. Vid. Cypr. adversus Judæos, l. 1. 20. Hilar. in Ps. 129. vel 130.

This Tradition is farther testified by Jonathan ben Uziel the Chaldee Paraphrast, Gen. 11. 7. where the Lord's words, spoken in the plurall number, Go to, let us go down, and let us confound their language, are paraphrased in this manner; The Lord spake unto the Seven Angels which stand before him, Go to now, let us go down, &c. Whether rightly or fitly in this place, it matters not: The testimony is sufficient for the Jewish Tradition of Seven Arch-angels that stand before the Throne of God.

This Tradition Junius saith is Magicall, and not a little triumphs therein, as an undoubted Argument to evince the Book of Tobit not to be Canonicall. But whatsoever the Book of Tobit be, I hope to shew this Tradition to have firm ground and footing in Scripture, and not so rashly to be rejected.

The chief and most clear place is this I have now read, which gives us to understand that these Seven Angels were represented by that Candlestick of Seven Lamps which continually burned in the Temple, before the Veile, over against the Mercy-seat, which was the Throne of God. For in the beginning of the Chapter, the Prophet being shewed this Seven-lamped Candlestick in a Vision, and two Olive-branches on each side ministring oyle to the Lamps thereof; the Angel asketh him (vers. 5.) if he knew what these meant. The Prophet answers, No, my Lord. Then the Angel, discoursing a little by way of Preface, tels him what they were; These Seven, saith he, that is, the Seven Lamps, are the seven Eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth: that is, those Seven Vigils, or prime Ministers of his Providence, the Seven Arch-angels. As for the two Olive-trees on each side, These are, saith he, the two anointed ones, which stand before the Lord of the whole earth, (v. 14.) that is, Zorobabel and Jesua, the Prince and Priest of that time; which should be God's two Instruments on earth, whereby his Church (signified by the Candlestick) should be re-established, and his Temple builded: and that not by force or strength, (as he saith in his Preface v. 6.) but by the Spirit of God working with them; as the Olive-trees here conveyed oyle to the Candlestick, not after a naturall and usuall, but a supernaturall and secret manner. This interpretation of the latter hath the suffrage of the best Expositors, both Jews and Christians; and so I shall need say no more of it, but betake my self to make good the first, concerning the words I chose for my Text, that those Seven Eyes of God, signified by the Seven Lamps, are Seven Angels.

Angeli dicuntur ὄπτα καὶ ὀφθαλμοὶ magni Regis. Philo in Lib. de Somniis. Vide & 2 Chron. 16. 9.

That this is so, I prove out of two places of the Apocalyps derived from hence; where as well the Seven Lamps before the Throne, as the Lamb's Seven eyes, are said to be the Seven Spirits of God: I saw (saith S. John Ch. 4. 5.)

Seven

Seven Lamps before the Throne, which are the Seven Spirits of God. And again, Chap. 5. 6. I ſaw in the midſt of the Throne, and of the four Beaſts, (as we tranſlate it) and of the four and twenty Elders, a Lamb, as if he had been ſlain, having ſeven horns, and ſeven eyes, which are the Seven Spirits of God ſent forth into all the earth. Here, firſt, we have Zacharie's very words, Seven eyes ſent forth into all the earth: ſecondly, that theſe Seven eyes are the Seven Spirits of God: thirdly, that theſe Seven Spirits were repreſented by the Seven Lamps burning before the Throne. If this be not ſufficient to make my interpretation of Zacharie's good, I know not what can be. For who can now but think, that the Jews derived their Tradition of theſe Seven Angels from this place of Zachary, and the Apocalyps from them both? Zach. 4. 10.

And that indeed the Jews ſuppoſed ſome ſuch thing meant by the Seven Lamps in the Temple, appears by the report of Joſephus, though depraved and faſhioned unto the capacity of the Gentiles. For he tels us (both in his Antiquities, Lib. 3. cap. 7. and in his De Bello Judaico, Lib. 6. cap. 6. Gr. &c.) that the Seven Lamps ſignified the ſeven Planets, and the moſt holy place within the veile, (Antiq. l. 3. cap. 5.) the heaven of God or heaven of Glory; and that therefore the Lamps ſtood * ſlope-wiſe, as it were to expreſs the obliquity of the Zodiack. Now it is true that the Jewiſh Aſtrologians, ſavouring of Gentiliſme, make theſe Seven Angels the Prefects of the Seven Planets; which they ſeem to have learned in part from the Greek Philoſophy: which conceit, howſoever it be vain and groundleſs, yet may be as a Key to underſtand the meaning of this of Joſephus. And one thing more; If the Viſible things of God may be learned, as S. Paul ſays, from the Creation of the world, why may not the Inviſible and Intelligible World be learned from the Fabrick of the Viſible? the one (it may be) being the Pattern of the other. But to let this paſs, and return again to the Apocalyps: *Antiq. l. 3. cap. 7. 1 Rom. 19.

Where concerning the places alledged, there may be two things objected. Firſt, That the Seven Spirits there mentioned are, and may be, expounded of the Holy Ghoſt, thus repreſented in reſpect of thoſe ſeven-fold (that is, manifold) Graces he communicates unto the Church. I anſwer, that many indeed have ſo taken it: but, beſides the uncouthneſs of expreſſing one Spirit by ſeven, there is a reaſon in the Text why they cannot be ſo taken; namely, becauſe not onely the Seven Lamps are ſaid to be thoſe Seven Spirits of God, but the Seven Eyes and Seven Hornes of the Lamb alſo to be the ſame. Now it will be very hard and harſh to make the Holy Ghoſt the Horns and Eyes of Chriſt, as he is the Lamb of God that taketh away the ſins of the world, that is, as he is Man: Above Angels indeed the Man Jeſus is exalted, and that too for the ſuffering of death, that is, as the Lamb; but not above the Holy Ghoſt. This made not onely Druſius, but even Beza himſelf, in his Notes upon this place, to affirm, it could not be meant of the Holy Ghoſt, but of Seven created Spirits.

A ſecond ſcruple is, How (if they be created Spirits) John could pray for Grace and Peace from them: Grace be unto you, (ſaith he) and peace from him which is, which was, and is to come; and from the ſeven ſpirits which are before his Throne, and from Jeſus Chriſt the faithfull witneſs, &c. Would he pray for Grace and Peace from Angels? I anſwer, Why not? For firſt, He praies not to them; but unto God, unto whom ſuch votes are tendered. Secondly, He praies for Grace and Peace from them, not as Authors, but as the Inſtruments of God in the diſpenſation thereof. Are they not λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα miniſtring Spirits, ſent forth to miniſter for them who ſhall be heirs of ſalvation? And, if it be no Idolatry to pray Rev. 1. 4, 5. Heb. 1. 14.

Zach. 4. 10. unto God to give Grace and Peace from the outward Ministery of his Word; no more is it to pray unto him for it from the invisible Ministery. For certainly it is lawfull to pray unto God for a blessing from an Instrument, which he is wont to give us by an Instrument. Secondly, It may be said, it being a Salutation, that the words Grace and Peace need not be taken in that speciall and strict sense, but in the large and generall, wherein Grace sounds favour at large, and Peace all manner of prosperity. In which sense no man will deny but the blessed Angels have an interest in the dispensation of the favors and blessings of God to his Church; and so God may be prayed to to give them, as he is wont, by their Ministery. Grace and Peace from him which is, which was, and is to come, as the Author and Giver; and from the Seven Spirits, as the Instruments; and from Jesus Christ, as the Mediator.

There is yet one place more in the Apocalyps to confirm this Tradition, Chap. 8. 2. I saw, saith S. John, τοὺς ἑπτὰ Ἀγγέλους οἱ ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἑστήκασι, the Seven Angels which stood before God. Is not this as plain as Tobit? Why should then the one be accounted Magicall rather then the other?

I add moreover, that these Angels are those שרים הראשונים, Principes primarii or chief Princes, mentioned in the 10. of Daniel 13. Michael one of the chief Princes (saith the Angel there) came to help me: Now Michael, we know, is one of the Arch-angels: and why therefore may 1 Tim. 5. 21. not these chief Princes be those Ἄγγελοι ἐκλεκτοὶ, whereof S. Paul speaks in his adjuration to Timothy? I charge thee (saith he) before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Elect Angels; not the good Angels at large, but those Angeli eximii, the Seven Arch-angels which stand before the Throne of God.

And it may, not without reason, be conjectured, that those Seven chief Princes famed in the Persian Monarchie took their beginning from hence; namely, that Daniel (who in respect of his account for wisedome, and of his power under Darius the Mede, had a main stroke in the moulding and framing the government of that State) caused the Persian Court to resemble that of Heaven, ordaining Seven chief Princes to stand before the King. Of which we find twice mention in Scripture: as in the Book of Chap. 1. 14. Esther, where they are recorded by name, and styled the seven Princes of Media and Persia, who saw the King's face, and sate first in the kingdome: and in the Commission granted to Ezra by Artaxerxes, Ezra 7. 14. they are called, the King's seven Counsellors; Forasmuch as thou art sent by the King, and his seven Counsellors, &c. And, it may be, the Church of Jerusalem, when they chose Seven Deacons to minister unto their Bishop, had an eye the same way.

HITHERTO of the Number of these Arch-angels; now a word or two of their office. And that is, First, to be the universal Inspectors of the whole world, and the Rulers and Princes of the whole Angelical host: which appears in that they are called Principes primarii, שרים הראשונים chief Princes, and Ἀρχάγγελοι Arch-angels (i.) ἄρχοντες τῶν Ἀγγέλων, Chief of the Angels: their universall jurisdiction is meant by the words [sent forth into the whole world,] whereas the rest are limited to certain places. Secondly, to have the peculiar Charge and Guardianship of the Church and affairs thereof, whilst the rest of the world, with their Polities, Kingdomes and Governments, is committed to the care of * subordinate Angels, who, according to their severall charges, may seem to carry those names of [a] Thrones, Principalities, Powers, and Dominions. That the charge of the Church, quà talis, belongs thus peculiarly and immediatly to the Seven Arch-angels, may appear by S. John's saluting the Churches with a Benediction of Grace and Peace from their ministery; and the typing of them by the Seven Eyes and Horns of the Lamb, as Powers which the Father, since he exalted Him to be Head of his Church, hath annexed to his Jurisdiction. Hence it comes to pass, that we finde these Angels peculiarly, both before and in the Gospel, to have been employed about the Church-affairs. In the Old Testament, the Angel Gabriel (one of the Seven) revealed to Daniel the time of the restauration of the Jewish State, and coming of Messiah: and the Angel Michael (one of the chief Princes) was his assistant, when he strengthened Darius the Mede who founded the Monarchy which should restore them, and is in speciall termed (Daniel 12. 1.) the Prince that stood for Daniel's people. In the Gospel, we finde the same Angel Gabriel imployed both to Zachary and the Blessed Virgin with the Evangelicall Tidings; and that Zachary might take notice that he was one of the Seven, he sayes unto him, I am Gabriel that stand in the presence of God. Likewise in the Churches combate with the Dragon, Apocal. 12, 7, &c. Michael and his Angels are said to be her Champions, and in her quarrell to have cast the Dragon and his Angels down to the Earth. And in this Prophecy of * Zachary it is said, that these Seven eyes of the Lord took care of one stone, which Zorobabel laid for the foundation of the Temple; and therefore the work could not be disappointed, but should certainly at length be finished. So as by this time we may guess the meaning of that which Hanani the Seer told King Asa (2 Chron. 16. 9.) The Eyes of the Lord (that is, these Seven Eyes) run to and fro through the whole Earth, to shew themselves strong in the behalf of those whose hearts are perfect towards him.

* Clemens Alex. Strom. lib. 7. Οὗτός ἐστιν (scil. of

DISCOURSE XI.

S. MARK 11. 17.

Is it not written, My House shall be called a House of Prayer πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσι to all [the] Nations?

THEY are the words of our Blessed Saviour, when he cast the Buyers and Sellers and Money-changers out of the Temple, and forbad to carry any vessels through it. Concerning which story it is worth observation, that our Saviour whilst he was upon earth never exercised any Kingly or coactive Jurisdiction, but in vindicating his Father's House from prophanation. And this he did two severall times: Once at the first Passeover, after he began his Propheſie, whereof you may read John 2. 14, &c. and now again at his last Passeover, when he came to give his soul a sacrifice for sin. This is that which S. Mark relates in this place, as do also two other of the Euangelists, S. Matthew and S. Luke. The vindication of God's House from Prophanation (how little account soever we are wont to make thereof) was with our Blessed Saviour Alpha and Omega, the first and last of his care; ubi incipit, ibi desinit. The consideration of which, how momentous it is, I leave to your selves to judge. Thus much by way of Preface.

Matt. 21.13. Luke 19.46.

NOW for understanding the words I have chosen, I will divide my Discourse into a Question and an Observation. The Question is, In what part of the Temple this Market was kept. A thing not commonly enquired after by Expositors, much less defined. The Observation is, That this fact of our Saviour more particularly concerns us of the Gentiles then we take notice of.

I. For the first, [In what part of the Temple this Market was kept;] The Jews Religion and scrupulosity to keep their Temple from prophanation was such as might seem to make this story incredible. Those who were so chary that no uncircumcised or unclean person should come therein, who trod the pavement thereof with so much religious observance and curiosity, who would not suffer (as Josephus relates) any other building, no not the Palace of Agrippa their King, to have any prospect into it, lest it should be polluted by a prophane look; how unlikely is it they would endure it to be made a place of buying, selling, and bartering, yea, a Market for sheep and oxen, as John 2. 14. it is expresly said to have been? Neither will it serve the turn to excuse it by saying, it was to furnish such as came thither with offerings: For the sheep and oxen, whilst they were yet to be bought to that purpose, were not sacred, but prophane; and so not to come within the sacred limits. You see the difficulty.

Antiq. l. 20. c. 7.

But I answer, that this Market was kept in the third or Gentiles Court, which was the outmost of the Temple. For the Temple in our Saviour's time had three Courts, each surrounding one another. First, the inmost or Priests Court, wherein stood the Temple and the Altar of burnt-offering: Into this none but the Priests and Levites came. Secondly, the middle or great Court, which surrounded that of the Priests: whereinto the Jews of all all sorts and circumcised Proselytes came to worship. Without this was a third Court for the Gentiles, which surrounded the Israelites Court, as that did the Court of the Priests. The two first Courts they accounted sacred, calling them τὸ Ἅγιον into which therefore none might enter but such as were circumcised and clean according to the Law. The third was without the sacred limits, and so accounted prophane and common: which may be learned out of Josephus, who tels us of certain little pillars or columns, placed by the Lorica or Septum, which severed this Court from the rest, whereon was inscribed in Greek and Latin, Μὴ δεῖν ἀλλόφυλον ἐντὸς τοῦ Ἁγίου πύλας, In Atrium sanctum transire alienigenam non debere, That no stranger pass within the sacred limits; τὸ δὲ δεύτερον ἱερὸν, saith he, Ἅγιον ἐκαλεῖτο, for the second part of the Temple was called Holy; implying that the Outmost was not so.

Mark 11.17.

Lib. 6. de Bello Jud. cap. 6. Gr. 18.

Into this Court therefore, which had no legal sanctity and was without the sacred limits, the Gentiles were admitted, and had their station, together with such of the Jews as were in their uncleanness; further they might not goe. By Gentiles here I mean such, which though uncircumcised, yet worshipped the God of Israel, and were called Σεβόμενοι. For (as I have told you *heretofore) the Jews had two sorts of Proselytes which worshipped their God and frequented his Temple. One of such as were circumcised, and took upon them the observation of the whole Law of Moses: These were accounted as Jews, bound to the same observances, and partakers of the same priviledges with them; they worshipped together in the same Court, and differed nothing from Jews, but that they were not so born. But besides these, there was a second sort of Gentiles which embraced the worship of the God of Israel and the hope of the life to come, which were not circumcised, nor conformed to the Ordinances of the Mosaicall Law; but were tied onely to the observation of those commandments which the Jewish Doctors call The Precepts of the Sons of Noah. Of this Order was Cornelius and divers other mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles, where they are known by the name of Σεβόμενοι or Worshippers: and though they were true worshippers, yet were they still but Gentiles, and such as no Jew might converse with; as we see in the example of Cornelius. These were those that came no further then the Outmost Court, not accounted within the limits of the τὸ Ἅγιον or Sacred Septs; as themselves were accounted Unclean, because Uncircumcised, and so no members of the Commonwealth of Israel.

*See Discourse 3.

In this Court therefore the Jews made no scruple of doing prophane and secular acts, being in their opinion no better then a common place. Nay, it is very probable, that to shew their despiciency of the poor Gentiles, (according to that in the Apocalyps, ἔξω οἱ κύνες, without are Dogs) and to pride themselves in their prerogative and discretion from them, they affected to have such acts there done. And hence it came to pass that they permitted a Market of Oxen and Sheep, Doves and other bartery, to be kept there, for the use of the Temple and those who came thither to worship. And thus the poor Gentiles or Σεβόμενοι were stabled amongst Oxen, Sheep, and stalls of Money-changers, and in that tumultuous place fain to offer up their devotions and prayers unto the most High God whom they had chosen.

Rev. 22.15.

But our Blessed Saviour, who came to redeem not the Jews onely, but the Gentiles also, and to make them a principall part of his fold, would not suffer them to be thus neglected, but in this act of his gave them a praludium of his further favour intended toward them: and he that was to vindicate their Souls from death, and take away the partition-wall between them and

and the Jews, first vindicates their Oratory from prophanation; alledging
Mark 11.17. for his warrant this place of the Prophet Esay concerning the same Oratory, My House shall be called a House of Prayer πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσι. He did not say, My Father's House is holy; for the Jews would soon have replied, that the Gentiles Court was without the sacred limits: But, It is written, saith he, My House shall be called a House of Prayer for all the Nations; Ergo, The place of Prayer for all Nations is a part of my Father's House. If my Father's House, then holy, and not to be thus prophaned. For whatsoever is his, is holy; Relative Holiness being nothing else but the peculiarity a thing hath to God-ward. Of this if any man doubt, that Quotation by S. Luke concerning that which first openeth the womb, will put him out of doubt. For whenas the Law saith, Every male that openeth the womb is mine, (that is, the Lord's;) S. Luke utters it, ch. 2. v. 23. Every male that openeth the womb shall be called Holy unto the Lord: Ergo, To be the Lord's and to be Holy, are Synonyma's.

Though therefore the Gentiles Court had no sanctity of legall distinction, yet had it the sanctity of peculiarity to God-ward, and therefore not to be used as a common place. The Illation proceeds by way of Conversion;
* 1 Kings 8. 41,42,43. My House shall be called the House of Prayer to * all Nations or People; Ergo, The House of Prayer for all Nations is my Father's House. And the Emphasis lies in the words [πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσι] which our Translators were not so well advised of, when, following Beza too close, they render the words thus, My House shall be called of all Nations the House of Prayer; as if the Dative Case here [τοῖς ἔθνεσι] were not Acquisitive, but (as it is sometimes with passive verbs) instead of the Ablative of the Agent, for ἀπὸ τῶν ἐθνῶν. Which sense is clean from the scope and purpose of the place whence it is taken; as he that compares them will easily see, and I shall make fully to appear in the next part of my Discourse, which I tendred by the name of an Observation.

II. To wit, That this fact of our Saviour more particularly concerns us of the Gentiles then we take notice of. Namely, we are taught thereby what reverent esteem we ought to have of our Gentile Oratories and Churches; howsoever not endued with such legall sanctity, in every respect, as was the Temple of the Jews; yet Houses of Prayer as well as theirs. This Observation will be made good by a threefold Consideration: First, of the Story, as I have related it; secondly, from the Text here alledged for warrant thereof; and thirdly, from the circumstance of Time.

1. For the Story, I have shewed it was acted in the Gentiles Court, and not in that of the Jews; because it is not credible that was thus prophaned. It cannot therefore be alledged, that this was a place of legall sanctity; for according to legall sanctity it was held by the Jews as common: onely it was the place for the Gentiles to worship the God of Israel in; and seems to have been proper to the second Temple, the Gentiles in the first worshipping without at the Temple-door in the holy Mountain onely.

2. Secondly, The place alledged to avow the Fact speaks expresly of Gentile worshippers; not in the words τοῖς ἔθνεσι onely, but in the whole body of the context. Hear the Prophet speak, Esay chap. 56. ver. 6, 7. and then judge: The sons of the stranger, that joyn themselves to the Lord to serve him, and to love the Name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my Covenant, (namely, that I alone shall be his God;) Even them will I bring to my holy Mountain, and make them joyfull in my House of Prayer; their burnt-offerings and sacrifices accepted upon mine Altar. Then follow the words of my Text, For my Houſe ſhall be called (that is, ſhall be; it is an Hebraiſm) a Houſe of Prayer for all People. Mark 11.17.

What is this but a Deſcription of the Σεβόμενοι or Gentile worſhippers? And this place alone makes good all that I have ſaid before, viz. That this vindication was of the Gentiles Court: Otherwiſe the allegation of this Scripture had been impertinent; for the Gentiles (of whom the Prophet ſpeaks) worſhipped in no place but this. Hence alſo appears to what purpoſe our Evangeliſt expreſſed the words [πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσι,] namely, as that which ſhewed wherein the force of the accommodation to this occaſion lay; which the reſt of the Evangeliſts omitted, as referring to the place of the Prophet whence it was taken; thoſe who heard it being not ignorant of whom the Prophet ſpake.

Thirdly, the circumſtance of Time argues the ſame thing; if we conſider that this was done but a few dayes before our Saviour ſuffered, to wit, when he came to his laſt Paſſeover. How unſeaſonable had it been to vindicate the violation of Legall and typicall ſanctity, which within ſo few daies after he was utterly to aboliſh by his Croſs; unleſs he had meant thereby to leave his Church a laſting leſſon, what reverence and reſpect he would have accounted due to ſuch places as this was which he vindicated? 3.

DISCOURSE XII.

S. JOHN 4. 23.

But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in Spirit and Truth: For the Father ſeeketh ſuch to worſhip him.

THEY are the words of our Bleſſed Saviour to the Woman of Samaria, who perceiving him by his diſcourſe to be a Prophet, deſired to be reſolved by him of that great controverted point between the Jews and Samaritans, Whether Mount Gariz̃im, by Sichem, (where the Samaritans ſacrificed) or Jeruſalem, were the true place of worſhip. Our Saviour tells her, that this Queſtion was not now of much moment: For that the hour or time was near at hand, when they ſhould neither worſhip the Father in Mount Garizim, nor at Jeruſalem. But that there was a greater difference between the Jews and them then this of Place; namely, even about That which was worſhipped: For ye (ſaith he) worſhip that ye know not; but we (Jews) worſhip that we know. Then follow the words premiſed, But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in Spirit and Truth.

Jud. 9.7. The Evangeliſt here calls it Sichar, ver. 5. alias Shechem, or Sichem.

It is an abuſed Text, being commonly alledged to prove that God now in the Goſpel either requires not, or regards not externall worſhip, but that of the Spirit onely: and this to be a characteriſticall difference between the worſhip of the Old Teſtament and the New. If at any time we talk of externall decency in rites and bodily expreſſions as fit to be uſed in the ſervice of God, this is the uſuall Buckler to repell whatſoever may be ſaid in that kinde. It is true, indeed, that the worſhip of the Goſpel is much more ſpiritual then that of the Law: But that the worſhip of the Goſpel ſhould be onely ſpiritual, and no externall worſhip required therein, (as the Text according to ſome mens ſenſe and allegation thereof would imply,) is repugnant not onely to the practice and experience of the Chriſtian Religion in all Ages, but alſo to the expreſs Ordinances of the Goſpel it ſelf. For what are the Sacraments of the New Teſtament? are they not Rites wherein and wherewith God is ſerved and worſhipped? The conſideration of the holy Euchariſt alone will confute this Gloſs: For is not the commemoration of the ſacrifice of Chriſt's death upon the Croſs unto his Father, in the Symbols of Bread and Wine, an externall worſhip? And yet with this Rite hath the Church in all Ages uſed to make her ſolemn addreſs of Prayer and Supplication unto the Divine Majeſty, as the Jews in the Old Teſtament did by Sacrifice. When I ſay, in all Ages, I include alſo that of the Apoſtles: For ſo much S. Luke teſtifieth of that firſt Chriſtian ſociety, Acts 2. 42. Ἦσαν δὲ προσκαρτεροῦντες τῇ κλάσει τοῦ ἄρτου, καὶ ταῖς προσευχαῖς, They continued in breaking of Bread, and in Prayers.

As for bodily expreſſions, by geſtures and poſtures, as ſtanding, kneeling, bowing, and the like; our Bleſſed Saviour himſelf lift up his ſacred eyes to heaven when he prayed for Lazarus; fell on his face, when he prayed in his agony. S. Paul (as himſelf ſaith) bowed his knees to the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: He and S. Peter, and the reſt of the Believers, doe the like more then once in the Acts of the Apoſtles. What was Impoſition of hands but an externall geſture in an act of invocation for conferring a bleſſing? and that perhaps ſometimes without any vocall expreſſion joyned therewith. Beſides, I cannot conceive any reaſon why, in this point of Euangelicall worſhip, Geſture ſhould be more ſcrupled at then Voice. Is not confeſſing, praiſing, praying, and glorifying God by Voice, an externall and bodily worſhip, as well as that of Geſture? why ſhould then the one derogate from the worſhip of the Father in Spirit and Truth, and not the other? To conclude, There was never any ſociety of men in the world that worſhipped the Father in ſuch a manner as this interpretation would imply: and therefore cannot this be our Saviour's meaning, but ſome other. Let us ſee if we can finde out what it is.

Eph. 3. 14.

There may be two ſenſes given of theſe words; both of them agreeable to Reaſon and the analogy of Scripture; let us take our choice. The one is, That to worſhip God in Spirit and Truth, is to worſhip him not with Types and ſhadows of things to come, as in the Old Teſtament, but according to the verity of the things exhibited in Chriſt; according to that, The Law was given by Moſes, but Grace and Truth came by Jeſus Chriſt. Whence the Myſtery of the Goſpel is elſewhere by our Saviour, in this Evangeliſt, termed Truth, as Chap. 17. ver. 17. and the Doctrine thereof, by S. Paul, the word of Truth: See Epheſ. Chap. 1. ver. 13. Rom. 15. 8. The time therefore is now at hand, ſaid our Saviour, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father no longer with bloudy Sacrifices, and the Rites and Ordinances depending thereon; but in and according to the verity of that which theſe Ordinances figured. For all theſe were Types of Chriſt, in whom, being now exhibited, the true worſhippers ſhall henceforth worſhip the Father.

John 1. 17.

This ſenſe hath good warrant from the ſtate of the Queſtion between the Jews and Samaritans, to which our Saviour here makes anſwer: which was not about worſhip in general, but about the kind of worſhip in ſpecial, which which was confessed by both sides to be tied to one certain place onely; that is, of worship by Sacrifice and the appendages; in a word, of the Typicall worship proper to the first Covenant, of which see a description Heb. 9. This Josephus expressly testifies, Lib. 12. Antiq. cap. 1. speaking of the Jews and Samaritans which dwelt together at Alexandria: * They lived, saith he, in perpetuall discord one with the other, whilst each laboured to maintain their Country customes: those of Jerusalem affirming their Temple to be the sacred place whither sacrifices were to be sent; the Samaritans, on the other side, contending they ought to be sent to Mount Garizim. For otherwise, who knows not that both Jews and Samaritans had other places of worship besides either of these? namely their Proseucha's and Synagogues, wherein they worshipped God, not with internall onely, but externall worship; though not with Sacrifice, which might be offered but in one place onely. And this also may seem to have been a Type of Christ as well as the rest, namely, that he was to be that one and onely Mediator of the Church, in the Temple of whose sacred body we have access unto the Father, and in whom he accepts our service and devotions: according to that, Destroy this Temple, and I will rear it up again in three daies: He spake, saith the Text, of The Temple of his Body. This sense divers of the Ancients hit upon. Eusebius Demon. Evang. Lib. 1. Cap. 6. Οὐ διὰ συμβόλων καὶ τύπων, ἀλλ', ἢ φησιν ὁ Σωτὴρ, ἐν πνεύματι καὶ ἀληθείᾳ· Not by Symbols and Types, but, as our Saviour saith, in Spirit and Truth. Not that in the New Testament men should worship God without all externall services: (For the New Testament was to have externall and visible services as well as the Old) but with such as should imply the verity of the promises already exhibited, not by Types and shadows of them yet to come. We know the Holy Ghost is wont to call the figured Face of the Law the Letter, and the Verity thereby signified, the Spirit. As for ἐν πνεύματι καὶ ἀληθείᾳ, in Spirit and Truth, both together, they are ἅπαξ λεγόμενον, but once found in holy Writ; to wit, onely in this place: and so, no light can be borrowed by comparing of the like expression any where else to expound them. Besides, nothing hinders but they may be here taken one for the exposition of the other; namely, that to worship the Father ἐν πνεύματι, is the same with to worship him ἐν ἀληθείᾳ.

John 4. 23.

* Περὶς ἀλλήλους ἐπολέμουν, &c.

John 2.19,21.

But howsoever, this exposition be fair and plausible, yet, methinks, the reason which our Saviour gives in the words following should argue another meaning. God, (saith he) is a Spirit; therefore they that worship him, must worship him in Spirit and Truth: But God was a Spirit from the beginning: If therefore for this reason he must be worshipped in Spirit and Truth, he was so to be worshipped in the Old Testament as well as in the New.

Vers. 24.

Let us therefore seek another meaning: For the finding whereof, let us take notice that the Samaritans, at whom our Saviour here aimeth, were the off-spring of those Nations which the King of Assyria placed in the Cities of Samaria, when he had carried away the Ten Tribes captive. These, as we may read in the second Book of the Kings, at their first coming thither worshipped not the God of Israel, but the gods of the Nations from whence they came: wherefore he sent Lions amongst them, which slew them. Which they apprehending, either from the information of some Israelite, or otherwise, to be because they knew not the worship of the God of the Countrey, they informed the King of Assyria thereof, desiring that some of the captiv'd Priests might be sent unto them, to teach them the manner and rites of his worship; which being accordingly done, they thenceforth (as the Text tells us) worshipped the Lord, yet feared their own gods too, and ſo did ἄμικτα μιγνύειν, as S. Chryſoſtome ſpeaks, mingle things not to be mingled.

John 4. 23.

In this medley they continued about three hundred years, till toward the end of the Perſian Monarchy. At what time it chanced that Manaſſe, brother to Jaddo, the High Prieſt of the returned Jews, married the daughter of Sanballat then Governour of Samaria: for which being expelled from Jeruſalem by Nehemiah, he fled to Sanballat his Father in Law; and after his example many other of the Jews of the beſt rank, having married ſtrange wives likewiſe, and loth to forgoe them, betook themſelves thither alſo. Sanballat willingly entertains them, and makes his ſon-in-Law Manaſſe their Prieſt. For whoſe greater reputation and ſtate, when Alexander the Great ſubdued the Perſian Monarchy, he obtained leave of him to build a Temple upon Mount Garizim, where his ſon-in-Law exerciſed the office of High Prieſt. This was exceedingly prejudicious to the Jews, and the occaſion of a continuall Schiſme, whilſt thoſe that were diſcontented or excommunicated at Jeruſalem were wont to betake themſelves thither: Yet by this means the Samaritans (having now one of the ſons of Aaron to be their Chief Prieſt, and ſo many other of the Jews, both Prieſts and others, mingled amongſt them) were brought at length to caſt off all their falſe gods, and to worſhip the Lord the God of Iſrael onely. Yet ſo, that howſoever they ſeemed to themſelves to be true worſhippers, and altogether free from Idolatry; nevertheleſs they retained a ſmack thereof, inaſmuch as they worſhipped the true God under a viſible repreſentation, to wit, of a Dove, and circumciſed their Children in the name thereof, as the Jewiſh Tradition tells us; who therefore alwayes branded their worſhip with עבודה זרה or ſpirituall Fornication: Juſt as their predeceſſors, the Ten Tribes, worſhipped the ſame God of Iſrael under the ſimilitude of a Calf.

This was the condition of the Samaritan Religion in our Saviour's time: and if we weigh the matter well, we ſhall finde his words here to the woman very pliable to be conſtrued with reference thereunto. You ask, ſaith he, of the true place of worſhip, whether Mount Garizim, or Jeruſalem: which is not now greatly materiall; foraſmuch as the time is at hand when men ſhall worſhip the Father at neither. But there is a greater difference between you and us then of Place, though you take no notice of it; namely, even about the Object of worſhip it ſelf: For ye worſhip what ye know not, but we (Jews) worſhip what we know. How is that? Thus; Ye worſhip indeed the Father, the God of Iſrael, as we doe; but you worſhip him under a corporeall repreſentation; wherein you ſhew you know him not: But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in Spirit and Truth. In Spirit, that is, conceiving of him no otherwiſe then in Spirit; and in Truth, that is, not under any corporeall or viſible ſhape: For God is a Spirit, and they that worſhip him muſt worſhip him in Spirit and Truth; ἀσωμάτως καὶ ἀληθῶς, not fancying him as a Body, but, as indeed he is, a Spirit. For thoſe who worſhip him under a corporeal ſimilitude, do belie him: according as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. 1. 23. of ſuch as changed the glory of the Incorruptible God into an Image made like to corruptible Man, Birds or Beaſts; They changed, ſaith he, the truth of God into a lie, and ſerved the creature, παρὰ τὸν κτίσαντα, juxta Creatorem, as or with the Creator who is bleſſed for ever, v. 25. Hence Idols in Scripture are termed Lies; as Amos 2. 4. Their Lies have cauſed them to erre, after which their Fathers walked: The Vulgar hath, Seduxerunt eos Idola ipſorum, Their Idols have cauſed them to erre. And Eſay 28. 15. We have made Lies our refuge. And Jer. 16. 19, 20. The Gentiles ſhall come from

Jer. 3. 10.

from the ends of the earth, and ſhall ſay, Surely our Fathers have poſſeſſed (the Chaldee hath פלחו have worſhipped) a lie; vanity, wherein there is no profit. Shall a man make Gods unto himſelf, and they are no Gods? John 4.23

This therefore I take to be the genuine meaning of this place, and not that which is commonly ſuppoſed againſt externall worſhip; which I think this Demonſtration will evince: To worſhip what they know, (as the Jews are ſaid to doe) and to worſhip in Spirit and Truth, are taken by our Saviour for one and the ſame thing, (elſe the whole ſenſe will be inconſequent:) But the Jews worſhipped not God without Rites and Ceremonies, (who yet are ſuppoſed to worſhip him in Spirit and Truth:) Ergo, To worſhip God without Rites and Ceremonies, is not to worſhip him in Spirit and Truth, according to the meaning here intended.

See the Homily againſt the peril of Idolatry p. 3. where the Text is peculiarly applied againſt worſhipping of God in an Image.

DISCOURSE XIII.

S. Luke 24. 45.

Then opened he their underſtanding, that they might underſtand the Scriptures: 46. And ſaid unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer, and to riſe from the dead the third day.

OUR Bleſſed Saviour, after he was riſen from the dead, told his Diſciples, not onely that his Suffering of death and Riſing again the third day was foretold in the Scriptures, but alſo pointed out thoſe Scriptures unto them, and opened their underſtanding, that they might underſtand them; that is, he expounded or explained them unto them: Certain it is therefore, that ſomewhere in the Old Teſtament theſe things were foretold ſhould befall Meſſiah. Yea S. Paul, 1 Cor. 15. 3, 4. will further aſſure us that they are; I delivered unto you, ſaith he, firſt of all, that which I alſo received, how that Chriſt died for our ſins, according to the Scriptures: And that he was buried, and that he roſe again the third day, according to the Scriptures. Both of them therefore are ſomewhere foretold in the Scriptures; and it becomes not us to be ſo ignorant as commonly we are, which thoſe Scriptures be which foretell them. It is a main point of our Faith, and that which the Jews moſt ſtumble at, becauſe their Doctors had not obſerved any ſuch thing foretold of Meſſiah. The more they were ignorant thereof, the more it concerns us to be confirmed therein. I thought good therefore to make this the Argument of my Diſcourſe at this time, to inform both you and my ſelf where theſe things are foretold, and, if I can, to point out thoſe very Scriptures which our Saviour here expounded to his Diſciples.

Which that I may the better doe, I will make the words fore-going my Text to be as the Pole-ſtar in this my ſearch: Theſe are the things (ſaith our Saviour) which I ſpake unto you while I was yet with you, that all things muſt be fulfilled which were written in the Law of Moſes, and in the Prophets, and in the Pſalms concerning me. Then follow the words I read, Then Luk. 24.45. opened he their understanding, &c. These two events therefore, of Messiah's death and rising again the third day, were foretold in these Three parts of Scripture, In the Law of Moses or Pentateuch, in the Nebiim or Prophets, and in the Psalms; and in these Three we must search for them. And first for the First, That Messiah should suffer death.

1. This was fore-signified in the Law or Pentateuch, First in the story of Abraham, where he was commanded to offer his son Isaac, the son wherein Gen. 22. 18. his seed should be called, and to whom the promise was entailed, That in it should all the Nations of the world be blessed. What was here acted else but the Mystery of Christ's Passion: to wit, That the promised seed should make all the Nations of the world blessed, by becoming a sacrifice for sin: which that it might be the more evident, the Place is also designed, the region of Mount Moriah; there Abraham was bid to offer his son Isaac, even where Messiah, who was then in the loins of Isaac, was one day to be offered upon the Cross.

The Second prediction in the Law of Messiah's suffering death, was by the slaying of Beasts, for atonement of sin, in their Sacrifices; which were nothing else but shadows and representations of that Offering upon the Cross which Messiah was one day to make of himself for the sins of the world. Which Mystery of the end of those Legal sacrifices was shewed in the former story of Abraham's offering Isaac: For when he had now brought his son to the place appointed, and had built an Altar, and was now ready to slay him, as he was commanded, the Angel of the Lord stayed his hand, and shewed him a Ramme caught in a thicket by the horns; which Ramme Abraham took, and offered for a burnt-offering in stead of his son; to signifie, that the offering of the Blessed seed was yet to be suspended, and that God in the mean while would accept the offerings of Bulls and Rammes, as a pledge of that expiation which the Blessed seed of Abraham in the loins of Isaac should one day make.

2. And thus much for the Law. Now I come to the Prophets, wherein I finde Three evident Prophecies, that Messiah should suffer death. The First is that famous one, the 53. of Esay, the whole Chapter through; I will not repeat it all, but some two or three passages thereof. Ver. 5. He was wounded, saith the Prophet, for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. Ver. 7. He was oppressed, he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth; he was brought as a Lamb to the slaughter, and as a Sheep before her Shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth. Ver. 8. He was cut off out of the land of the living; for the transgression of my people was he stricken. Now that this Prophecy was one of those by which the Apostles used to prove this Verity, appears by the story of the conversion of the Eunuch, Acts 8. unto whom Philip coming, whilst he was in his Chariot, reading this place of Scripture, and he thereupon asking Philip, of whom *Vers. 35. the Prophet spake these words; the *Text tells us, that Philip began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.

The Second place in the Prophets which foretells that Christ should suffer, is that in the ninth of Daniel, who pointing out the time of Messiah's coming by Seventy weeks, limits his count, not at his Birth, but at his Suf- Vers. 25, 26. fering, as the most principal moment of his story. From the going out of the commandement, saith he, to restore and build Jerusalem, unto Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and sixty two weeks——And after sixty two weeks shall Messiah be cut off. What can be more plain then this?

A Third place in the Prophets is to be found Zachary 12. 10. where, at the time when the Jews shall be converted, Christ is brought in speaking in this this manner; I will pour out, ſaith he, upon the houſe of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the ſpirit of grace and ſupplication, and they ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced. Hence it follows, that the Jews ſhould have pierced Meſſiah before they received him to be their Redeemer. And that this place alſo was one of thoſe applied by the Apoſtles to this purpoſe, appears by S. John's twice alledging it: Once in his Goſpel, when a Souldier with a Spear pierced our Saviours ſide; Then, ſaith he, was fulfilled that Scripture which ſaith, They ſhall look upon him whom they pierced: Again, in the beginning of his Revelation, Behold (ſaith he) he cometh in the clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee him, and they alſo which pierced him. Luk. 24.45 John 19. 37. Apoc. 1. 7.

Now for the Third diviſion of Scripture, the Pſalms, the chief, at leaſt, and principal place there which I dare warrant is that of the 16. Pſalm, v. 9, 10. quoted both by S. Peter and S. Paul in the Acts of the Apoſtles: My fleſh ſhall reſt in hope; For thou wilt not leave my ſoul in the grave, neither ſuffer thine Holy One to ſee corruption. For David, as S. Peter and S. Paul ſay, was buried, and his body ſaw corruption; therefore it cannot be ſpoken of him, but of Meßiah in the perſon of David, as a Type in whoſe loyns Meſſiah was. Now then if Meßiah's body were to be laid in the grave, it follows he was to die, and to be in the ſtate of the dead. 3. Acts 2. 26, 27. & Chap. 13. 35.

AND thus I have done the Firſt part of my task, and proved That Meßiah was to ſuffer death, according to the Scriptutes, namely, foretold in that Threefold diviſion of Scripture mentioned here by our Saviour, the Law, the Prophets, and the Pſalms. Now I come to prove the other part, That it behoved him alſo to riſe again the third day, according to the Scriptures.

And this was firſt foreſhewn in the ſame ſtory of Iſaac, wherein his ſacrifice or ſuffering was acted. For from the time that God commanded Iſaac to be offered for a burnt-offering, Iſaac was a dead man; but the third day he was releaſed from death. This the Text tells us expreſly, that it was the third day when Abraham came to Mount Moriah, and had his ſon, as it were, reſtored to him again; which circumſtance there was no need nor uſe at all to have noted, had it not been for ſome Myſtery. For had there been nothing intended but the naked ſtory, what did it concern us to know whether it were the third or the fifth day that Abraham came to Moriah, where he received his ſon from death? Now, that I have not miſapplied this figure, S. Paul is my witneſs, who expreſly makes this releaſe of Iſaac from ſlaughter a figure of the Reſurrection: For thus he ſpeaks of this whole ſtory, Hebrews 11. 17, 18, 19. By faith Abraham when he was tried, offered up Iſaac; and he that had received the promiſes, offered up his onely-begotten Son, Of whom it was ſaid, That in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called: Accounting that God was able to raiſe him up, even from the dead; from whence alſo he received him in a figure. 1. Gen. 22. 4.

The ſame was foreſhewed by the Law of Sacrifices, which were to be eaten before the third day; ſome Sacrifices were to be eaten the ſame day they were offered, but thoſe which were deferred longeſt, as the Peace-offerings, were to be eaten before the third day. The third day no ſacrifice might be eaten, but was to be burnt: If it were eaten, it was not accepted for an atonement, but counted an abomination: namely, to ſhew that the Sacrifice of Meßiah, which theſe Sacrifices repreſented, was to be finiſhed the third day by his riſing from the dead; and therefore the Type thereof determined within that time, beyond which time it was not accepted for atonement of ſinne, becauſe then it was no longer a Type of him.

Thus farre the Law. As for the Prophets, I finde no expreſs Prediction in them for the time of Chriſt's riſing (For that of the caſe of the Prophet Jonah, I take to be rather an Alluſion then a Prophecy:) onely in ge- 2.

neral, That Christ should rise again, is implied both in that famous Prophecy Luk. 24. 45. of Esay the 53. and that of Zachary 12. In the former, forasmuch as it is Esay 53. 10. said, that after he had made his soul a sacrifice for sin, he should see his seed, and prolong his dayes, and the pleasure of the Lord should prosper in his hand:
V. 12. And again, that the Lord should divide him a portion with the great, and that he should divide the spoil with the strong, because he had poured out his soul unto death: Which argues that he should not onely live again, but be Zach. 12. 10. victorious after he had died. In that of Zachary it is said, the Jews should look upon, or see, him whom they had formerly pierced; and, that in that day he would pour upon them the spirit of grace and supplication: therefore he was to live again after they had pierced him.

3. I come to the Psalms, where not onely his Rising again is propheſied of, but the Time thereof determined; though at firſt ſight it appears not ſo: namely, in that fore-alledged paſſage of the ſixteenth Psalm, Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in Hell, nor ſuffer thine Holy One to ſee corruption. All men ſhall riſe again, but their bodies muſt firſt return to duſt, and ſee corruption. But Meſſiah was to riſe again before he ſaw corruption: If before, then the third day at fartheſt; for then the Body naturally begins to ſee corruption. This may be gathered by the ſtory of Lazarus in the Goſpel, where Jeſus
* John 11. 39. commanding the ſtone to be rolled from his Grave, * Martha his ſiſter anſwered, Lord, by this time he ſtinketh; for he hath been dead four daies. Alſo by that Rule given by the Maſters of Phyſick, That thoſe who die of the Apoplexie, ſuffocation of the Mother, or like ſudden deaths, ſhould not be buried till ſeventy two hours were paſt; becauſe within that time they might revive; and Examples are given of thoſe who have done ſo. They give alſo a reaſon of it in nature: Becauſe, ſay they, in that time the Humours of the Body make their revolution; the Phlegm in one day or twenty four hours, the Choler in two dayes or forty eight hours, the Melancholy in three dayes, which is ſeventy two hours; and this to be the reaſon why an Ague founded in an inflammation of Phlegm returns every day, an Ague which comes from Choler every other day, an Ague from Melancholy every third day. Now if a Body may be kept ſo long unburied, it is ſuppoſed it may continue ſo long uncorrupted; (namely where a corruption is not begun before death, as in ſome diſeaſes) but longer it will not continue. When therefore it is ſo often inculcated in the New Teſtament, that our Saviour ſhould riſe again the third day; the Holy Ghoſt, in ſo ſpeaking, reſpects not ſo much the number of daies, as the fulfilling of Scripture, That Meſſiah's body ſhould not ſee corruption, but ſhould riſe before the time wherein dead bodies begin to corrupt: and indeed our Saviour roſe again within forty hours after he gave up the Ghoſt, and was not two full dayes in the grave. Therefore, if there be any other Scripture which implies Meſſiah ſhould riſe before his Body ſhould ſee corruption, that Scripture, whatſoever it be, ſhews he ſhould riſe again within three daies.

DISCOURSE

DISCOURSE XIV.

Exodus 4. 25.

Then Zipporah took a ſharp ſtone, and cut off the fore-skin of her ſon, and caſt it at his feet, and ſaid, כִּי חֲתַן דָּמִים אַתָּה לִי, Sponſus ſanguinum tu mihi es.

THEN; that is, when ſhe ſaw the Angel of the Lord ready to kill Moſes her husband in the Inne, becauſe his ſon was not circumciſed; ſhe took a ſharp ſtone, (צר) that is, ſhe took a knife, which, according to the cuſtome then, was made of ſtone ſharped. This we may learn out of Joſhuah 5. 2. where the Lord ſays to Joſhuah, Make thee חֲרֻבוֹת צֻרִים, (ſharp knives, ſay we) according to the Hebrew, knives of ſtones, and circumciſe again the children of Iſrael. The Chaldee Paraphraſt hath, Make thee אומלון חריפין ſharp raſors: the Septuagint, μαχαίρας πετρίνας ſtone-knives.

Thus farre all is clear; but for the reſt we are to ſeek: Firſt, on whom the fault lay, and what was the reaſon of this omiſſion of Circumciſion: then, who and what is meant, when it is ſaid, ſhe caſt, or made the fore-skin to touch his feet: and above all, what is meant by Sponſus ſanguinum.

Zipporah is commonly reputed to have been a perverſe and froward woman; and Moſes, the meekeſt man on earth, to have had that miſhap in his choice which many a good man hath. The reaſon, becauſe ſhe not onely hindred her child from being circumciſed, out of ſome nicety and averſation thereof, as a cruel Ceremony: but alſo, when ſhe ſaw there was no remedy, but ſhe muſt doe it to ſave her husband's life, yet ſhe did it with an upbraiding indignation, telling him, that he was a bloudy husband, who muſt have ſuch a thing done unto his poor child. But I ſee no ground either for the one, or the other.

For that the Circumciſion of the child was not deferred out of any averſation of hers of that Ceremony, may be gathered, Firſt, becauſe ſhe was a Midianitèſſe, and ſo a daughter of Abraham by Keturah, and therefore well enough acquainted with and inured to that Rite, which not onely her Nation, the Midianites, but all the Nations deſcended of Abraham obſerved; as may be ſeen in the Iſmaelites or Saracens, who learned not this Ceremony firſt from Mahomet, but retained it as an ancient cuſtome of their Nation. Secondly, She had ſuffered already her elder ſon Gerſhom to be circumciſed; wherefore then ſhould we think ſhe was averſe ſtom the circumciſion of this? For that this child, for whom Moſes was now in danger, was Eliezer his youngeſt ſon, it cannot be denied; foraſmuch as it is evident that Moſes at this time was the Father of two ſons, which, by reaſon (as may ſeem) of this diſturbance he ſent back with his wife unto her Father Jethro, as we may read in the 18. Chapter of this Book. By which it may be gathered, that the cauſe of this omiſſion of Circumciſion was not any averſeneſs in Zipporah from that Rite; but rather, becauſe they were in their journey when the child was born; and ſo having no convenient time or place to reſt in till the wound might be healed, and thinking Exod. 4. 25. thinking it might endanger the infant's life, to be tossed up and down whilst the wound was green, in so long and tedious a voyage, they resolved to deferre the circumcision. And that Zipporah was delivered of this child when they had begun this journey for Egypt, may be gathered by this, because Moses, before God's sending him, hath but one child mentioned, namely Gershom: For what reason can be given, why, if Eliezer had been then born, he should not have been mentioned also? But howsoever this case of travell afterward excused the Israelites in the Wilderness, for deferring the circumcision of their children then; yet could it not excuse Moses here, in regard it was necessitas accersita, he being not forced to take his wife and children with him, (especially his wife being in that case) but might have sent her and them back presently to her Father; as upon this admonition he did. Nor was it indeed fit, when God sent him upon such a business, to carry such an encumbrance with him.

Thus have we freed Zipporah from the first charge, of being the cause of this omission out of any averseness to the Divine Ordinance. Now I come to shew likewise, that the words she spake at the time of circumcision, Sponsus sanguinum tu mihi es, were no words of upbraiding indignation to her husband, (as is supposed) but have a far other meaning.

For I believe not she spake these words to Moses, but to her Child whom she circumcised, as the Formula then used in Circumcision; namely, that as the fore-skin fell down at her Child's feet, (not Moses, or the Angel's feet) she pronounced the Verba solennia, the solemn formal words then in use, Tu mihi sponsus sanguinum.

My Reasons are, First, Because a Husband is not wont to be called Sponsus after the wedding solemnity is past; nor can there any such example be shewn in Scripture: Ergo, it is not like that Zipporah, after she was the mother of two children, should say to her Husband, Sponsus sanguinum tu mihi es, A bloudy Husband art thou to me.

Secondly, Because חֹתֵן, the word here translated Sponsus, properly signifies Gener, a Son-in-law, and Sponsus, a Husband or a Bridegroom, onely by way of equivalence or coincidence, (because to be made son-in-law to the Parents, is by being the daughter's Sponsus.) My meaning is, that חתן, the word used, signifies not the relation of the Bridegroom to his Bride; but his relation to his Bride's Parents, by taking their daughter to wife. And therefore in the whole Scripture we shall never find it relatively used, or with an affix, but onely in respect to the wives Father or Mother. And of the same condition is the word כַּלָּה which we often by equivalence translate a Bride, but properly signifies Nurus, a daughter-in-law. Wherefore we shall never find the Bridegroom calls the Bride his כלה, nor the Bride the Bridegroom her חתן, or that they are called so by others; but onely the Husband his Father and Mother-in-laws חתן, and the Wife her Father and Mother-in-laws כלה. In a word, there is no word in the Hebrew Tongue which signifies a Bridegroom and Bride, as they stand in relation each to other, but as to each others Parents onely. Whence it is remarkable that in the Canticles, when this relation comes to be expressed on the Bride's behalf, it is alwaies done by addition of the word אחותי, that is, my Sister, as אחותי כלה, the Callah or Nurus my Sister, which we translate by equivalence, Soror mea Sponsa, my Sister, my Spouse. Now if this be true, I see not how Zipporah could call Moses here her חתן, by saying to him חתן sanguinum tu mihi es: For she should have called him her son-in-law, and not her Husband: Ergo, She spake the words to the Child, and not to Him.

Thirdly, For a farther probability hereof, the Jewish Rabbins tell us, מנהג הנשים לקרא לבן כאשר ימול חתן, That it was the custome of women to call call their child when he was circumciſed, חתן, (the word here turned Spanſus.) So Aben Ezra upon this place. Rabbi Levi, חתן in principio connubii vocatur, &c. In the beginning of marriage he is called חתן that is promiſed or contracted to another: Thence is the word tranſlated and borrowed to ſignifie the beginning of other things; as when the Infant newly circumciſed is called by the women חתן, for then the child begins firſt to be initiated in the ſervice of God. The like hath Rabbi David Kimchi in his Lexicon, who conjectures withall, that חתן ſhould have ſome ſignification of cauſing new joy, and thence to be uſed both at the day of Marriage, and day of Circumciſion. Exod. 4. 25.

Fourthly, From this cuſtome to call a child at his circumciſion חתן, with the Arabians (who are of Abraham's poſterity, and ſtill uſe, and anciently uſed, this Rite) Chatan is to circumciſe, Chiten Circumciſion, מחתן Machtun, circumciſed, as is ordinarily to be ſeen in their Tranſlation of the New Teſtament. Whence come this, but from the manner of calling a child חתן when he was circumciſed? (Even as we, becauſe a child in Baptiſm is made a Chriſtian, uſe the word Chriſten for to Baptize, and Chriſtened for Baptized.) And Zipporah was an Arabiſs, and the Arabian tongue of near affinity with the Hebrew.

Betrothing is by S. Baſil called ἀρχαὶ τῶν γάμων, the beginnings of marriage, and is ἐπαγγελία τῶν μελλόντων γάμων, a promiſe of the future marriage.

Fifthly, This expoſition is agreeable to the following words, וַיִּרֶף מִמֶּנּוּ אָז אָמְרָה חֲתַן דָּמִים לַמּוּלוֹת, And he let him goe, when ſhe had ſaid, Sponſus ſanguinum, hoc eſt, circumciſionis; that is, The Angel let Moſes goe, as ſoon as thoſe ſolennia verba, Sponſus ſanguinum, were out of Zipporah's mouth. So the Vulgar rightly tranſlates it; Et dimiſit eum, poſtquam dixerat, Sponſus ſanguinum, ob circumciſionem. For אָז is here (as elſewhere) for מֵאָז, extunc, ab eo tempore, poſtquam, from the time, after that, not ſimply tunc, then, as we tranſlate it. Namely, as the deſtroying Angel, Exodus 12. 23. when he ſaw the bloud of the Paſchal Lamb upon the lintels and ſide-poſts of the Iſraelites doors, paſſed by them, and deſtroyed them not: ſo the Angel here, when he ſaw the bloud of the Circumciſion upon Moſes his child, let Moſes goe, and ſlew him not. In theſe words, if you mark it, the Holy Ghoſt expounds what Zipporah meant by thoſe words, Sponſus ſanguinum, that is, Sponſus circumciſionis: Et dimiſit eum poſtquam dixit, חֲתַן דָּמִים לַמּוּלוֹת, Sponſus ſanguinum, id eſt, circumciſionis. But if Sanguis here be Circumciſion, and ſo Sponſus Sanguinum be Sponſus Circumciſionis, then are not theſe words ſpoken of or to Moſes, but unto the Child.

HAVING thus proved what I took in hand, That theſe words were not ſpoke by Zipporah to Moſes, but as ſolennia verba in that caſe to her Child whom ſhe circumciſed; it remains, I ſhould now tell you how they are ſo conſtrued. I ſay therefore, Tu mihi ſponſus ſanguinum, in Zipporah's meaning, is as much as Sis mihi initiatus circumciſione, Be thou my Bloud-ſon, or the like. It is well known how Tropically thoſe words of relation of kindred, Father, Mother, Siſter, Son, are uſed in the Hebrew Tongue; and Son, beſides other notions, to be often the circumlocution of our vox concreta; as Filius percuſſionis, the Son of ſtriking, is he that is ſtrucken, or, worthy to be beaten; Filius fœderis, the Son of the Covenant, is he that is in Covenant, or, to whom the Covenant belongs; Filius mortis, the Son of death, he that is condemned to die, or worthy of death; and the like. And why may not then חֲתַן דָּמִים, Gener ſanguinum, that is, as the Holy Ghoſt expounds it, circumciſionis, be as much as circumciſus, and Gener ſanguinum tu mihi es (for ſo I told you חתן ſignifies) be as much as, I pronounce thee circumciſed? As if the circumciſed perſon, by being married to Circumciſion, were made the Circumciſer's Son-in-law, and Circumciſion's Bridegroom; as Es, or Sis, mihi in generum, deſponſatus

Thus in Deut. 25. 2. בֶּן הַכּוֹת is by the LXX. rendred ἄξιος πληγῶν.

Exod. 4. 25. ſatus circumciſioni, Now thou art, or Be thou, my Son-in-law, being eſpouſed to Circumciſion.

Or if Blood or Circumciſion note the Inſtrument, the Formula may be thus explicated; That the perſon circumciſed becomes God's Son-in-law, as being wedded and joyned to his Church by the Bloud of Circumciſion, as with a Ring: and then the pronoun לי mihi muſt not be taken relatively to Zipporah, as before, but efficienter onely in this ſenſe, Per me factus es gener Deo per ſanguinem circumciſionis, By me thou art made God's Son-in-law by the bloud of Circumciſion, or Feci te generum Deo, I have made thee God's Son-in-law; or, (if you like better the notion of Sponſus,) I have eſpouſed thee to the Church of God, by this rite of Circumciſion; or, Thou art, or, Be thou, eſpouſed to the Church of God, &c. Thus, as you ſee, may the Formula be either way explicated to one and the ſame ſenſe. But the firſt I like the beſt, becauſe of לי mihi the relative to Zipporah, Tu mihi in generum es, deſponſatus circumciſioni, Now thou art my Son-in-law, being eſpouſed to Circumciſion.

Now laſtly, to free my Interpretation from novelty, the ſenſe I have given of theſe words is that which both the Septuagint and the Chaldee Paraphraſt directly aime at: the Paraphraſt expounding it thus, In ſanguine circumciſionis iſtius datus eſt ſponſus, or gener, mihi; the Septuagint, as we now read, thus, Ἔστι τὸ αἷμα τῆς περιτομῆς τοῦ παιδίου μου, Stetit ſanguis circumciſionis filii mei: where the Text is corrupted, and I believe the Septuagint tranſlated not Ἔστι, but Ἔστω, Sit hic ſanguis circumciſionis Filii mei; a Periphraſticall, but evident ſenſe, with the change of one letter onely.

From the ſenſe of this place thus proved, I will point at two Obſervations, and ſo conclude.

The Firſt is, That it is lawfull to uſe ſome fitting Form of words in the exhibition of a Sacrament, though not expreſly ordained by God at the inſtitution thereof; as appears by this Form that Zipporah uſed, no doubt ex more, according to the cuſtome then, whatſoever the Form were after that time.

The Second is, That the neglect of the Circumciſion of a child then, and ſo conſequently of Baptizing it now, makes not ſo much the Child as the Parents liable to the wrath of God: As here the Angel ſought not to kill the Child, who was uncircumciſed, but Moſes the Father, who ſhould have circumciſed it. Both which Obſervations I mean to amplifie no farther, but leave them to your exacter meditations; and ſo I conclude.

DISCOURSE

DISCOURSE XV.

EZEKIEL 20. 20.

Hallow my Sabbaths; and they ſhall be a ſigne between me and you, to acknowledge that I Jehovah am your God.

THIS Commandement, with the End thereof, the Lord bids Ezekiel tell the Elders of Iſrael, that he gave it to their Fathers in the Wilderneſs. And it is recorded in the Law; ſo that I might have taken it thence: But I rather choſe to make theſe words in Ezekiel my Text, as expreſſed more plainly, and ſo a Comment to thoſe in the Law. The place there is Exod. 31.13. where this which my Text containeth is expreſſed thus, Verily my Sabbaths ye ſhall keep; for it is a ſigne between me and you throughout your generations, to acknowledge that I Jehovah am your ſanctifier, that is, your God; as the expreſſion in Ezekiel tells us: For to be the Sanctifier of a People, and to be their God, is all one: whence alſo the Lord is ſo often called in Scripture the Holy One of Iſrael, that is, their Sanctifier and their God.

That which I intend at this time to obſerve from theſe words is, the End why God commanded this Obſervation of the Sabbath to the Iſraelites; to wit, That thereby, as by a Symbolum or Signe, they might teſtifie and profeſs what God they worſhipped. Secondly, out of this ground to ſhew How farre, and in what manner, the like Obſervation binds us Chriſtians, who are worſhippers of the ſame God whom the Jews worſhipped, though not under the ſame relation altogether wherein they worſhipped him.

All Nations had ſomething in their Ceremonies whereby they ſignified the God they worſhipped. So in thoſe of the Celeſtiall Gods, (as they termed them,) and thoſe which were Deified Souls of men, were differing Rites, whereby the one was known from the other: Thoſe Gods which were made of men, having Funerall rites in their ſervices, as Cogniſances that they were Souls deceaſed; and each of them ſome imitation of ſome remarkable paſſage of the Legend of their lives, either of ſome action done by them, or ſome accident which befell them; as in the ceremonies of Oſyris and Bacchus is obvious to any that reads them. And indeed it is a naturall Decorum for ſervants and vaſſals, by ſome mark or cogniſance to teſtifie who is their Lord and Maſter. In the Revelation, the worſhippers of the Beaſt receive his mark, and the worſhippers of the Lamb carry his mark and his Father's in their Fore-heads. Hence came the firſt uſe of the Croſs in Baptiſme, as the mark of Chriſt, the Deity to whom we are initiated; and the ſame afterwards uſed in all Benedictions, Prayers and Thankſgivings, in token they were done in the name and merits of Chriſt crucified: So that in the Primitive Church this Rite was no more but that wherewith we conclude all our Prayers and Thankſgivings, when we ſay, Through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord and Saviour; though afterward it came to be abuſed, as almoſt all other Rites of Chriſtianity, to abominable Superſtition.

To return therefore unto my Text. Agreeably to this Principle, and this Cuſtome of all Religions, of all Nations, of all Vaſſals, the Lord Jehovah, Creatour of Heaven and Earth, ordained to his people this I.

Ezek. 20. 20. Obſervation of the Sabbath-day, for a Signe and Cogniſance that he ſhould be their God, and no other. It is for a ſigne, ſaith he, between me and you, that I Jehovah am your God. And beſides in the place I quoted before, the 31. of Exod. 16, 17. are theſe words; The children of Iſrael ſhall keep the Sabbath, to obſerve the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetuall Covenant. It is a ſigne between me and the children of Iſrael for ever: for in ſix dayes the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the ſeventh day he reſted: As if he had ſaid, It is a Signe that the Creatour of heaven and earth is your God.

But for the more diſtinct underſtanding of this ſignification, we muſt know that the Sabbath includes two reſpects of time: Firſt, the quotum, one day of ſeven, or the Seventh day after ſix dayes labour; Secondly, the deſignation or pitching that Seventh upon the day we call Saturday. In both, the Sabbaticall obſervation was a ſigne and profeßion that Jehovah, and no other, was the God of Iſrael: the firſt, according to his attribute of Creatour, the ſecond, of Deliverer of Iſrael out of Egypt. For by ſanctifying the Seventh day, after they had laboured ſix, they profeſſed themſelves vaſſals and worſhippers of that onely God who created the Heaven and the Earth, and having ſpent ſix dayes in that great work, reſted the ſeventh day; and therefore commanded them to obſerve this ſutable diſtribution of their time, as a badge and livery that their Religious ſervice was appropriate to him alone. And this is that which the Fourth Commandement in the reaſon given from the Creation intendeth, and no more but this.

But ſeeing they might profeſs this acknowledgement as well by any other ſix dayes working, and a ſeventh's reſting, as by thoſe they pitched upon, there being ſtill (what ſix dayes ſoever they had laboured, and what ſeventh ſoever they had reſted) the ſame conformity with their Creatour; let us ſee the reaſon why they pitched upon thoſe ſix dayes wherein they laboured, for labouring dayes, rather then any other; and why they choſe that Seventh day, namely Saturday, to hallow and reſt in, rather then any other.

And this was, that they might profeſs themſelves ſervants of Jehovah their God in a relation and reſpect peculiar and proper to themſelves; to wit, that they were the ſervants of that God which redeemed Iſrael out of the Land of Egypt and out of the houſe of bondage: and upon the morning-watch of that very day which they kept for their Sabbath, he overwhelmed Pharaoh and all his Hoſt in the Red Sea, and ſaved Iſrael that day out of the hand of the Egyptians. This I gather from the repetition of the Decalogue, Deut. 5. where that reaſon from the world's Creation (in the Decalogue given at Horeb) being left out, Moſes inſerts this other of the Redemption of Iſrael out of Egypt in ſtead thereof; namely, as the reaſon why thoſe ſix dayes rather then any other ſix for work, and that Seventh day rather then any other ſeventh for reſt, were pitched upon, as Iſrael obſerved them. Remember, ſaith he, V. 15. thou wert a ſervant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence, through a mighty hand and a ſtretched-out arme: Therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath-day: Namely, not for the quotum of one day of ſeven, (for of that another reaſon was given, the example of God in the Creation) but for the deſignation of the day.

Exod. 14. 24, 27, 30.

But whether this day were in order the ſeventh from the Creation or not, the Scripture is ſilent; for where it is called in the Commandement the ſeventh day, that is in reſpect of the ſix dayes of labour, and not otherwiſe: and therefore, whenſoever it is ſo called, thoſe ſix dayes of labour are mentioned mentioned with it. The ſeventh day therefore is the ſeventh after the ſix dayes of labour, nor can any more be inferred from it: The example of the Creation is brought for the quotum, one day of ſeven, as I have ſhewed, and not for the deſignation of any certain day for that ſeventh. Nevertheleſs, it might fall out ſo, by diſpoſition of Divine Providence, that the Jews deſigned Seventh day was both the ſeventh in order from the Creation, and alſo the day of their deliverance out of Egypt. But the Scripture no where tells us it was ſo, (howſoever moſt men take it for granted) and therefore it may as well be not ſo. Certain I am, the Jews kept not that day for a Sabbath till the raining of Manna: For that which ſhould have been their Sabbath the week before, had they then kept the day which afterward they kept, was the fifteenth day of the ſecond moneth; on which day we reade, in the 16. of Exodus, that they marched a wearifome march, and came at night into the wilderneſs of Sin, where they murmured for their poor entertainment, and wiſhed they had died in Egypt: that night the Lord ſent them Quailes, the next morning it rained Manna, which was the ſixteenth day, and ſo ſix dayes together; the ſeventh, which was the twenty ſecond, it rained none, and that day they were commanded to keep for their Sabbath. Now if the twenty ſecond day of the moneth were the Sabbath, the fifteenth ſhould have been, if that day had been kept before; but the Text tells us expreſly, they marcht that day: and, which is ſtrange, the day of the moneth is never named, unleſs it be once, for any ſtation but this where the Sabbath was ordained; otherwiſe it could not have been known that that day was ordained for a day of reſt, which before was none. And why might not their day of holy reſt be altered, as well as the beginning of the yeare was, for a memoriall of their coming out of Egypt? I can ſee no reaſon why it might not, nor finde any teſtimony to aſſure me it was not.

Ezek. 20. 20.

Numb. 10.

And thus much of the Jews Sabbath, How and wherein it was a Signe whereby they profeſſed themſelves the ſervants of Jehovah, and no other God.

Now I come to the Second thing I propounded, to ſhew How farre, and in what manner, the like obſervation binds us Chriſtians. II.

I ſay therefore, that the Chriſtian, as well as the Jew, after ſix dayes ſpent in his own works, is to ſanctifie the ſeventh, that he may profeſs himſelf thereby a ſervant of God, the Creatour of Heaven and Earth, as well as the Jew. For the quotum therefore, the Jew and Chriſtian agree; but in deſignation of the day they differ. For the Chriſtian chuſeth for his Holy Day that which with the Jews was the Firſt day of the week, and calls it Dominicam the Lord's Day, that he might thereby profeſs himſelf a ſervant of that God who on the morning of that day vanquiſhed Satan, the Spiritual Pharaoh, and redeemed us from our Spiritual thraldome, by raiſing Jeſus Chriſt our Lord from the dead, begetting us, in ſtead of an earthly Canaan, to an inheritance incorruptible in the Heavens. In a word, the Chriſtian, by the day he hallows, profeſſes himſelf a Chriſtian, that is, as S. Paul ſpeaks, To believe on him that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead. So that the Jew and Chriſtian both, though they fall not upon the ſame day, yet make their deſignation of their day upon the like ground: the Jews, the memoriall-day of their deliverance from the temporal Egypt and temporal Pharaoh; the Chriſtians, the memoriall-day of their deliverance from the ſpiritual Egypt and ſpiritual Pharaoh. But might not (will you ſay) the Chriſtian as well have obſerved the Jewiſh for his ſeventh day, as the day he doth? I anſwer, No; he might not: For in ſo doing he ſhould ſeem not to acknowledge his Redemption to be already performed, but ſtill

Rom. 4. 24. 1 Pet. 1. 4.

Ezek. 20. 20. expected. For the deliverance of Iſrael out of Egypt by the Miniſtery of Moſes, was intended for a Type and pledge of the Spiritual deliverance which was to come by Chriſt: their Canaan alſo, to which they marched, being a Type of that Heavenly inheritance which the redeemed by Chriſt do look for. Since therefore the Shadow is now made void by the coming of the Subſtance, the Relation is changed, and God is no longer to be worſhipped and believed in as a God fore-ſhewing and aſſuring by Types, but as a God who hath performed the Subſtance of what he promiſed. And this is that which S. Paul means, Coloſſians 2. 16, 17. where he ſaith, Let no man judge you [henceforth] in reſpect of a Feaſt-day, New-moon, or Sabbath-dayes: Which were a ſhadow of things to come, but the body is of Chriſt.

DISCOURSE XVI.

1 Cor. 11. 5.

Πᾶσα γυνὴ προσευχομένη ἢ προφητεύουσα ἀκατακαλύπτῳ τῇ κεφαλῇ, καταισχύνει τὴν κεφαλὴν ἑαυτῆς. Every woman praying or propheſying with her head uncovered, diſhonoureth her head.

I HAVE choſen this of the woman, rather then that of the man going before it, for the Theme of my Diſcourſe; Firſt, Becauſe I conceive the Fault, at the reformation whereof the Apoſtle here aimeth, in the Church of Corinth, was the womens onely, not the mens. That which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of a man praying or propheſying, being by way of ſuppoſition, and for illuſtration of the unſeemlineſs of that guiſe which the women uſed. Secondly, Becauſe the condition of the Sex in the words read, makes ſomething for the better underſtanding of that which is ſpoken of both; as we ſhall ſee preſently.

The Diſcourſe I intend to make upon the Text ſhall conſiſt of theſe two parts. Firſt, of an Enquiry, What is here meant by Propheſying, a thing attributed to women, and therefore undoubtedly ſome ſuch thing as they were capable of. Secondly, What was this Fault, for matter and manner, of the women of the Church of Corinth, which the Apoſtle here reproveth.

To begin with the Firſt, and which I am like to dwell longeſt upon: Some take Propheſying here, in the ſtricter ſenſe, to be foretelling of things to come, as that which in thoſe Primitive times both men and women did, by the pouring out of the Holy Ghoſt upon them; according to that of the Joel 2. 28. Acts 2. 17. Prophet Joel, applied by S. Peter to the ſending of the Holy Ghoſt at the firſt promulgation of the Goſpel, I will pour out my Spirit upon all fleſh, and your ſons and daughters ſhall propheſie, and your young men ſhall ſee viſions. And that ſuch Propheteſſes as theſe were thoſe four Daughters of Philip the Evangeliſt, whereof we read Acts 21. 9.

Others take Propheſying here in a more large notion, namely, for the gift of interpreting and opening Divine myſteries contained in Holy Scripture, for the inſtruction and edification of the Hearers; eſpecially, as it was then inſpired and ſuggeſted in extraordinary manner by the Holy Spirit, as Prophecy was given of old; according to that of S. Peter, Prophecy came not in old 2 Pet. 1. 21.

time by the will of man, but holy men of God ſpake as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt. So becauſe many in the beginning of the Goſpel were guided by a like inſtinct in the interpretation and application of Scripture, they were ſaid to Propheſie. Thus the Apoſtle uſeth it in the fourteenth Chapter of this Epiſtle, where he diſcourſes of ſpiritual Gifts, and before all preferres that of Prophecy; becauſe he that propheſieth (ſaith he) ſpeaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort. 1 Cor. 14. 3.

1 Cor. 11. 5.

But neither of theſe kinds of Prophecy ſute with the perſon in my Text, which is a woman. For it is certain the Apoſtle ſpeaks here of Propheſying in the Church or Congregation; but in the Church a woman might not ſpeak, no not ſo much as ask a queſtion for her better inſtruction, much leſs teach and inſtruct others, and thoſe men. This the Apoſtle teacheth us in this very Epiſtle, Chapter the fourteenth; even there where he diſcourſeth ſo largely of thoſe kinds of Prophecy. Let your women (ſaith he) keep ſilence in the Churches: For it is not permitted unto them to ſpeak, ἀλλ' ὑποτάσσεσθαι, but to be ſubject. And if they will learn, let them ask their husbands at home. Again in 1 Tim. 2. 11, 12. Let the woman learn in ſilence with all ſubjection. But I ſuffer not a woman to teach, nor to uſurp authority over the man, but to be in ſilence. Verſ. 34, 35.

Note here, that to ſpeak in a Church-Aſſembly, by way of teaching or inſtructing others, is an act of ſuperiority, which therefore a woman might not doe; becauſe her ſex was to be in ſubjection, and ſo to appear before God in garb and poſture which conſiſted therewith; that is, ſhe might not ſpeak to inſtruct men in the Church, but to God ſhe might.

To avoid this difficulty, ſome would have the word προφητεύεσθαι, in my Text, to be taken paſſively, namely, for to hear or be preſent at Prophecy, which is an acception without example either in Scripture or any where elſe. It is true, the Congregation is ſaid to pray, when the Prieſt onely ſpeaks; but that they ſhould be ſaid to preach who are preſent onely at the hearing of a Sermon, is a Trope without example. For the reaſon is not alike: In prayer the Prieſt is the mouth of the Congregation, and does what he does in their names, and they aſſent to it by ſaying Amen. But he that preaches or propheſies is not the mouth of the Church, to ſpeak ought in their names, that ſo they might be ſaid to ſpeak too; but he is the mouth of God ſpeaking to them. It is not likely therefore, that thoſe who onely hear another ſpeaking or propheſying to them, ſhould be ſaid προφητεύειν to propheſy; no more, as I ſaid, then that all they ſhould be ſaid to preach who were at the hearing of a Sermon.

What ſhall we doe then? Is there any other acception of the word Propheſying left us, which may fit our turn? Yes, there is a Fourth acception, which, if it can be made good, will ſute our Text better (I think) then any of the former; to wit, that Propheſying here ſhould be taken for praiſing God in Hymns and Pſalms: For ſo it is fitly coupled with praying; Praying and Praiſing being the parts of the Chriſtian Liturgie. Beſides, our Apoſtle alſo in the fourteenth Chapter of this Epiſtle joyns them both together; I will pray, ſaith he, with the ſpirit, and will pray with underſtanding alſo: I will ſing with the ſpirit, and I will ſing, that is, propheſie, with underſtanding alſo. For, becauſe Prophets of old did Three things; firſt, foretell things to come; ſecondly, notifie the will of God unto the people; and thirdly, utter themſelves in Muſical wiſe, and, as I may ſo ſpeak, in a Poetical ſtrain and compoſure: hence it comes to paſs that to propheſie in Scripture ſignifies the doing of any of theſe Three things, and amongſt the reſt, to praiſe God in Verſe or Muſical compoſure. Verſ. 15.

This to be ſo as I ſay, I ſhall prove unto you out of two places of Scripture: and firſt out of the firſt of Chronicles, Chap. 25. where the word Propheſie is three ſeveral times thus uſed. I will alledge the words of the Text at large, becauſe I cannot well abbreviate them. Thus therefore it ſpeaks; Verſ. 1. Moreover, David and the Captains of the Hoſt ſeparated to the ſervice of the ſons of Aſaph, and of Heman, and of Jeduthun, who ſhould propheſie with Harps, with Pſalteries, and with Cymbals: and the number of the men of Office, according to their ſervice, was, 2. Of the ſons of Aſaph; Zaccur, and Joſeph, and Nethaniah, and Aſarelah, the ſons of Aſaph, under the hands of Aſaph, which propheſied according to the order of the King. 3. Of Jeduthun; the ſons of Jeduthun, Gedaliah, and Zeri, and Jeſhaiah, Haſhabiah, and Mattithiah (and Schimei) ſix, under the hands of their father Jeduthun, who propheſied with a Harp, to give thanks and to praiſe the Lord. Lo here, to propheſie, and to give thanks (or confeſs) and to praiſe the Lord with ſpiritual ſongs, made all one. Nor needs ſuch a Notion ſeem ſtrange, whenas even among the Latins the word Vates ſignifieth both him that foretells things to come, and a Poet; for that the Gentiles Oracles were given likewiſe in Verſe: And S. Paul to Titus calls the Cretian Poet, Epimenides, a Prophet; as one, ſaith he, of their own Prophets ſaid, Expende etiam 2 Chron. 29. 30. & cap. 35. 15.

Tit. 1. 12.

Κρῆτες ἀεὶ ψεῦσται, κακὰ θηρία, γαστέρες ἀργαί·

And the Arabians (whoſe language comes the neareſt both in words and notions to the Hebrew) call a chief Poet of theirs (Princeps omnium Poëtarum (ſaith Erpenius) quos unquam vidit mundus) Muttenabbi, that is, Propheticans, or The Prophet κατ' ἐξοχήν.

Now then if Aſaph, Jeduthun and Heman propheſied, when they praiſed God in ſuch Pſalms as are entituled unto their ſeveral Quires, as we find them in the Pſalm-Book; (for know that all the Pſalms entituled To the ſons of Korah, belonged to the Quire of Heman who deſcended from Korah) why may not we, when we ſing the ſame Pſalms, be ſaid to propheſy likewiſe? namely, As he that uſeth a prayer compoſed by another, prayeth; and that according to the ſpirit of him that compoſed it: ſo he that praiſeth God with theſe ſpiritual and prophetical compoſures may be ſaid to propheſy according to that ſpirit which ſpeaketh in them.

And that Almighty God is well pleaſed with ſuch Service as this, may appear by that one ſtory of King Jehoſhaphat, in the ſecond of Chronicles, who when he marched forth againſt that great confederate Army of the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, the Text tells us, that having conſulted with his people, he appointed Singers unto the Lord, that ſhould praiſe the Beauty of holineſs, as they went out before the Army; and to ſay, Praiſe the Lord, for his mercy endureth for ever; (that is, they ſhould ſing the one hundred and ſixth Pſalm, or one hundred thirty ſixth Pſalm, which begin in this manner, and were both of them not unfit for ſuch an occaſion.) And when they began to ſing and praiſe, (ſaith the Text) the Lord ſet ambuſhments againſt the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, which were come againſt Judah; and they were ſmitten.

2 Chron. 20. 21.

Verſe 22.

A ſecond place where ſuch kind of Prophets and Propheſying as we ſpeak of are mentioned, is that in the firſt of Samuel, in the ſtory of Saul's election, where we read, that when he came to a certain place called The Hill of God, he met a company of Prophets coming down from the High place, (or Oratory there,) with a Pſaltery, and a Tabret, and a Pipe, and a Harp before them; and they propheſied, and he with them.

1 Sam. 10. 5, 10.

Their Inſtruments argue what kind of Prophecy this was; namely, Praiſing of God with ſpirituall ſongs and melody: In what manner, is not ſo eaſie to define or ſpecifie; but with an extemporary rapture, I eaſily believe. And if we may conjecture by other examples, One of them ſhould ſeem

to have been the Præcentor, and to utter the Verſe or Ditty; the reſt to have anſwered τὰ ἀκροτελεύτια, the extremes or laſt words of the Verſe: For after this manner we are told by Philo Judæus, that the Eſſeni (who were of the Jewiſh Nation) were wont to ſing their Hymns in their Σεμνεῖα or worſhipping-places. And after the ſelf-ſame manner, Euſebius tells us, did the Primitive Chriſtians; having in all likelihood learnt it from the Jews whoſe manner it was. The ſame is witneſſed by the Author Conſtitutionum Apoſtolicarum, in his ſecond Book and fifty ſeventh Chapter, where deſcribing the manner of the Chriſtian Service, After the reading of the Leſſons of the Old Teſtament, (ſaith he) ἱερός τις τὰς τῦ Δαβὶδ ψαλλέτω ὕμνους, καὶ ὁ λαὸς τὰ ἀκροστίχια ὑποψαλλέτω· Let another ſing the Pſalms of David, and the people ſuccinere, or anſwer, τὰ ἀκροστίχια, (i.e.) ἄκρα τῶν στίχων, the extremes of the verſes. Some footſteps of which Cuſtome remain ſtill with us, (though perhaps in ſomewhat a different way,) when in thoſe ſhort Verſicles of Liturgie, being Sentences taken out of the Pſalms, the Prieſt ſayes or ſings the firſt half, and the People anſwer the latter, quaſi τὰ ἀκροτελεύτια. As for example, in that taken out of Pſalm 51. 15. the Prieſt ſayes, O Lord, open thou our lips; the People or Chorus anſwers, And our mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe. But whatſoever the ancient manner of anſwering was, thus much we are ſure of, That the Jews in their Divine Lauds were wont to praiſe God after this manner, in Antiphons or Reſponſories; as (to let paſs other Teſtimonies, and the uſe of their Synagogues to this day derived from their Anceſtors) we may learn by two ſpecial Arguments. One from the Seraphims ſinging, Eſay 6. 3. where it is ſaid that the Seraphims cried one unto another, ſaying, Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God of Hoſts, the whole Earth is full of his Glory. Note, They cried one unto another. Secondly, from the uſe of the Hebrew verb עָנָה, which in the proper and native ſignification thereof being to anſwer, is alſo uſed for to ſing: as in Pſalm 147. 7. where we tranſlate, Sing unto the Lord with thankſgiving, ſing praiſe upon the Harp unto our God; in the Hebrew it is עֱנוּ, Anſwer unto the Lord in thankſgiving, ſing praiſe upon the Harp unto our God. And Eſay 27. 2. In that day ſing ye unto her, A vineyard of red wine: in the Hebrew, עֱנוּ־לָהּ Anſwer ye unto her. And Numbers 21. 17. in Iſrael's ſong of the Well, Spring up, O Well, ſing unto it: in the Hebrew it is, עֱנִי־לָהּ Anſwer unto it. And Moſes ſpeaking of thoſe that were worſhipping the golden Calf, Exodus 32. 18. It is not the voice of them that ſhout for maſtery, nor the voice of them that cry for being overcome; but the noiſe of them that ſing do I heare: in the Hebrew, קוֹל עַנּוֹת the voice of them that anſwer one another. And ſo in other places. But to put all out of doubt, look Ezra 3. 11. where it is expreſly ſaid, The Levites, the ſons of Aſaph, ſung together by courſe, in praiſing and giving thanks unto the Lord, Becauſe he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever. Hence was derived the manner of Praying and Praiſing God in the Chriſtian Service, alternis, in a Muſicall way, and, as it were, by way of propheſying and verſifying; even though we do but ſpeak it onely; as you know the Poet ſayes, ——Amant alterna Camœnæ. Thus I have taken occaſion ſomewhat to enlarge upon this particular; that we our ſelves might the better underſtand the reaſon of what we doe, and what precedents and whoſe example we follow therein. And thus much of Propheſying.

Note, To ſing ἀντιφώνως, i. alternis choris, and to anſwer ἀκροστίχια, are diverſe.

Vid Hook. l. 5. p. 261.

I COME now to the Second thing I propounded to ſpeak of; namely, What was that Fault among the Corinthians which the Apoſtle here taxeth. For the right underſtanding whereof, I ſay two things. Firſt, For the Offenders, that they were the women, and not the men: That which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh concerning men being by way of ſuppoſition onely, and

1 Cor. 11. 5. to illuſtrate his Argument againſt the uncomely guiſe of the women, à pari. This appears, becauſe his Concluſion ſpeaks of women onely, and nothing at all of men. Secondly, For the quality of the Fault, it was this; That the women at the time of praying and propheſying were unveiled in the Church; notwithſtanding it was then accounted an unſeemly and immodeſt guiſe for women to appear open and bare-faced in publick. How then, will you ſay, ſhould it come to paſs that Chriſtian women ſhould ſo much forget themſelves, as to tranſgreſs this Decorum in God's Houſe and Service, which they obſerved otherwhere? I anſwer, From a phantaſticall imitation of the manner of the She-Prieſts and Propheteſſes of the Gentiles, when they ſerved their Idols; as their Pythiæ, Bacchæ or Mænades, and the like; who uſed, when they uttered their Oracles, or celebrated rites and ſacrifices to their Gods, to put themſelves into a wild and extatical guiſe, having their faces diſcovered, their hair diſhevelled and hanging about their ears. This theſe Corinthian women (conceiting themſelves when they prayed or propheſied in the Church to be acting the parts of She-Prieſts, uttering Oracles like the Pythiæ or Sibyllæ, or celebrating ſacrifice as the Mænades or Bacchæ) were ſo fond as to imitate (as that ſex is prone to follow the faſhion) and accordingly caſt off their veils, and diſcovered their faces immodeſtly in the congregation, and thereby (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) diſhonoured their heads, that is, were unſeemly accoutred and dreſſed on their head.

Which he proveth by three Arguments. Partly from Nature, which having given women their Hair for a covering, taught them to be covered, as a Signe of ſubjection; the manner of this covering being to be meaſured by the cuſtome of the Nation. Partly by an Argument à pari, from men; for whom, even themſelves being Judges, it would be an uncomely thing to wear a veil, that is, a womans habit: ſo, by the like reaſon, was it as uncomely and abſurd for a woman to be without a veil, that is, in the guiſe and dreſs of a man. And howſoever the Devils of the Gentiles ſometimes took pleaſure in uncomelineſs and abſurd garbs and geſtures; yet the God whom they worſhipped, and his holy Angels who were preſent at their devotions, loved a comely accommodation, agreeable to Nature and Cuſtome, in ſuch as worſhipped him. For this cauſe therefore (ſaith he) ought a woman to have a covering on her Head, becauſe of the Angels. Laſtly, he concludes it from the Example and Cuſtome both of the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Churches; neither of which had any ſuch uſe, for their women to be unveiled in their ſacred aſſemblies: If any man (ſaith he) be contentious, (that is, will not be ſatisfied with theſe reaſons) let him know that we (that is, we of the Circumciſion) have no ſuch cuſtome, nor the Church of God. For ſo, with S. Ambroſe, Anſelme, and ſome of the Ancients, I take the meaning of the Apoſtle to be in thoſe words.

Thus you have heard briefly, What was the Fault of theſe Corinthian Dames, which the Apoſtle here taxeth. From which we our ſelves may learn thus much, That God requires a decent and comely accommodation in his Houſe in the act of his worſhip and ſervice: For if in their habit and dreſs, ſurely much more in their geſtures and deportment: he loves nothing that is unſeemly in the one or in the other.

DISCOURSE

DISCOURSE XVII.

TITUS 3. 5.

By the waſhing of Regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt.

THESE words (as it is eaſie to conceive upon the firſt hearing) are ſpoken of Baptiſm; of which I intend not by this choice to make any full or accurate Tractation, but onely to acquaint you (as I am wont) with my Thoughts concerning two Particulars therein, both of them mentioned in the words of my Text: One, From what propriety, analogy, or uſe of Water, the waſhing therewith was inſtituted for a Signe of new Birth, according as it is here called λουτρὸν παλιγγενεσίας, the waſhing of regeneration: The other, What is the proper Counter-type, or thing which the Water figureth in this Sacrament.

I will begin with the laſt firſt, becauſe the knowledge thereof muſt be ſuppoſed for the explication and more diſtinct underſtanding of the other. In every Sacrament, as ye well know, there is the outward Symbole or Sign, Res terrena; and the Signatum figured and repreſented thereby, Res cæleſtis. In this of Baptiſm, the Signe or Res terrena, the earthly thing, is Waſhing with water. The Queſtion is, what is the Signatum, the inviſible and celeſtiall thing, which anſwers thereunto. In our Catecheticall explications of this Myſtery, it is wont to be affirmed to be the Bloud of Chriſt; namely, That as Water waſheth away the filth of the Body, ſo the Bloud of Chriſt cleanſeth us from the guilt and pollution of Sin. And there is no queſtion but the Bloud of Chriſt is the Fountain of all the grace and good communicated unto us, either in this or any other Sacrament or Myſtery of the Goſpel. But that this ſhould be the ἀντίτυπον, the Counter-part, or thing figured by the Water in Baptiſm, I believe not; becauſe the Scripture, which muſt be our guide and direction in this caſe, makes it another thing, to wit, the Spirit or Holy Ghoſt; this to be that whereby the Soul is cleanſed and renewed within, as the Body with Water is without. So ſaith our Saviour to Nicodemus, John 3.5. Except a man be born of Water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdome of God. And the Apoſtle, in the words I have read, parallels the waſhing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, as Type and Counter-type: God (ſaith he) hath ſaved us (that is, brought us into the ſtate of ſalvation,) by the waſhing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt: where none, I trow, will deny that he ſpeaks of Baptiſm. The ſame was repreſented by that Viſion at our Saviour's Baptiſm, of the Holy Ghoſt's deſcending upon him, as he came out of the water, in the ſimilitude of a Dove: For I ſuppoſe that in that Baptiſm of his the Myſtery of all our Baptiſms was viſibly acted; and that God ſayes to every one truly baptized, as he ſaid to him, (in a proportionable ſenſe) Thou art my Son, in whom I am well pleaſed.

And how pliable the Analogy of Water is to typifie the Spirit, well appears by the figuring of the Spirit thereby in other places of Scripture. As in that of Eſay, I will pour water upon him that is thirſty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy ſeed, and my bleſſing upon thine off-ſpring; where the latter expounds the former. courſe of our Saviour with the Samaritan woman, John 4. 14. Whoſoever (ſaith he) drinketh of the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall never thirſt; but the water that I ſhall give him ſhall be in him a Well of water ſpringing up to everlaſting life. By that alſo, John 7. 37. where on the laſt day of the great Feaſt Jeſus ſtood and ſaid, If any man thirſt, let him come unto me, and drink: He that believeth on me, as the Scripture ſaith, (that is, as the Scripture is wont to expreſs it, for otherwiſe there is no ſuch place of Scripture to be found in all the Bible,) out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water. But this (ſaith the Evangeliſt V. 39.) he ſpake of the Spirit, which they that believe on him ſhould receive.

Nor did the Fathers or ancient Church, as far as I can find, ſuppoſe any other Correlative to the Element in Baptiſm but this; of this they ſpeak often, of the Bloud of Chriſt they are altogether ſilent in their Explications of this Myſtery. Many are the Alluſions they ſeek out for the illuſtration thereof, and ſome perhaps forced; but this of the Water ſignifying, or having relation to, the Bloud of Chriſt, never comes amongſt them: which were impoſſible, if they had not ſuppoſed ſome other thing figured by the Water then it, which barred them from falling to that conceit.

The like ſilence is to be obſerved in our Liturgy, where the Holy Ghoſt is more then once parallel'd with the Water in Baptiſm, waſhing and regeneration attributed thereunto; but no ſuch notion of the Bloud of Chriſt. And that the opinion thereof is novel, may be gathered, becauſe ſome Lutheran Divines make it peculiar and proper to the followers of Calvin.

1 Pet. 1. 2. Apoc. 1. 5.

Whatſoever it be, it hath no foundation in Scripture: and we muſt not of our own heads aſſign ſignifications to Sacramental types without ſome warrant thence. For whereas ſome conceive thoſe two expreſſions of ῥαντισμὸς or ſprinkling of the bloud of Chriſt, and of our being waſhed from our ſins in (or by) his bloud, do intimate ſome ſuch matter; they are ſurely miſtaken. For thoſe expreſſions have reference not to the Water of Baptiſm in the New Teſtament, but to the rite and manner of ſacrificing in the Old; where the Altar was wont to be ſprinkled with the bloud of the Sacrifices which were offered, and that which was unclean, purified with the ſame bloud: whence is that elegant diſcourſe of S. Paul (Heb. 9.) comparing the Sacrifices of the Law with that of Chriſt upon the Croſs as much the better. And that whereas in the Law, σχεδὸν ἐν αἵματι πάντα καθαρίζεται, Almoſt all things were purified with bloud, V. 22. ſo much more the bloud of Chriſt, who offered himſelf without ſpot to God, cleanſeth our conſciences from dead works, V. 14. But that this waſhing, that is, cleanſing by the bloud of Chriſt, ſhould have reference to Baptiſm, where is that to be found? I ſuppoſe they will not alledge the water and bloud which came out of our Saviour's ſide, when they pierced him; for that is taken to ſignifie the Two Sacraments ordained by Chriſt, that of Bloud the Euchariſt, of Water Baptiſm; and not both to be referred to Baptiſm. I adde (becauſe perhaps ſome mens fancies are corrupted therewith,) that there was no ſuch thing as ſprinkling, or ῥαντισμὸς, uſed in Baptiſm in the Apoſtles times, nor many ages after them; and that therefore it is no way probable that ῥαντισμὸς αἵματος Χριστοῦ, Sprinkling of the bloud of Chriſt, in S. Peter, ſhould have any reference to the Laver of Baptiſm.

Let this then be our Concluſion; That the Bloud of Chriſt concurres in the Myſtery of Baptiſm by way of efficacy and merit, but not as the thing there figured; which the Scripture tells us not to be the Bloud of Chriſt, but the Spirit.

AND ſo I come to my other Quære, From what property or uſe of Water

Water the waſhing therewith is a Sacrament of our new Birth: for ſo it is here called the waſhing of regeneration; and our Saviour ſayes to Nicodemus, Except a man be born of Water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdome of God. For in every Sacrament there is ſome analogy between what is outwardly done, and what is thereby ſignified; therefore in this. But what ſhould it be? It is a thing of ſome moment, and yet in the Tractates of this Myſtery but little or ſeldome enquired after; and therefore deſerves the more conſideration. I anſwer, This analogy between the Waſhing with water and Regeneration lies in that cuſtome of waſhing Infants from the pollutions of the womb when they are firſt born. For this is the firſt office done unto them when they come out of the womb, if they purpoſe to nouriſh and bring them up. As therefore in our natural birth the Body is waſht with water from the pollutions wherewith it comes beſmeared out of the matrix; ſo in our ſecond birth from above, the Soul is purified by the Spirit from the guilt and pollution of ſin, to begin a new life to God-ward. Titus 3. 5.

The analogy you ſee is apt and proper, if that be true of the cuſtome, whereof there is no cauſe to make queſtion. For the uſe at preſent, any man, I think, knows how to inform himſelf. For that of elder times, I can produce two pregnant and notable teſtimonies; one of the Jews and people of God, another of the Gentiles. The firſt you ſhall finde in the ſixteenth Chapter of Ezekiel, where God deſcribes the poor and forlorn condition of Jeruſalem when he firſt took her to himſelf, under the parable of an expoſed Infant. As for thy nativity, ſaith he, in the day thou waſt born, thy navell was not cut, neither waſt thou waſhed in water, to ſupple thee; thou waſt not ſalted at all, nor ſwadled at all; no eye pitied thee, none to doe any of theſe things unto thee, to have compaſſion on thee; but thou waſt caſt out in the open field, to the loathing of thy perſon, in the day that thou waſt born. Here you may learn what was wont to be done unto Infants at their nativity, by that which was not done to Iſrael, till God himſelf took pity on her; cutting off the navell-ſtring, waſhing, ſalting, ſwadling. Upon this place S. Hierome takes notice (but ſcarce any body elſe, for ought I can yet finde) that our Saviour, when ſpeaking of Baptiſm he ſayes, Except a man be born of Water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdome of God, alludes to the cuſtome here mentioned of waſhing Infants at their nativity. Ezek. 16. 4, 5.

The other Teſtimony (and that moſt pertinent to the application we make) I finde in a ſtory related by Plutarch in his Quæſtiones Romanæ, not far from the beginning, in this manner: Among the Greeks, if one that were living were reported to be dead, and funerall obſequies performed for him, if afterward he returned alive, he was of all men abominated as a prophane and unlucky perſon; no man would come in his company, and (which was the higheſt degree of calamity) they excluded him from their Temples and the Sacrifices of their Gods. It chanced that one Ariſtinus being fallen into ſuch a diſaſter, and not knowing which way to expiate himſelf therefrom, ſent to the Oracle at Delphos, to Apollo, beſeeching him to ſhew him the means whereby he might be freed and diſcharged thereof. Pythia gave him this anſwer,

Ὅσσα τῷ ἐν λεχέεσι γυνὴ τίκτουσα πελεῖ,
Ταῦτα πάλιν τελέσαντα θύειν μακάρεσι θεοῖσι·

What women doe, when one in childbed lies,
That doe again, ſo maiſt thou ſacrifice.

Ariſtinus

Titus 3. 5.

Ariſtinus rightly apprehending what the Oracle meant, offered himſelf to women, as one newly brought forth, to be waſhed again with water. From which example it grew a cuſtome among the Greeks, when the like misfortune befell any man, after this manner to expiate them. They called them Hyſteropotmi, or Poſtliminio nati. How well doth this befit the Myſtery of Baptiſm! where thoſe who were dead to God through ſin are, like Hyſteropotmi, regenerate and born again by Water and the Holy Ghoſt.

Theſe two paſſages diſcover ſufficiently the analogy of the waſhing with water in Baptiſm to Regeneration or New birth; according as the Text I have choſen for the ſcope of my Diſcourſe expreſſeth it: namely, That waſhing with water is a Signe of ſpiritual Infancy; foraſmuch as Infants are wont to be waſhed when they come firſt into the world.

Hence the Jews, before John the Baptiſt came amongſt them, were wont by this rite to initiate ſuch as they made Proſelytes, (to wit) as becoming Infants again, and entring into a new life and being, which before they had not. That which here I have affirmed will be yet more evident, if we conſider thoſe other rites anciently added and uſed in the celebration of this Myſtery, which had the ſelf-ſame end we ſpeak of, viz. to ſignifie ſpiritual Infancy. I will name them, and ſo conclude. As That of giving the new-baptized milk and honey, ad infantandum, as Tertullian ſpeaks, ad infantiæ ſignificationem, ſo S. Hierome, becauſe the like was uſed to Infants new born; according to that in the 7. of Eſay, of Immanuel's infancy, A Virgin ſhall conceive and bear a ſon: Butter and honey ſhall he eat, that he may know to refuſe evil and chuſe good. Secondly, That of ſalt, as is implied in that of Ezekiel, Thou waſt not waſhed with water, nor ſalted with ſalt. Thirdly, That of putting on the white garment, to reſemble ſwadling. All theſe were anciently (eſpecially the firſt) uſed in the Sacrament of our Spiritual birth, out of reference to that which was done to Infants at their Natural birth. Who then can doubt but the principall rite of waſhing with water (the onely one ordained by our Bleſſed Saviour) was choſen for the ſame reaſon, to be the element of our initiation; and that thoſe who brought in the other, did ſo conceive of this, and from thence derived thoſe imitations?

DISCOURSE

DISCOURSE XVIII.

Joshua 24. 26.

And Joshua took a great ſtone, and ſet it up there (viz. in Sichem) under the Oak which was in the Sanctuary of the Lord: Alii, by the Sanctuary. Hebr. בְּמִקְדָּשׁ.

THE Story whereupon theſe Words depend is this: Joſhua a little before his death aſſembled all the Tribes of Iſrael at Shechem or Sichem, there to make a ſolemn Covenant between them and the Lord, To have him alone for their God, and to ſerve no other Gods beſides him: Which they having ſolemnly promiſed to doe, ſaying, The Lord our God will we Verſ. 24. ſerve, and his voice will we obey; Joſhua for a teſtimony and monument of this their ſtipulation, erects in the place a great Stone or Pillar under an Oak which was by (or, as the Hebrew hath it, in) the Sanctuary of the Lord. Of this Oak, or rather collectively Quercetum or Oaken-holt, of Sichem, is twice mention made elſewhere in Scripture. For this was the place where Abram firſt ſate down, and where the Lord appearing unto him, he erected his firſt Altar in the Land of Canaan, after he came out of Haran thither; as we reade Gen. 12. 6. in theſe words, And Abram paſſed through the Land unto the place of Sichem, unto the Oak or Oak-grove of Moreh, where the Lord appeared unto him, ſaying, Unto thy ſeed will I give this Land: and there he builded an Altar unto the Lord who appeared unto him. And what place more fit for Abraham's poſterity to renew a Covenant with their God, then that where their God firſt made his Covenant with Abraham their Father? Again, it was this place where, in the after-times of the Judges, one hundred and ſeventy years after the death of Joſhua, the Sichemites made Abimelech, the baſe ſon of Jerubbaal or Gideon, King, as we reade Judg. 9. 6. that all the men of Sichem gathered together, and all the houſe of Millo, and went and made Abimelech King, by the Oak of the Pillar which was in Sichem. The words are אֵלוֹן מַצָּב, even the Oak where Joſhua (here in my Text) ſet up this great Stone for a witneſs to Iſrael. For the word אֵלָה here, and אֵלוֹן or אֵלוֹן in the other two places, ſignifie one and the ſame thing, to wit, either an Oak, Terebinth, or ſome other kinde of Tree; as the Seventy perpetually render them.

Yea, that of Judges muſt of neceſſity ſo be rendred, by comparing it with this of my Text, to which it hath reference. Nevertheleſs our laſt Tranſlation in the firſt of theſe places, Gen. 12. concerning Abram, choſe rather to follow S. Hierome (wherefore I know not) who follows not himſelf, and tranſlates it a Plain, not an Oak, to wit, the Plain of Moreh: by which Tranſlation the identity of that place with the other two, where it is tranſlated Oak, is obſcured and made the leſs obſervable. If there be any difference between the words אֵלוֹן and אֵלָה, it ſhould rather be this, that אֵלָה ſhould ſignifie a Tree, and אֵלוֹן a Grove, Holt or Wood of ſuch trees; as the Seventy in that place of the ninth of Judges have expreſly rendred it, namely, Βαλανώτῃ τ φάσεως ἐν Συκίμοις, the Quercetum, Oak-toft or Holt of Sichem. And ſo, I believe, it ought to be underſtood in the other

Jos. 24. 26. places, that is, to be taken collectively; of which we shall hear more hereafter.

But this is no great matter of difficulty; that which follows is, namely, How this Oak, or Oaken-holt, of Sichem is said here in my Text to have been in (for the Hebrew is בְּמִקְדַּשׁ) or by, the Sanctuary of the Lord. For how comes the Sanctuary of the Lord to be at Sichem, whenas the Tabernacle and the Ark of the Testimony were at Shiloh, there set up by Joshua himself, and so remained (as the Scripture *elsewhere tells us) until the time of the Captivity of the Land? which without question was not till after Joshua was dead and buried, and is usually understood of that time when the Ark was taken captive by the Philistines. And yet is not onely here a Sanctuary mentioned at Sichem, but in the beginning of the Chapter, the Elders and Officers of the Tribes are said, upon Joshua's summons, to have presented themselves there before the Lord; which speech useth to imply as much.

* Judg. 18. 30, 31.

Jos. 24. 1.

If we say the Ark of God was taken out of its place at Shiloh, and brought to Sichem by the Levites, upon occasion of this general Assembly; yet the difficulty will not be removed. For first, How could the Ark alone give denomination to the place where it stood, to be called the Sanctuary of the Lord? Or secondly, If the Altar were there with it, how was the Law of God observed, which saith, Thou shalt not plant a Grove of any trees (or any tree) near unto the Altar of the Lord thy God, which thou shalt make thee; Neither shalt thou set up a Pillar, which the Lord thy God hateth: whenas here are both, an Oak or Quercetum in the Sanctuary of God, and a Pillar or Statue erected under it? Thirdly, This Sanctuary, whatsoever it was, must be something which had a constant and fixed station, and was not temporary and mutable; and that, because the Oak, under which this Pillar was erected by Joshua, is here designed and pointed out by it as by a constant and standing mark: else to what purpose had it been to sign out the Oak by it, if it were such as would be here to day and not to morrow?

Deut. 16. 21, 22.

For these reasons it appears, that this Sanctuary could not be the Tabernacle where the Ark and Altar for Israel were, but that it was something else: And what that should be, is to be enquired.

I answer, It was a Proseucha or praying-place, which the Israelites (at least those of Ephraim, in whose lot it was) after the Country was subdued unto them, had erected in that very place at Sichem where God first appeared to Abram, and where he built his first Altar after he was come into the Land of Canaan; the place where God said unto him, Unto thy seed will I give this Land.

For the understanding whereof, you must take notice, that the Jews besides their Tabernacle or Temple, which was the onely place for Sacrifice, had (first or last) two sorts of Places for religious duties; the one called Proseuchæ, the other Synagogues. The difference between which was this: Proseucha was a plot of ground encompassed with a wall or some other like mound or inclosure, and open above; much like to our Courts: the use properly for Prayer, as the name Proseucha importeth: A Synagogue was ædificium tectum, a covered edifice, as our Houses and Churches are, where the Law and Prophets were read and expounded, and the People instructed in divine matters; according to that Acts 15. 21. Moses of old time hath in every City them that preach him, being read in the Synagogues every Sabbath-day. From whence also ye may gather, that Synagogues were within the Cities, as Proseucha's were without; which was another difference between them, as you shall hear confirmed.

That Proseucha's were such places as I have described them to be, I prove out out of a notable place of Epiphanius, a Jew bred and born in Palestine; who in his Tract against the Massalian Hereticks, after he hath told us that the Massaliani built themselves πυκὰς οἴκους ἢ τόπους πλατεῖς, φόρων δίκην, &c. certain houses or large places, like the Ancients places of market, which they called Proseuchæ; he goes on thus, And that the Jews of old (as also the Samaritans) had certain places without the Cities for prayer, which they call'd Proseucha's, appears out of the Acts of the Apostles, where Lydia a seller of purple is said to have met with the Apostle Paul, and to have heard him preaching in that place, of which the Scripture saith, ἐδόκει τόπος προσευχῆς εἶναι, it seemed to be a place of prayer, (of which I shall say more anon:) He goes on still, There is also at Sichem (saith he) which is now called Neapolis, above a mile without the City a Proseucha or place of prayer, like a Theatre, which was built in the open air, and without a roof, by the Samaritans, who affected to imitate the Jews in all things. Out of these words you may collect every part of my Description. First, That Proseuchæ were out of the Cities in the fields. Secondly, That they were φόρων δίκην, like the Ancients Fora or places of market, and * ἐν ἀέρι καὶ αἰθρίῳ, under the open air, and without roof, such as the Courts of the Temple also were, whither the people came to pray; so that they were as it were a kind of disjoyned and remoter Courts unto the Temple, whither they turned themselves when they prayed in them. Thirdly, That they were ordained for places of Prayer. All these are in this passage of Epiphanius; and moreover, that such a one was in his time remaining at Sichem, the place my Text speaks of, there erected by the Samaritans, in that, as in all things else, imitators of the Jews. What better Testimony could be desired?

Jos. 24. 26.

Acts 16. 13.

* The like he hath a few lines after of the Sataniani; τὰ ἴσα ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ ἐξαγόμενοι δὴ τὸ εὔχεσθαι καὶ ὑμνεῖν.

These Proseucha's of the Jews, both name and thing, were not unknown to the Poet Juvenal; when describing in his third Satyre in what manner proud and insolent fellows in the City of Rome used, in their drunken humours, to abuse and quarrell with those they met in the streets in the night-time, whom they took to be of mean condition, he brings them in speaking thus,

Ede ubi consistas; in quâ te quæro Proseuchâ?

Where dwell you? in what Proseucha should I seek or enquire for you? intimating that he was some poor fellow, either that dwelt in an house that could not keep out wind and weather, but was like a Jew's Proseucha, all open above; or he alludes to the banishment of the Jews out of Rome by Domitian, in his own time, and then fresh, as who had no where else to bestow themselves but in their Proseucha's out of the City; or who used to assemble in the Proseucha's. According to some of these senses is Juvenal to be understood.

For that the Jews had Proseucha's about the City of Rome, appears by Philo Judæus in his De legatione ad Caium, where commending the clemency and moderation of Augustus Cæsar, he saith, ἠπίστατο καὶ τὰς προσευχὰς ἐχούσας, καὶ συνιούσας εἰς αὐτὰς, καὶ μάλιστα ταῖς ἱεραῖς ἑβδόμαις, That he knew the Jews of Rome had their Proseucha's, and that they used to assemble in them, especially on the Sabbath-dayes; and yet never molested them, as Caius did. The same Philo mentioneth Proseucha's elsewhere; though it be not to be dissembled, that he seems to comprehend Synagogues also properly so called under that name, as being better known to the Gentiles, who called both by that name. Josephus in his Life tells us of a Proseucha at Tiberias in Galilee, in these words, Καλὰ τῇ ἐπιούσῃ ἡμέρᾳ πάντες συνάγονται εἰς τὴν Προσευχήν, On the next day, which was the Sabbath-day, the whole people were gathered together in the Proseucha; which is (saith he) μέγιστον οἴκημα, πολὺν ὄχλον δεξάσθαι δυνάμενον, a large edifice, fit to receive a great multitude. He

Joſ. 24. 26. afterward tells us of a publick faſt and ſupplication appointed to be had the Monday following in the Proſeucha, whither himſelf and others aſſembled ποιεῖν τὰ νόμιμα, &c. to perform their devotions.

In the New Teſtament the name of Synagogue is frequent, but that of Proſeucha ſeldome; whence may be conjectured that both are comprehended under that name, as in Philo both are termed Proſeuchæ. Yet once or twice, as learned Interpreters think, we read of Proſeucha's in the New Teſtament. As namely, Acts 16. 13. (which Epiphanius even now alledged to thatpurpoſe) where S. Luke tells us, that S. Paul being come to Philippi in Macedonia on the Sabbath-day, they went out of the City to a river ſide, οὗ ἐνομίζετο προσευχὴ εἶναι, where there was taken to be a Proſeucha, or where was famed to be a Proſeucha; προσευχὴ ἐνομίζετο εἶναι, will bear both. The Syriack hath, Quia ibi conſpiciebatur Domus orationis; the Arabick, Locus orationis. For if προσευχὴ were taken here for Prayer it ſelf, as if the ſenſe were, where prayer was uſed to be made, it ſhould rather have been ſaid, ἣ ἐνομίζετο προσευχὴ γίνεσθαι, and not εἶναι. Yet, if it were ſo taken, it would ſtill argue no leſs then that there was here an appointed place for prayer, and that out of the City; which is all one as to ſay, there was a Proſeucha. So I take προσευχὴ, in the 16. verſe of the ſame Chapter, where it is ſaid, It came to paſs, πορευομένων ἡμῶν εἰς προσευχὴν, as we went to the Proſeucha; eſpecially ſince we read not in the Text that S. Paul went thither to pray, but to preach, where he deemed there was an aſſembly that day according to cuſtome: And we ſat down, (ſaith S. Luke) and ſpake unto the women which were come together there.

A ſecond place where a Proſeucha is mentioned in the New Teſtament, may be that Luke 6. 12. where it is ſaid, that our Saviour went out into a Mountain to pray, and continued all night, ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ, in Proſeuchâ Dei, in an Oratory or Prayer-houſe of God; ſo Druſius thinks προσευχὴ is here to be taken, for a place, and the Article helps the ſenſe: Otherwiſe it ſeems an odde and unaccuſtomed expreſſion for ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τῷ Θεῷ to mean in Prayer made unto God. And why ſhould it not be as likely that our Saviour might ſometimes pray in their Proſeucha's, as teach in their Synagogues?

Thus we have ſeen the Teſtimonies for Proſeucha's, their uſe, and difference from Synagogues. Now for Synagogues, the common opinion is, that they were not before the Captivity of Babylon; and that Neceſſity firſt taught the Jews the uſe of them in that Captivity, which afterward they brought with them at their return into their own Country. The reaſon why men ſo think is, I ſuppoſe, the abſolute ſilence of them in Scripture untill the time of the ſecond Temple. But though the name were not, it is poſsible the thing might be. Howſoever, becauſe it is moſt received, that they were not, we will let it paſs for current. But as for Proſeucha's, ſuch as we have deſcribed them, none, that I know, have affirmed or determined ought of their antiquity; it may be, not taken it into conſideration, either becauſe they had no occaſion to think of any ſuch matter, or becauſe they confounded them altogether with Synagogues.

The matter therefore being yet free and undecided, I will make bold to affirm, That if Synagogues were not, yet Proſeucha's, that is, open places for Prayer, were a long time before the Captivity, yea even from the dayes of Joſhua the ſon of Nun: And though the Jews had, or were to have, but one Altar or place of Sacrifice, that namely which the Lord ſhould chuſe to place the Ark of his Covenant there, the Tabernacle or Temple; yet had they other places for devotion and religious uſe.

And that this Sanctuary of God, here mentioned in my Text, at Sichem (which

(which was a Levitical City) was ſuch a one, my reaſons are theſe. First, Becauſe it is incredible, that the Iſraelites having but one Temple for the whole Nation, whereat they were bound to appear, and thoſe the males onely, but thrice a year, ſhould have no other Places of Prayer nearer their dwellings whither they might reſort on Sabbath-dayes; the Temple or Tabernacle being from ſome of them above an hundred miles diſtant at the leaſt. Secondly, Becauſe (as I have already ſhewed) this Sanctuary at Sichem could not be the Tabernacle (which was then at Shiloh, not at Sichem) and yet muſt have ſome ſtable and fixed place, becauſe the ſituation of the Oak is deſigned by it: yea, muſt have been ſtill there, when this ſtory of Joſhua was written, which is thought to have been long after his death: ſurely this Chapter was written after it, where both his death and burial are recorded. Wherefore to ſay the Ark was brought thither upon this occaſion, will not ſerve turn. Thirdly, This place ſhould be a Proſeucha, becauſe of that circumſtance of Trees growing in it; which, as it proves it not to have been the Tabernacle, (where no ſuch thing was lawfull to be) ſo ſeems it to be a Characteriſtical note of a Proſeucha. Joſ. 24. 26.

For though it were not lawful to have Trees near the Altar of God, that is, in or about the Court of the Tabernacle; yet was it not ſo with Proſeucha's, yea they ſeem to have been ordinarily garniſhed and beſet with them. This may be gathered from a paſſage of Philo Judæus, where relating the barbarous outrage of the Gentiles at Alexandria againſt the Jews there dwelling, in the time of Caius, τῶν Προσευχῶν, ſaith he, τὰς μὲν ἐξενδροτόμησε, τὰς δὲ αὐτοῖς θεμελίοις κατέσκαψαν, Of ſome of the Proſeucha's they cut down the Trees, others they demoliſhed to the very Foundations. Mark here, ἐξενδροτόμησε τὰς Προσευχὰς, They dis-tree'd the Proſeucha's.

The ſame is implied by that of the Poet, ſpeaking of a Jewiſh Wizard or Fortune-teller,——conducta ſub arbore conjux. And Juvenal in his ſixth Satyr,

Arcanam Judæa tremens mendicat in aurem,
Interpres legum Solymarum, magna ſacerdos
Arboris, ac ſummi fida internuncia cœli.

Interpres legum Solymarum, that is, of Moſes Laws; magna ſacerdos Arboris, becauſe of the Trees in their Proſeucha's or Places of worſhip. The ſame appears alſo out of thoſe Verſes of his third Satyr, complaining that the once ſacred Grove of Fons Capenus, where Numa uſed to meet with the Goddeſs Ægeria, was then let out to the beggarly Jews for a Proſeucha, and that every Tree (ſuch were the times) muſt pay rent to the people; by which means the Woods, which formerly had been the habitation of the Muſes, were become dens for beggarly Jews to mutter their Orizons in. Hear his words:

Hîc ubi nocturnæ Numa conſtituebat amicæ,
Nunc ſacri Fontis nemus & delubra locantur
Judæis; quorum cophinus fœnumque ſupellex.
Omnis enim populo mercedem pendere juſſa eſt
Arbor, & ejectis mendicat ſylva Camœnis.

Whence comes this connexion between Jews and [a]Trees, but from their having Trees in their Proſeucha's? unto which their ſituation without the Cities conduced; as alſo it did for privacy and retirement.

Thus you ſee how well the deſcription and mark of a Proſeucha agrees to this Sanctuary in my Text. And that the Jews had many other ſuch in other places, as well as at Sichem, even in thoſe elder times, as at [b] Miſpeh, Bethel, and Gilgal, I make little doubt; which we reade to have been [a] Pſal. 52. 8. I am like a green Olive-tree in the Houſe of God. Is not Houſe of God here a Proſeucha?

[b] Which ſeems to be the reaſon why theſe three places are called by the LXX. 1 Samuel 7. 16. τόποι ἡγιασμένοι, ſanctified places, though in the Original there be no ſuch thing. 'Tis worth the obſerving.

Joſ. 24. 26. places of Aſſembly of the people, and the two laſt ſanctified of old by Divine apparition, as Sichem was. Of Miſpah the Author of the firſt of Maccabees, chap. 3. verſ. 46. if I underſtand him, teſtifieth as much, when he tells us, that whilſt the holy City lay deſolate, and the Sanctuary was troden down by the tyranny of Antiochus Epiphanes, Judas Maccabæus, and thoſe of the people which adhered unto their God, aſſembled together at Maſpha, to make there their ſupplications unto their God, ὅτι τόπος προσευχῆς εἰς Μάσφα τὸ πρότερον τῷ Ἰσραὴλ, becauſe at Maſpha, or Miſpah, had been a place of prayer in former time for Iſrael; as much as to ſay, there had been a Proſeucha of old. And do we not reade in that ſtory of the Benjamiticall warre in the Book of Judges, that the Tabernacle being at Shiloh, (as appears by the laſt Chapter) yet (in the Chapter going before) it is ſaid, that Chap. 20. 1. the whole Congregation of Iſrael was gathered together, as one man, unto the Lord in Miſpah; and that in ver. 26. is mention made of an Houſe of God there, where the people prayed and faſted? True, it is ſaid the Ark of the Covenant was upon that extraordinary occaſion brought thither; but it being certain, out of the next Chapter, that the Tabernacle was ſtill at Shiloh, this Houſe of God could be none of it. Nay, perhaps, we may hence learn, that when the Ark upon occaſion of ſuch a generall and extraordinary aſſembly was to be removed, they uſed to bring it to ſuch places as theſe, which were as holy Courts ready prepared for it; and that then it was lawfull, but not elſe, to ſacrifice in them.

Of theſe Courts for prayer we may underſtand that alſo in Pſalm 74. 7. They have caſt Fire into thy Sanctuary, they have burnt up all the Conventicula Dei in the Land, namely, in the captivity by Nebuchadnezzar, who deſtroyed both their Temple and their Proſeucha's. For if we underſtand it of the perſecution of Antiochus, as ſome do, it muſt then follow, that ſome Canonical Scripture was written after Malachi and the ceaſing of Prophecy, that is, in the time of the Maccabees; which will not eaſily be granted: Beſides that we read not that Antiochus caſt any fire into the Temple. Now if it ſpeak of the vaſtation by Nebuchadnezzar, then had the Jews before that time, not onely a Sanctuary for ſacrifice, but alſo מוֹעֲדֵי אֵל, Conventicula Dei, that is, either Proſeucha's, or Synagogues; for either will ſerve my purpoſe.

But now you will ſay, What profit is there of this long Diſcourſe? were it ſo, or were it not ſo, as I have endeavoured to prove, of what uſe is the knowledge thereof to us? Yes, to know it was ſo, is uſefull in a threefold reſpect.

Firſt, for the right underſtanding of ſuch places of the Old Teſtament, where a Houſe of God and Aſſembling before the Lord are often mentioned there, where neither the Ark of the Covenant, nor the Tabernacle at ſuch time were: as beſides the places before alledged, we read in 1 Sam. 10. 3. of Saul's meeting with three men going up to God to Bethel, and in verſe 5. of a place called The Hill of God, whence a company of Prophets came from the high place there, propheſying with a Tabret, Pipe, and Harp before them: in neither of which places can we find that ever the Tabernacle was. And as for the Ark, we are ſure it was all this time at Kiriath-jearim, till David ſolemnly fetcht it thence: and if at any time the Ark might (as now it was not) be transferred to any of them upon occaſion of ſome general Aſſembly of the Nation, that ſo they might have opportunity to ask counſel of the Lord, and offer Sacrifice; yet were they not the ordinary ſtation thereof.

Secondly, we may learn from hence, That to have appropriate places ſet apart for Prayer and Divine duties, is not a Circumſtance or Rite proper proper to Legal worſhip onely, but of a more common nature: Foraſmuch as though Sacrifices, wherein the Legal worſhip (or worſhip of the old Covenant) conſiſted, were reſtrained to the Ark and Tabernacle, and might not be exerciſed where they were not; yet were there other places for Prayer beſides that; which are no more to be accounted Legal places, then bare and ſimple Prayer was a Legal duty. Joſ. 24. 26.

Laſtly, we may gather from this Deſcription of Proſeucha's, which were as Courts encompaſſed onely with a wall or other like encloſure, and open above, in what manner to conceive of the accommodation of thoſe Altars we reade to have been erected by the Patriarchs, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, in the Book of Geneſis; namely, That the ground whereon they ſtood, was fenced and bounded with ſome ſuch encloſure, and ſhaded with Trees, after the manner of Proſeucha's; as we may reade expreſly of one of them at Beerſheba, That Abraham there planted a Grove, and called upon the Name of the Lord, the everlaſting God. Gen. 21. 33. Yea, when the Tabernacle and Temple were, the Altar of God ſtood ſtill in an open Court; and who can believe that the place of thoſe Altars of the Patriarchs was not bounded and ſeparated from common ground? And from theſe patterns in likelihood, after the Altar for Sacrifice was reſtrained to one onely place, was continued ſtill the uſe of ſuch open places or Courts for Prayer, garniſhed with Trees, as I have ſhewed Proſeucha's to have been.

DISCOURSE XIX.

1 TIM. 5. 17.

Let the Elders that rule well be counted worthy of double Honour; eſpecially they that labour in the Word and Doctrine.

THERE are two things in theſe words to be explicated: Firſt, What is meant here by Elders; Secondly, What is this double Honour due unto them. For the firſt, Who are meant by Elders, there is no queſtion but the Prieſts or Miniſters of the Goſpel of Chriſt were contained under this name: for ſo the New Teſtament uſeth the word Πρεσβύτερος or Presbyter for the Miniſters of the Word and Sacraments in the Goſpel; whence cometh the Saxon word Prieſter, and our now Engliſh word Prieſt. And the Ancient Fathers thought theſe onely to be here meant, and never dreamed of any others. But in our time thoſe who obtrude a new Diſcipline and Government upon the Church, altogether unknown and unheard of in the ancient, will needs have two ſorts of Elders or Presbyters here underſtood: one of ſuch as preach the Word and Doctrine, whom they call Paſtours; another of Lay-men, who were neither Prieſts nor Deacons, but joyned as Aſſiſtants to them in the exerciſe of Eccleſiaſticall Diſcipline, in admonitions and cenſures of manners, and (in a word) in the execution of the whole power of the Keyes.

Theſe our Church-men call Lay-Elders, and the Authors of this new device, Presbyterians. Theſe Presbyters or Elders they will have meant in the firſt words, οἱ καλῶς προεστῶτες πρεσβύτεροι, Elders that rule, or govern, well, whom therefore they call Ruling Elders; the other whom they call Paſtours, to be deſcribed in the latter words, they who labour in the Word and Doctrine, whom therefore they diſtinguiſh by the name of Teaching Elders.

This is their Expoſition, and this Expoſition the ground and foundation of their new Diſcipline: but none of the Fathers which have commented upon this Place, neither Chryſoſtome, Hierome, Ambroſe, Theodoret, Primaſius, Oecumenius, or Theophylact, (as they had no ſuch, ſo) ever thought of any ſuch Lay-Elders to be here meant, but Prieſts onely, which adminiſtred the Word and Sacraments.

But how (will you ſay then) is this Place to be underſtood, which may ſeem, as they alledge, to intimate two ſorts of Elders, ſome that ruled onely, others that laboured alſo in the Word and Doctrine? The Divines of our Church, who had cauſe, when time was, to be better verſed in this queſtion then any others, have given divers Expoſitions of theſe words; none of which give place to any ſuch new-found Elders as theſe Fautours of the Presbyterian Diſcipline, upon the ſole Authority of this one place, have ſet up in divers forein Churches, and would have brought into ours. I will relate Four of the chief of theſe Expoſitions, to which the reſt are reducible.

1. The Firſt is grounded upon the uſe of the Participle in the Greek tongue, which is often wont to note the reaſon or condition of a thing, and accordingly to be reſolved by a cauſal or conditional Conjunction. According whereunto this Text [Οἱ καλῶς προεστῶτες πρεσβύτεροι, duplici honore digni habeantur (or dignentur,) μάλιστα οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ,] is to be reſolved thus; Elders or Presbyters that rule or govern their Flocks well, let them be accounted worthy of double honour, and that chiefly in reſpect or becauſe of their labour in the Word and Doctrine. And ſo this manner of ſpeech will imply two duties, but not two ſorts or Orders of Elders; and that though this double Honour be due unto them for both, yet chiefly and more principally for the ſecond, their labour in the Word and Doctrine. And this way goes S. Chryſoſtome and other Greek Writers.

2. A Second Expoſition is taken from the force and ſignification of the word κοπιῶντες, which ſignifies not ſimply πονεῖν, to labour, but to labour with much travell and toyle; for κόπος is derived from κόπτομαι, vexor, laboribus & moleſtiis premor, and ſo properly ſignifies moleſtiam & fatigationem ex labore, wearieſome and painfull labour. Thus the meaning will be, Let Elders that do bene præſidere, that is, govern and inſtruct their Flock well, be counted worthy of double Honour; eſpecially ſuch of them as take more then ordinary pains in the Word and Doctrine. Or thus; Let the Elders that diſcharge their office well, be, &c. eſpecially by how much the more their painfulneſs and travell ſhall exceed in preaching the Word and Doctrine, &c.

Thus we have ſeen two Expoſitions of theſe words, neither of them implying two ſorts or Orders of Presbyters, but onely diſtinguiſhing ſeverall offices and duties of the ſame Order, or implying a differing merit in the diſcharge of them. But if they will by no means be perſwaded but that two ſorts of Elders are here intimated, let it be ſo; two other Expoſitions will yield them it: but ſo as will not be for their turn; for their Lay-Elders will be none of them.

3. The firſt is this, That the Apoſtle ſhould ſpeak here of Prieſts and Deacons, conſidering both as Members of the Eccleſiaſticall Conſiſtory or Senate, Senate, which consisted of both Orders, and in that respect might well include them both under the name of Elders; it being a common notion in Scripture to call the Associates of a Court of Judicature by that name: Senatus in Latin hath its name à senibus, i. senioribus, of Eldership, and is as much to say as Πρεσβυτέριον. According to this supposall the Apostle's words may have this construction; Let the Elders which rule well, whether Priests or Deacons, be counted worthy of double Honour, but more especially the Priests, who, besides their government, labour also in the Word and Doctrine. Now what can be opposed against such an Exposition, I see not. For it is not improbable but the Apostle should make provision as well for the maintenance of Deacons as of Priests, seeing he omits it not of Widows in the verse going next before this. But unless he includes them under the name of Elders, he makes no provision for them at all. Besides, this is not the onely place (some think) where Deacons are comprehended under the name of Elders: For the Council of Hierusalem, Acts 15. 23. where they inscribe their Synodicall Epistle thus, The Apostles, and Elders, and Brethren, to the Brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch, &c. may seem to comprehend the Deacons under the name of Elders or Presbyters; otherwise they should omit them, which without doubt were part of the Council. 1 Tim. 5. 17.

There is another Exposition which allows also of two sorts of Elders to be here implied, but makes them both Priests; namely, That Presbyters or Priests in the Apostle's time were of two sorts: One of Residentiaries and such as were affixed to certain Churches, and so did προϊσταναι, præsidere Gregi, govern and instruct their Flock; Another of such as had no fixed station, or charge over any certain place, but travelled up and down to preach the Gospel where it was not, or to confirm the Churches where it was already preached; such, namely, as are elsewhere known by the names of Evangelists and Doctors or Prophets: That these were those οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ, that labour'd in the Word and Doctrine, spoken of here by the Apostle: That both these sorts of Presbyters were to be counted worthy of double Honour, as well οἱ καλῶς προεστῶτες, those that ruled well, as those that travelled up and down to preach the Gospel, οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ· but especially these latter, because their pains were more then the others. This is confirmed from the use of the word κοπᾶν, which in Scripture signifies not onely corporall labour, as may appear in many places, but seems to be used by S. Paul even in this very sense we have now given; as 1 Cor. 15. 10. where he sayes, comparing himself with the other Apostles, περισσότερον αὐτῶν πάντων ἐκοπίασα, I have travelled up and down more then they all, as is manifest he did. 4.

These are the principall Expositions given by the Writers of our Church, upon this passage of Scripture which is the foundation and onely place whereon they build this new Consistory, and are so much in love with it. But this being capable, as you see, of such variety of Exposition, how much too weak and insufficient it is to establish any such new Order of Elders, never heard of in the Church from the times of the Apostles untill this last age, any man may judge.

But give me leave to propound a Fifth Exposition, which shall be more liberal to them then any of those yet given: For it shall yield them all they so eagerly contend for to be implied in this Text, namely, That there are not onely two sorts of Elders here implied; but also that the one of them are Lay-Elders, such as have nothing to doe with the administration of the Word and Sacraments. What would they have more? Yet they will be never the nearer for this concession. For the Lay-Elders we grant 5.

here to be implied, may be no Church-Officers, but the Civile Magiſtrates, which in Scripture-language we know are called Elders: as when we reade of the Elders of Iſrael, of the Elders of Judah, of the Elders of the Prieſts, and Elders of the people, of Prieſts and Elders, and the like. According to ſuch a notion the words may be conſtrued by way of Tranſitus à theſi ad hypotheſin, as Rhetoricians call it, to wit, in this manner; Cum omnes Seniores, ſive Reipublicæ ſive Eccleſiæ, or, Cum omnes Seniores, etiam Reipublicæ (i. Civiles) qui bene præſident, duplici honore dignandi ſint, tum maximè Seniores Eccleſiaſtici, qui laborant in verbo & Doctrina; As all Elders, whether of the Commonwealth, or of the Church, that rule well, are to be accounted worthy of double Honour; ſo eſpecially the Elders of the Church, that labour in the Word and Doctrine: or thus, Let all Elders that govern well, of what ſort ſoever, be counted worthy of double Honour, eſpecially the Elders of the Church which labour in the Word and Doctrine. Is not this good ſenſe? and doth not the Apoſtle in the beginning of this very Chapter uſe the name Elder in the larger and more generall ſenſe, when he ſayes, Rebuke not an Elder, but exhort him as a Father, and the younger men as Brethren; the Elder women as Mothers, the younger as Siſters? why may he not then doe ſo here? And doth not S. James in his laſt Chapter v. 14. call the Miniſters of the Word and Sacraments Πρεσβύτερι τ ἐκκλησίας, Elders of the Church, as it were in diſtinction from Πρεσβύτεροι τ πολιτείας, Elders of the Commonwealth?

But it will be objected that this Expoſition is too ambitious, becauſe it makes the Apoſtle to preferre the Elders of the Church before the Elders of the Commonwealth, that is, the Prieſt before the Civile Magiſtrate, when he ſayes, that as all Elders, whether of Church or Commonwealth, are to be accounted worthy of double Honour, ſo eſpecially thoſe Elders which labour in the Word and Doctrine; which are the Presbyters of the Church. But here know that the name of Elder is never given in Scripture to the Supreme Magiſtrate, but to the Subordinate onely; and why the Miniſters of the Word and Doctrine ſhould not be accounted as worthy of double Honour as they, or more worthy, I know not; eſpecially if S. Paul here ſayes it. Sure I am, this Objection is not ſufficient to refute my Interpretation.

Thus I thought good to acquaint you how many wayes this place may be expounded, without importing any ſuch new Elders, (neither Prieſts nor Deacons) as they would impoſe upon us for Church-Officers by the ſole authority thereof. For though this Diſciplinarian controverſie of our Church, ſtirred up by the admirers of the Genevian platform, were in the heat before our time; yet the Sect is not yet dead, but ready upon every occaſion to ſurpriſe ſuch as they finde unarmed or not fore-warned.

AND thus having informed our ſelves who they are which are here termed Elders, come we now to ſee alſo, What is that Honour which is due unto them; which was the Second thing I propounded: διπλῆς τιμῆς ἀξιούσθωσαν, Let them be accounted (ſaith the Apoſtle,) worthy of, or, Let them be deign'd, double Honour. That by Honour here is meant honorarium ſtipendium or a tribute of maintenance, is manifeſt by the following words which the Apoſtle brings to inforce it: For the Scripture ſaith, Thou ſhalt not muzzle the mouth of the Oxe that treadeth out the corn; and, The labourer is worthy of his hire. Who ſees not what theſe proofs inferre? The firſt of them he alledges alſo in the ſame argument, 1 Cor. 9. 9. where he addes, Doth God take care for Oxen? V. 10. Or ſaith he it altogether for our ſakes? (ours namely who preach the Goſpel) For our ſakes, no doubt, this is written: that he which plougheth, ſhould plough in hope; and he that threſheth in hope, ſhould be partaker of his hope. The caſe is plain; 'Tis an Hebrew

Hebrew notion, To bring honour, that is, To pay tribute, or bring a present: as Apocal. 21. 26. Οἴσουσι τὴν δόξαν καὶ τὴν τιμὴν τῶν ἐθνῶν εἰς αὐτὴν, They shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it, to wit, the new Jerusalem. And thus much of the word Honour. 1 Tim. 5. 17

But what is meant by double Honour? Some (as among the Fathers S. Ambrose) will have this double Honour to be Honour of Maintenance, and Honour of Reverence: But because the Apostle's proofs here inferre onely Maintenance, I take it to be meant in this place onely of it. And as for double, there seems to be an allusion to the right of the First-born, to whom at first the office of Priesthood belonged in their Families, and into whose room the Levites were taken, and whom the Presbyters of the Gospel now succeed: As therefore they had a double portion among their Brethren; in like manner should the Presbyters of the Gospel be counted worthy of double Honour.

And if you will admit of that construction of these words which I gave in the Fifth place, namely, to comprehend as well the Elders of the Commonwealth as the Elders of the Church, (That both were to be accounted worthy of double Honour, but especially those of the Church who labour in the Word and Doctrine,) it will agree yet farre better; because both the one and the other succeed in the place of the First-born, to whom belonged both to be Priests and Civile Governours in their Tribes and Families.

Yet howsoever the ancient Christians were wont in their Agapes or Love-Feasts to give their Presbyters a double portion, κατὰ τὸ ῥητὸν, with some reference to this Text, as appears by Tertullian: nevertheless, I think double Honour is not here to be so precisely taken, but onely to note a liberal and ingenuous maintenance, such as might set them above the vulgar; as the First-born by their double portion were preferred above the rest of their Brethren.

But I have not yet done with the word τιμή. For from this that the Apostle here styleth the Priest's maintenance Honour it followeth, That the Priest's maintenance is not to be esteemed of the nature of Almes, as some would have it; but is a Tribute of Honour, such as is given by an inferiour to his Superiour. For Almes and Honour, they are of a very distant importance; the one respecting those to whom it is given, as miserable; the other, as honourable: I mean, if Almes be taken, as we use the word, for a work of mercy. From the same ground also it follows that the Priest's maintenance is no ordinary mercenary wages, but such as is given by way of Honour, as well as of Reward. For such as is given to ordinary work-men is Reward and Wages onely, and not a Testimony or Tribute of Honour: But that which is due to the Priest, as you see, is τιμὴ Honour, namely, of the same nature with that which is given to Princes and Magistrates by those which are under them. For as the Ministers of the Gospel are in the nature of Presbyters or Elders unto the people over whom they are set; so is their maintenance from them such as is sutable to the condition and Dignity of an Elder; that is to say, not a common Wages, which the Superiour often gives to his inferiour or servant, but Honorarium, or τιμὴ Honour.

Nec bene conveniunt, nec in una sede morantur,

[The few lines that remain in the Author's own Manuscript, being about a particular occasion, and relating to the place where this Discourse was delivered, was therefore (I suppose) by the publisher of the former Edition thought not necessary to be added. The particular occasion was the Commemoration of the College-Benefactors.] Who (saith the Author) as they have

1 Tim. 5. 17. honoured us, (for the Apoſtle calleth ſuch Bounty Honour, viz. ſuch Bounty as is for the maintenance of the Miniſters of the Goſpel, and the training up of ſuch as are deſtined to that Office;) ſo are we bound (next after our thankfulneſs to Almighty God) to honour them. The firſt and chiefeſt part whereof is, to uſe their Bounty according to their pious intendments, and to approve our ſelves worthy to partake thereof; then which no greater honour can be done them: The next is, to remember them all with their due praiſe and honour.

DISCOURSE XX.

ACTS 2. 5.

And there were [κατοικοῦντες] ſojourning at Jeruſalem Jews, devout men, out of every Nation under heaven.

Verſ. 9, 10, 11. AT the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, when that wonder hapned of the Holy Ghoſt's deſcent upon the Apoſtles in the likeneſs of Fiery tongues, there were preſent at Jeruſalem (as the ſtory a little after my Text informs us) men of ſeveral Nations, as Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and dwellers in Meſopotamia, Judæa and Cappadocia, Pontus and Aſia, Phrygia and Pamphylia, Ægypt and the parts of Lybia about Cyrene, and ſtrangers of Rome, (or ſtranger-Romans) both Jews and Proſelytes, Cretes and Arabians. All theſe, upon the noiſe of this ſtrange accident, came together unto the place, and were confounded, hearing them every man ſpeaking in his own language wherein he was born.

Many, when they reade this ſtory, ſuppoſe the people here mentioned, the moſt of them, to have been Gentiles; and ſome Expoſitors cannot be excuſed from this miſtake. For the more clear diſcerning whereof, and their better information who may perhaps be overtaken with the ſame errour, I have made choice of the words before read for the argument of my preſent Diſcourſe; which tells us in expreſs termes, That theſe Parthians, Medes and Elamites, theſe Meſopotamians, Cappadocians, and the reſt after mentioned under thoſe National names, were Iſraelites or Jews of the diſperſion, Jews born in Parthia and Media, Jews of Elam or Perſia, Meſopotamian Jews, and ſo the reſt of the Countries there named, all of them of the Circumciſion: For ſo ſaith my Text, beginning to ſpeak of them; There were ſojourning, or (if you will) dwelling, at Jeruſalem, Jews of every Nation under heaven; that is, of every Nation where the Jews were diſperſed.

This is yet further confirmed by S. Peter's ſpeech unto them; as when having cited the words of the Prophet Joel, verſe the 22. he ſaith unto them, Ye men of Iſrael, hear theſe words: Jeſus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you, &c. v. 23. Him being delivered by the determinate counſell and fore-knowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified crucified and ſlain. Men of Iſrael, and ſuch as had ſlain their Meßias; ſurely thoſe were no Gentiles. Acts 2. 5.

Likewiſe when at the hearing of this they were pricked in their hearts, he ſaith unto them, Repent, and be Baptized every one of you in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſinnes. For the Promiſe is made unto you and your Children, and to all that are afarre off, even as many as the Lord ſhall call. The Promiſe, ſaith he, is made unto you and your children; were theſe then any others then Jews or Iſraelites, of the ſeed of Abraham? Verſ. 37. Verſ. 38. Verſ. 39.

Laſtly, we finde that of theſe Parthians, Medes and Elamites, and of the reſt named with them, there were added unto the Church by this Sermon of S. Peter three thouſand ſouls: But it is certain that Cornelius the Centurion was the firſt Gentile that was converted unto the Faith: Therefore theſe firſt Converts were no Gentiles. Perhaps you will ſay, They were Proſelytes of theſe ſeveral Nations, and therefore called Jews. I ſay, Not ſo neither; becauſe Proſelytes are by name rehearſed among them, when it is ſaid of thoſe Roman advenæ, (verſe the tenth) that they were Jews and Proſelytes; Ergo, the reſt were Jews by race, and not by Religion onely. But what need I to have heaped together all theſe proofs, when my Text alone is ſufficient to evince it? Verſ. 41.

I come now therefore to a more particular illuſtration thereof, according to what I have thus in general premiſed. And firſt, for the word κατοικοῦντες, which I tranſlate ſojourning, rather then dwelling, (for ſo I underſtand it, that they were not proper dwellers, but ſuch as came to worſhip at Jeruſalem from thoſe far Countries at the Feaſts of the Paſſeover and Pentecoſt, and ſo had been continuing there ſome good time;) 'Tis true, that in the uſual Greek οἰκέω and κατοικέω ſignifie a durable manſion: but with the Helleniſts, in whoſe Dialect the Scripture ſpeaketh, they are indifferently uſed for a ſtay of a ſhorter or a longer time, that is, for to ſojourn, as well as to dwell; as theſe two examples out of the Septuagint will make manifeſt. One in Geneſis 27. 44. where Rebecca ſayes to her younger ſon Jacob, Son, ariſe, and flee unto Laban my brother to Haran, καὶ οἴκησον μετ' αὐτοῦ ἡμέρας τινάς, and tarry with him a few days, untill thy brother's fury turn away: οἰκεῖν is here to tarry but a few dayes. Another is in 1 Kings, 17. 20. where Elijah cries unto the Lord, ſaying, O Lord my God, haſt thou alſo brought evil upon the widow, μεθ' ἧς ἐγὼ κατοικῶ μετ' αὐτῆς, with whom I ſojourn, by ſlaying her ſon? here κατοικεῖν is to ſojourn onely. In a word, οἰκέω and κατοικέω anſwer to the Hebrew verb יָשַׁב, which ſignifies any ſtay or remaining in a place.

Next for the perſons here ſpecified, Jews out of every Nation under heaven; for the right underſtanding thereof we are to know, That before this laſt Diſperſion of the Jews by the Romans, after their Temple and City were deſtroyed by Titus (which at the time of this ſtory was not, nor many years after it,) there had been already two Captivities and great Diſperſions of that Nation, beſides ſome ſmaller ſcatterings. The firſt was of the Ten Tribes, by Salmanaſſer King of Aſſyria, who is ſaid to have planted them in Halah and Habor, by the river of Gozan, and in the Cities of the Medes; and theſe never (I mean any conſiderable part of them) returned to dwell again in their own Country: of theſe therefore (at leaſt chiefly) we are to underſtand thoſe to have been which the ſtory here calls Parthians, Medes and Elamites; Elamites, that is, Perſians, of the Province of Elymais. For in thoſe Countries which theſe names comprehend were the Ten Tribes placed by the Aſſyrian, and there ſtill dwelt and thereabouts in our Saviour and his Apoſtles time, and long after. S. Hierome upon thoſe words Joel 3. 6. The children of Judah and the children of Jeruſalem 1 King. 17. 6. & 18. 11.

have ye ſold unto the Grecians, (which he underſtands of the Captivity by Veſpaſian and Titus) tells us thus much; Filii (ſaith he) Juda & Jeruſalem, nequaquam Iſrael & decem Tribuum, quæ uſque hodie in Medorum urbibus & montibus habitant; The children of Judah and Jeruſalem, not of Iſrael and the Ten Tribes, which even to this day have their habitation in the Cities and Mountains of the Medes. The ſecond Captivity was by Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, of the Two Tribes, Judah and Benjamin, more then a hundred years after that of the Ten. Now a good part of theſe at ſeventy years end returned again, under Cyrus and his Succeſſors, to dwell again in their own Land, re-edified the Temple and City of Jeruſalem, and re-erected their Commonwealth, which continued till our Saviour's time and a little after. Notwithſtanding all thoſe that were Captives in Babylon returned not; no, it may be not much more then the half of them; certain it is, that a great number of them ſtayed there ſtill, thoſe eſpecially which were rich and well accommodated, having no mind to ſtirre: whence in our Saviour's and the Apoſtles times there were an innumerable company of them in thoſe parts, where they flouriſhed with Academies and Schools, and had Doctours not inferiour to thoſe of Jeruſalem it ſelf. Yea from them proceeded the Chaldee Paraphraſe, and that great Doctour and Patriarch of Rabbies, R. Hillel. Of theſe therefore we have reaſon to think were thoſe which are here enumerated by the name of Dwellers in Meſopotamia, οἱ κατοικοῦντες τὴν Μεσοποταμίαν. Where note by the way, that οἱ κατοικοῦντες τὴν Μεσοποταμίαν are comprehended in the number of thoſe whom my Text ſaith were κατοικοῦντες ἐν τῇ Ἱερουσαλήμ· which confirms my interpretation, that κατοικοῦντες there ſignifies ſojourning, and not dwelling, for that they could not be ſaid to dwell in both places.

Theſe two Diſperſions beyond the River Euphrates, how numerous they were in our Saviour's and the Apoſtles times, we may gather from thoſe words of King Agrippa, in Joſephus, in that Oration he made unto the Jews before that fatal ſiege, diſſwading them from rebelling againſt the Romans, their party being too much too weak to maintain themſelves againſt that mighty Empire. Τίνας ἂν ὅτι τὸν πόλεμον ἐκ τῆς οἰκουμένης, &c. What aſſociates (ſaith he) will you have from ſome Country not inhabited, to aid you againſt the Romans? For all thoſe that at this day dwell in any part of this world that is inhabited, are Romans. Except ſome of you hope for help from beyond Euphrates, thinking that your Countrymen in *Adiabene will help you. He goes on, But they are more wiſe then to engage themſelves raſhly in ſo dangerous a warre: Nor would the Parthians ſuffer it, if they ſhould be ſo unwiſe as to appear in ſuch a quarrell. Mark then, that they were under the dominion of the Parthians. Joſephus himſelf teſtifieth as much in his Prologue to his De Bello Judaico; where he informs us, that that Hiſtory of his he had firſt penned τῇ πατρίῳ γλώσσῃ in his own Country language, for the uſe of thoſe of his Nation in the Eaſt: which he thought good alſo to publiſh in Greek, for the better information of the Greeks and Romans concerning the true geſts of that warre. Ἄτοπον ἡγησάμην, &c. For I could not (ſaith he) but judge it to be very unbecoming, and no way commendable, for me to take all that pains onely for the Parthians, Babylonians, and the remoteſt Arabians, as alſo thoſe of our Nation inhabiting beyond Euphrates, together with thoſe of Adiabene; that theſe through my writings ſhould be made acquainted with the true account of both the riſe and end, as alſo the main occurrences and chief events, of that Warre: and to take no care at all to inform and undeceive the Grecians and ſuch of the Romans as were not in the Warre; who being abuſed by the falſe reports or the flatteries of others, know very little of the true ſtory of theſe affairs. Obſerve here the rehearſal of his Nation; Parthians, Babylonians, De bello Jud. l. 2. c. 16. Gr. κη'.

Ionians, Arabians, the Mesopotamian Jews or those beyond Euphrates, and those of Adiabene. Besides he tells us in the same place, That the Jews believed that all those of their Nation, even those who dwelt beyond Euphrates, would have joyn'd with them in their rebellion against the Romans. Acts 2. 5.

Besides these two Captivities by Salmanassar and Nebuchadnezzar, the first whereof never returned again into their own Land, and the second but in part, there happened a third Captivity and Dispersion in the dayes of Ptolemæus Lagi, one of the Greek Kings reigning in Egypt; who surprising the City of Jerusalem, carried many of the People of the Country, of the off-spring of those who returned from Babylon, Captives into Egypt, planting them at Alexandria and the places thereabouts; whom many others followed of their own accord, partly allured by the King's favour, who gave them equal priviledges with those of Alexandria, and partly by the fertility of the Country: so that this Colony became a very great one. These were called Hellenists, because they spake the Greek tongue, and used the Translation of the Septuagint (which was made in Egypt) in their Synagogues. Of these three principal Dispersions came those lesser scatterings in all parts of the Roman Empire and elsewhere. From that of Babylon and Mesopotamia was spred that of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, to which S. Peter, as an Apostle of the Circumcision, writes his two Epistles: which may be gathered, because in his first Epistle he salutes them from Babylon which was their Metropolis. The Church, saith he, at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you; that is, the Church of the Circumcision there. From those of Alexandria and Egypt were derived those plantations in Libya and Cyrene, and all other Hellenists whatsoever in several parts of the Roman Empire. Adde to these, that many of those of Judæa it self, that could not live well at home, upon some occasion or other, either alluring them or constraining them, seated themselves abroad among the Gentiles and in their Cities, being together with themselves under the same Dominion of the Romane Empire. Insomuch that King Agrippa, in that fore-mentioned Oration of his before that last siege, disswading them of Judæa from rebelling against the Romans, in regard of the evil they might bring thereby, not upon themselves onely, but upon their whole Nation whersoever living among the Gentiles, sticks not to say, Οὐ γάρ ἔστιν ὅπῃ τὸ οἰκυμένης δῆμος, ὃ μὴ μοῖραν ἡμετέραν ἔχων, For there is no people in the whole world, which hath not some part of ours dwelling amongst them. Marvel not therefore that S. Luke sayes in my Text, Jews of every Nation under heaven. 1 Pet. 5. 13.

All this is confirmed out of the New Testament it self; forasmuch as before the last Captivity by Titus (which was not till almost forty years after our Saviour's Ascension) and whilst their Commonwealth in the holy Land was yet standing, we read that almost in every City of the Gentiles, whither the Apostles came to preach the Gospel, they found Jews with their Synagogues in them. To which adde that S. James directs his Epistle, To the twelve Tribes scattered abroad, or, as the Greek hath it, Ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς ταῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ as I have also before noted that S. Peter doth his unto the Dispersion of Asia. James 1. 1.

This is that I had to speak for the illustration of this Story and Text; out of which, besides the right understanding of Scripture, whereto it conduceth, you may observe these four things.

First, The wisdom and providence of Almighty God, in so ordering the first publication of the Gospel, that the same thereof, and of that convincing Miracle which gave authority thereunto, might be carried unto all Nations by so many both eare and eye-witnesses of the same, as those Jews were. 1.

Acts 2. 5. 2. Secondly, A probable reaſon why the Apoſtles were ſo ignorant at the firſt, as they ſeem to have been, that the Goſpel was to be preached unto the Gentiles, notwithſtanding our Saviour's Commiſſion unto them, Go preach this Goſpel unto all Nations. For it may be, they thought this Command might be ſatisfied in preaching the Goſpel to thoſe of the Circumciſion onely, which were of every Nation under heaven.

3. Thirdly, The Elogium here given to thoſe who made conſcience (as we ſpeak) or Religion, to come unto the Houſe of God to worſhip; they were ἄνδρες εὐλαβεῖς· ſo ſaith my Text, There were ſojourning in Jeruſalem Jews, devout men, &c. For there appears no other reſpect why they are ſo called, but becauſe they came ſo long a journey to worſhip God in his Houſe or Temple at Jeruſalem.

4. Fourthly, The bleſſed opportunities and means for Salvation which they meet with which come thither to worſhip. For had thoſe Jews ſtaid at home, as the reſt of their brethren did, they had not been partakers of ſuch a bleſſing, nor witneſſes of ſo wonderful a Miracle for confirmation of their faith, as now they were.

DISCOURSE XXI.

1 Cor. 9. 14.

Even ſo hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the Goſpel, ſhould live of the Goſpel; ἐκ τῦ ΕΥΑΓΓΕΛΙΟΥ ζῆν.

MY purpoſe in chuſing this Text is not to make the maintenance of the Miniſtery under the Goſpel the direct aime of my Diſcourſe, but only to enquire what is meant by theſe laſt words, ἐκ τῦ Εὐαγγελίυ ζῆν. Which that we may the more readily and certainly finde, let us examine and conſider a little of the Protaſis, whereof the words I have now read are the Apodoſis. Know ye not, ſaith the Apoſtle, that [οἱ τὰ ἱερὰ ἐργαζόμενοι] thoſe that miniſter about holy things, [ἐκ τῦ ἱερῦ ἐσθίυσι] do eat of the holy thing, or (as we turn it) of the things of the Temple; and [οἱ τῷ θυσιαςηρίῳ προσεδρεύοντες] they which wait at the Altar [τῷ θυσιαςηρίῳ συμμερίζονται] are fellow-ſharers with the Altar? [Οὕτω] So hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the Goſpel, ſhould ἐκ τῦ Εὐαγγελίυ ζῆν.

Here, οἱ τὰ ἱερὰ ἐργαζόμενοι, thoſe who were imployed about holy things, are the Levites, who lived ἐκ τῦ ἱερῦ, of the holy thing, or (if you had rather it ſhould be a Subſtantive) of the Temple, that is, of that which belonged thereto, namely, of the Tithes which belonged to the Temple, but were no offering of the Altar: οἱ τῷ θυσιαςηρίῳ προσεδρεύοντες, they who did incumbere or aſsidere altari, wait at the Altar, were the Prieſts, whoſe proper office it was to offer ſacrifices thereon, and had part of the ſame for their proper maintenance, as the breaſt and left ſhoulder before it was burnt, and after ſo much as was reſerved from burning; ſo they did τῷ θυσιαςηρίῳ συμμερίζεσθαι, συμμερίζεσθαι, as the Apostle speaks, they were fellow-sharers with the Altar; the Altar having one part of the Offering, they another. 1 Cor. 9. 14

Thus, you see, the Apostle in both sutes the maintenance with the Office. The Office of the Levites was τὰ ἱερὰ ἐργάζεσθαι, to be imployed about holy things; their maintenance, τὸ ἱερὸν, the holy thing, or the revenue of the Temple; ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἐσθίουσι, they eat of the ἱερόν. The Office of the Priests, τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ προσεδρεύειν, to wait at the Altar; their maintenance, τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ συμμερίζεσθαι, to share with the Altar. Now then must not the Apodosis answer the Protasis? what manner of similitude, what analogy will there be else? Ergo, as καταγγέλλειν τὸ Εὐαγγέλιον to preach the Gospel is the Office of the Ministers of the Gospel, so is their maintenance noted by ἐκ τοῦ Εὐαγγελίου ζῆν. Those therefore who so interpret these words, as if Εὐαγγέλιον in the last place were taken in no other sense then it was in the first, namely, to note the Function or Calling of the Ministers, (as if the sense were no other, but that the Ministers of the Gospel, whose Calling it is to preach the Gospel, should get their living by their Calling of preaching the Gospel) make S. Paul the Authour of a lame and inconsequent Similitude, whose Apodosis answers not unto his Protasis. For what a Οὕτω, what an [Even so] or analogy would this be? The Levites lived of the Holy portion or revenue of the Temple as their ὀψώνιον or wages; Even so the Ministers of the Gospel must live by their Calling and Function. The Priests were maintained out of the share they had of the Offerings of the Altar; Even just so the Ministers of the Gospel must live by their Function of Preaching the Gospel. May not any one see that the Apodosis answers not the Protasis? For that speaks of the wages, this of the service for which the wages is due. Well therefore, as in the Protasis the wages was compared with the work, so must it be in the Apodosis too; and consequently ἐκ τοῦ Εὐαγγελίου ζῆν must here express the wages, as τὸ Εὐαγγέλιον καταγγέλλειν doth the work.

But now here is the Quære; If ἐκ τοῦ Εὐαγγελίου ζῆν note not the Function, but the wages and maintenance due to the Evangelick Ministers; in what notion then is Εὐαγγέλιον here to be taken, and how to be expounded? * Oecumenius would have Εὐαγγέλιον in this last place to signifie οἱ τῷ Εὐαγγελίῳ πεπιστευκότες, the believers of the Gospel, Εὐαγγελισθέντες, those to whom the Gospel was preached; and the meaning to be, That those who preach the Gospel should be maintained by those which believe the Gospel. But this would make our Apodosis to answer the Protasis little better then the former: For that speaks of the wages and maintenance of the Levites and Priests, not a word of the maintainers. * Besides, to speak properly, 'tis not true, that the people maintain the Ministers: they are not their Ministers, but God's; and he maintains them out of his own revenue, and not at mens charges. Quis militat suis stipendiis? (saith our Apostle, at his entrance upon this Argument) Who goeth to warre at his own charges? Now I ask, Cujus stipendiis militat qui militat? nonne Imperatoris? At whose charges is it that any one goes to warre? is it not at the Sovereign's charges? To which purpose note also by the way, that it is not said here (as we translate it) So hath God ordained, that those which preach the Gospel, should live of the Gospel: but, So hath God appointed, or given order to, those that preach the Gospel, that they should live of the Gospel; that is, Non dicit, Dominum mandâsse aliis ut eos alerent, sed mandâsse ipsis ut ex Evangelio viverent, The Apostle doth not say, that God hath appointed others, that they should maintain them; but that he hath given order to his Ministers that they should live of the Gospel. But to return again to the interpretation of Εὐαγγέλιον, which others therefore had rather take here for τὰ δὲ Εὐαγγελίου, for that which in the Goſpel is conſecrate to God: viz. As the Prieſts and * Levites had their maintenance out of that which was offered unto God in the Law; ſo God had ordained that the Miniſters of the Goſpel ſhould be maintained of that which is conſecrate to him in the Goſpel. And this ſenſe is ſtraight and good.

1 Cor. 9.14.

*Joſ. 18.7. The Prieſthood of the Lord is their [the Levites] inheritance.

But what need we flie to a Trope, when the natural ſenſe of the word Εὐαγγέλιον will ſerve our turn, yea doe it much better? For howſoever in the New Teſtament it moſt commonly ſignifies good tidings; yet, in other Greek Writers, the more uſuall ſignification in the ſingular number is δῶρον ὑπὲρ ἀγαθῆς ἀγγελίας, præmium quod datur lætum afferenti nuncium, the gift or reward wont to be given for good tidings. Homer (Odyſſ. 14.) brings in Ulyſſes in a poor traveller's diſguiſe, ſtipulating with his ſervant Eumæus, what his reward ſhould be for the good news he promiſed to tell him of his Maſter's life and ſpeedy return: Εὐαγγέλιον δέ μοι ἔστω, let this be my Εὐαγγέλιον or Reward, ſaith he; χλαῖνα, χιτὼν, καὶ εἵματα καλά, A cloak, a coat, and other good garments. To whom Eumæus anſwers,

Ω γέρον, οὔτ' ἄρ' ἐγὼν εὐαγγέλιον τόδε πίσω,
Οὔτ' Ὀδυσεὺς ἔτι οἶκον ἐλεύσεται·——

Neither am I able to give ſuch an Εὐαγγέλιον, or Reward, neither will Ulyſſes ever come home again. Plutarch (in his De gloria Athenienſium) relates, that the Lacedæmonians to one that brought them tidings of the victory at Mantinea, having been no actour, but a ſpectatour onely, ſent for an εὐαγγέλιον onely a diſh of meat from one of their common ſuppers called Phiditia: the words are, εὐαγγέλιον ὄκ Φειδιτίου κρέας ἀπέστειλαν. The ſame Author (within three or four lines after) affirmes that Hiſtorians, who relate and deſcribe Battels and Victories in ſuch perſpicuous ſtyles, deſerve an εὐαγγέλιον or Reward from thoſe who firſt reade them: And (in his Demetrius) he tells, that when one Ariſtodemus brought news to King Antigonus of a notable victory his party had obtained againſt Ptolemæus Lagi, but put the King firſt in great perplexity, by diſcovering nothing, either by word or countenance, what his tidings were, till he came to the King's preſence, then ſaying, Χαῖρε, βασιλεῦ Ἀντίγονε, &c. Hail King Antigonus, we have overcome King Ptolemy at Sea: The King anſwered, Welcome, Ariſtodemus; but becauſe thou haſt kept us ſo long in ſuſpence and perplexity, thou ſhalt ſuffer ſome puniſhment for the pain thou haſt put us to; βεβαίως γὰρ ἀπολήψῃ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, for it ſhall be the later before thou receive the reward of thy good tidings. Which is a ſufficient teſtimony both of the uſe of the word, and the cuſtome. Cicero (in one of his Epiſtles Ad Atticum) uſeth the plural number: O ſuaves Epiſtolas tuas, (ſaith he) uno tempore mihi datas, duas! quibus εὐαγγέλια quæ reddam, neſcio; deberi quidem planè fateor: O thy ſweet and moſt acceptable letters, received both at the ſame time! for the which I know not what gratefull returns to make, though I am very ſenſible they deſerve the beſt.

Ad Attic. l. 2. ep. 12.

Beſides, in the plural number [εὐαγγέλια] it ſignifies a ſacrifice for good tidings. Hence Plutarch (in his Phocion) hath εὐαγγέλια θύειν. Iſocrates (in Areopagitico) ὅτι ποιούμενοι πρόξεσιν εὐαγγέλια μὲν δὶς ἤδη τεθύκαμεν, ob tot ſucceſſus bis quidem ſacrificavimus εὐαγγέλια. Xenophon (in his Hellanica) ἔδυε τὰ εὐαγγέλια. To conclude; It is apparent by theſe examples, that Εὐαγγέλιον ſignifies a gift or tribute due for good tidings; whether as an offering to the Gods, the Authors; or as a reward to men, the meſſengers and bringers.

Now the moſt Bleſſed and Happy tidings that ever came to the ears of the ſons of men, is Salvation by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; whereof his Prieſts and Miniſters are the daily meſſengers. Is there not then an Εὐαγγέλιον due for for this? And is not this that our Apoſtle meaneth when he ſayes here, Even ſo the Lord hath ordained that they who preach the Goſpel, ſhould ἐκ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ζῆν. So that which was required onely for acknowledgement of the Divine Dominion under the bondage of the Law, is now turned into the nature of an εὐαγγέλιον in the liberty of the Goſpel; I mean, that which we offer now unto God for the maintenance of the Evangelicall Miniſtry, and other uſes of his ſervice. The ſenſe is moſt fit and agreeable, and makes the Apoſtle's expreſſion (if ſo underſtood) paſſing elegant. 1 Cor. 9. 14.

But you will ſay, What probability is there the Apoſtle ſhould uſe Εὐαγγέλιον in this notion? For though prophane Authors doe ſo, yet the Scripture's meaning, both here and elſewhere, is to be meaſured by its own Dialect. Have therefore the Hebrew, the Chaldee, the Septuagint any ſuch notion as this? I anſwer, Yes, all three of them. For in the Hebrew, בְּשׂוֹרָה, the onely word for good tidings, ſignifies alſo Præmium boni nuncii, a reward for good tidings. Yea, being not above five times found in the Old Teſtament, Schindler will have it thrice taken in that ſignification; and twice will be eaſily yielded him. Likewiſe in the Chaldee, בְּסוֹרָא and בְּשׂוֹרְתָא ſignifie as well the one as the other, both nuncium and nuncii præmium, good tidings and a reward for good tidings. As for the Seventy, the word εὐαγγέλιον is but thrice found with them, and once ſo apparently in this ſignification, as leaves no place for contradiction. It is 2 Sam. 4. 10. where they have, ᾧ ἔδει με δοῦναι εὐαγγέλια, Cui oportuit me dediſſe Evangelia. They are the words of King David, when Rechab and Baanah brought Iſhboſheth's head unto him; When one told me, ſaith he, Behold, Saul is dead, (thinking he had brought good tidings) I took hold of him, and ſlew him in Ziklag, when I ſhould have given a reward for his tidings. The Hebrew word rendred here Reward for good tidings is בְּשׂוֹרָה: the Seventy, as I ſaid before, have δοῦναι εὐαγγέλια· the Vulgar, or S. Hierome, mercedem pro nuncio, a reward for the tidings; the Chaldee Paraphraſt, מַתְּנַת בְּסוֹרְתֵיהּ a gift, or reward, for his tidings.

Thus you ſee, this notion was familiar to all the Languages that S. Paul was brought up in. Why ſhould it then be improbable he ſhould uſe it when he had occaſion? And no marvell it is to be found no oftner; for, unleſs it be in this Chapter, in the whole New Teſtament the thing it ſelf (Reward for good tidings) is never mentioned, intimated, or alluded to. How then could the word be uſed? But in this Chapter, methinks, I hear it uſed a ſecond time, (ver. 23.) I will onely propound it to your conſiderations, and ſo conclude.

The matter ſtands thus. S. Paul, though he received no Reward at the hands of the Corinthians for his pains in making known the glad tidings of Salvation unto them, but did it gratis to them-ward; yet he looked for an εὐαγγέλιον from God, ſtored up in the heavens for all his faithfull meſſengers, and to be received at the great Day: In expectation whereof, he not onely thus preached the Goſpel to them freely, but endured all things, and made himſelf a ſervant to all; τοῦτο δὲ ποιῶ (ſaith he) διὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, ἵνα συγκοινωνὸς αὐτοῦ γένωμαι, This I doe for the εὐαγγέλιον, that I might be partaker thereof with you. What εὐαγγέλιον ſhould it be that S. Paul here aimed to be partaker of? Surely, it ſhould ſeem εὐαγγέλιον here notes ſome Præmium or Reward, even by that which immediately follows, Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all; but one receiveth the Brabeum or Prize? So run that ye may obtain. I leave it to your better meditations, and ſo conclude.

DISCOURSE XXII.

PSAL. 112. 6.

The Righteous ſhall be in everlaſting remembrance.

Prov. 25. 11.

Word fitly ſpoken, ſaith Solomon, is like Apples of Gold in pictures of Silver; that is, gracefull and comely: ſo is a Text of Scripture fitly choſen, and rightly applied to the occaſion. Such an one, as I take it, is this I have now read, not choſen by me, but appointed by order to be uſed at theſe times of * Commemoration. I ſhall need no other Preface to commend it to your attention: Let us therefore ſee what is the Senſe and meaning thereof.

* This Diſcourſe was delivered in the Chappel, at the Commemoration of the College-Benefactors, Anno 1634.

The Righteous, that is, The Bountiful; ſhall be in everlaſting remembrance: In remembrance with God; In remembrance with men: With God, in the world to come, and in this world; With men, How, and in what manner? Theſe are the ſeveral Heads I ſhall ſpeak of; and firſt of the Firſt, the Subject, The Righteous, or the Bountiful, man.

For Righteouſneſs in a ſpecial ſenſe, in the Hebrew and the reſt of the Oriental Tongues of kin to it, ſignifies Beneficence or Bounty, both the Vertue and the Work; and therefore by the Helleniſts or Septuagint is it tranſlated Ἐλεημοσύνη, the word ſo frequent in the New Teſtament for that we call Alms. 'Tis a known place, Dan. 4. 27. according both to the Septuagint and vulgar Latin, Peccata tua Eleemoſynis redime, & iniquitates tuas miſericordiis pauperum: where in the Original for Eleemoſyna Alms is צְדָקָה Righteouſneſs, as we in our Engliſh render it, Break off thy ſins by Righteouſneſs, and thine iniquity by ſhewing mercy to the poor. This notion of Righteouſneſs is to be found thrice together in the 12. of Tobit. Verſ. 8. Prayer (ſaith old Tobit there to his ſon) is good with Faſting, and with Alms, and Righteouſneſs: A little with Righteouſneſs is better then much with unrighteouſneſs: It is better to give Alms, then to lay up gold. 9. For Alms doth deliver from death, and ſhall purge away all ſin. Thoſe that exerciſe Alms and Righteouſneſs, ſhall be filled with life. Here in the Greek copy Ἐλεημοσύνη and Δικαιοσύνη Alms and Righteouſneſs are exegetically put the one to expound the other, but in the Hebrew there is but one word צְדָקָה for them both, that being the word in that language for Ἐλεημοσύνη. Hence in the Syriack Tranſlation of the New Teſtament Ἐλεημοσύνη is rendred by ܙܕܩܐ Juſtitia, and ſo in the Arabick. Hence Matt. 6. 1. for, Take heed that you doe not your alms before men, (as we reade it) the vulgar Latin and ſome Greek Copies have, Attendite nè juſtitiam veſtram faciatis coram hominibus, Take heed that you doe not your Righteouſneſs before men; δικαιοσύνη for ἐλεημοσύνη. Namely, as the word Charity with us, though in the larger ſenſe it ſignifies our whole duty both to God and man, is reſtrained to ſignifie our Liberality to the poor; ſo is the word Righteouſneſs in the Oriental Languages.

If Righteouſneſs therefore ſignifie Beneficence and Bounty, then is the Righteous according to this notion the Bountiful man, or, as we ſpeak, the Charitable. And that it is ſo taken in my Text, both the general ſcope of the Pſalm, and the connexion with the words before and after, is proof ſufficient. For before goes this, A good man ſheweth favour and lendeth: he will guide his affairs with judgement: Surely he ſhall not be moved for ever.* (Then come the words of my Text,) The righteous ſhall be in everlaſting remembrance. After it follows this, He hath diſperſed, he hath given to the poor; his righteouſneſs remaineth for ever: which S. Paul alledgeth 2 Cor. 9. 9. to promote their collection for the poor Saints at Jeruſalem.

Pſal. 112. 6.
* Verſ. 5.
Verſ. 9.

For illuſtration of this and our further information, it will not be amiſs, I hope, to commend to your obſervation ſome other places of Scripture where the word Righteous is thus taken: as namely Pſal. 37. 21. The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again: but the righteous ſheweth mercy, and giveth. Again, Verſ. 25, 26. I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not ſeen the righteous forſaken, nor his ſeed begging their bread. He is ever merciful, and lendeth, and his ſeed is bleſſed. Here the Righteous is the merciful and bountiful; to whom namely this bleſſing, That his ſeed ſhall not want, is proper and peculiar. The ſame uſe is, Prov. 10. 2. Treaſures of wickedneſs profit nothing, but Righteouſneſs delivereth from death. The ſame is repeated again Chap. 11. 4. Riches profit not in the day of wrath; but Righteouſneſs delivereth from death. Where Righteouſneſs to be taken for Alms is apparent out of Tobit 12. 9. where it is ſo applied and rendred, namely, Alms doth deliver from death. I could adde alſo another place, Prov. 21. 26. but theſe ſhall be ſufficient.

Hence appears their errour who conceive of the nature of Alms as of an arbitrary thing, which they may doe if they will, or not doe, without ſin; as that which carries no obligation with it, but is left freely to every mans diſcretion. And this makes ſome contend ſo much to have the Prieſt's maintenance granted to be Eleemoſynary, that ſo they might be at liberty to give ſomething or nothing as they liſted. But if that were ſo, yet if Alms be צְדָקָה Righteouſneſs in the Hebrew tongue, and the language which our Saviour ſpake; if our Saviour call'd them Righteouſneſs, when he mentioned them; who dare affirm then that Righteouſneſs implies no obligation, or that a man may leave it undone without ſin?

THUS much of the Subject, The Righteous: Now I come to the Predicate, ſhall be in everlaſting remembrance. In remembrance, I ſaid, with God and men: With God, in the life to come, and this life. Let us conſider the firſt, The world to come.

It is certain that at the day of Judgement we ſhall receive our doom according to our works of Charity and Mercy; and that of all the works that a Chriſtian man hath done, theſe alone have that peculiar priviledge to be then brought in expreſs remembrance before God: Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdome prepared for you from the Foundation of the world. For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat; I was thirſty, and ye gave me drink; I was a ſtranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me: I was ſick, and ye viſited me; I was in priſon, and ye came unto me, &c. Foraſmuch as ye have done thus unto the leaſt of theſe my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Matt. 25. 34, &c. What doth my Text ſay? The righteous ſhall be in everlaſting remembrance: God remembers our good deeds, when he rewards them, (as he doth our prayers, when he hears them.) If to remember then be to reward, an everlaſting reward is an everlaſting remembrance. 'Tis remarkable, that this priviledge which the works of Bounty and Mercy ſhall have at the day of Judgement was not unknown to the Jews themſelves: for ſo we read in the Chaldee Paraphraſt upon Eccleſiaſtes 9. 7. עתיד מרי עלמא וגו׳, It ſhall come to paſs at the day of Judgement, that the Lord of the world ſhall ſay thus openly to every righteous man

then

Pſal. 112. 6. then before him, Goe and eat with gladneſs thy bread which is laid up for thee, as a reward for the bread which thou gaveſt to the poor and needy when they were an hungred; and drink with gladneſs of heart the wine which is kept for thee in the garden of Eden (or Paradiſe) as a reward for the wine thou gaveſt the poor and needy when they were athirſt: for behold thy good works have found acceptance before the Lord.

The reaſon of this Prelation of the works of Mercy at that great day is, becauſe all we can expect at the hands of our Heavenly Father is merely of his Mercy and Bounty: we can hope for nothing but mercy, without mercy we are undone; according to that of Nehemiah in his laſt *Chap. *Verſe 22. Remember me, O Lord, concerning this, and ſpare me according to the greatneſs of thy mercy. Now in thoſe that are to be partakers of mercy, the Divine wiſdom requires this congruity, that they be ſuch as have been ready to ſhew mercy unto others; judging them altogether unworthy of mercy at his hands, who have afforded no mercy to their brethren: for ſo the James 2. 13. Scripture tells us, that they ſhall have judgement without mercy, that have ſhewn no mercy. The tenour of our Petition for forgiveneſs of ſins, in the Lord's Prayer, runs with this condition, As we forgive them that treſpaſs Matt. 18. againſt us. And who can read without trembling the Parable of the unmerciful ſervant in the Goſpel, to whom his Lord revoked the Debt he meant to have forgiven him, becauſe he ſhewed no mercy to his fellow-ſervant, who owed him a far leſſer Debt? Shouldſt thou not, ſaith he, Verſ. 23. have ſhewed compaſsion to thy fellow-ſervant, as I ſhewed compaſsion unto thee? This rule of congruity, I ſay, is the reaſon why at the day of our great account we ſhall be judged according to our works of mercy and bounty. To doe as we would be done to, hath place not onely between man and man, but between God and men.

Nor is this I ſpeak of manifeſt by the Form of our laſt Sentence onely, but by other Scriptures beſide: what elſe means that of our Saviour, Luke 16. 9. Make unto your ſelves friends of the unrighteous Mammon, (that is, of theſe ſlippery and deceitful riches, for μαμωνᾶ ἀδικίας in the Scripture's Dialect is μαμωνᾶ ψεύδους,) that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlaſting Tabernacles? Or what means that of S. Paul 1 Tim. 6. 17, 18. Charge them that be rich in this world,——that they truſt not in uncertain riches, but in the living God,——That they doe good, that they be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate; Laying up in ſtore for themſelves a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life? Laying up a good foundation, &c. in the Greek, Ἀποθησαυρίζοντας ἑαυτοῖς θεμέλιον καλὸν εἰς τὸ μέλλον, ἵνα ἐπιλάβωνται τῆς αἰωνίου ζωῆς. Here it is obſervable, that works of Beneficence are ſaid to be θεμέλιον or the Foundation of the reward we ſhall receive in the life to come. If any but S. Paul had ſaid ſo, we ſhould have gone near to have excepted againſt it for an error. Works the Foundation of eternal life? No, that ſhall not need: but the Foundation of that bleſſed Sentence we ſhall receive at the laſt day for them; and that is evident by the form thereof, which we have alledged. Whatſoever is meant, a great priviledge ſure is hereby implied, that theſe works have above others. Where give me leave to tell you what a late ſacred Critick hath obſerved concerning the word Θεμέλιον in this place of Timothy; namely, That the ſignification thereof there is not Vulgar, but Helleniſtical, agreeable to the uſe of the Hebrew word יְסוֹד whereto it anſwers; for יְסוֹד ſignifies, as it doth, Radix, vel fundamentum, the root or foundation. But beſides this in the Rabbinical Dialect it is uſed for Tabulæ contractûs, a Bill of contract, a Bond or Obligation whereby ſuch as lend are ſecured to receive their loan again. That therefore fore θεμέλιον, which anſwers עִקָּר in the firſt ſenſe, doth anſwer the ſame likewiſe in the ſecond; and accordingly the Apoſtle's meaning to be, That thoſe who exerciſe theſe works of Beneficence, do provide themſelves as it were of a Bill or Bond, upon which they may at that day ſue and plead for the award of eternall life, Vi pacti, but not Vi meriti. Pſal. 112.6.

In the ſame ſenſe he takes Θεμέλιος, 2 Tim. 2. 19. The foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this ſeal, The Lord knoweth them that are his: And, Let every one that nameth (or calleth upon) the name of Chriſt, depart from iniquity. The mentioning of a Seal here, implies a Bill of contract; for Bills of contract had their Seals appendant to them; each ſide whereof had his Motto, the one ſuiting with the one party contrahent, the other with the other. That to this S. Paul alludes; God's θεμέλιος, ſaith he, ſtandeth ſure, (that is, God's Bill of contract, or his Chirographum,) having a Seal according to the manner: the one ſide whereof carrieth this Motto, The Lord knoweth them that are his; the other this, Let every one that calleth upon the name of Chriſt, depart from iniquity.

YOU have heard how God remembreth the Righteous, or Charitable man, in the world to come. He remembreth him alſo in this: For that which the Apoſtle ſaith of Godlineſs, that it hath the promiſe of this life as well as of that to come, is moſt properly and peculiarly true of this Righteouſneſs of Bounty and Mercy: other Righteouſneſs indeed muſt not look for its reward till hereafter, but this is wont to be rewarded now. 1 Tim. 4. 8.

For Spiritual bleſſings we have the example of Cornelius, who for his Alms-deeds found favour with God, to have S. Peter ſent unto him to inſtruct him in the ſaving knowledge of Chriſt: Thy Prayers and thine Alms-deeds, ſaid the Angel, are come up in remembrance before God. Now therefore ſend to Joppa, and inquire for one Simon Peter, &c. Acts 10. 4, 5.

For Temporal bleſſings hear what David ſays, Pſal. 37. 25, 26. (quoted before) I was young, ſaith he, and now am old; yet have I not ſeen the righteous forſaken, nor his ſeed begging their bread. He is ever mercifull, and lendeth; therefore his ſeed is bleſſed. This bleſſing is the mercifull and charitable man's peculiar, that his children ſhall not want, who was liberal and open-handed to ſupply the want of others. But think not that God remembers the charitable man with a Temporal bleſſing in his poſterity onely; for he remembers him alſo in his own perſon. Thus the ſame David, Pſal. 41. 1. Bleſſed is he that conſidereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. 2. The Lord will preſerve him and keep him alive, and he ſhall be bleſſed upon the earth; and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies. 3. The Lord will ſtrengthen him upon the bed of languiſhing, &c. And doth not his Son King Solomon ſay the ſame? Prov. 19. 17. He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given, he will pay him again. But this perhaps ſome will think may be applied to the reward in the life to come: If it be, it would much illuſtrate that of S. Paul's θεμέλιον I now ſpake of. But Prov. 28. 27. is a place not capable of this exception; He that giveth to the poor, ſhall not lack: but he that hideth his eyes, ſhall have many a curſe.

THUS we have ſeen how the Righteous man is in remembrance with God: Now let us ſee how the ſame is and ought to be in remembrance with men. And it may be inferred from the former: For why ſhould not we remember thoſe whom God doth? The practice in the Church of God hath been accordingly.

The Jews, when they make mention of any of their deceaſed Worthies, are wont to doe it with this Encomium, וכרונו לברכה, Let his memory be bleſſed: Otherwhile with this, וכרונו לחיי עולם הבא, Be his memory bleſſed bleſſed to eternity. And of their Rabbies in general, when they men-Pſal. 112.6. tion them, they ſay, רבותינו זכרונו לברכה, Our Rabbies, whoſe memory be bleſſed. Which encomiaſticall Scheme is taken from that of Solomon Prov. 10.7, זֵכֶר צַדִּיק לִבְרָכָה, The memory of the righteous is bleſſed: which therefore they ſometimes uſe unaltered to the purpoſe aforeſaid; ſometimes with addition, as, Let the memory of the juſt be bleſſed to eternity; ſometimes, Let the memory of the juſt and holy be with bleſſing. Theſe formulæ are frequent in their writings. Nor hath this commemorative Scheme been taken up by them (as ſome perhaps may ſuppoſe) ſince the coming of our Saviour in the time of their diſperſion; but was uſed long before, as may appear Eccluſ 45. 1. where Moſes is thus remembred, Moſes beloved of God and men, ᾧ τὸ μνημόσυνον ἐν εὐλογίαις, whoſe memoriall is bleſſed. And in the next Chapter Eccl. 46. 11. like mention is made of the Judges of Iſrael; namely, The Judges every one by name, whoſe heart went not a whoring, nor departed from the Lord, τὸ μνημόσυνον αὐτῶν ἐν εὐλογίαις, Let their memory be in benediction. So of Judas Maccabæus, 1 Mac. 3. 7. He grieved many Kings, and made Jacob glad with his acts; ἕως τοῦ αἰῶνος τὸ μνημόσυνον αὐτοῦ εἰς εὐλογίαν, His memoriall is, or Let his memoriall be, bleſſed for ever.

But what is the meaning of this Formula? what is it for the memory of the righteous to be εἰς εὐλογίαν, or with bleſſing? The Septuagint's Tranſlation of that Prov. 10. 7. (whence, as I told you, this Form of honourable remembrance is taken) will ſoon reſolve us: for they, in ſtead of the words זֵכֶר צַדִּיק לִבְרָכָה, The memory of the juſt is with bleſſing, have Μνήμη δικαίου μετ' ἐγκωμίων, The memory of the juſt is with praiſes. To make mention therefore of the righteous by way of benediction, is to praiſe them. For the word ברך, or εὐλογεῖν, to bleſs, in Scripture hath a treble notion: Firſt, to ſpeak well of; ſecondly, to ſpeak well for; thirdly, to doe well unto. To ſpeak well of, is to praiſe. So we are ſaid to bleſs God, when we praiſe Pſal. 103.1,22. & 104.1,35. and glorifie him: Benedic, anima mea, Domino; Bleſs the Lord, O my Soul; that is, praiſe him. * Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael; that is, praiſed.
* Pſal. 41.13. & 106.48. Bleſs the Lord, all ye Nations; that is, praiſe him: and ſo every where in
Luk. 1. 68. the Pſalms. The ſecond notion, To ſpeak well for, is to pray for. So the Prieſt is ſaid to bleſs the people, when he prays for them: The Lord bleſs you, and ſave you; The Lord make his holy countenance to ſhine upon you, and be mercifull unto you. So other bleſſings of the like kind are prayers for thoſe over whom they are pronounced. The third notion of bleſſing is, To doe good unto, to beſtow ſome gift or good upon. Thus
Gen. 1. 28. God is ſaid to have bleſſed man, when he ſaid unto him, Increaſe and multiply, repleniſh the earth and ſubdue it; that is, He endowed him with
Gen. 22. 18. theſe gifts. In thy ſeed ſhall all the Nations of the world be bleſſed; that is, receive ſome great benefit. So God is ſaid to have bleſſed the Patriarchs, when he made them to thrive, and gave them wealth and riches; according to that of Solomon, Prov. 10. 22. The bleſſing of the Lord maketh rich, and he addeth no ſorrow with it; namely, ſuch as is wont to accompany riches gotten without God's bleſſing. Hence ברכה, or Εὐλογία, Bleſſing, in Scripture ſignifies a gift or preſent, bounty or beneficence:
Gen. 32.13, &c. & 33. 11. The Preſent of cattell which Jacob provided for his brother Eſau, when he went to meet him, is all that Story through call'd his Bleſſing: The Preſents which David ſent of his prey to the Elders of Judah, 1 Sam. 30. 26.
Verſ. 5,6. are there call'd Bleſſings. And in the New Teſtament, 2 Cor. 9. the collection at Corinth for the poor Saints at Jeruſalem is thrice called Εὐλογία, their bleſſing, which we tranſlate Bounty. I thought good to be a little diligent in this explication, that we might be the better able to diſcern what kind of remembrance of righteous men deceaſed is commended mended unto us in that Scripture, The memory of the righteous is with bleſſing: whence not the Jew onely, as you have heard, but the Chriſtian alſo ſeem to have derived their practice in that particular, which I am now to ſhew. Pſal. 112. 6.

For the Chriſtian in this point hath been no whit ſhort of the Jew, but exceeded him rather, not in the later onely, but in thoſe better and Primitive times: witneſs thoſe anniverſary remembrances of the Martyrs and Saints deceaſed; the appointing of Feſtivall days for their memoriall; the cuſtome to aſſemble at their Sepulchres, to make Panegyrick orations in their honour; and above all, that ancient and ſo-long-continued cuſtome without known beginning, to commemorate at the Holy Table, when the Euchariſt was celebrated, the Patriarchs, Prophets, Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, Martyrs, and Confeſſors: All which tended to this, That the memory of the righteous might be with bleſſing. In the extent of which Bleſſing the Chriſtian went beyond the Jew: For of that threefold notion of Bleſſing I now ſpake of, firſt, to ſpeak well of, or to praiſe, ſecondly, to ſpeak well for, or to pray for, thirdly, to doe well unto; the Jews ſeem not anciently (but onely of * late) to have uſed any but the firſt in their Commemorations, namely, that of praiſe: But the Chriſtian added the ſecond of prayer and good wiſhes for the Saints departed, namely, for their publick acquitall and conſummation at the day of Reſurrection: which, had it continued in the firſt and original meaning, could not be diſliked; but having proved in time the Mother of many Superſtitions and Errours, and kindled the fire of Purgatory, it was thought fit by the Authors of our Reformation to be diſuſed, and the bleſſing of the Dead to be confined to that of praiſe onely, namely, of praiſing and commending them, by recounting their worthy deeds; and then ſecondly, of praiſing God for them. And this is the duty we are now aſſembled to perform to our bleſſed Founders and Benefactors.

DISCOURSE XXIII.

S. Matthew 10. 41.

He that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, ſhall receive a Prophet's reward.

OUR Bleſſed Saviour giving his Apoſtles their miſſion to preach the Goſpel, unfurniſhed with outward things, and forewarning them what harſh and unkinde uſage they and their ſucceſſors were like to finde amongſt men; for the better encouragement of ſuch as ſhould entertain and miniſter unto them, he pronounceth, that whoſoever received them, received him; and he that received him, received him that ſent him. Whereby it appeareth how honourable an office it was to afford them entertainment, and ſuch as the nobleſt need not be aſhamed of. But becauſe the hope of reward is the moſt forcible ſpur to all undertakings, he addeth that too in the words of my Text, He that receiveth, ſaith he, a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, ſhall receive a Prophet's reward; that is, He that receiveth a Prophet, not for any reſpect, but quatenus talis, becauſe he is a Prophet, ſhall have a Prophet's reward.

Mat. 10. 41.

Which words contain in them evidently theſe two Propoſitions.

Firſt, That there is ſome ſpecial and eminent degree of Reward due unto a Prophet above other men.

Secondly, That he that ſhall entertain a Prophet, and doe any good office unto him under that name, that is, for his office ſake, ſhall be partaker of that Reward. Of theſe Two I intend to treat, beginning with the Firſt, the more general.

That there ſhall be differing degrees of Reward in the life to come, is evident by ſundry places of Scripture. As firſt, from that ſo often iterated paſſage, wherein God is ſaid to reward every man according to his works: Which not to be underſtood only of the differing quality of our works, good and evil, which God rewards accordingly, the one with everlaſting bliſs, the other with eternal fire, (as ſome here except,) but alſo of the differing works of juſt men compared together, is manifeſt by that 1 Cor. 3. 8. where the Apoſtle comparing his own and Apollos work together, ſaying, He had planted, and Apollos watered, addes, that both ſhould receive their reward, according to their work; that is, as their work differed, ſo ſhould their reward do.

In the ſecond place the ſame is repreſented by that Parable, Luke 19. of the Ten ſervants who received of their Lord, being to go into a far Countrey, ten pounds to trade with till his return. At what time he that had increaſed his pound to ten pounds, was made ruler over ten Cities; he that had gained but five pounds, over five Cities; and ſo the reſt, according as they had improved the ſtock given them.

A third place is that 1 Cor. 15. 41, 42. There is one glory of the Sun, and another of the Moon, and another glory of the Stars; for one ſtar differeth from another ſtar in glory. So alſo is the Reſurrection of the dead. Here is the full ſtop, and not the words to be referred to that which follows, to wit, that the body is ſown in corruption, but is raiſed again in incorruption, as ſome would have them. For the Apoſtle ſpeaks here of the difference of things heavenly and glorious, (One ſtar, ſaith he, differs from another ſtar in glory;) and not of the difference between glorious and inglorious, corruptible and incorruptible: For this belongs to his other ſimilitude; There are celeſtiall bodies, and bodies terreſtriall; but the glory of the celeſtiall is one, and the glory of the terreſtriall is another.

A fourth place is that 2 Cor. 9. 6. where the Apoſtle ſpeaking of the reward of beneficence, avoucheth, that he which ſoweth ſparingly, ſhall reap ſparingly; and he that ſoweth bountifully, ſhall reap bountifully.

Fifthly, That ſpeech of our Saviour to the twelve, Matt. 19. 27. imports as much; Behold, we, ſaith Peter, have forſaken all, and followed thee: Τί ἄρα ἔσται ἡμῖν; what ſhall we have therefore? V. 28. Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, that ye which have followed me ἐν τῇ παλιγγενεσίᾳ, in the Regeneration, or Reſurrection, when the Son of man ſhall ſit upon the throne of his Glory, ye alſo ſhall ſit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve Tribes of Iſrael. S. Luke relates it upon another occaſion; whereby it appears our Saviour uttered it more then once, Ye (ſaith he to the Twelve) are they which have continued with me in my temptations: Therefore I appoint you a Kingdome, as my Father hath appointed unto me; That ye may eat and drink at my Table in my Kingdome, and ſit on Thrones, judging ing the twelve Tribes of Israel, Luke 22. 28, &c. Whatsoever is meant by the Reward intimated in this expression, for the quality thereof, 'tis plain there is some peculiar and more eminent degree of glory here promised the Apostles, which shall not be common to others with them. First, Because it is the reward of their proper and peculiar service unto Christ, as the Text shews. Secondly, Because these twelve thrones in regard of their number can befit no more but these twelve. Thirdly, Supposing the twelve Tribes of Israel here mentioned to be likewise in a condition of bliss and happiness, it must needs be that those who sit upon twelve Thrones to judge, that is, to govern them, must be in a higher degree of dignitie then those over whom they shall be set. Whatsoever therefore the meaning of the Reward be, thus much may be gathered from the description thereof, That there shall be differing degrees of glory in the Kingdome of Christ to come. Mat. 10. 41.

To conclude; It hath been the ancient and constant Tradition of the Church, testified by the unanimous consent of all the Fathers, and was never questioned by any, untill that Peter Martyr in this last Age first began to doubt thereof, and others since more boldly adventured to contradict it.

Their main Reasons or Objections are these two. First, That the Reward to come depends not upon the virtue or dignity of our works, but onely upon the merit and satisfaction of Christ: But his merits and satisfaction are uniform and the same to all: Ergo, The Reward also which is to be given by virtue thereof shall be so. This Objection proceeds from that scrupulosity which many of ours have to admit of any relation or connexion between our Works and the Reward to come; whence also is that, that they should not be done intuitu mercedis, with an eye or respect to the Reward. Which is an Assertion repugnant to the tenour of the Scripture, where the Holy Ghost is wont to ground his Exhortations upon the hope and promise of Reward. Now what an unreasonable conceit is it to think that where wages is promised for the encouragement of the labourer, the labourer should be bound to work without having any eye or respect to his wages? But to the Objection I answer thus; That it is true, the Merits and satisfaction of Christ are the Foundation of our Reward, namely, that alone which makes our works capable thereof, without which they were not: nevertheless it is true also that our Works are the Subject of Reward; and the same Merit of Christ makes differing works capable of a different Reward.

Their other Objection hath a little more likelihood, and seems therefore somewhat more difficult to answer. It is taken from the Parable, Matt. 20. where the Kingdome of heaven is compared to a Vineyard, the Master whereof went out in the morning to hire labourers, and agreed with them for a peny a day: Three hours after, or at the third hour, he went out and hired more; and so again at the sixth and ninth hours; yea at the eleventh, but an hour before Sun went down, he did likewise. And when they came all to receive their wages, he gave the last hired as much as he had agreed for with the first, to wit, every one a peny, neither more nor less. Whence it seems to follow, that the reward to come, signified by this peny, shall not be proportioned according to the difference of works, but be one and the same to all.

I answer; First, The Parable proves no more but this, That the sooner or later coming of men into the Vineyard of the Church, (for all were not to be called at one time, nor in one age) shall not make their reward greater or lesser: not that the reward shall not be different according to the diverſity of our works. Secondly, I adde, That this Parable hath reſpect to the Churches of the Jews and Gentiles not called, nor to be called, at the ſame time. For the Jews were hired into the Vineyard betimes in the morning, the Gentiles not till the day was far ſpent; yet ſhall they by the goodneſs of their heavenly Maſter receive the ſame reward of eternall life which was promiſed to the Jew, with whom the Covenant was firſt made, and who bare the heat of the day, whileſt the other ſtood idle. Beſides, in the new Vineyard of the Goſpel the turn is changed; for into it (becauſe the Jews would not) the Gentiles have firſt been hired, though at ſeveral hours; the Jew being not to come in untill the eleventh hour; yet when Chriſt comes to give us wages, ſhall receive his peny, that is, eternall life, as well as we.

Mat. 10. 41.

This to be the genuine ſcope of the Parable, may be gathered by that which is preſently ſubjoyned by our Saviour as it were to be the Key thereof: So the laſt (ſaith he) ſhall be firſt, and the firſt laſt; πολλοὶ γάρ εἰσι κλητοὶ, ὀλίγοι δὲ ἐκλεκτοὶ, for many are called, but few are choſen: which I underſtand thus; The laſt, that is, the Gentiles who came in laſt, ſhall be the firſt partakers of Chriſt's Kingdome: The Jews, who were firſt in Covenant, and had wrought ſo long before us in God's Vineyard, ſhall be laſt in the Covenant of Chriſt, and not converted till the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in: For though many of them were invited at the firſt coming of Chriſt, yet few or none obeyed, and ſo the Nation became not of his peculium, but ſtands yet rejected; πολλοὶ γὰρ κλητοὶ, ὀλίγοι δὲ ἐκλεκτοί. To the like purpoſe is the ſame ſpeech uſed by our Saviour, Luk. 13. 29, 30. They ſhall come, ſaith he, from the Eaſt, and from the Weſt, and from the North, and from the South, and ſhall ſit down in the Kingdome of God. And behold, there are laſt which ſhall be firſt, and there are firſt which ſhall be laſt. What means this? Out of S. Matthew 8. 11, 12. where the ſame paſſage is related, we ſhall hear it expounded; for there the words run thus, Many ſhall come from the Eaſt and Weſt, and ſhall ſit down with Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, in the Kingnome of heaven: But the children of the Kingdome (that is, the whole generation of Iſrael, who received not the Goſpel at the Preaching of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and all the generations ſince, who have continued in unbelief) ſhall be caſt out into outer darkneſs.

And here by the way, becauſe the Parable uſeth the notion of a Day to ſignifie a time of many Ages, it will not be altogether unſeaſonable to note, that the Metaphor may appear the eaſier, how that the Scripture often elſewhere calls the whole time of man's pilgrimage in this world by the name of a Day. As, To day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. And Heb. 3. 13. Exhort one another καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν, every day, whileſt it is called to Day. Where we ſee Day to include every day. And I believe we are thus to underſtand Day in the Lord's Prayer, in that Petition, Give us this day our daily Bread; that is, the whole time we live in this world. For in ſtead of S. Matthew's This Day, ſpoken after the Hebrew notion, S. Luke hath in the ſame Petition, καθ' ἡμέραν, that is, every day. Therefore S. Matthew's This day muſt comprehend S. Luke's Every day, if the ſenſe of the Petition in both of them be the ſame, as I believe it is. Nay more then this; The world to come, even Seculum æternitatis, or Eternity it ſelf, is likewiſe termed a Day by S. Peter, 2 Ep. 3. 18. our Lord, ſaith he, and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to whom be glory both now καὶ εἰς ἡμέραν αἰῶνος, and to the Day of Eternity. A long Day indeed. But this obiter.

Pſal. 95. 7. Heb. 3. 7.

Thus having cleared my Propoſition in theſi, or in general [That there ſhall be differing degrees of glory in the Reward to come;] it remains that I make it good in the hypotheſis concerning a Prophet; namely, That to them who who inſtruct others in the ways and will of God, which is the Office of a Prophet, there belongs a preeminence of reward above and beſides that which is common to all Saints. This preeminence of glory the School-men term Aureola, that is, an Additament of felicity to that eſſential glory in the Viſion of God, which they term Aurea. This Aureola or Coronet to be added to the Crown of glory, they aſcribe to three ſorts of perſons; to Virgins, to Martyrs, and to Doctors or Prophets. The two firſt are out of my ſcope: The third, of Prophets, let us ſee how it is proved out of Scripture. Mat. 10. 41.

Firſt therefore, it is apparent from my Text, He that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, ſhall receive a Prophet's reward: Ergo, there is ſome ſpecial or peculiar Reward belonging to a Prophet, and that too an eminent one; otherwiſe our Saviour's ſpeech will have no enforcement in it, as he that conſiders thereof may eaſily ſee.

The ſecond is, Dan. 12. 3. where the Angel propheſying of the Reſurrection to be at the end of Time, and ſaying, That many of them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to ſhame and everlaſting contempt; he addes, And thoſe that be wiſe (that is, have learned the true wiſdome, which conſiſts in the fear of God) ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the Firmament: but thoſe that turn many unto righteouſneſs, (that is, the Teachers and Inſtructers,) as the Stars for ever and ever. Here the difference between thoſe that teach and are taught is as much as between the light of the Stars and the brightneſs of the Firmament. Some will have the whole ſentence to ſpeak of the eminency of glory laid up for Prophets, tranſlating הַמַּשְׂכִּילִים in the firſt place not docti or intelligentes, but Doctores: The Teachers ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the Firmament; and they that turn many unto righteouſneſs, as the Stars for ever and ever. But I have followed that interpretation which our Tranſlators thought moſt likely.

Thirdly, To this eminency of glory the Angel ſeems alſo to have reſpect in the end of the Chapter, when he ſays, But go thy way, Daniel, till the end be; for thou ſhalt reſt, and ſtand up in thy lot at the end of days: in ſorte tua in thy lot, that is, in ſorte Prophetarum in the lot of Prophets. And this perhaps may be that too which our Saviour intends, Matt. 5. 19. Qui fecerit & docuerit, magnus vocabitur (i. erit) in regno cœlorum, Whoſoever ſhall doe and teach them, the ſame ſhall be called (i. ſhall be) great in the kingdome of heaven.

The reaſon of all this is, Becauſe thoſe who teach and convert others to righteouſneſs, have an intereſt and a kind of title to all the good works which they ſhall doe: How then can their Reward but be great and eminent, when not onely their own works, but the works of their converts and diſciples, ſhall be brought into their account? A matter, if we conſider it, of no ſmall encouragement and comfort unto us, whom God hath placed in this condition to be Teachers and Inſtructers of others, if ſo be we bury not our Talent in a Napkin, but imploy it for the advantage of our Lord and Maſter. For it is not the Habit or Faculty, but the Work, which ſhall reap the Reward we ſpeak of. Happy are we therefore, if we neglect not this opportunity of bliſs which God hath given us.

AND thus having done with the Firſt Propoſition I undertook, I come unto the Second; which is, That he that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, ſhall be partaker of a Prophet's reward. He that receives, that is, doth any good office, or deſerves well of a Prophet. For this to be the meaning, may appear by that which follows; He that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, ſhall receive a righteous man's reward:

Mat. 10. 41. where righteous is to be taken by way of eminency, for one of eminent ſanctity, ſuch as among the Jews had therefore the ſurname of Juſt or Righteous; as Simeon the Juſt, James the Juſt, and other the like. Then Verſ. 42. in the next words the expreſſion is varied; Whoſoever ſhall give to drink to one of theſe little ones a cup of cold water in the name of a diſciple, ſhall not loſe his reward: whence I ſay we may gather what good office the word receiving (before uſed) intimated to us, namely, to relieve, maintain, ſupport, and the like. He therefore that thus receives a Prophet, ſhall be partaker, ſaith our Saviour, of a Prophet's reward; that is, have an eminent reward, or of the quality of a Prophet, though himſelf be none.

The reaſon is, Becauſe he that ſupports and enables a Prophet for his duty, hath an intereſt in his work, and conſequently in the reward that belongs unto it. This appears by the contrary, becauſe he that maintains and abetts thoſe who commit an evil act, makes himſelf guilty of their ſin, and ſo of the puniſhment due to the ſame. An example whereof we have in that of the Benjamites in the Book of Judges; who by abetting the men of Gibeah, who committed that foul abomination with the Levite's Wife, made themſelves guilty of their ſin, and brought that hideous judgment, which at firſt was deſerved only by a few ſons of Belial, upon the Heads of the whole Tribe: It is a known ſtory. Now it is par ratio for a man to entitle himſelf to anothers good works, as to his ill.

But there is a modification in the Text, whereupon this Reward we ſpeak of depends, otherwiſe not to be looked for: And that is, This good office muſt be done in nomine Prophetæ, in the name of a Prophet, not for any other reſpect, then as he is, and becauſe he is, a Prophet: He that receiveth a Prophet in nomine Prophetæ, ſhall receive a Prophet's reward. Not he that receives him only for ſome perſonal or by-reſpect, becauſe he is his kinſman, friend, or friend's ally; or (which is the ground of the moſt reſpect the Prophet gets among the moſt now-a-days,) becauſe he is one of their own ſide and faction: but, ſetting all ſuch reſpects aſide, eo nomine quia Propheta, with mere reſpect to their office and calling, or becauſe they are (as Valens and Valentinian in their Reſcript apud * Theodoretum calls them) διοικηταὶ τοῦ μεγάλου Βασιλέως, Stewards of the great King of all the earth. I may tell you that this is no ordinary thing now-a-days. We may perhaps finde ſome that can be content to make much of the Prophet for ſome perſonal qualities of his, or perhaps becauſe he hath abilities above ordinary, or becauſe it may be he is like to further the way they wiſh good luck to, or that they may gain repute among ſome ſort of men, or for other reſpects of like nature: But are there many which regard them in the name of a Prophet? How then comes it to paſs that their courteſies are ſo appropriate to the Perſons of ſome, that they ſhew no reſpect or eſteem to the Calling in others?

* Eccleſhiſt. l. 4. c. 7.

Whence comes that Unchriſtian, or indeed Atheiſtical, language, A baſe Prieſt, A paultry Prieſt? It would never have grieved me if any other had ſerved me thus; but to be ſerved thus by a baſe Prieſt, who can endure it? Tell me in good earneſt, is this to honour a Prieſt or a Prophet in the name of a Prophet? or not rather point-blank unto it, to reproach and diſhonour him under that reverend Name, that is, to deſpiſe and reproach the Calling it ſelf? For can a man honour that condition, the name whereof he thinks to be a reproach? Is any man wont to ſay, A baſe Lord, A baſe Knight, A baſe Gentleman, A baſe Chriſtian? No: And why? becauſe he accounts them all Terms and Titles of Honour. Judge then by this, what account they make of God's Ambre, who turn the very Title of their Calling into a name of reproach; and what reward by proportion they are like to merit merit at Chriſt's hands: Not a Prophet's, I am ſure; and whether a Chriſtian's or not, themſelves may judge. 'Tis often, and too often, true indeed, that for our Perſons we are unworthy of any better reſpect; but even then it beſt appears whether a man hath reſpect to the Calling eo nomine, when there is nothing in the Perſon to move him to it. Mat. 10.41.

But there is another ſort of men, who honour not a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, yet behinde; namely, ſuch as rob and ſpoil them of their livelihood and daily bread; and not onely themſelves give nothing to enable and encourage them the better to perform their Miniſtery, but take from them ſeveral ways that which the Piety and Bounty of their Anceſtors hath allotted them: yea to many, if not to the moſt, no gain or theft is more ſweet then that which is gotten out of the Prieſt's portion. But whether it will prove ſo at that day when the juſt God ſhall reward every man according to his works, may be greatly feared. I told you a little before, that the reaſon why he that receives a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, ſhall be partaker of a Prophet's reward, is, becauſe he that ſupports and enables a Prophet to doe his duty, hath thereby an intereſt in his work, and conſequently in the reward due to the ſame. If this be ſo, what can they look for, who by ſubtracting their daily bread from them, hinder and diſenable them from the free and chearfull performance of their duty, by diſtracting them with the cares of providing for their bodily life? Do they not derive upon themſelves the guilt of whatſoever impediment comes hereby to the propagation of the Kingdome of Chriſt? Shall not the loſs of every Soul that periſheth for want of due proviſion to maintain an able Miniſter, be caſt to their account at the laſt day? I will ſpeak nothing now of the burthen which Sacriledge it ſelf, as being a robbing of God, carries with it, (See Prov. 20.25. It is a ſnare to the man who devoureth that which is holy, and after vows to make enquiry;) nor of thoſe dreadfull execrations which the Donors of ſuch things were wont antiquo ritu to lay upon the heads of all ſuch as ſhould divert them to prophane uſes, wherewith theſe men willingly and wilfully involve themſelves. I will, I ſay, not ſpeak of theſe; for the preſent * occaſion calls upon me, and tells me that I came not hither to curſe, but to bleſs. I therefore change my note, and ſay, Bleſſed be God our heavenly Father, who notwithſtanding the malignity of many, hath not left us deſtitute, but in every Age hath raiſed up ſome to ſhew kindneſs unto the Prophets, and to provide entertainment for them. Witneſs the goodly Buildings and liberal Endowments in our two Seminaries for the entertainment and education of Prophets and Prophets Sons: more particularly the Bounty of thoſe Worthies the fruits of whoſe Piety and Devotion we our ſelves here aſſembled by the Divine goodneſs enjoy; Whoſe bleſſed names therefore, as their deſerts challenge at our hands, let us remember with all due honour and thankfulneſs.

DISCOURSE XXIV.

S. LUKE 2. 13, 14.

*And ſuddenly there was with the Angel a multitude of the heavenly Hoſt, praiſing God, and ſaying, Glory be to God on high, (*or, in the higheſt) and on earth Peace, Good-will towards men.

AT the Creation of the world, when God laid the foundations of the Earth, and ſtretched out his line thereon, the Stars of the morning (as God himſelf deſcribes it, Job 38. 7.) ſang together, and all the Sons of God (that is, the holy Angels) ſhouted for joy. This in my Text is ſo like it, that a man would think ſome new Creation were in hand; nor were it much wide of truth to affirm it: for if ever there were a day wherein the Almighty Power, the incomparable Wiſdome, the wonderfull Goodneſs of God again the ſecond time appeared, as it did at the world's Creation, it was this day whereof S. Luke our Evangeliſt now treateth; when the Son of God took upon him our Fleſh, and was born of a Virgin, to repair the breach between God and man, and make all things new. The news of which Reſtauration was no ſooner heard and made known to the Shepherds by an Angel ſent from heaven, but ſuddenly the heavenly Hoſt deſcended from their celeſtiall manſions, and ſung this Carol of joy, Glory be to God on high, and welcome Peace on earth, Good-will towards men. A Song renowned both for the ſingularity of the firſt example, (for untill this time, unleſs it were once in a Prophetical Viſion, we ſhall not finde a Song of Angels heard by men in all the Scripture) and from the cuſtome of the Church, who afterward took it up in her Liturgy, and hath continued the ſinging thereof ever ſince the days of the Apoſtles unto theſe of ours. Yet perhaps it is not ſo commonly underſtood as uſually ſaid or chaunted; and therefore will be worth our labour to enquire into the meaning thereof, and hear ſuch Inſtructions as may be learned therefrom. Which that we may the better doe, I will conſider, Firſt, the Singers or Chaunters, The heavenly Hoſt: Secondly, the Carol or Hymn it ſelf, Gloria in excelſis Deo, Glory be to God on high, &c.

For the Firſt; The heavenly Hoſt here ſpoken of is an Army of holy Angels: For the Hoſt of heaven in the language of Scripture is twofold, Viſible, and Inviſible. The Viſible Hoſt are the Stars, which ſtand in their array like an Army. Deut. 4. 19. Leſt thou lift up thine eyes (ſaith the Lord there) unto heaven, and when thou ſeeſt the Sun, Moon, and Stars, even all the Hoſt of heaven, ſhouldſt be driven to worſhip and ſerve them. The Inviſible Hoſt are the Angels, the heavenly Guard; according to that of Micaiah, 1 King. 22. 19. I ſaw the Lord ſitting upon his Throne, and all the Hoſt of Heaven ſtanding by him, on his right hand and on his left. So Pſal. 103. 20, 21. Bleſs the Lord, ye his Angels, that excell in ſtrength, that doe his Commandements. Bleſs the Lord, all ye his Hoſts, ye miniſters of his that doe his pleaſure: Where the latter words do but vary that which is expreſſed in the former. From this it is that the Lord Jehovah, the true and only God, is ſo often ſtyled the Lord or God

God of Sabaoth or of Hoſts, that is, King both of Stars and Angels: according to that Nehem. 9. 6. Thou art God alone; ——— and the Hoſt of Heaven worſhippeth thee. By which Title He is diſtinguiſhed from the Gods of the Nations, who were ſome of the Hoſt, to wit, of the Stars, or Angels, but none of them The Lord of Hoſts himſelf. For the ſame reaſon, and with the ſame meaning and ſenſe, in the Books written after the Captivity, he is ſtyled Deus cæli, The God of Heaven, as in Ezra, Nehemiah, Daniel; in which Books, together with the laſt of Chronicles, the title of Deus Sabaoth The Lord of Hoſts is not to be found, but the title of Deus Cæli The God of Heaven onely, which, as may ſeem, was taken up for ſome reaſon in ſtead of the other. Luk. 2. 13, 14.

But to return to what we have in hand: It was the Angelicall Hoſt, as ye hear, who ſang this Song of joy and praiſe unto the moſt High God. And wherefore? For any reſtitution or addition of Happineſs to themſelves? No; but for Peace on Earth, and Good-will towards men. He that was now born, took not upon him the Nature of Angels, but of men: He came not into the world to ſave Angels, but for the ſalvation of men: Nor was the ſtate of Angels to receive advancement in glory by his coming, but the ſtate of men; and that too in ſuch a ſort as might ſeem to impeach the dignity, and dimme the luſtre of thoſe excellent creatures; when an inferiour Nature, the nature of Man, was now to be advanced unto a throne of Divine majeſty, and to become Head and King not onely of men, but of the Heavenly Hoſt it ſelf. O ye bleſſed Angels! what did theſe tidings concern you, That ruined mankinde ſhould be reſtored again and taken into favour; whereas thoſe of your own Hoſt, which fell likewiſe, remained ſtill in that gulf of perdition whereinto their ſin had plunged them, without hope of mercy or like promiſe of Deliverance? What did it adde to your eminent Dignity, the moſt excellent of the creatures of God, that the Nature of man ſhould be advanced above yours? that at the Name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, of things in Heaven, and things in Earth, and things under the Earth? Phil. 2. 10.

The Obſervation therefore which this Act of the Angels firſt preſents unto us is, The ingenuous goodneſs and ſweet diſpoſition of thoſe immaculate and bleſſed Spirits, in whoſe boſomes Envy, the Image of the Devil and deadly poiſon of Charity, hath no place at all: For if any inclination to this cankered paſſion had been in theſe Heavenly creatures, never ſuch an occaſion was offered (nor greater could be) to ſtir it up as now. But Heaven admits of no ſuch paſſion, nor could ſuch a torment conſiſt with the bliſsful condition of thoſe who dwell therein. It is the ſmoke of that bottomleſs pit, a native of Hell, the character and cogniſance of thoſe Apoſtate Angels, which kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their own habitation, and are reſerved for chains of everlaſting darkneſs, Theſe indeed grieve no leſs at the Happineſs of men then the Angels joy: witneſs the name of their Prince Satan, which ſignifies the Fiend or malicious one, who out of Envy overthrew mankinde in the beginning; out of Envy he and all his fellow-fiends are ſo reſtleſs and indefatigable to ſeduce him ſtill. 1. Jude 6.

The Uſe of this Obſervation will not be far to ſeek, if we remember the admonition our Saviour hath given us in the prayer left unto his Church, which is, To make the Angels the pattern of our imitation in doing the will of our heavenly Father; for ſo he teacheth us to pray, Let thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven; that is, Grant us, O Lord, to doe thy will here, as thy holy Angels doe it there. And as we ſhould imitate them in all things elſe, ſo in this affection towards the happineſs and proſperity of others. And good reaſon, I think, if we mean at all to approve our ſelves unto God our Father, why we ſhould endeavour rather to be like unto them then unto Devils. But in nothing can we be more like them then in this, Luk. 2. 13, 14. to rejoyce for the good, and not repine at the happineſs, of our brethren: Hoc enim Angelicum eſt, This is the Character of the Angelical nature, and conſequently of thoſe who one day ſhall have fellowſhip with them. To be contrarily affected Diabolicum eſt, is the badge and brand of Devils and Fiends; and thoſe who wear their Livery, reaſon good they ſhould keep them company. Let every one therefore examine his own heart concerning this point, that he may learn upon what terms he ſtands with God, and what he may promiſe himſelf of the Bleſſedneſs to come. Do the gifts of God, doth his favour or bleſſing vouchſafed to thy brother, when thou ſeeſt or heareſt of them, torment and crucifie thy ſoul? doſt thou maketheir happineſs thy miſery? is thine eye evil to thy Brother becauſe God's is good: If this be ſo, without doubt thy heart is not right before God; nor doth his Spirit, but the ſpirit of Devils and Fiends, reign therein. But if the contrary appear in any reaſonable meaſure, with a deſire to encreaſe it; (for we muſt not look to attain the perfection of Angels in this life, but in ſome meaſure and degree only) if thou canſt rejoyce at anothers good, though it concerns not thy ſelf; the Spirit of God reſts upon thee: For emulations and envyings (ſaith the Apoſtle Gal. 5.19. &c.) are the fruits of the fleſh; but the fruits of the Spirit are χρηστότης and ἀγαθωσύνη, kindneſs and goodneſs: So he calls the oppoſite vertues to thoſe former vices.

But as any good that betides our brother ought to affect us with ſome degree of joy, and not with grief and envy; ſo chiefly and moſt of all his Spiritual good, and that which concerns his Salvation, ought ſo to do. This was that the holy Angels praiſed God for in my Text, on the behalf of men, That unto them a Saviour was born, who ſhould ſave them from their ſins, and reconcile them unto God. Which ſweet diſpoſition of thoſe good and bleſſed ſpirits our Saviour himſelf further witneſſeth, when he ſaith, (Luk. 15.7,10.) There is joy in heaven (namely, among the holy Angels) for one ſinner that repenteth. But is there any man, will you ſay, ſuch a ſon of Belial as he will not doe this, will not imitate the holy Angels in this? Judge ye: There is an evil diſeaſe which commonly attends upon Sects and Differences in opinion, That as men are curiouſly inquiſitive into the lives and actions of the adverſe party; ſo are they willing to finde them faulty, and rejoyce at their falls and ſlips, hear and relate them with delight; namely, becauſe they ſuppoſe it makes much for their own ſide, that the contrary ſhould by ſuch means be ſcandalized, and the Patrons and followers thereof diſreputed. But ſhould that be the matter of our grief whereat the Angels joy, or that the matter of our joy whereat the Angels grieve? How is this to doe our Father's will on earth as the Angels doe in heaven? Nay, if this be not to put on the robes of darkneſs, and to ſhake hands with hel-
Gen. 49. 6. liſh Fiends, I know not what is. O my Soul, come not thou into their ſecret; unto their aſſembly mine honour be not thou united. And thus much of our firſt Obſervation.

2. There is another Leſſon yet more to be learned from this Act of the Angels; namely, that if they glorifie God for our Happineſs, and the Favour of God towards us in Chriſt; much more ſhould we glorifie and magnifie his Goodneſs our ſelves, to whom ſolely this Birth and the benefit of this Birth redounds. If they ſing, Glory be to God on high, for his Favour toward men; we, to whom ſuch Favour is ſhewn, muſt not hold our peace: for ſhall they for us, and not we for our ſelves? No, the Quire of Heaven did but ſet us in, we are to bear a part; and it ſhould be a chief part, ſince the beſt part is ours. As therefore the Church in her publick Service hath ever

ſince kept it up; ſo muſt every one of us in particular never let it goe down or dye on our hands. Luk. 2.13,14.

THUS much of the Quire; Now come we to the Anthem or Song it ſelf: whoſe contents are two; Firſt, The Doxology or Praiſe, Glory be to God on high; Secondly, A Gratulation rendring the reaſon thereof, Becauſe of Peace on earth, Good-will towards men. For the conjunction καὶ is not to be taken here for a copulative, but, as Vau is frequently in the Hebrew, for a conjunction cauſal, or for כי: Glory to God in the higheſt; for that there is Peace on earth, Good-will towards men. Or, if we retain the copulative ſenſe, yet we muſt underſtand the words following as ſpoken by way of Gratulation; Glory be to God on high, & welcome Peace on earth, Good-will towards men. Or both cauſally and gratulatorily thus, Glory be to God in the higheſt; for (ô factum bene!) there is Peace on earth, and Good-will towards men. Ita Zonar. ad c. 74. Concil. Trullan.

To begin with the Firſt, The Doxology or Praiſe; Glory be to God in the Higheſt: that is, Let the Angels glorifie him, who dwell on high: for ἐν ὑψίστοις is to be referred to Glory, and not to God; the ſenſe being, Glorified be God by thoſe on high; and not, God, who dwells on high, be glorified. This may appear by the like expreſſion in Pſalm 148. 1, 2. whence this Glorification ſeems to be borrowed: Praiſe ye the Lord from the Heavens, praiſe him ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις in the higheſt; Praiſe ye him all his Angels, praiſe ye him all his Hoſts. And therefore Junius for Praiſe ye the Lord from the Heavens, hath Laudate eum cælites, Praiſe him ye that dwell in Heaven: The Chaldee, for Praiſe him in excelſis, hath Praiſe him אנגלי מרומא ye high Angels. In like manner here, Gloria in excelſis Deo, Glory to God in the higheſt, are the words of the Angelicall Quire, inciting themſelves and all the Hoſt of heaven to give glory and praiſe unto God for theſe wonderful tidings. Now therefore let us ſee What this Glory is, and How it is given to God.

To tell you every ſignification of the word Glory in Scripture, might perhaps diſtract the hearer, but would inform him little. Nor will it be to purpoſe to reckon up every ſignification it hath, when it is ſpoken of God: I will therefore name onely the two principal ones. And firſt, Glory, when it is referred to God, often ſignifies the Divine Preſence, or שכינה, as in this Chapter a little before my Text, when it is ſaid, The GLORY of the Lord ſhone round about the Shepherds, and they were ſore afraid. Verſ. 9. But this is not the ſignification in my Text, but another which I ſhall now tell you. For Glory beſides ſignifies in Scripture the high and glorious Supereminency or Majeſty of God, which conſiſteth in his threefold Supremacy of Power, of Wiſdom, and of Goodneſs. And as words of Eminency and Dignity with us (as Majeſty, Highneſs, Honour, Worſhip) are uſed for the Perſons themſelves to whom ſuch Dignity belongeth, (as when we ſay, His Majeſty, his Highneſs, his Honour, his Worſhip:) ſo in the Scripture, and among the Hebrews, His Glory, or the Glory of the Lord, is uſed to note the Divine Eſſence or Deity it ſelf. As in 2 Pet. 1. 17. There came a voice (ſaith S. Peter) from the excellent GLORY, (that is, from God the Father,) This is my well-beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. Rom. 1. 23. the Gentiles are ſaid to have changed the GLORY of the incorruptible God into the likeneſs of things corruptible: As it is ſaid (in Pſal. 106. 20.) of the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs, that they changed their *GLORY into the ſimilitude of an Oxe that eateth graſs. * Jer. 2. 11. S. John, chap. 1. 14. of his Goſpel ſays of the Son, We beheld his GLORY, the glory as of the onely-begotten Son of God. According to which ſenſe he is called Heb. 1. 3. The Brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs Image of his perſon; where the latter words are an expoſition of the former, Image expounding Brightneſs, and Perſon or Subſtance expounding Glory.

Luk. 2, 13, 14.

If Glory therefore ſignifie the Divine Majeſty or Greatneſs, to Glorifie or give Glory unto God is nothing elſe but to acknowledge and confeſs this Majeſty or Greatneſs of His; namely, his Supereminent Power, his Wiſdom, and Goodneſs: for in the peerleſs ſupereminency of theſe Three, (under which all his other Attributes are comprehended) his Glorious Majeſty conſiſteth. Take this withall; That all the religious ſervice and worſhip we give unto God, (whether we praiſe him, pray, or give thanks unto him) is nothing elſe but the acknowledging of this Glory, either in deed or word; namely, by confeſſing it, or doing ſome act whereby we acknowledge it. To come to particulars: By our Faith we confeſs his Wiſdom and Truth; by our Thanksgiving, his Goodneſs and Mercy; when we Pray, we acknowledge his Power and Dominion; and therefore the form of prayer our Saviour taught us concludes, For thine is the Kingdom, Power, and Glory. In Praiſe we confeſs all theſe or any of them, according to that in the Hymn of the Church, Te Deum laudamus, Te Dominum confitemur; We praiſe thee, O God, we acknowledge thee to be the Lord. All which is evident by thoſe forms of Glorification ſet down in the Apocalyps, which are nothing elſe but expreſs and particular acknowledgements of the Greatneſs or Majeſty of God, and his peerleſs prerogatives. When the four Wights are ſaid

Chap. 4. 9. Verſ. 11.

to have given Glory, Honour and Thanks to him that ſate upon the Throne; what was their Ditty but this? Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive Glory and Honour and Power; for thou haſt created all things, and for thy pleaſure they are and were created. When the Lamb opened the book with ſeven Seals, the Wights, the Elders, and every creature in heaven, in earth, and under the earth, ſung, Worthy is the Lamb to receive Power, and Riches, and Wiſdom, and Strength, and Honour, and Bleſſing. And again; Bleſſing, Honour, Glory, and Power be unto him that ſitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. In which we may obſerve the whole Glorification to conſiſt in the acknowledgement of theſe Three ſoveraign prerogatives of the Divine Majeſty, his Power, his Wiſdom, his Goodneſs: The two firſt, Power and Wiſdom, are expreſs; and Riches and Strength belong to Power: the third is contained in Εὐλογία, Bleſſing or Thanksgiving, which is nothing elſe but the Confeſſion of the Divine Goodneſs.

Chap. 5. 12. Verſ. 13.

Hence it is that the Septuagint and Vulgar Latine commonly render the words הוֹד and הוֹדָה, which ſignifie to praiſe and glorifie, ἐξομολογοῦμαι, confiteor. Confitemini Domino, quoniam bonus; quoniam in ſeculum miſericordia ejus. Confeſs unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy is for ever. Pſal. 106. 1. 107. 1. 136. 1. Confitebor tibi, Domine, in toto corde meo, quoniam audiſti verba oris mei. I will confeſs unto thee, O Lord, with my whole heart; for thou haſt heard the words of my mouth. So the Vulgar Latin in Pſal. 137. Confitemini Domino, & invocate nomen ejus. Confeſs unto the Lord and call upon his name, Pſal. 105. 1. and the like. And in the 148. Pſal. 13. Confeſsio ejus ſuper cœlum & terram; that is, His glory is above the heaven and the earth. The Holy Ghoſt in the New Teſtament uſeth the ſame language. Matt. 11. 25. Ἐξομολογοῦμαί σοι, πάτερ, becauſe thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and revealed them to babes; where we have, I thank thee, O Father, Beza and Eraſmus reade, Gloriam tibi tribuo, I give glory unto thee; which I think is the better. So Luke 2. 38. it is ſaid of Anna, ἀνθωμολογεῖτο τῷ κυρίῳ, ſhe confeſſed to the Lord, or ſhe gave praiſe and thanks unto the Lord. So Heb. 13. 15. By him therefore (that is, by Chriſt) let us offer the Sacrifice of Praiſe to God continually, that is, καρπὸν χειλέων ὁμολογούντων τῷ ὀνόματι αὐτοῦ, the fruit of our lips confeſſing to his Name. By all which it is evident, That to Praiſe and give Glory unto God, whether by Praiſe at large, or Prayer and Thanksgiving in ſpecial, is nothing elſe (as I have ſaid) but to confeſs and acknowledge his peerleſs Majeſty over all and in all; which the Scripture calls his Glory. And if ever there were a Work of God wherein all theſe peerleſs Prerogatives of Power, Wiſdome and Goodneſs, all together appeared in the higheſt degree, it was undoubtedly in this wonderfull Work of the Incarnation of the Son of God for man's redemption: well therefore might the heavenly Hoſt ſing, Gloria in excelſis Deo Glory be to God on high; The Power, the Wiſdome and Goodneſs of the Glorious God be acknowledged by the holy Angels and all the Hoſt of heaven for ever and ever. This is the meaning of the Doxology. Luk. 2. 13, 14.

Come we now to the Gratulation, which contains the cauſe thereof; Glory be to God on high; for (ô factum bene! O happy news!) there is peace on earth, good-will towards men. One and the ſame thing two ways expreſſed: for it is an Appoſition, or ἐξήγησις, the latter words declaring the meaning of the former; Peace on earth, that is, Good will towards men, Εὐδοκία ἐν ἀνθρώποις. Ἐν for εἰς: to wit, in imitation of the Hebrew conſtruction, where רָצָה and חָפֵץ verbs which ſignifie εὐδοκέω, and חֵפֶץ the nown ſignifying εὐδοκία, are conſtrued with ב, which is Ἐν in Greek, and accordingly both the Septuagint and New Teſtament expreſs the ſame. But the Vulgar Interpreter reads here, Pax in terris hominibus bonæ voluntatis, Peace on earth to men of good-will: as if the Greek were ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκίας, and not εὐδοκία, as now all our Copies conſtantly read, and I believe ever did. Yet Beza ſeems here to favour the Vulgar Latine, expounding Homines bonæ voluntatis Men of good-will, of thoſe whom God wills well to, to wit, of the Elect, to whom this Peace by Chriſt belongeth; and from the conveniency of this ſenſe, inclines to believe that the Greek anciently read ſo; quoting to this end Irenæus, Origen, and Chryſoſtome (as he ſaith) in divers places. But he truſted too much the Latine Tranſlation of Chryſoſtome; for the Greek Chryſoſtome hath no ſuch matter; but both in thoſe places Beza points to, and in divers others, reads conſtantly ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία, as our Copies do. And ſo I make no queſtion Irenæus and * Origen did too in the Greek Originals, if we had them to look into. But the Latine Tranſlators thought not fit to alter the words of the Hymn ſo ordinarily ſung in the Liturgy, and ſo expreſſed it in Latine as the Latine Church uſed. And for the meaning, I believe the Vulgar Latine aim'd at no other ſenſe then what the Greek implies; namely, That this Peace was no earthly Peace, but the Peace of God's good-will to man, referring the Genitive Caſe voluntatis, not to hominibus, but to Pax. Pax in terris: what Pax? Pax bonæ voluntatis hominibus. That which makes me think ſo is, becauſe Origen, or his Tranſlator, in the place Beza quotes for this reading, expreſly expounds it ſo. And ſo there will not be a pin to chuſe: ſave that the Greek expreſſeth this ſenſe by way of Appoſition, more naturally; the Latine by way of Rection, ſomewhat harſhly; and yet perhaps the Tranſlator thought, leſs ambiguouſly.

Well then, This Peace on earth is εὐδοκία ἐν ἀνθρώποις, God's good-will or favour to men: and God's εὐδοκία ἐν ἀνθρώποις Good will to men is the Peace on earth the Angels gratulate; namely, the Reconciliation of God to men in Chriſt. For by reaſon of ſin, Heaven and Earth, God and Man were till now at enmity: but by Chriſt this enmity is taken away; and man, by the forgiveneſs of his ſin, reſtored unto peace and favour with God. And as by this Nativity God and Man became one Perſon; ſo by this conjunction Heaven and Earth, Angels and Men, become one Fellowſhip, one City and Kingdome of God: the Kingdome of Satan, that Prince of the powers of the Aire, who by reaſon of ſin had captivated and brought under his ſervice the whole Earth, and thereby held the ſame at open war and enmity with Heaven, being now by degrees to be deſtroyed and rooted out. And this is that admirable Myſtery of our Redemption by Chriſt, which the Angelicall Hoſt here gratulates by the name of Peace on earth, and Good-will towards men.

Luk. 2. 13, 14.

And that we may not doubt but we have hit the meaning, That this Peace on earth is God's Good-will to men, and therefore expounded by it; beſides that in the Old * Teſtament Peace is often taken for God's favour and mercy to men; (as in that of Eſay 54. 10. The mountains ſhall depart, and the hils be removed; but my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the Covenant of my peace be removed, ſaith the Lord that hath mercy on thee:) ſo if we examine the uſe thereof in the New Teſtament, we ſhall finde it in ſpecial applied to this our Reconciliation to God in Chriſt by remiſſion of ſin. S. Peter to Cornelius, Acts 10. 36. deſcribes the Goſpel thus, The word which God ſent to the children of Iſrael, preaching peace by Jeſus Chriſt. And S. Paul, Col. 1. 19, 20. It pleaſed God the Father, that in Chriſt all fulneſs ſhould dwell: And (having made peace through the bloud of his Croſs) by him to reconcile all things unto himſelf. What can be plainer then this? The ſame, as I take it, he means Eph. 2. 17. when he tells us, that Chriſt came to preach peace both to thoſe that were afarre off, and to them that were nigh; that is, both to Jew and Gentile. But what peace? namely, that through him we both might have acceſs by one Spirit unto the Father. Hence the Goſpel is called The Goſpel of peace; and God ſo often in the New Teſtament, The God of peace, that is, of reconcilement and favour: and the Evangelicall ſalutation is, Grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father and Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

verſ. 18.

The meaning of this Angelicall Gratulation being thus cleared, let us ſee now what may be learned and obſerved therefrom. Where my firſt Obſervation ſhall be this: S. Peter tells Cornelius, that to Chriſt give all the Prophets witneſs, that through his Name, whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins. Our Saviour after his Reſurrection, expounding the Scriptures to his Apoſtles, ſayes the ſame, Luke 24. 46, 47. Thus it is written, (ſaith he) and thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer, and to riſe from the dead the third day; And that remiſſion of ſins ſhould be preached in his Name among the Nations. But where is this Publication of remiſſion of ſins by Chriſt written? for in thoſe formal words we ſhall hardly finde it. Let us take here the Angels Key, and we ſhall: for they tell us, that Peace on earth is this Good-will towards men. Now do not the Prophets ſpeak of ſome Peace on earth which Meſſiah ſhould bring with him when he comes? Yes ſurely. Well then, let us look for this Publication of remiſſion of ſins under that name, and we ſhall finde it. Eſay 9. 6. Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government ſhall be upon his ſhoulder; and his Name ſhall be called Wonderfull, Counſeller, The mighty God, The Father of eternity, The Prince of peace, (that is, of peace not between men and men, but between God and men) and of the increaſe of his government and peace ſhall be no end. Eſay 52. 7. How beautifull upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publiſheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publiſheth ſalvation, that ſaith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth! Which place S. Paul, Rom. 10. 15. interprets of the publication of the Goſpel of Chriſt. Eſay 53. 5. The chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him; that is, he ſuffered for the remiſſion of our ſins. Eſay 57. 19. quoted by S. Paul to the Epheſians, chap. 2. 17. Peace to him that is afarre off, and to him that is near, ſaith the Lord, and I will heal him. Ezek. 34. 24, 25. I the Lord will be their God, and my ſervant David (King Meſſiah) a

Acts 10. 43.

Prince

Prince among them.——And I will make a Covenant of peace with them. So Chap. 37. 26. Hag. 2. 9. The glory of this latter houſe ſhall be greater then of the former, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts; and in this place will I give peace, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts. Zech. 9. 9, 10. Shout, O daughter of Jeruſalem; behold, thy King cometh unto thee,——and he ſhall ſpeak peace unto the Heathen, and his Dominion ſhall be from Sea to Sea, and from the River unto the end of the earth. Luk. 2. 13, 14.

Thus much of the Uſe to be made of the Angels expreſſion in this heavenly Carol: Now I ſhall propound to your conſideration another, and that taken from the argument it ſelf; namely, That if Almighty God, our heavenly Father, be ſo graciouſly diſpoſed to us-ward, as to be reconciled unto us, by forgiving us our treſpaſſes; then ought we ſemblably to be reconciled to our brethren, and forgive them their treſpaſſes, when they have wronged or offended us. Leo Serm. 6. de Nativit. Natalis Domini natalis eſt pacis, &c. The Birth-day of our Lord is the Birth-day of peace; and therefore let all the faithfull offer up unto God their Father the united affections of peaceable-ſpirited children. The Illation is good; we have the authority of the Apoſtle S. John to back it, 1 Joh. 4. 10, 11. God (ſaith he) ſo loved us, that he ſent his Son to be the propitiation for our ſins. What follows? Beloved, (ſaith he) If God ſo loved us, we ought to love one another. So ſay I, If God be ſo gracious to forgive and be reconciled to us; we ought, as it were, to echo this his loving-kindneſs, and to forgive and be reconciled one to another.

This Congruity or ſemblableneſs of our Actions and Affections one towards another with God's Favour and Mercy towards us, is the Rule and Reaſon not only of this, but of many other duties he requires at our hands. Thus the Jews were every ſeventh year to manumiſe their ſervants, as an act of Congruity and Thankfulneſs to God, who had delivered them, when they were ſervants, out of the land of Egypt and houſe of bondage. They were bidden to uſe a ſtranger kindly, becauſe themſelves had been ſtrangers, and God, when they were oppreſſed, had been compaſſionate and kinde towards them, and redeemed them from their thraldome. Likewiſe we reade in the Goſpel, Luke 6. 36. Be ye mercifull, as your Father alſo is mercifull: and Matth. 5. 7. Bleſſed are the mercifull, for they ſhall obtain mercy. In a word, God hath revealed, he will ſhew mercy to none but ſuch as appear before him with this Congruity. James 2. 13. He ſhall have judgement without mercy, that hath ſhewed no mercy. And therefore the tenour of our Sentence at the laſt Judgement runs, Come ye bleſſed, and be partakers of mercy, becauſe ye have ſhewed it: But, Goe ye curſed without all mercy into Hell-fire, becauſe ye have ſhewed no mercy.

Thus we ſee how God requires this Congruity in general: And as for the particular of reconcilement and forgiving our brother, it is written in capital letters, and urged in ſuch ſort as it might not unfitly be termed The Livery of Chriſtianity. Inſomuch that if we conſider it duly, it cannot but breed aſtoniſhment, that the evidence and neceſſity ſhould be ſo apparent, and the practice among thoſe who look for the benefit of Chriſt and call upon his Name ſo little regarded; whenas I dare boldly pronounce, there is no remiſſion of ſins to be looked for at the hands of God without it.

An invincible argument whereof is, That our Saviour himſelf, in the Prayer he hath taught his Church, hath put in a barre againſt asking it but upon this condition, Forgive us our treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us. If we ask not with this diſpoſition, there is no promiſe that any ſuch prayer ſhall be heard: nay, our Saviour tells us in plain terms, it ſhall not: If (ſaith he) you forgive not men their treſpaſſes, no more will Matth. 6. 15.

your heavenly Father forgive you your treſpaſſes. How then can any man Luk. 2. 13, 14. whoſe heart is fraught with malice, and meditates revenge againſt his brother, hear this and not tremble? Is it not a fearfull thing for a man to carry in his own boſome, not only an evidence that his ſins are unpardoned, but a barre too, that he cannot ask the forgiveneſs of them? Let no man deceive himſelf: Though our conſciences ſhould bear us witneſs of many good works we have done; reconciliatione tamen contemptâ, nullum poſſumus promereri ſolatium, yet if we neglect to be reconciled to our brethren, we are not in a capacity to receive any comfort and mercy from God. So Chryſoſt. As
Eph. 6. 2. the fifth Commandement is called by the Apoſtle the firſt Commandement with promiſe, ſo is this Petition for forgiveneſs of ſins the only Petition with condition: and ſuch a condition too as our Saviour dwells upon and enforces, when he had delivered this Form of Prayer to his Diſciples: For he paſſes by all the reſt of the Petitions, and ſingles out this alone to comment upon, as that wherein the chiefeſt moment lay, and without which all our prayer would be uneffectual and to no purpoſe.

2. A further confirmation of which we have in that parable of Servus nequam, the wicked Servant, Matth. 18. whom his Lord being moved with compaſſion, when he beſought him, forgave a debt of ten thouſand Talents: But he finding one of his fellow-ſervants which ought him an hundred pence, though he fell at his feet and beſought him, yet would not hear him, Verſ. 32, &c. but caſt him into priſon. Then his Lord was wroth, and ſaid, O thou wicked ſervant! ſhouldſt not thou have had compaßion on thy fellow-ſervant, even as I had pity upon thee? And he delivered him unto the tormentors, till he ſhould
Verſ. 35. pay all that was due to him. The Application is terrible: So likewiſe, ſaith our Saviour, ſhall my heavenly Father doe unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their treſpaſſes. We are this Servus nequam, if when our heavenly Father forgives us thouſands of Talents, we ſtand with our brethren for an hundred pence. For there is no proportion between the offences wherewith we offend God, and the offences wherewith our brother offends us. And therefore we have no excuſe, hath our brother wronged us never ſo often, never ſo much, never ſo hainouſly: For whatſoever it be, or how unworthy or undeſerved ſoever, our ſin, our ingratitude to Almighty God is and hath been infinitely greater, even as ten thouſand Talents to an hundred pence.

3. To theſe two Teſtimonies adde a third, and that alſo, as the former, out of our Bleſſed Saviour's own mouth: Matt. 5. 23, 24. If thou bring (ſaith he) thy Gift to the Altar, and there remember that thy brother hath ought againſt thee; Leave there thy gift before the Altar, and goe thy way: firſt be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift, τὸ δῶρόν σου, the word whereby the Septuagint conſtantly render that which the Law calls Corban; and the Goſpel concurres with them, Mark 7. 11. Κορβᾶν, ὅ ἐϛι, δῶρον. Now Corban in the Law is in ſpecial uſed for thoſe Offerings which were made for atonement of Sin, as the Burnt-offering, Sin-offering, Treſpaſs-offering, and Peace-offering, call'd Offerings by Fire or Sacrifices. So that this Precept of our Saviour's here is the ſame in effect with the former. When thou comeſt to offer an offering unto God for an atonement of thy ſin, go thy way firſt, and be reconciled unto thy brother, for without this thy ſin ſhall not be forgiven thee. I ſhall not need tell you, that now in the Goſpel Chriſt is the Sacrifice, is the Gift, which a Chriſtian by faith offers unto God for the propitiation of his ſin; and that this Sacrifice is commemorated, ſealed and communicated unto us in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Lord's Supper: whereby it will eaſily appear, how this Precept of our Saviour's, uttered after the ſtyle of the Legal worſhip, is appliable to the Evangelical.

Hence

Hence in the ancient Church, when they assembled to celebrate this Sacrament, the Deacon was wont to proclaim, Μή τις πρός, Ne quis contra aliquem, Let no man have ought against his brother: And then, Ἀσπάζεσθε ἀλλήλους ἐν φιλήματι ἁγίῳ, Salute one another with an holy kiss: which accordingly they did, first the Bishop and Clergy, then the Laiety, the men apart by themselves, and the women by themselves: and this was a profession of friendship and reconciliation, and therefore called Osculum pacis, the kiss of peace. In after-times the Priest gave this Kiss of peace unto the Deacon, and he to the chief of the Congregation, and so it was given from one to another. In stead of which at length was brought in that fooliſh ceremony, still used among the Romanists, for the Priest to send a little guilded or painted Table, with a Crucifix or some Saint's picture thereon, to be kissed of every one in the Church before they receive the Holy Bread; which they call the kissing of the Pax. So oftentimes profitable and usefull Ceremonies degenerate into toyes and superstitions. Our Church, though she useth no ceremony, retains the substance, when the Priest in his Exhortation to the Communicants saith, If any of you be in malice or envy, or any other grievous crime, bewail your sins, and come not to this holy Table: and by the Rubrick the Priest, if he knows any such, is to turn them back, unless they will be reconciled. Luke 2.13,14.

4. Lastly, The necessity of this duty is testified by that pious and generally-received Custome amongst Christians, to exhort those that are dying to forgive all the world, that so themselves may finde mercy and forgiveness at the hands of God. Is it needfull at the hour of death, and not as needfull in the time of our health? Is there no forgiveness to be expected at the hands of God without it, when we are dying; and is there while we are living? No certainly; All times are alike here; and there is no time wherein God will forgive us, unless we forgive our brother. What then remains, but that we doe every day as we would doe if we were to dye the next? It is a blessed disposition to have a becalmed heart to those who have wronged us, and not to let the Sun goe down upon our wrath; to be able to come before God with confidence, and say, Lord, forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us.

DISCOURSE XXV.

S. MARK 1. 14, 15.

Now after that John was put in priſon, Jeſus came into Galilee, preaching the Goſpel of the Kingdome of God,

And ſaying, The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdome of God is at hand; Repent ye, and Believe the Goſpel.

THESE words are a Narration of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt his firſt beginning to preach the Goſpel; which they deſcribe 1. by the Time when, 2. by the Place where, 3. by the Summe of what he preached. 1. The Time when; After that John was put in priſon. 2. The Place where; Galilee: Jeſus came into Galilee, preaching, &c. 3. Laſtly, The Summe of what he preached; The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdome of God is at hand; Repent ye, and believe the Goſpel. In which Sermon there are alſo ſome parts to be conſidered, which we ſhall more conveniently diſtinguiſh when we come to handle it.

Mean while let us begin with the Three parts or circumſtances already named, in order. And firſt with the Firſt, The Time when; After that John was put in priſon.

I. Our Saviour began not his ſolemn preaching till his Meſſenger John the Baptiſt, who was ſent to prepare his way, was caſt into priſon. This circumſtance is elſewhere preciſely noted in the Scripture, ſo that we cannot doubt
* Chap. 4. 12. but there is ſome matter of moment therein. For * S. Matthew tells us, as S. Mark doth, Now when Jeſus had heard, ſaith he, that John was caſt
* Verſ. 17. into priſon, he departed into Galilee: and then it follows, * From that time Jeſus began to preach, and to ſay, Repent, for the Kingdome of God is at hand. So S. Peter Acts 10. when he came to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt to Cornelius, was carefull to mention this circumſtance of Time, as well as the other of Place. The word, ſaith he, (V. 36, 37.) which God ſent unto the children of Iſrael, preaching peace by Jeſus Chriſt, (he is Lord of all) That word (I ſay) you know, which was publiſhed throughout all Judæa, and began from Galilee, after the Baptiſme which John preached. Loe here the Place, Galilee; and the Time, After that John Baptiſt had done; as in my Text.

All which argues this circumſtance of Time to be one of the marks of the true Meſſiah; as namely, That this Jeſus was that Lord whom they looked for, who was to ſend a meſſenger before him, the voice of a cryer in the wilderneſs, to uſher his preaching and prepare the way of his Goſpel, as was propheſied by Eſay and Malachi, and the Jews at that time expected. Which was the reaſon of that ſcruple of the Diſciples in the Goſpel, when they ſaw our Saviour, and Elias, whom they ſuppoſed ſhould be his Fore-
Matth. 17. 10. runner, appear in glory both together at his Transfiguration: Why then (ſay they) do the Scribes ſay, that Elias muſt come firſt? Our Saviour tells them, that John Baptiſt was that Elias the Forerunner of Meſſiah, ac-Luke 1. 76. cording to thoſe words of his Father Zachary, And thou child ſhalt be called the

the Prophet of the Higheſt; for thou ſhalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his wayes; namely, (as the Angel told him) in the power and ſpirit of Elias. For this reaſon, as our Saviour was not conceived, nor born, till ſix moneths after John; ſo he began not his prophecy till John had done: that ſo the Scripture might be fulfilled, and John be his forerunner and meſſenger both in the one and the other. And laſtly, to conclude the illuſtration of this circumſtance, John was not only a Forerunner of our Saviour in his Nativity and Prophecy, but alſo in his Paſſion and Suffering: For ſo our Saviour himſelf expreſly ſaith Matth. 17. 12. Elias is come, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatſoever they liſted: even ſo alſo ſhall the Son of man ſuffer of them. Mar. 1. 14, 15. Verſ. 17.

Now for the Obſervation or, if you will, the Conſideration I will make upon this circumſtance, it ſhall be this: If that Meſſiah according to Prophecy were to have an Harbinger to prepare the way for his coming; and the Holy Ghoſt in the New Teſtament thought this circumſtance ſo needfull to prove the verity thereof, as ſo curiouſly to note it in the hiſtory of his Nativity, Preaching, and Suffering; It would be conſidered, ſeeing the coming of Chriſt is twofold, Firſt and Second, whether the ſame prophecy imply not that there ſhould be an Harbinger as well of his Second coming as of his Firſt; as well an Elias to prepare the way for his coming in glory to judge the world, as there was at his Firſt coming in humility to preach the Goſpel and ſuffer for the world: An Elias, I mean, to be the Harbinger of Chriſt to the nation of the Jews before his Second coming, as John Baptiſt was at his Firſt. For to the Jews alone is this Elias promiſed, and not to the Gentiles; and John Baptiſt (we know) the Elias of his Firſt coming, preacht to them alone. It is well known that all the Fathers (unleſs S. Hierom ſomewhat ſtaggered) were of this opinion: and why we ſhould ſo wholly reject it as we are wont to doe, I can ſee no ſufficient reaſon. For if the Fathers erred concerning the perſon and other circumſtances of this Elias, yet it follows not but the ſubſtance of their opinion might be true. As we know alſo they erred concerning the perſon, quality and reign of Antichriſt; and yet for the ſubſtance the thing was true. Our Saviour rejected not the Tradition of the Scribes concerning the coming of Elias, when the Apoſtles objected it, though it were mingled with ſome falſhood; but corrected it only: for they looked for Elias the Thisbite; but our Saviour admits it only of Elias in Spirit, not of Elias in Perſon; ſo yielding it true for the ſubſtance, though erring in circumſtance. So ſhould we doe in the like caſe. For he that throws away what he findes, becauſe it is foul and dirty, may perchance ſometimes caſt away a Jewel or a piece of gold or ſilver: So he that wholly rejects an ancient Tenet becauſe it hath ſome Errour annexed to it, may unawares caſt away a Truth; as this ſeems to be of an Elias to be the Harbinger of Chriſt's Second coming: and that for theſe Reaſons.

First, Though the Prophecy of * Eſaias, The voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths ſtraight, alledged by all the four Evangeliſts, and by John himſelf, ſeems appliable only to the Firſt coming of Chriſt; yet the other out of Malachi (expreſly quoted by S. Mark, and by our Saviour Matth. 11. 14. though elſewhere alluded unto) ſeems by Malachi himſelf to be applied not only to the Firſt coming of Chriſt, but alſo to his Second coming to Judgement. For in his laſt chapter, ſpeaking of the coming of that day which ſhall burn like an oven, wherein all the proud, yea and all that doe wickedly, ſhall be as ſtubble; and it ſhall burn them up, leaving neither root nor branch, &c. he addeth, Behold, [ſaith the Lord] I will ſend you Elijah the Prophet before the coming of that great 1. * Chap. 40. 3. and dreadful day of the Lord; And he shall turn* [or restore] the heart of the Fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their Fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse. If we will not admit the Day here described to be the Day of Judgement, I know scarce any description of that Day in the Old Testament but we may elude. For the phrase of turning (or, as I had rather translate it, restoring, as the LXX. ἀποκαταστῆσαι) the heart of the Fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their Fathers; the meaning is, That this Elias should bring the refractory and unbelieving posterity of the Jewish nation to have the same heart and mind their holy Fathers and Progenitors had, who feared God and believed his promises, that so their Fathers might as it were rejoyce in them, and own them for their children; that is, he should convert them to the faith of that Christ whom their Fathers hoped in and looked for: lest continuing obstinate in their unbelief till the great day of Christ's Second coming, they might perish among the rest of the enemies of his Kingdom. Therefore the son of Syrach in his praise of Elias the Thisbite paraphraseth this place after this manner, Who wast ordained (saith he) an ἔλεγχος or type (for so it may be turned) for the times to come, to pacifie the wrath of the Lord's judgement before it break forth into fury, and to turn the heart of the Father unto the Son, and to restore the tribes of Israel, Ecclus. 48. 10. Which explication also the Angel warranteth Luke 1. 17. in his message to Zachary concerning his son, He shall go, saith he, before the Lord in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the Fathers to the Children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just (this is instead of reducing the hearts of the children to their Fathers) to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.

For the better understanding of this first Reason we must know, That the old Prophets for the most part spake of the coming of Christ indefinitely and in general, without that distinction of First and Second coming, which we have more clearly learned in the Gospel. For this reason those Prophets (except Daniel, who distinguisheth those comings, and the Gospel out of him) speak of the things which should be at the coming of Christ indefinitely and all together; which we, who are now more fully informed by the revelation of his Gospel of this distinction of a Twofold coming, must apply each of them to its proper time: Those things which befit the state of his First coming, unto it; and such things as befit the state of his Second coming, unto his Second: and that which befits both alike, (as this of an Harbinger or Messenger) may be applied to both.

2. My Second Reason for the proof hereof is from our Saviour's own words in the Gospel Matt. 17. 10, 11. where his disciples immediately upon his Transfiguration asking him, saying, Why then say the Scribes that Elias must first come? Our Saviour answers, Elias truly shall first come, καὶ ἀποκαταστήσει πάντα and shall restore all things. These words our Saviour spake when John Baptist was now beheaded, and yet speaks as of a thing future, ἀποκαταστήσει πάντα, Elias shall come, and shall restore all things. How can this be spoken of John Baptist, unless he be to come again? Besides, I cannot see how this Restoring of all things can be verified of the ministery of John Baptist at the First coming of Christ, which continued but a very short time, and did no such thing as these words seem to imply; for the Restoring of all things belongs not to the First, but to the Second coming of Christ, if we will believe S. Peter in his first Sermon in the Temple after Christ's ascension, Acts 3. 19, &c. where he thus speaks unto the Jews, Repent (saith he) and be converted for the blotting out of your sins, that the times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord, And that he may send Jesus Christ which before was preached unto you; Whom the heavens must receive untill the times of the Restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth mouth of all his holy Prophets since the world began. The word is the same, ἀπο-καταστάσεως πάντων. If the time of Restoring all things be not till the Second coming of Christ, how could John Baptist restore all things at his First? If the Master come not to restore all things till then; surely his Harbinger, who is to prepare his way for restoring all things, is not to be lookt for till then. Mar. 1.14,15.

These are the Reasons which have induced me to think, that the opinion which the Church hath held as farre as I know from her Infancy, of an Elias which should be the Harbinger of Christ's Second coming, hath some matter of truth in it. But that this Elias should be Elias the Thisbite who was taken up into heaven, I confess I believe not, no more then that he should be slain by Antichrist, as some fable. For that which the Prophet saith, Behold, I will send you Elijah the Prophet, proves no more that it should be Elijah in person, then that which is said of Messiah [And David my servant shall rule over them] proves Christ should be David in person. It is much more like, if it be one that comes again, it should be John Baptist himself, who was the Harbinger of the First coming: That as Christ himself the Master hath two comings, so should his Harbinger have; And as it shall be the same Christ which comes the second time that came the first, so should his Harbinger be the same. And to this both the words of the Angel to Zachary the father of the Baptist, and the words of our Saviour in the place * before quoted, would not be unpliable. The Second coming of Christ is the time of the Resurrection, and in that respect it would not be unsuitable for the Harbinger thereof to be one risen from the dead. But as for Elias the Thisbite's coming, I find no ground at all, but the contrary. Howsoever, though I compare probabilities, I will not determine any thing; lest some perhaps should say, that while I reject old fables, I coin new ones. I rather conclude, with that Jewish Proverb, Cùm Elias venerit, solvet nodos, When that Elias comes, he shall dissolve hard questions. Mal. 4. 5. Ezek. 37. 24. * and Matth. 11. 14.

AND THUS much of the circumstance of Time when our Saviour first began his solemn prophecy or preaching of the Gospel, namely not till his Harbinger John had done and finished his preparation. Now I come to the Second circumstance, namely of the Place, which was Galilee: Jesus came into Galilee, &c. A circumstance curiously noted by all the Evangelists, That our Saviour published his Gospel in Galilee. S. Peter also in his Sermon to Cornelius stamps it with this character, The word which began from Galilee. No name of Place in the story of our Saviour's conversation on earth more frequent, more beaten upon, then this of Galilee; nor scarce any mark more evidently demonstrates him to be the true Messiah, then this of Galilee. Yet (which is to be admired) no character so much neglected, or so little understood, as this of Galilee: as if we had conspired with the unbelieving Jews, and said, Can there any good come out of Galilee? But if you please to lend me your attention, I will doe my best to let you see how great a Mysterie, how principal an Evidence of our Faith lyes in this one so unregarded circumstance. In which Discourse I will chalk out my way in this manner. II. Act. 10 37.

First, I will describe What, and Where this Country of Galilee was.

Secondly, I will shew that our Saviour's proper and chiefest abode, his preaching and his works, were in Galilee.

Thirdly, (which is the Crown of all) That the true Messiah according to prophecy was to appear and have his chief conversation in Galilee.

For the First, The Land of Canaan or Palæstine was in our Saviour's time divided into Three principal Provinces. On the South, Judæa, which contained the Lot of the two Tribes, Judah and Benjamin. In the midst was Samaria, where the Tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh anciently dwelt; I.

but

Mar. 1. 14,15. but now was inhabited by the off-ſpring of thoſe Nations which the King of Aſſyria placed in their rooms when he carried them captive. On the North was Galilee, the remoteſt from Jeruſalem; the chiefeſt and fertileſt part whereof towards Jordan was the Land of Zebulun and Naphtali. The reſt had been the habitation of the two ſmall Tribes, Aſher and Iſſachar. Galilee was divided into two parts, the Higher and the Lower. The Higher was for the moſt part thereof the Land of Naphtali, wherein (there where it bordered upon Zebulun) ſtood the rich and beautiful Capernaum, the Metropolis or chiefeſt City of all Galilee, ſituate upon the bank of Jordan upon the lake of Genneſaret or Tiberias, called the Sea of Galilee: over againſt which (on the other ſide the water) ſtood Chorazin, which our Saviour Matt. 4. 15. pronounced a Woe unto. This Galilee was called Galilee of the Gentiles: either becauſe part of of it was long and even till Solomon's time inhabited ſtill by Gentiles; or becauſe Solomon gave twenty cities of the ſame to Hiram King of Tyre, which perhaps were the ſame which the Gentiles till then inhabited; or laſtly, becauſe it was the outmoſt part of the land, and ſo next unto the Gentiles. The Lower Galilee contained the Tribe of Zebulun (and alſo Iſſachar) wherein were the cities Nazareth and Bethſaida near the ſea or lake of Galilee; and Cana, where our Saviour wrought his firſt miracle by turning water into wine; alſo Mount Tabor, where he was transfigured. From Capernaum along by the ſea-ſide, and through Bethſaida, lay the great road or way from Syria into Egypt, which is ſuppoſed to be that which the Scripture calls the way of the ſea. At the time of our Saviour's preaching and ſuffering, two of theſe three Provinces, Judæa and Samaria, were governed by the Roman Preſident, which then was Pontius Pilate; the third, Galilee, was under Herod the Tetrarch (or Antipas) ſo called becauſe he was Prince but of the Fourth part of the Kingdom of Herod his father. This was he that beheaded John the Baptiſt, and was reconciled to Pilate the Preſident of Judæa when our Saviour was condemned.

2. Thus much to ſhew What and Where this Region of Galilee was: Now I come to the Second thing I propounded, namely, That our Saviour's converſation, while he was upon earth, was principally and ordinarily in Galilee. Firſt, He was both conceived and brought up at Nazareth, a City of Galilee. Secondly, When he began the ſolemn publication of his Goſpel, he choſe Capernaum, the Metropolis of Galilee, for his ſtation, and went and dwelt there. There he choſe his Diſciples, namely, Galileans; which the two Angels at the time of his Aſcenſion can witneſs, when Acts 1. 11. they ſay to the Apoſtles, Ye men of Galilee, why ſtand ye gazing up into Heaven? and all the multitude at the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, when the Holy Acts 2. 7. Ghoſt came down upon them, and they ſpake with tongues, Are not, ſay they, all theſe which ſpeak, Galileans? From Capernaum, as from an Epiſcopal See, he went two ſeveral times round all the region of Galilee, teaching in their Synagogues, and preaching his Goſpel in every City and Village, Matt. 4. 23. and 9. 35. The beginning of his Miracles, and the firſt manifeſtation of his glory (as S. John ſpeaks ch. 2. 11.) was at Cana of Galilee; and the greateſt part of the Miracles he did afterward were done in that Country. His glorious Transfiguration was upon Mount Tabor, a Mount of Galilee in the Land of Zebulun, where a voice came from heaven, Matt. 17. 5. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed; hear ye him. In a word, our Saviour's ordinary reſidence was in Galilee; he came into Judæa onely at the Feaſt-times, when the whole Nation aſſembled at Jeruſalem: during which times (partly during his ſtay there, partly in his going and returning) he did all, in a manner, that he did out of Galilee; and the laſt Feaſt he came thither, offered himſelf a Sacrifice upon the Croſs for the ſins of the whole world. Laſtly, when he was riſen from the dead, he appoints his Diſciples to come ſee him in Galilee. When I am riſen again, ſaith he, I will goe before you into Galilee. And after he was ſo, the Angel told the women as much at his Sepulchre; and afterwards himſelf, Go tell my brethren (ſaith he) that they goe into Galilee, and there ſhall they ſee me. Onely his Nativity, his Paſſion and Aſcenſion were proper to Judæa: his Nativity at Bethlehem, upon what occaſion ye know; his Paſſion at Jeruſalem, when he came thither to the Paſſeover; his Aſcenſion upon Mount Olivet, hard by Jeruſalem.

Mar. 1. 14, 15. Matt. 26. 32. Matt. 28. 7. Verſ. 10.

And thus much of the Second thing I promiſed to ſhew, That our Saviour's principal converſation and abode was in Galilee: Now I come to the laſt, which is the Crown of all, That Meſſiah was, according to Prophecy, to vouchſafe his preſence, and have his abode principally in the Province of Galilee. This Prophecie is in the ninth of Eſay: For the clear underſtanding of which, before I report it, I muſt premiſe a paſſage of Sacred ſtorie; namely, That the Land of Galilee, or of Zebulun and Naphtali, had the hard hap to be firſt in that calamity which befell their Nation by the Aſſyrian; For ſo it is written, 2 King 15. 29. In the daies of Pekah King of Iſrael came Tiglath-Pileſer King of Aſſyria, and took Jion, and Abel-Beth-Maachah, and Janoah, and Kedeſh, and Hazor, and Gilead, (all theſe, ſave Janoah and Gilead, were cities of Naphtali) and Galilee, all the Land of Naphtali; and carried them captive to Aſſyria. By occaſion of which calamity, being then newly happened, Eſay comforts them with this Prophecy, that in recompence of that heavy diſadvantage (above the reſt of their brethren,) they ſhould have the firſt and chiefeſt ſhare of the preſence and converſation of Meſſiah which was to come. As the firſt time (ſaith he) he made vile (or debaſed) the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali; ſo in the latter time he ſhall make it glorious. (If ye ask, Why? it follows) The way of the ſea by Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles. v. 2. The people that walked in darkneſs (namely, of affliction) have ſeen a great light; they that dwelt in the ſhadow of death, upon them hath the light ſhined. v. 3. Thou haſt multiplied the nation, and increaſed the joy thereof, &c. If ye ask, How comes this? it follows v. 6. For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government ſhall be upon his ſhoulder; and his Name ſhall be called Wonderful, Counſeller, The mighty God, The Father (or Author) of eternity, The Prince of peace. v. 7. Of the encreaſe of his government and peace there ſhall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his Kingdom, to order it with judgement and with juſtice, from henceforth even for ever: The zeal of the Lord of Hoſts will perform this. This is he that ſhould enlighten the Province of Galilee, or the land of Zebulun and Naphtali, with the glory of his preſence, and make it as it were amends for what it ſuffered, before the reſt of the Country of Iſrael, by the hand of the King of Aſſyria.

3. Eſay 9. 1, 2, 3, &c.

And if this be not a Prophecy of Chriſt, I know not what is. And to the ſame purpoſe I bring it, doth S. Matthew quote it ch. 4. 14, &c. upon our Saviour's going (after John was caſt in priſon) to dwell at Capernaum the Metropolis of Galilee, to make it the Seat of the preaching and publication of the Goſpel of his Kingdom; which ſhould have made us take more notice thereof then commonly we have done. Blind Jews that could not ſee it! nay, for this very reaſon, becauſe he was of Galilee, they would not believe him to be the Meſſiah: Shall Chriſt come out of Galilee, ſay they? ſhould not Chriſt come out of Bethlehem? And ſo he did too, and yet was by habitation and converſation a Galilean. Nay I muſt yet ſay more; even we Chriſtians cannot altogether be excuſed, who by

Luk. 2,13,14. following the Jews too cloſe, have ſo troubled and darkned the beginning of this Prophecy, by miſ-tranſlating and miſ-diſtinguiſhing it, that when we have done, we can hardly tell how to defend S. Matthew's application thereof, much leſs ſee the evidence of ſo noble and clear a Prophecy. I think the devil did owe it a ſpight from the beginning. The Septuagint is here corrupted into pure non-ſenſe, and ſo I believe was even in the Apoſtles times; which made S. Matthew that he could quote nothing of that firſt ſentence, but onely the names of Zebulun and Naphtali, as he may ſee that compares them. The Chaldee Paraphraſt is as wide. How we tranſlate of latter times, I ſhall not need to mention, thoſe who are pinched therewith can tell beſt. For my part I am perſwaded, the four or five firſt words, wherewith we are wont to begin this ninth Chapter, belong to the laſt verſe of the Chapter before-going, as both the Chaldee Paraphraſt and S. Jerome refer them; and that the words following begin a new Prophecy, namely, that which I have hitherto alledged for Meſsiah's abode in Galilee; in this manner, כְּעֵת הָרִאשׁוֹן הֵקַל אַרְצָה זְבוּלֻן וְאַרְצַת נַפְתָּלִי וְהָאַחֲרוֹן הִכְבִּיד According as the firſt time he made vile (or debaſed) the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali; ſo in the latter time he ſhall make it glorious. Or making כְּעֵת the ſuppoſition of the ſentence thus, As the firſt time made vile the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali; ſo the latter time ſhall make them glorious. Or ſimply without compariſon thus, The firſt time he debaſed the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali; but in the latter time he ſhall make them glorious. Then follow the words which S. Matthew quotes, The way of the ſea by Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles, &c. It ſeems to me to be exceeding plain, and to make the Prophecy ſo clear as ſcarce any in Scripture goes beyond it. Is not הקל to make vile or baſe; and הכביד to glorifie or make glorious? Let him that hath skill in the language judge. What need we then tranſlate lightly afflict and heavily afflict? True, הקל hath the ſignification of lightneſs, but it is of light worth; and הכביד of weight, but (as in Piel frequently, ſo here) of the weight of glory; and we our ſelves otherwhiles tranſlate it ſo. And to conclude, the Event is true and evident, That as the land of Zebulun and Naphtali had the firſt ſhare in the calamity by Aſſyria, ſo had they a prerogative in enjoying the preſence of Meſsiah.

The Obſervation that this circumſtance of Chriſt our Saviour's habitation and abode ſuggeſts unto our meditation, is an Example of that rule of God's miniſtration S. Paul ſpeaks of 1 Cor. 1. 27, &c. to make choice of the fooliſh things of this world to confound the wiſe; and of weak, baſe and deſpicable things in the world's account, to confound the mighty: That no fleſh ſhould glory before him. For Galilee and the inhabitants thereof were in reſpect of Judæa reputed ignoble and half ſtrangers; both becauſe they were ſo farre divided from Jeruſalem (where the Temple of their Nation was;) and becauſe it was not the proper and original habitation of the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin which returned from Captivity, but part of the lot of the Kingdom of the ten Tribes which Salmanaſſer carried away captive. Howbeit the Jews of the two Tribes after their return, eſpecially in the prevailing times of the Maccabees, had many of them ſetled themſelves there, and at length ſubdued the Gentiles there dwelling, and repleniſhed it with their own people; yet ſo as many of the Gentiles dwelt ſtill among them: In which reſpects they were deſpiſed of thoſe that dwelt in Judæa their native home, and accounted (though of the ſame Nation, yet) far leſs noble then themſelves: Inſomuch that the name of Galilæan was in ſome ſort reproachfull and deſpicable, as we may gather even from thoſe ſpeeches of the Jews in the Goſpel; Shall Chriſt come out of Galilee? and, Out of Galilee ariſeth no Prophet. Yet did God ſo order it, that that Christ, the King of Israel, the great Saviour of Mankinde, who was to be exalted to sit at the right hand of God, farre above all principalities and powers, should be, as you see, a Galilean. And was not the rest of his breeding suitable thereunto? Who would not have looked that that glorious Son of David should have been born of the most rich and potent parentage of that line? but behold he was of the poorest and most despised. Who would not have thought but Jerusalem the Royal City had been the onely fit place for his Birth? but he was born at Bethlehem, one of the least Cities of Judah. And what? in some stately and more convenient Palace there? No, in a stable, and laid in a manger. So was David, his progenitor, the youngest and most despised son of Ishai. Samuel thought that brave and goodly Eliab, the first-born, was the man surely whom God would chuse to make him King. But God had set his eye upon him whom the Father so little regarded as he could scarce think of him, even the little one which kept the sheep. Thus God derides the conceits of men. Mar. 1.14,15: 1 Sam. 16. 11. Vers. 6.

Fools therefore that we are! why do we value those things so much which God esteems so little? We are wont otherwise to make much account of such things as Kings and Great ones have in esteem, and to think but basely of those things which they despise: why should not the Example of Almighty God bear the like sway in our judgements, to prefer what he preferrs, and slight what he undervalues? Let us therefore, considering this, set our hearts and affections upon heavenly and spiritual things, and say of all the pomp and glory of this world, Vanity of Vanities, all is Vanity. Eccles. 1. 2.

III. THUS have I spoken of the two first Particulars I propounded, the Time when, and the Place where, our Saviour began the publication of his Gospel; I come now to the Third, The Summe of what he preached: and it was this, The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of God is at hand; Repent ye, and believe the Gospel. This was the Summe of what he preached; and it contains two parts, a Doctrine, and an Exhortation.

The Doctrine is, That the Time foretold by the Prophets when the Kingdom of God should begin, was come: The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of God is at hand. The Exhortation is, That therefore they should Repent, and believe the Gospel, or glad tidings, which that Kingdom brings. I'le begin with the Doctrine, where I have two things to unfold. 1. What this Kingdom of God is. 2. What was the Time prefixt for the coming thereof, which our Saviour saith was fulfilled when he spake unto them.

1. For the First, The Kingdom of God is that which otherwise is called The Kingdom of Heaven. These two are both one: and therefore S. Matthew (chap. 4. 17.) when he relates this preaching of our Saviour, saith that he preached and said, Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand; namely the same that John Baptist his Harbinger preacht before him: For the Hebrews express God by Heaven, as we may see Dan. 4. 26. where it is said to Nebuchadnezzar, that his kingdom should be restored unto him, when he should acknowledge that the heavens bear rule; that is, God the most High, who dwells in heaven. The Prodigal child in the Gospel saith, Father, I have sinned against Heaven, and before thee, Luke 15.21. So Matt. 21.25. The Baptism of John, was it from heaven, or from men? that is, from God, or from men? * This is the reason why the Kingdom of God and Kingdom of Heaven mean one and the same thing. Let us therefore now see what is meant by it. Matt. 3. 2. * See 1 Maccab. 3. 18. ——ἐναντίον τῦ οὐρανῦ, Coram cœlo, i. coram Deo.

This Kingdom of God or Kingdom of Heaven is the Kingdom of Messiah or Christ foretold in the Prophets; the Kingdom of that Seed of the woman which should break the Serpent's head; of that seed of Abraham wherein all the Nations of the earth should be blessed. For so the Hebrew Doctors before and at our Saviour's coming had termed this Kingdom, and

Mar. 1. 14, 15. taught their people to look for it under that name, which they had learned out of the Prophecies of Daniel concerning it, who in chap. 2. ver. 44. deſcribes it in this manner; In the dayes of thoſe Kings or Kingdoms (that is, while the daies of the four Monarchies there ſpoken of yet laſted) the God of heaven ſhall found, or ſet up, a Kingdom, which ſhall never be deſtroyed, nor be left unto another people; but it ſhall break in pieces and conſume all theſe kingdoms, and it ſhall ſtand for ever. In the 7. chap. verſ. 13, 14. he deſcribes it thus; I ſaw in the night viſions, and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven—And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a Kingdom, that all people, nations and languages ſhould ſerve him: His dominion is an everlaſting dominion, which ſhall not paſs away, and his Kingdom that which ſhall not be deſtroyed. From theſe places the Jews called the Meßiah's Kingdom the Kingdom of God, or the Kingdom of Heaven; Becauſe in the firſt place it is ſaid that the God of heaven ſhould ſet up this Kingdom; and in the other place, that the Son of man (namely Meßiah) ſhould come in the clouds of heaven. For our Saviour brought not this term or phraſe with him, but found it at his coming uſed among the Jews; which being fitly given he approved, and ſo taught them the myſterie of his coming in their own language. As we may ſee in ſo many Parables in the Goſpel, where our Saviour ſets forth the ſtate of his Church and the members of the ſame continually under the name of The Kingdom of God, or The Kingdom of Heaven: The Kingdom of Heaven is like a field where a ſower ſowed good ſeed, &c. The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto leaven, &c. The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a Merchant, &c. The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a net; and ſuch like: In all which our Saviour deſcribes the ſtate of his Church in that language the people were uſed unto, as he doth alſo in other of his Sermons. Hence it is that when John Baptiſt firſt, and our Saviour after him, preached, The Kingdom of heaven is at hand, the Jews wondred not at that term as at a novelty, nor ever askt what it meant; but underſtood it of the Kingdom of Meßiah, which they had been taught to call by that name then, and is ſtill found ſo called among their Rabbies and Doctors untill this day, though through their unbelief they have no portion therein, but look for it ſtill to come.

The Kingdom of God or Kingdom of Heaven then is nothing elſe but the Church of Chriſt, or the Chriſtian Church, which is no Temporal kingdom, like the kingdoms of this world, which have power over the Body only, but a Spiritual kingdom, which reigns over the Souls and Spirits of men. The Kingdom of God, ſaith our Saviour, is within you, that is, it is a kingdom of the inward man. And therefore this kingdom was not to be founded after the manner of the kingdoms of men, by great armies and field-battels; but was to ſubdue the nations and conquer the world by a more divine way, namely by the power of the Word and Spirit, as we ſee it hath done. My Kingdom, ſaith our Saviour, is not of this world; that is, not from this world, or to be ſet up by worldly means, as other kingdomes are: For if my Kingdom (ſaith he) were of, or from, this world, then would my ſervants fight, that I ſhould not be delivered unto the Jews: but now my Kingdom is not from hence, John 18. 36. Armies and Swords are not fit means to conquer the Souls of men; and therefore Chriſt was to perform his conqueſts by a more divine and inviſible way. And as he conquered them, ſo he governs and keeps them in their allegiance to him, not by Garriſons and armed Troops, but by the power of the ſame Word and Spirit. Laſtly, as he governs his ſubjects, ſo he fights againſt his enemies, not as the Kings of the earth do, but by a divine and heavenly working, by divine and heavenly miniſters, by the miniſtery of Angels,

* who

* who are all at his command. For the Enemies of his Church and Kingdome are chiefly Spiritual, namely those Spiritual powers, those rulers of darkness, the Devil and all his troops of Fiends, which cannot be dealt withall nor resisted after a corporal manner, but by Spiritual means and Spiritual ministers. And though the Arms of flesh and bloud are also lift up against the Kingdome of Christ, yet is it always by the instigation and under the conduct of those invisible Fiends. As for the men employed in such service, they are but the horses in the Devil's battels; the Devil and his Angels are the riders; and therefore to be repelled by a power and forces suitable unto them. In a word, the whole world by sin was become the kingdome of the Devil; Christ came to recover it from him, and to erect the Kingdome of God in place thereof. Such a kingdome therefore as the one was, such must the other be; else it should not match it, as by the tenor of the first Gospel it was to doe, which saith, The seed of the Woman should break the Serpent's head.

Mar. 1,14,15.
* Matt. 26. 53.
Gen. 3. 15.

I must adde one thing more for the understanding of this Kingdome, namely, That this Kingdome of Christ which I have hitherto described hath a Twofold state: The one Militant, consisting in a perpetual warfare and manifold sufferings; which is the present state begun at his First coming, when he ascended up into heaven to sit at the right hand of God. The Second state is a Triumphant state, which shall be at his Second appearing in glory in the clouds of heaven, at what time he shall put down all authority, power and rule, and subdue all his enemies under his feet, even death it self, (as S. Paul tells us 1 Cor. 15.24.) and in that great Assizes of the quick and dead shall render everlasting vengeance to his enemies and those who believed not his Gospel; and give rewards of glory to his servants, who have kept their faith and allegiance to him. And that once done, and so his Conquest finished, he shall surrender up his Kingdome into the hands of his Father; that being subject to him who put all things under his feet, God may be all in all, as S. Paul tells us.

A twofold state of Christ's Kingdome.

1 Cor. 15. 28.

In both which estates how fitly this Kingdome is called the Kingdome of Heaven, or of God, appears in three respects. 1. Because the King thereof hath his seat and throne in heaven, where he sits at the right hand of God: 2. Because the Beginning thereof is from heaven, and not from earth, or by earthly means: 3. and lastly, Because it is governed and administred by the power of heaven, and not by earthly power. Is not such a Kingdome rightly and truly called The Kingdome of heaven? Thus much I thought good to speak for the explication of this speech, The Kingdome of God, or Kingdome of Heaven, because this term is so frequent in the Gospel, and not always, or perhaps not rightly, understood. Henceforth let him that readeth, understand.

Why Christ's Kingdome is called The Kingdome of Heaven, or of God.

NOW I come to the Second point, namely, What was the Time designed and prefixed for the coming and beginning of this Kingdome, which our Saviour saith here was fulfilled. The time, saith he, is fulfilled, and the Kingdome of God is at hand. The Time of this Kingdome was by the Prophet Daniel two wayes foretold; first, generally and at large; secondly, more precisely and punctually. The general time designed was, That it should begin under and during the Fourth Kingdome, or Roman Monarchy; which at length it should utterly ruine and destroy. For Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babel had a Vision of an Image of four differing metalls; The head of Gold, the armes and breast of silver, the belly and thighs of Braß, the legs and feet of Iron, but the feet mingled with clay. While he beheld this Image and surveyed it from head to foot, he saw a Stone hewen out of the mountain without hands, which Stone smote the Image (not upon the head, or breast, or belly, but) upon the Iron and Clayie feet; whereby the Image, and all his other

Mar. 1.14 15. metalls being mingled with the Iron, vaniſhed away, and became as chaffe before the winde. Then the Stone which ſmote the Image upon the feet, became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

This Viſion Daniel expounded of four Gentile Kingdoms, which ſhould ſucceed one another in order with great extent of dominion. The firſt, compared to Gold, was the Babylonian, which then reigned. The ſecond, reſembled to Silver, ſhould be the Empire of the Medes and Perſians, which ſubdued that of Babylon. The third, figured by the Brazen belly and thighs, was the Greek, which ſubdued the Perſian. The Iron legs (the fourth and laſt) was the Roman, which ſubdued the Greek, and ſo became poſſeſſed of the riches and glory of all the former three. During this laſt Kingdome was the Stone hewn out of the mountain, and ſmote the Iron feet. This Stone, ſaith Daniel, was the Kingdome of the God of heaven, which ſhould be ſet up before the dayes of theſe four Gentile king-
Verſ. 44. doms ſhould expire, namely under the laſt of them. In the days of theſe Kingdoms, ſaith he, (that is, while theſe times of the Gentiles dominions yet laſted) the God of heaven ſhall ſet up a Kingdome which ſhall never be deſtroyed, nor left unto another people (as each of the other were;) but ſhall break in pieces and conſume all thoſe kingdoms, (namely in the laſt, in which the other three were incorporated as it were,) and it ſelf ſhall ſtand for Verſ. 45. ever. Foraſmuch as thou ſaweſt (ſaith he unto the King) that the Stone was cut out of the mountain without hands (that is, without any earthly means) and that it break in pieces the Iron and the Braſs, the Silver and Gold mingled with it.

Now the Roman Empire (during which this Prophecy was to be accompliſhed) was in our Saviour's time come to the height and higheſt pitch, and ſo next door to a declination and downfall. But this downfall was to be wrought by the Stone, viz. the Kingdome of Chriſt, who ſhould firſt demoliſh the Gods and Idols thereof, and then the State it ſelf. The time therefore (when our Saviour ſpake) was fulfilled, and the Kingdome of God was at hand.

Thus you ſee how the Time was pointed out at large: now hear the preciſe and punctuall Time, whereby they might know not only that the Kingdome of Meſſiah ſhould be ſet up in the Roman Monarchy, but alſo in what time thereof. The Angel tells Daniel (9. 24.) That when the Temple, City and Commonwealth of the Jews (which then lay waſt by the Babyloniſh captivity) ſhould be reſtored and ſet up again, it ſhould continue 490 years, or 70 times 7 years, and no more: and that before that term ended, Meſſiah ſhould come and be anointed, and make atonement for ſin. His words are theſe, Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finiſh tranſgreſſion, and to make an end of ſins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs, and to ſeal up the viſion and prophecy, and to anoint the moſt Holy. For underſtanding this reckoning, you muſt know, that the Jews according to the Law counted their time and years by Sevens; every Seventh year being a year of reſt for the Land and freeing of ſervants, and ſo called a Sabbaticall year: according to which account the Angel tells Daniel that ſeventy of thoſe weeks of years were allotted for the ſtanding of their Temple and Commonwealth, when both ſhould be reſtored again after the Captivity; which make in all 490 years. Now if Meſsiah were to appear before theſe 490 years were ended, it could not in likelihood be much later then this time when our Saviour publiſhed his Goſpel: becauſe within 40 years after the Temple and State of the Jews was utterly deſtroyed; whereby it was apparent that the 490 years were ended, and therefore the Time of Meſſiah's appearing paſt.

But

But Daniel yet points out the Time more nearly and punctually: For he tells us moreover that from the Edict for reſtoring the State of the Jews and re-building Jeruſalem (which was ſome years after the re-building of the Temple) ſhould be unto Meſſiah the Prince 62 of thoſe weeks or ſevens of years: and after thoſe 62 ſeven years Meſſiah ſhould be cut off. Now if we reckon this number of weeks of years from that week wherein Ezra received commiſſion from Artaxerxes King of Perſia to reſtore and ſettle the Church and State of the Jews, and Nehemiah ſoon after to build the walls of Jeruſalem, we ſhall find the Time when our Saviour began this publication of his Goſpel to fall out in the laſt week of thoſe 62 weeks. As a woman therefore with child, when her tenth and laſt moneth is come, may truly ſay, Her reckoning is fulfilled, and her travail is at hand; ſo might our Saviour, when the laſt week of Meſſiah's weeks was begun, ſay, The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdome of heaven is at hand. Mar. 1. 14, 15. Dan. 9. 24. Vers. 26.

The Leſſon to be learned hence is, for confirmation of our Faith againſt the blindneſs and obſtinacy of the Jews, who will not believe that Jeſus of Nazareth, who came at the time appointed, was their King Meſſiah, but look for another yet to come. O blind Miſcreants! If the time of Meſſiah's coming were then fulfilled when our Saviour preached unto them, how are they ſo beſotted as to look for that his coming ſtill? Shall he come 1600 years after the time of his coming was fulfilled? Their Fathers looked for the coming of Meſſiah at that time when our Saviour preached amongſt them; yea had filled all the Eaſt with the fame of their expectation; which they would never have done, had they not ſeen the time appointed for his coming and kingdome was to come out in that Age. Why did their Fathers never alledge againſt the Apoſtles, That the time was not yet come? Had not this been the readieſt way to ſtop their mouths, when they told them, They had crucified their Meſſiah? Nay, when our Saviour made this fulfilling of the time to be the ground of his doctrine, why did not their great Doctors (their Scribes and Phariſees) oppoſe and gainſay it, unleſs they had known it to be ſo indeed? Nay at his bleſſed Birth, when the wiſe men came from the Eaſt to Jeruſalem, ſaying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? when Herod and all Jeruſalem was troubled, when he aſſembled all the chief Prieſts and Scribes of the people about it; why did they not tell him the Time was not yet come, unleſs they had known it had been come? But of the Time there was no queſtion, only the Place was inquired of. In a word, All the exception the Jews could finde againſt our Saviour, was the meanneſs of his Perſon, becauſe he came not like a King; and the Place of his education, becauſe he was a Galilean: But againſt the Time of his coming they took no exception. Nay (which is an invincible confeſſion) the moſt of them at this day have no other ſhift but to ſay, That Meſſiah was born then, namely, before their Temple was deſtroyed, and lies hid all this time ſomewhere for their ſins, but at length ſhall ſhew himſelf unto them. Matt. 2. 1.

Let us pray unto Almighty God, that he would at length open their eyes to ſee him to be their King, whom they have pierced, and that there is no other to be looked for. And let us continually magnifie his goodneſs unto us, unto whom (being Gentiles, and Aliens from the Commonwealth of Iſrael, a people without God in the world) he hath, nevertheleſs, vouchſafed this great light, and made known that Myſterie which is hidden from his own people, to whom appertained the adoption, and the glory, and the Covenants, and the giving of the Law, and the ſervice of God, and the Promiſes: Whoſe were the Fathers, and of whom, as concerning the fleſh, Chriſt Eph. 2. 11. Rom. 9. 4, 5.

Mar. 1. 14 15. came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. What are we, that it should please the great and mighty God to look upon such dead dogs as we are?

Repent ye, and believe the Gospel.

WHILEST our Blessed Saviour preached here on earth, what else, in likelihood, could the argument of his preaching be, but the Mysterie of Christian Religion, or way of attaining Salvation through himself? Accordingly this Brief of his Sermons, recorded by our Evangelist, contains no less then the Summe of all Christian Divinity. For the Knowledge of the Kingdome of God, and the means how to attain to be a member, and so to have interest in the benefits and priviledges of the same, (which is Salvation) containeth the Summe of all a Christian is either to know or doe. The first of which (The knowledge of the Kingdome of God) is in the first words, The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdome of God is at hand; of which I have spoken already. The second is contained in the next words, Repent ye, and believe the Gospel; of which I am to speak now.

None can be Members or Citizens of the Kingdome of God, but onely those who are the Sons of God: The means to become the Sons or Children of God, is by Regeneration or New birth. This is the Mystery our Saviour told Nicodemus of, when he came to him by night; Except a man (saith our Saviour) be born again, he cannot enter into the Kingdome of God, John 3. 3. Now Regeneration, or New birth, consists of these two parts, Repentance towards God, and Faith towards Christ; according to that which the Apostle Paul told the Elders of the Church of Ephesus, Acts 20. 21. that he had testified both to Jews and Greeks, Repentance towards God, and Faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ; that is, the whole mysterie of Regeneration, whereby a man becomes the Child of God, and a member of his Kingdome. Where we are to note (and it will serve us to understand these things the better) that Repentance, properly and distinctly taken, looks towards God the Father; and Faith unto Christ our Mediatour. The one is our returning unto God, from whom we are gone astray by sin: the other, the means or way of our return unto him, by Christ, without whom we can neither be reconciled to our heavenly Father, nor perform any service acceptable unto him.

These two therefore our Saviour distinguisheth, when he saith, Repent, and believe the Gospel; the one looking to his Father, the other to himself. Both joyned together make the New birth or a new man: even as in natural generation, the Soul being united with the Body makes a natural man; Repentance here being as the Body or Matter, which Faith in the Gospel of Christ inlivens and informes as a Soul. Those therefore who make Faith a part of Repentance, understand by Repentance the whole Regeneration of a sinner. Otherwise, if Repentance be taken precisely and distinctly, as it is here by our Saviour, then is not Faith a part, but a necessary concurrent of Repentance; as the Soul is no part of the Body, but concurres therewith to the making of a Man.

AND thus much I held needfull to speak of Repentance and Faith in general, to make my way the more straight and easie to the handling of them severally and apart; which now I come unto. And first to begin with that which is first, Repentance.

REPENTANCE is A turning of the whole heart from Satan and Sin, to serve God in newnes of life. I say, from Satan and Sin, because he that lives in Sin, serves the Devil, and belongs to his jurisdiction. And therefore in our Baptism, which is the Seal of our New birth, we profess our Repentance by renouncing the Devil and all his works; that is, the works of Sin wherewith he is served: and then we swear fealty to God, saying, I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and Earth, &c. Mar. 1. 14, 15.

Repentance

The Definition I have given, you shall finde full and whole in our Saviour's words to S. Paul, when he appeared to him going to Damascus, Acts 26. 18. as S. Paul himself reporteth them; namely, that he would send him to the Gentiles, To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God; that they might receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them that are sanctified. Which voice S. Paul there saith V. 19. he was obedient unto; and thereupon went and shewed first to the Jews and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent, and turn to God, and doe works meet for repentance, V. 20. The Commission therefore given him in the words aforesaid was, To preach Repentance.

And howsoever the name of Repentance be by a custome of speech restrained only to that Sorrow and Remorse for sin which is but the beginning of our Turning; yet, if we will speak according to Scripture, (as we must do when we expound it) the word Μετάνοια, translated Repentance, is of a larger extent, signifying not only those pangs of Contrition wherewith Repentance begins, but the whole change and journey (as I may so speak) of the Soul of a sinner, leaving the service of the Devil, and turning to the service of God. For this word in the New Testament answers to that of Turning and Returning so frequent in the Old; as appears not only by the Syriack which so renders it, but by those places in the New Testament where the one is put to explain the other; as in that of S. Paul now quoted. And that the word, Turning, is of as large sense as I speak of, I shall need go no further for proof, then to the words of our Saviour to S. Paul even now mentioned. But this will appear better by the ensuing Discourse of the Parts of Repentance. Repentance is more then a Sorrow for sin.

Repentance (as any one almost may gather by the Definition given thereof) hath two parts, according to the two terms, à quo, & ad quem; An aversion or turning away, and A conversion or turning unto. An aversion or turning away from Satan and Sin; that is the first part: then A conversion or turning unto God by newness of life; that is the second part. The one is a falling off from the Creature, the other a betaking to the Creatour.

The first some call Mortification, from that phrase in Scripture of Dying to sin, (Rom. 6. 11. Col. 3. 3.) that is, of ceasing to be the servants of sin. The second, Vivification, from that Scripture-phrase of Living to God, (Rom. 6. 11. Gal. 2. 19.) that is, of beginning to be to God-ward; (the first receiving virtue from Christ's death, the other from his resurrection.) For to live, in the Scripture notion, is as much as to be; to die, as not to be. Because therefore to turn away from Satan and Sin is to renounce them, and to be no more (theirs) under them; it is called Dying to sin: And because to turn unto God by newness of life is to become his, and be that to him which before we were not; it is called Living unto God. See Rom. 8. 13. Col. 3. 5. Eph. 2. 5. Col. 2. 13.

But the more usual name of the first part of Repentance, or the act of aversion and turning away, is Contrition; a term borrowed from the * Old Testament. The other part is simply called Conversion unto God, (or, by some, Reformation or Newness of life.) I shall use some of these terms, so as not to neglect the rest. And the first part of Repentance I will call Contrition, or Dying to sin, as the most easie expression; of which I shall now begin to speak. * Psal. 51. 17. Esay 57. 15. & ch. 66. 2.

Mar. 1. 14, 15.

Contrition, or Dying unto ſin, hath ſometimes the whole name of Repentance and Turning given to it; namely, as often as the thing to be turned from is ſolely mentioned. As Heb. 6. 1. we have repentance from dead works. S. Peter ſaith to Simon Magus, Act. 8. 22. Repent of thy wickedneſs. S. Paul, 2 Cor. 12. 21. ſpeaks of repenting of uncleanneſs, and fornication, and laſciviouſneſs. In all which, and the like places, Repentance ſeems to ſignifie only Contrition, or the act of averſion and turning away from ſin. Otherwiſe, as I have already ſaid, it ſignifies the whole act of our turning, from the beginning to the end: as appears plainly, either when both terms are mentioned, or but the thing or terme to be turned unto: as Acts 20. 21. Repentance unto God; and Act. 26. 20. where S. Paul ſaith, that he preached both to the Jews and Gentiles, that they ſhould repent and turn to God. For no man can turn unto God, unleſs he firſt have turned from the Devil.

But to leave words, and come to the matter. Contrition, or Dying unto ſin, is ſuch a Compunction of the Heart for the ſame as is joyned with a purpoſe to leave and forſake it. Not every Compunction for ſin is true Contrition, but ſuch a Compunction only as is joyned with a purpoſe to leave and forſake it. Contrition hath therefore, as you ſee, two parts or degrees. The firſt is, A Compunction of the Heart for ſin; the ſecond, A Purpoſe to forſake and renounce ſin. The one is a turning away from ſin, in the affections or paſsions of the Mind; the other is a turning of the Will.

Compunction is a turning in the affections and paſsions of the Mind; and that not of one paſſion only, but of every paſſion wherewith we abhor and flye a thing as evil; as Fear, Grief, and Hate: for we muſt turn with our whole hearts. Fear leads the rank, and trembles at the wrath of God and dreadfull Judgement to come, when it ſhall be ſaid to every unrepentant ſinner, Depart from me, ye curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels, there to be tormented for ever and ever. For Fear is of an evil to come.

Next comes Grief, and laments that ever it was committed, whereby we have incurred ſo great an evil as to become vaſſals of Satan, and the loſs of ſo great a good as the favour of Almighty God, yea, of ſo good and gracious a God, as ſaith again and again, As I live, I have no pleaſure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his waies, and live. What wretch would have loſt the favour of ſuch a God as this? O that it were to doe again! I would never doe it. For we grieve at the preſence of evil and abſence of good, as we joy in the contrary.

Ezek. 18. 23. & 33. 11.

Thirdly comes Hate, and begins to loath and deteſt ſin as a thing not only hurtfull, but ugly and abominable, a foul and beaſtly thing, moſt contrary to and unbefitting the nature and excellency of a reaſonable creature, as man is. For we hate that which is contrary, and love what is agreeable to us.

Theſe are the ſeveral motions and degrees of that Compunction of Heart whereby a Repentant ſoul turneth from his ſin. And that this is the order of them, may appear, becauſe that is alwaies firſt which may be without the reſt. Now a man may tremble at God's judgements for ſin and wrath to come, and yet not grieve for them; yea, a man may tremble and grieve too for his ſins, and yet not hate and loath them.

But all theſe repentant paſſions of Compunction, though diverſe in themſelves, yet are wont to be comprehended under the name of Sorrow and Remorſe for ſin: Not as though that were the only paſſion in our Compunction; but becauſe all paſſions of the Mind which ſpring from the apprehenſion sion and sense of evil are grievous and painful, and so may, as by a general name, be comprehended under the word Sorrow: as the contrary passions, being pleasing and delightful to nature, may be, and are wont to be, comprehended under the name of Pleasure. For Dolor and Voluptas, Pain and Pleasure, divide all our passions between them. Πάσῃ πράξει, saith Aristotle, ἕπεται ἡδονὴ ἢ λύπη, Every action of ours is attended with some either pleasure or pain. Though yet there be among the doleful passions a passion peculiarly called Tristitia or Sorrow; and among the delightful passions one likewise in special called Latitia or Joy. Mar. 1.14,15.

But all this Fear and Trembling at the wrath of God to come for sin, this Sorrow for sin, this Hating and Loathing of sin, will not make our Contrition full and perfect, unless our Will also doe his part, and resolve to forsake and leave it. For so I defined true Contrition, or Dying to sin, to be A compunction of the Heart for sin, joyned with a will and resolution to forsake it.

Hath then the wrath of God Almighty, and the everlasting woe denounced to all impenitent sinners, made thee fear and tremble? Hath thy trembling been seconded with a true and hearty sorrow for thy sins? Hath thy sorrow been such as brought forth hate and loathing of sin, so that sin appeared ugly and abominable unto thee? Hath there then followed a Will to be rid of it, a Purpose to forsake and leave it? Then art thou truly contrite and dead to sin-ward. With this last Act thy service of sin gave up the ghost. Thou hast turned away, bidden farewell, and shaken hands with Sin and Satan.

An Effect of this Contrition is Confession: when out of a contrite and wounded heart, we acknowledge and lay open our sins before the face of Almighty God (our heavenly Father) begging pardon and forgiveness for them. A Duty alwaies necessary to be performed to God himself, whom we have chiefly and principally offended; and in some cases also convenient to be made unto his Ministers, not onely for advice, but for consolation, by that power and authority which God hath given them to exercise in his name, according to that, Whose sins ye remit, shall be remitted. For if we confess our sins (saith S. John 1 Epist. 1. 9.) he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness; and Proverb. 28. 13. He that covereth his sins, shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them, shall have mercy. John 20. 23.

THUS have we seen the several degrees and steps of Contrition and Dying to sin: Trembling at the fearfull doom and vengeance due unto it; Grieving for it; Hating and loathing of it; a Will and Purpose to forsake and leave it; together with the common Effect of them, Confession. And so now we are arrived at the main Cardo and hinge of Repentance, the Joynt where the two parts thereof, Aversion and Conversion, meet and are knit together: For where the Act of Aversion from sin endeth, there Conversion unto God begins. The last Act of turning from sin was that of the Will, to forsake and leave it: The same Act is the beginning of our turning unto God. For no man can resolve to forsake and leave sin, but he must purpose also to lead a new life to God: Nor can any man have a purpose to lead a new life, but he must withall resolve to leave sin. This is then the main Joynt of Repentance, where the Spirit and Grace of God (the vis πλαστικὴ of our Regeneration, which from the beginning stirred our Hearts) gives that great and powerful lift which doth the deed.

Here, and not before now, that Faith in the Gospel, which applies and reaches hold of Christ, first comes in to give life unto Repentance, as a Soul unto a Body. Which union of Faith and Repentance (as I said in the beginning ginning of this Diſcourſe) makes the Regeneration of a ſpiritual man; as the Mar. 1.14,15. union of the Soul with the Body makes the generation of a natural man. And as in natural generation, the Soul is not infuſed at the firſt conception, but after the Body hath been in ſome meaſure faſhioned and formed: So in our Regeneration, or generation ſpiritual, Juſtifying Faith, or that Faith whereby the Soul flies unto and relies upon Chriſt, hath no place till Repentance be come to the laſt degree of Contrition. For then our Saviour inviteth a Matt. 11. 28. ſinner to come unto him, and not till then: Come unto me, ſaith he, all ye that labour, and are heavie laden, (that is, all ye that are contrite, and groan under the burthen of your ſins,) and I will eaſe you. Till then he invites Matt. 9. 12. them not, as being not till then fit to be eaſed; For the whole hath no need of the Phyſician, but the ſick. I ſpeak not of an Hiſtoricall faith, whereby a man believes in general, that Chriſt is the Saviour of mankind; nor of a Legal, wherewith a man believes the puniſhments and threatnings of the Law, (for theſe may be, yea are, before Repentance:) but of a Saving faith, which applies Chriſt as a ſalve to a ſick and wounded ſoul.

BUT now, to dwell no longer upon the connexion of the two parts, let us ſee what are the degrees alſo of this ſecond part, namely, of Turning and Living unto God, by a new and reformed life, anſwerable to the degrees of the former part, which was Dying and Turning from ſin. Where firſt we are to know, that becauſe Turning to a thing, and Turning from a thing, are motions of a contrary nature; therefore the degrees of our Turning unto God are to be ranked in a clean contrary order to thoſe of our Turning from ſin. For the firſt degree here, is the Act of the Will, which as it concluded our Turning from ſin, by reſolving to forſake it, ſo it begins our Turning unto God, by a firm purpoſe of Heart to ſerve him thenceforth in newneſs of life. After this, the Affections begin to act their parts anſwerably, and as it were to echo the good choice the Will hath made.

Firſt Love, when a man begins to finde himſelf affected and enamoured with this change of life. After Love comes Delight, when the Penitent takes ſome pleaſure in doing the duties whereby God is ſerved, and findes joy and comfort in his favour. From whence in the third place ſprings Hope of the reward; namely, to be partaker of the glory and life to come, promiſed unto all thoſe who unfeignedly turn to God, and ſet themſelves to doe his will. But we muſt know, that theſe Affections appear not all at once, nor in like meaſure, but according as a mans growth and proficiency in Converſion is more or leſs.

Howſoever the inſeparable Effects of this ſecond part of Repentance
* ἄξια τῆς μετανοίας ἔργα. are good works, or, as the Scripture calls them, * works worthy of, or meet for, or beſeeming Repentance; that is, works of Religion towards God, and of Righteouſneſs towards men. I ſhewed, ſaith S. Paul, Acts 26. 20. firſt to the Jews, and then to the Gentiles, that they ſhould repent and turn to God, and doe works meet for repentance. Without ſuch works, he that ſaith he is turned unto God, and yet doth them not, is a lier, and deceives his own ſoul.

THUS much of the ſecond part of Repentance. I will conclude this whole Diſcourſe with theſe two excellent deſcriptions of Repentance in the Prophets Eſay and Ezekiel, which contain the Summe of what I have hitherto ſpoken concerning the ſame.

For thus ſaith Eſay, chap. 1.16. Waſh ye, make ye clean, put away the evil of your doings from mine eyes, ſaith the Lord, ceaſe to doe evil: This is the firſt part of Repentance. V.17. Learn to doe well, ſeek judgement, relieve the oppreſſed, judge the fatherleſs, plead for the widow: This is the ſecond part. Mar. 1. 14, 15.

Ezek. chap. 33. v. 14, 15. thus; When I ſay unto the wicked (ſaith the Lord) Thou ſhalt ſurely die; If he turn from his ſin, [there is Contrition, the firſt part] and doe that which is lawfull and right; If he reſtore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the Statutes of life, without committing iniquity [here ye ſee the fruit of a New life, the ſecond part] he ſhall ſurely live, he ſhall not die.

Believe the Goſpel.

THUS much ſhall ſuffice to have ſpoken of Repentance, the firſt part of our Regeneration. I come to the ſecond, Faith in the Goſpel, Repent, and believe the Goſpel. Where firſt I will ſhew, What this Goſpel is; ſecondly, What it is to believe it, or, What is that Faith concerning it which our Saviour here requires.

For the First; The Goſpel is the glad tidings of Salvation to be attained by Chriſt; who by taking away of ſin, reconciles us unto his Father, that through him we might turn unto God, and perform ſervice and obedience acceptable unto eternal life. Before I prove every part of this Deſcription out of Scripture, and explain the ſame as ſhall be needfull for your underſtanding, we will firſt ſpeak of the Antiquity of this Goſpel, and ſhew when theſe glad tidings were made known to the ſons of men.

Know therefore, that albeit the Fulfilling and ſolemn publication thereof were not untill our Saviour's coming, yet the Promiſe of the ſame was from the daies of old, even as ancient as the time of man's ſin; and afterwards continued and repeated all the time of the Covenant of the Law, untill the Mediatour of the New Covenant came in the fleſh. For when the Devil, abuſing the ſhape of a Serpent, had ſeduced our firſt Parents unto ſin, and ſo had gotten dominion over them and theirs by this title; the Goſpel or Promiſe of a Redeemer (that they might not be without all comfort) was given them in theſe words, The Seed of the woman ſhall break the Serpent's head. The Serpent's head is Satan's ſoveraignty, which is Principatus mortis, the ſoveraignty or principality of death; a Soveraignty that whoſoever is under, is liable to death both temporal and eternal; the power thereof conſiſting not in ſaving and giving life, but in deſtroying both of body and ſoul. The Sword whereby this dominion is obtained, the Sceptre whereby it is maintained, or, as S. Paul ſpeaks, the Sting of this Serpent's head, is Sin. This is that which got this dominion at the firſt, and the title whereby he ſtill maintaineth the remainder of his juriſdiction in the world. This Soveraignty, this Headſhip of the Devil, one to be born of mankind, the Seed of the woman (which is Chriſt our Lord) ſhould one day deſtroy and overthrow; as was then promiſed, and we at this day ſee fulfilled. 1 Cor. 15 56.

But this Promiſe was general, and not yet reſtrained to any part of mankind, but ſo that any ſon of Adam might, for ought was yet revealed, be the progenitor of that Seed which ſhould deliver man from the Devil's thraldom, and reconcile him to his God. But when God called Abraham forth of Ur of the Chaldees, the Promiſe was made more ſpecial, being reſtrained to the off-ſpring of his loyns: For the Almighty tells him once, and again, and the third time, That in his ſeed all the Nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed, Gen. 12. 3. 18. 18. 22. 18.

Now Abraham had two ſons, Iſhmael the ſon of the bond-woman, and Iſaac the ſon of Sarah his wife. Of which of theſe two the promiſed Seed ſhould come was yet indifferent, till God entailed it to Iſaac; both telling

Abraham,

Mar. 1.14,15. *Gen. 21. 12.

Abraham, *That in Isaac his seed shall be called, and repeating to Isaac the Promise made to Abraham, That in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed, Gen. 26.4.

Isaac had two sons, Esau and Jacob: Esau was excluded, and the Promise entailed to Jacob, That in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed, Gen. 28.14. that is, the blessed Seed should come of his loyns.

Of Jacob came the twelve Patriarchs, and of them the twelve Tribes of Israel, among whom the Promise of the blessed Seed was entailed to the Tribe of Judah, and of him prophesied that Shiloh, that is, the Saviour or Peace-maker, to whom the Nations were to be gathered, should come. The Sceptre, saith the Text, shall not depart from Judah, nor a Law-giver from between his feet, untill Shiloh come, and unto him the gathering of the people be, Gen. 49.10.

After this Tribe was multiplied, and some hundreds of years together with the other Tribes settled in the land of Canaan, the Promise was made yet more special, and entailed to David, a man of that Tribe, whom God exalted to be King of his people, as a Type of that Blessed King to come. And to this all the Prophets bear witness, That Messiah the Redeemer should be a Rod out of the stem of Jesse, a Branch or Impe of David, the Son and Heir of David's house, yea another David. For under these terms Esaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Zachary, prophesy of him, and the rest of the Prophets to like purpose.

And this was the last limitation of the blessed Seed untill the Angel Gabriel was sent of God to a Virgin of the house of David, with a message, That God had chosen her of all David's house to be that highly favoured one, and that blessed Mother of that Great King, who should be called the Son of the Highest, of whose Kingdom there should be no end. Luke 1. 32, 33.

Thus was the Gospel or glad tidings of a Redeemer prophesied; and not onely so, but it was also signified and sealed by the Types and Shadows of the Law. For the Legal Sacrifices, which were offered to make atonement for sin, were nothing else but shadows and representations of that Offering upon the Cross which Messiah was one day to make of himself for the sins of the world. For the way whereby the blessed Seed should vanquish Satan, and redeem his Elect out of his power and jurisdiction, was by becoming a Sacrifice for sin, so to cancel the title whereby the Devil held the world in thraldom.

This was foreshewed unto Abraham, unto whose loyns, as ye have heard, the Promise of the blessed Seed was first confined. For when Sarah had born him his son Isaac, the son wherein his seed should be called, and so either himself to be that happy Seed, or the progenitor of the same; God, to reveal unto him by way of mysterie, how that Seed of his should make all the Nations of the earth blessed, commanded him to take his son Isaac, the onely hope and pledge of that happy and blessed Seed, and to offer him for a burnt-offering to the Lord upon the mountains of Moriah: to intimate and signifie, that this blessed Seed of Abraham should suffer death, and by sacrifice of himself redeem the world from the claws of the Serpent; yea and more then so, that he should be offered even in that very place, even in the land of Moriah: and so he was; for there was Jerusalem and the Temple for Sacrifice afterwards builded. But when Abraham had brought his son to the place appointed, had built an Altar there, and made all things fit, and was now ready to slay his son; the Angel of the Lord stayed his hand, and shewed him a Ramme caught in a thicket by the horns; which Ramme Abraham took and offered for a burnt-offering in ſtead of his own ſon: To ſignifie, that the offering of the bleſſed Seed ſhould be yet ſuſpended, and that God in the mean while would accept the offerings of Bulls and Ramms, as a pledge of that expiation which the bleſſed Seed of Abraham ſhould one day make. So this wonderful Story was to be the Key of the Sacrifices of the Law, whereby it might be known what they meant, and whither they tended: namely, That the bloud of Bulls and Ramms and other Beaſts of themſelves do not work atonement for ſin, but onely as they were ordained by God to ſtand for Types and Pledges of the Sacrifice of Chriſt to come. Which that they might the more lively expreſs, God ſo diſpoſed, that that very place where the Ramme was offered in ſtead of Iſaac, ſhould be the place of Sacrifice for Iſrael. For there it was where the Lord anſwered David by fire from heaven, and ſo deſigned it for the place which he had choſen for his Altar. There David pitched him a Tabernacle; there Solomon built him his Temple. Mar. 1,14,15.

By all which it is plain and manifeſt, That the Fathers in the Old Teſtament under the Law were ſaved by Chriſt as well as we: but with this difference, That to them Chriſt was but in promiſe, and hoped for; to us he is already ſent and exhibited: To them the Myſterie of Redemption by him was obſcure and dark, as known but for the general, That it ſhould be, not in particular for the manner, How it ſhould be; but to us all is open and revealed: Their faith groped after ſhadows; but ours lays hold on the ſubſtance. And let this Information be the Uſe of this Diſcourſe.

This being premiſed touching the Promiſe of Chriſt ſo long before he came, and how the Myſterie of his Goſpel was pourtraied by Types and Shadows before it was openly revealed and exhibited; I come to confirm and explain the Deſcription I gave thereof; to wit, That it is the glad tidings of Salvation to be attained by Chriſt, &c.

I ſay, It is the glad tidings; for ſo the name thereof both in the Greek and in our Engliſh imports: For Spell in old Engliſh was to ſpeak or reade, and ſo Goſpel is as much as Good ſpell, that is, the good ſpeak or ſay, the good tidings, the word of good news. Under which name it was revealed by the Angel to the Shepherds who were watching their flock in the fields the night our Saviour was born; Behold, ſaith the Angel, I bring you good tidings of great joy which ſhall be to all people: For unto you is born this day a Saviour, which is Chriſt the Lord, Luk. 2. 10, 11.

I call it the glad tidings of Salvation to be attained by Chriſt; for ſo much the name of Saviour implies. And ſaith S. Paul, 1 Tim. 1. 15. This is a faithfull ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, That Jeſus Chriſt came into the world to ſave ſinners. Neither is there, ſaith S. Peter Acts 4. 12. Salvation in any other; for there is no other name under heaven given among men, whereby we muſt be ſaved,

The next words I uſed, ſhew the way and manner how and whereby Chriſt purchaſed this Salvation unto men, and the means whereby it is attained through him: namely, by cancelling of ſin, by his atonement made he reconciles us to his Father, that we through him might turn unto God, and perform works of obedience acceptable unto eternal life. All which was foretold by Daniel, chap. 9. 24. where propheſying of the time of Meſſiah's coming, he ſaid, Seventy weeks were determined upon the people, and upon the holy city, to finiſh tranſgreſſion, and to make an end of ſin, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs.

To prove in particular that Chriſt dyed for ſin, I ſhall not need. No man that ever read the Goſpel but knows it. That by the atonement he made for ſin by death he hath reconciled us to his Father, is as evident by what

Mar. 1.14,15. S. Paul tells us 2 Cor. 5. 19. That God was in Chriſt reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes to them. That the miniſtery of the Goſpel is the Miniſtery of reconciliation, v. 18. whoſe Miniſters as Embaſſadours for Chriſt, beſeech men in Chriſt's ſtead to be reconciled unto God, v. 20. For by reaſon of ſin all mankind is at enmity with God, and liable to eternal wrath: Chriſt, by taking our ſins upon him, aboliſhed this enmity, and ſet us at peace with God his Father, according to that the Luke 2. 14. Quire of Angels ſang at his bleſſed Birth, Glory be to God on high, and on earth Peace, Good-will towards men; that is, Glory be aſcribed to God, forasmuch as Peace was come upon earth, and Good-will towards men.

All this is plain. But that which the greateſt part of men (as may be gueſſed by their practice) ſeem to make queſtion of, is, that laſt parcel of my Deſcription; That therefore Chriſt took away ſin and reconciled us to his Father, that we might through him, whoſe righteouſneſs is imputed to us, perform works of piety and obedience, which God ſhould accept and crown with eternal life. But that this is alſo a part of the Goſpel, as well as the former, is plain and evident. Firſt, by that of S. Peter, 1 Epiſt. chap. 2. ver. 24. where he tells us, That Chriſt his own ſelf bare our ſins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to ſin, might live unto righteouſneſs. Secondly, by that of the Apoſtle Paul to Titus chap. 2. 11, &c. The grace of God (ſaith he) that bringeth ſalvation hath appeared unto all men: Wherefore? Teaching us, that denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world; Looking for that bleſſed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; Who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purifie unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Is not this plain? Thirdly, by that of the ſame Apoſtle, Eph. 2. 10. where the Apoſtle having told us (v. 8, 9.) that we are ſaved by grace, through faith, and not of works (that is, not according to the Covenant of works, wherein the exact performance was required) leſt any man ſhould boaſt, namely, that he was not beholden to God for grace and favour in rewarding him; he addes preſently, leſt his meaning might be miſtaken, That we are God's workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works, which God hath before ordained (προητοίμασεν) that we ſhould walk in them. As if he ſhould ſay, Though of our ſelves we are no waies able to perform thoſe works of obedience ordained by God aforetime in his Law for us to walk in, yet now God hath, as it were, new created us in Chriſt, that we might perform them in him; namely, by way of acceptation, though they come ſhort of that exactneſs which the Law requireth. And thus to be ſaved, is to be ſaved by grace and favour, and not by the merit of works; becauſe the foundation whereby our ſelves and ſervices are approved in the eyes of God and have promiſe of reward, is the mere favour of God in Jeſus Chriſt, and not any thing in us or them.

Rev. 1. 5, 6. Agreeable to theſe Scriptures is that in the Revelation, where glory is aſcribed to Jeſus Chriſt who loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own bloud, and hath made us Kings and Prieſts unto God his Father; that is, that he might make us Kings and Prieſts unto God his Father. For [and] is here to be taken τελικῶς, for [that.] Kings, to ſubdue the world, the fleſh, and the Devil; Prieſts, to offer Sacrifices of prayer, thanksgiving, works of mercy, and other acceptable ſervices to our heavenly Father.

Moreover and beſides theſe expreſs Scriptures, this Truth may be yet further confirmed by Demonſtration and Reaſon. Repentance is a forſaking of ſin to ſerve God in newneſs of life. Now the Goſpel includes Repentance pentance as the ſubject wherein it worketh, as the Body which it enliveneth as a Soul. Or, to uſe a ſimilitude from weaving, Repentance is the warp of the Goſpel, and the Goſpel the woof of Repentance: Repentance is as the warp which the Goſpel, by the ſhuttle of Faith, runs through as the woof, whence proceeds the web of Regeneration. Therefore is Repentance everywhere joyned with the Goſpel: Both John Baptiſt and our Saviour ſo publiſhed it, Repent, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand: Repent, and believe the Goſpel. Our Saviour in his laſt words or commiſſion to his Diſciples, tells them, Luk. 24.47. that Repentance and Remiſſion of ſins (which is the Goſpel) ſhould be preached in his Name among all Nations; beginning at Jeruſalem. All which is elſewhere compriſed in the ſole name of preaching the Goſpel: which argues that the Goſpel of Chriſt, and conſequently our Faith in the ſame, ſuppoſeth Repentance as the ground to doe its work upon. So S. Peter, in his firſt Sermon, Acts 2.38. conjoyns them, Repent, (ſaith he,) and be baptized in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins: as if he had ſaid, Repent; and that thy Repentance may be available, betake thy ſelf to Chriſt, become a diſciple and a member of his Kingdom. S. Paul likewiſe taught the Goſpel in like manner, for himſelf tells us ſo, Acts 20.21. that he teſtified both to Jews and Gentiles, Repentance toward God, and Faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Repentance therefore and the Goſpel cannot be ſeparated. If Repentance includes newneſs of life and good works, the Goſpel doth ſo. For Chriſt is the way of Repentance; without Repentance there is no uſe of Chriſt, and without Chriſt Repentance is unavailable, and nothing worth: for without him, we can neither be quit of the ſins we forſake, nor turn by a new life unto God, with hope of being received. He is the bleſſed Ferry-man, and his Goſpel is the Boat, provided by the unſpeakable mercy of God, for the paſſage of this ſea. As therefore in Repentance, we forſake ſin to ſerve God in newneſs of life; ſo in the tenour of the Goſpel, Chriſt delivers us from ſin, that we might through Faith in him bring forth the fruits and works of a new life acceptable to our heavenly Father. Mar.1.14, 15.

Hence it is that we ſhall be judged and receive our ſentence at the laſt day according to our works: Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For I was hungry, and ye gave me meat; I was thirſty, and ye gave me drink; I was a ſtranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was ſick, and ye viſited me; I was in priſon, and ye came unto me. Foraſmuch as ye have done theſe things unto the leaſt of my brethren, ye have done them unto me. Lord! how do thoſe look to be ſaved at that day, who think good works not required to Salvation, and accordingly doe them not? Can our Saviour paſs this bleſſed ſentence upon them? No; aſſuredly he will not. Matt. 25. 34, &c. Verſ. 40.

But if the caſe be thus in the Goſpel; What is the reaſon, will ſome men ſay, that the Apoſtle tells us, that we Chriſtians are no longer under the Law, nor juſtified by the works of the Law, but under Grace, and juſtified by Faith onely? Rom. 6. 14. Gal. 5. 18. & 2. 16. Rom. 3. 28. and elſewhere.

I anſwer, It is true, that we are juſtified, that is, freed and acquitted from ſin, by Faith onely: But beſides Juſtification, there is Sanctification, with the works of piety towards God and righteouſneſs towards men, as the Fruits, yea as the End of our Juſtification, required to eternal life: For therefore we are juſtified, that we might doe works acceptable to our heavenly Father, through the imputation of the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt (which of our ſelves we could not,) and ſo obtain the reward he hath promiſed the doers of them.

As for the Law, it is to be conſidered either as a Rule, and ſo we are

Mar. 1.14,15. bound to conform and frame our actions to it, (for who dare deny but a Christian is bound to fear God and keep his Commandments?) or the Law may be considered as it is taken for the Covenant of works. The Apostle, when he disputes of this argument, by the Law means the Covenant
Rom. 3. 27. of works, which he also calls, Rom. 3. the Law of works; and by Faith, and the Law of faith, he understands the Covenant of grace, the condition whereof is Faith: as will easily appear to him that shall diligently read the third and fourth chapters of the Epistle to the Galatians, where he expressly changeth those terms of Law and Faith into the equivalent appellations of the Two Covenants.

Now as the Law is taken for the Covenant of works (the seal whereof was Circumcision) 'tis true, we are not under it. For the Covenant of works, called by the Apostle the Law, is that Covenant wherein Works are the condition on our part, which if we perform in every point as the Law requires, we are justified before God, as keepers of his Covenant; otherwise, if we fail in the least thing, we are condemned as guilty of the breach thereof. Under this Covenant we are not; for if we were, and were to be judged according to it, alas! who could be saved? For, all (saith the A-Rom. 3. 23, 10. postle) have sinned, and come short of the glory of God. There is none righteous, no not one.

But the Covenant we are under, is, Believe, and thou shalt be saved; the Covenant of Grace: the condition of which Covenant, on our part, is not the doing of works which may abide the touch-stone of the Law; but Faith in Jesus Christ, which makes our works, though of themselves insufficient and short of what the Law requires, accepted of God and capable of reward. This is that S. John saith, 1 Ep. 5. 3,4. That to love God, is to keep his commandments, and his commandments (now under the Gospel) are not grievous. For whatsoever is born of God, overcomes the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our Faith, &c. Whence our Saviour
Matt. 11. 30. also saith, that his yoke (the yoke of the Gospel) was easie, and his burthen light. The condition of the first Covenant was that which we could not doe; the condition of the second Covenant is that which enableth us to doe, and makes accepted what we can doe: and this is the Covenant of the Gospel, a Covenant of favour and grace through Jesus Christ our Lord.

And thus we have seen what the Apostle's meaning is, when he saith, We are not under the Law, but under Grace. Not as though a Christian were not bound to walk after God's commandments; but that the exact fulfilling of them is not the condition whereby we are justified in the New Covenant, but Faith in Jesus Christ, in whom whosoever cometh unto the Father, is accepted, be his offering never so mean, so it be tendered with sincerity and truth of heart.

Most unworthy therefore should we be of this so great and unspeakable favour of Almighty God our heavenly Father, offered us in the Gospel, if when he hath given us his onely Son, to make the yoak of our obedience easie and possible to be born, we, contemning this superabundant grace, should refuse to wear and draw therein. Far be it from the heart of a Christian, to think it possible to have any benefit by Christ as long as he stands thus affected; or ever to win the prize of eternal life, without running the
Rom. 6. 1. race appointed thereunto. Shall we sin that grace may abound? saith S. Paul: God forbid.

THUS much of the Gospel. Now of Faith, whereby we are partakers of the grace therein, being the condition of the New Covenant which God hath struck with men.

Faith is, to believe the Gospel, that is, to attain Salvation through Christ.

But

But there is a three-fold Faith wherewith men believe in Christ. 1. There is a false Faith: 2. there is a true Faith, but not a saving: and 3. there is a saving Faith. Mar. 1,14,15.

A false Faith is, to believe to attain Salvation by Christ any other way then God hath ordained; as namely, to believe to attain Salvation through him without works of obedience to be accepted of God in him: which is a Faith whereof there is no Gospel. A true Faith is, to believe Salvation to be attained through obedience to God in Jesus Christ, who by his merits and satisfaction for sin makes our selves and our works acceptable to his Father. A saving and justifying Faith is, to believe this so as to embrace and lay hold upon Christ for that end, to apply our selves unto him and rely upon him, that we may through him perform those works of obedience which God hath promised to reward with eternal life. For a justifying Faith staies not onely in the Brain, but stirrs up the Will to receive and enjoy the good believed, according as it is promised. This motion or election of the Will is that which maketh the difference between a saving Faith which joyns us to Christ, and that which is true indeed, but not saving, but dogmatical and opinionative onely. And this motion or applying of the Will to Christ, this embracing of Christ and the Promises of the Gospel through him, is that which the Scripture, when it speaks of this Faith, calleth coming unto Christ, or the receiving of him. Come unto me, all ye that are heavy laden, and I will ease you, Matt. 11. 28. See John 5. 40. and chap. 6. 37, 44, 45. So for receiving, John 1. 12. As many as received him, to them he gave power (or priviledge) to be the sons of God, even to them that believe on his Name; where receiving and believing, one expound another.

Now if this be the Faith which is saving and unites us unto Christ, and none other; then it is plain that a saving Faith cannot be severed from good works, because no man can embrace Christ as he is promised, but he must apply himself to doe them. Would we then know whether our Faith be true and saving, and not counterfeit? This is the onely signe and note whereby we may know it; if we finde these fruits thereof in our lives and conversations. For, 1 John 1. 6. If we say we have fellowship with Christ, and walk in darkness, we lye, and doe not the truth. Ch. 2. 3. Hereby we know that we know him, (namely, to be our Advocate with the Father, and the propitiation for our sins) if we keep his commandments. And ch. 3. 7. Little children, let no man deceive you: He that doeth righteousness, is righteous, even as Christ is righteous. For if every one that believes in Christ truly and savingly, believes that Salvation is to be attained by obeying God in him, and so embraces and laies hold on him for that end; how can such a ones Faith be fruitless?

DISCOURSE XXVI.

Acts 5. 3, 4, 5.

But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the holy Ghost, and to purloin of the price of the land?

Whiles it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thy power? why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God.

And Ananias hearing these words, fell down and gave up the ghost.

IN the 110. Psalm, where our Saviour is Prophetically described in the Person of a King, advanced to the Throne of Divine Majesty, glorious and victorious, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool, &c. amongst other Kingly Attributes and Graces it is said, (if it be translated as it should be) That his people in the day of his power should offer him Free-will-offerings; that is, bring him Presents at the day of his Inauguration or Investment, as a signe of their Homage. For so was the manner of the East to doe unto their Kings: and therefore when Saul was anointed King by Samuel, it is said of those sons of Belial, which despised and acknowledged him not, that they brought him no presents: But of Messiah's people it is said, Thy people in the day of thy power (that is, the day when thou shalt enter upon thy power, or the day of thy Investment) shall be עַם נְדָבוֹת, a people of free presents, or shall bring thee Free-will-offerings. It is an Elliptical speech, עַמְּךָ נְדָבוֹת for עַם נְדָבוֹת עַמְּךָ, or עַמְּךָ יִהְיוּ נְדָבוֹת, and rightly expressed in the Translation of our Service-Book, Thy people shall offer (or bring) thee Free-will-offerings.

Vers. 1.

1 Sam. 10. 27.

This we see fulfilled in the Story of the foregoing Chapter, when after our Saviour's ascension into heaven to sit at the right hand of God, which was the day of his power or Inauguration in his Kingdom, assoon as this his Investment was published by sending of the Holy Ghost, presently such as believed in him, that is, submitted themselves to his power, and acknowledged him to be their King, dedicated their goods and possessions to his service, selling their lands and houses, and laying down the money at the Apostles feet; namely, to be distributed as were the sacred Offerings of the Law, partly to the maintenance and furnishing of the Apostles for the work whereabout they were sent, and partly for the relief of the poor Believers, which belonged to Christ's provision.

According to this Example one Ananias with Sapphira his wife consecrated also a possession of theirs unto God, and sold the same to that purpose; but having so done, covetousness tickling them, they purloined from the price, and brought but a part of the summe, and laid it down at the Apostles feet. Then said Peter, according to the words I have read, Why hath Satan filled thine heart (that is, made thee so daring: the like phrase we have Esth. 7. 5. מִי הוּא זֶה אֲשֶׁר מָלְאוּ לִבּוֹ לַעֲשׂוֹת כֵּן, * Where is he whose heart hath filled him (we reade it, that durst presume) to doe so? and again, Eccles. 8. 11. The heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to doe evil.

* Quis tantos spiritus sumpsit & tam audax evasit, ut hoc facere sustineat? Lud. de Dieu in Jo. 11. & Act. 5.

In

In the former place the Septuagint hath ἐτόλμησε, emboldened; in the latter, ἐπληροφορήθη, is filled) to lie unto the Holy Ghost, and to purloin from the price of the field, &c? Acts 5. 3, 4.

The words I have read contain two things; Ananias his Sin, and his Punishment therefore. His Sin in the third and fourth verses; his Punishment in the fifth, Ananias hearing these words, fell down and gave up the ghost.

Concerning his Sin, as appears by the relation I have already made, it was Sacriledge, namely, the purloining of what was become holy and consecrate unto God; not by actual performance, but by vow and inward purpose of the Heart. For, as it is well observed by Ainsworth, on Levit. 7. 16. out of Maimon. in his Treatise of offering the Sacrifice, Chap. 14. Sect. 4, 5. &c. In vows and voluntaries, it is not necessary that a man pronounce ought with his lips; but if he shall be fully determined in his heart, though he hath uttered nothing with his lips, he is indebted. And this is no private Opinion of mine, the Fathers so determine it: S. Augustine, that Ananias was condemned of Sacriledge, * quòd Deum in pollicitatione fefellisset, because he had deceived God, had been false to him in what he had promised him. And in another Sermon, * Ananiam detraxisse de pecunia quam voverat Deo, Ananias purloined and kept back part of the money he had devoted to God. S. Chrysostome in his 12. Homily upon this place; Ταῦτα γὰρ ἱερὰ λοιπὸν ἦν τὰ χρήματα, &c. The money or price of the land being by Ananias devoted to God's service, henceforth became sacred. And therefore he that, after he had voluntarily sold his estate with a purpose to have all the money distributed for the use of the Church, durst yet nowithstanding purloin and take part thereof to his own private use, was clearly guilty of Sacriledge. Again, in the same place, You see that Ananias is most justly charged with Sacriledge, ὅτι ποιήσας ἀυτὰ ἱερὰ χρήματα, τότε ἔλαβε, because he took back again part of that money which he had made sacred by devoting it unto God. S. Jerome in his 8. Epistle, Ananias & Sapphira dispensatores timidi, imò corde duplici; & ideo condemnati, quia post votum obtulerunt quasi sua, & non ejus cui semel ea voverant, partemque sibi alienæ substantiæ reservaverunt; præsentem meruere vindictam non crudelitate sententiæ, sed correctionis exemplo: Ananias and Sapphira were distrustfully covetous, false and double-hearted in disposing the money they received for the sale of their estate; and being therefore condemned, because that after their Vow they presented the price of their estate as if it had been their own still, and not God's, to whom they had given it by vow, and withall kept back and reserv'd to themselves part of that which was no more theirs, but another's, viz. God's; upon these accounts they did most worthily deserve that punishment of Death. Nor was this condemning of them to such a punishment an over-severe or cruel sentence; but an usefull exemplary severity, that others might amend and fear to transgress in the like manner. Cæsarius brother to Gregory Nazianzen, in his fourth Dialogue, expresseth the sin of Ananias thus; τῷ ἅπαξ Θεῷ ἀνατεθέντα χρυσία, ἱερουλία τρωθεὶς ἐνοσφίσατο, ἐρωτηθεὶς δὲ ἠρνήσατο· He alienated the money dedicated unto God, being wounded with Sacriledge; and when he was asked thereabout, denied it. Lastly, Oecumenius, in whom we have the currant interpretation of the Greek Fathers, thus expounds the words of S. Peter to Ananias;——μὴ γὰρ ἀκόντας ὑμᾶς ἔλκομεν, &c. We were far from compelling or forcing you in the least to sell your estate: But whenas you were pleased of your own accord to offer it as a Sacrifice to God, for you afterwards to withhold any part of what ye had given to God for the use of the Church, and to keep it for your own use; this without question is plain Sacriledge. And then addes, διὸ καὶ τῶν ἱερούλων κἂν ὀλιγοστὸν τροσπίμψῃ.

* Serm. 10. De diversis.

Acts 5. 3,4. προστίμῳ. τίνι τούτῳ; θανάτῳ. And therefore they received the punishment due to Sacrilegious persons: what's that? even Death it self. Also Asterius Bishop of Amasea, who lived near the time of Julian, in his Hom. against Covetousness, calls Ananias and Sapphira τῶν οἰκείων ἀναθεμάτων ἱεροσύλους, persons guilty of Sacriledge even in their own Offerings.

I quote these Fathers the more fully, because many of our late Commentators omit the main Sin, and dwell upon the circumstances onely, as Hypocrisie, Vain-glory, Covetousness, and the like. But we must distinguish between Ananias his Fact, and the manner and circumstance thereof. The Fact was Sacriledge: In the manner of doing, other sins attended as handmaids. It will be plain, if we ask but these two questions: First, What Ananias did: The Text will make answer, ἐνοσφίσατο ἀπὸ τῆς τιμῆς, He purloined of the price, the holy money. This was his Fact. Ask secondly, How and in what manner he purloined: The story will tell us, dissemblingly and hypocritically, making an appearance to the contrary. This then was but the manner and circumstance of his Fact, and so the species of the Fact not to be placed therein.

Now this Sacriledge or Sacrilegious act committed by Ananias is in the words of the Text partly expressed, partly aggravated from the inexcusableness thereof. In the expression is spent the third Verse; the aggravation is in the fourth.

1. The Crime or Fact of Ananias is expressed two ways. First, by νοσφίσασθαι ἀπὸ τῆς τιμῆς, purloining of the sacred price. Secondly, by ψεύσασθαι τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, by lying unto, or deceiving, the Holy Ghost. For both these I suppose to mean one and the same thing; namely, the same Fact of Ananias two ways expressed. The first, νοσφίσασθαι ἀπὸ τῆς τιμῆς, I translate by stealing or purloining, for so the word signifies. Our English which turns it Keeping back of the price, doth not sufficiently express the propriety thereof in this: In another place it doth, Tit. 2.10. where it turns νοσφιζομένους, purloining; Exhort servants, saith the Apostle, to be obedient unto their Masters, and to please them well in all things, μὴ νοσφιζομένους, not purloining, but shewing all good fidelity. The Vulgar in both places useth Fraudare, defrauding. In a word, the true signification of νοσφίζεσθαι is surripere, suffurari, aut clam subducta in commodum nostrum convertere; to steal or take away privily, or to convert to our own use and advantage what was so closely purloined. Whence Beza turns it by Intervertere, Intervertit ex pretio, He purloined, or closely and cunningly took unto himself, part of the price; and in Titus, Intervertentes. In the same sense it is used by the Septuagint in two several places, both pointing at the sin of Sacriledge. One is in Achan's story, Josh. 7. 1. where what we reade, Achan took of the accursed thing, the Septuagint renders, ἐνοσφίσατο ἀπὸ τῶν ἀναθεμάτων, he purloined the accursed thing; that is, the thing that was consecrated to God, as all the silver and gold was, Ch. 6. Ver. 19. For which cause when God relates to Joshuah Israel's sin as the reason of their flying before their enemies, he makes a distinction between Achan's Sacriledge and his theft and dissembling, Ver. 11. of the 7. Chap. saying, For they have even taken of the accursed thing, and have also stollen and dissembled also, and they have put it even among their own stuffe. The other is in 2 Macc. 4. 32. where Menelaus his Sacriledge (who stole the sacred Vessels) is expressed by it; Menelaus (saith the Author) supposing he had got a convenient time, χρυσώματά τινα νοσφισάμενος, stole certain vessels of gold out of the Temple, and gave some to Andronicus, and some he sold into Tyrus and the Cities round about.

2. The second expression of Ananias his Sacriledge is by ψεύσασθαι τὸ Πνεῦμα

Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, deceiving, or lying to, the Holy Ghoſt; or, as it is repeated immediately after, ψεύσασθαι τῷ θεῷ, lying unto God. Ψεύδομαι is fallo, fruſtro, mentior, to deceive, cozen, lie; (as alſo the Hebrew word מָעַל, which peculiarly ſignifies Sacrilegious tranſgreſſion, as Lev. 5. 15. and in the ſtory of Achan, is in all thoſe places (as elſewhere) rendred in the Targum, שקר to lie, and the ſubſtantive מעל, שקר a lie;) and in Oaths and Promiſes, Non ſervo, frango, not to keep, or to break them. So Ananias his ſin was a lying unto, or breaking of promiſe with, God: for having vowed, or promiſed unto him in his heart, the whole price of the field, he brought him but part thereof. Both expreſſions point out the ſame Fact; which, in regard of the matter, was ſtealing or purloining; in regard of the Vow and Conſecration, a breach of promiſe or lying unto God. So that when Peter ſays in the third verſe, Why hath Satan filled thine heart, to lie unto the Holy Ghoſt, and to purloin of the price of the land? the latter is the explication of the former, and is as if it had been ſaid, Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie unto the Holy Ghoſt, in purloining the price of the land? Acts 5. 3, 4.

But what, will ſome man ſay, means this ſpecial expreſſion of the Deity in the Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt? why is Ananias ſaid to have lied to the Holy Ghoſt, rather then to have lied unto God only? For lying unto God would bear the ſenſe I ſpeak of. Should not then lying unto the Holy Ghoſt ſeem to have ſomething elſe, or ſomething more in it? I anſwer; Ananias his lie or breach of promiſe is applied thus in ſpecial to the Holy Ghoſt in reſpect of the Prerogative of that Perſon, as to ſtir and ſanctifie, ſo to take notice of the motions of the Heart. Foraſmuch therefore as Ananias his Vow and Promiſe which he broke was not ſuch as men could witneſs or take notice of, but ſuch as his own Heart and Conſcience only was privy to; hence it is ſaid to have been done under the privity of the Holy Ghoſt, and he in the breach thereof to have lied unto him; becauſe that which none but the inward man knoweth of, and is yet but in the purpoſe of the Heart, is under his privity. There is a plain place Rom. 9. 1. to this purpoſe; I ſay the truth in Chriſt, (ſaith the Apoſtle) I lie not, my Conſcience alſo bearing me witneſs in the Holy Ghoſt; that is, the Holy Ghoſt, who is privy to my Conſcience, bearing me witneſs, or my Conſcience which the Holy Ghoſt is privy to. Some other places of Scripture I could name which may receive light from this notion, but I am loth to meddle with them.

But for their interpretation, who expound this Lying unto the Holy Ghoſt of Ananias his Hypocriſie, I cannot well ſee how it can ſtand: for Ananias diſſembled not with the Holy Ghoſt, but with men; the Holy Ghoſt knew his Heart well enough. And the Hypocrite properly lies unto men, who gueſs only by the outſide, and not unto God, who knows the Heart.

Others expound Lying unto the Holy Ghoſt, as if it were Lying to try whether the Holy Ghoſt in the Apoſtles could diſcover him or not: But this is an harſh and forc'd ſenſe. As for that in the 9. verſe whereon it is grounded, viz. How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? The word Tempt, or πειράζειν, is miſtaken; the notion thereof in Scripture being otherwhile, To provoke God by ſome preſumptuous fact to anger, as it were to try whether he will puniſh or not, to dare God. There is an evident place for this ſenſe, Numb. 14. 22. Thoſe men, ſaith the Lord, which have ſeen my glory and my miracles which I did in Egypt and in the wilderneſs, and have tempted me now theſe ten times, and have not hearkened to my voice, 23. Surely, they ſhall not ſee the land which I ſware to their Fathers; neither ſhall any of them that provoked me ſee it.

And

Acts 5. 3, 4. And thus much of the bare deſcription of Ananias his Sin: Come we now to the aggravation thereof; While it remained, was it not thine? and after it was ſold, was it not in thy power? That is, Before it was ſold, was it not thine? and being ſold, was not the money paid thee? was not the price in thine hand? Thou haſt therefore no excuſe for what thou haſt done.

For there were two Caſes which might have excuſed Ananias for bringing but part of the price: If either he had not been Dominus in ſolidum, the full Proprietary of what was ſold; or had not received the whole price it was ſold for. For, as for the Firſt, it is a Rule in Law, Quoties Dominium transfertur ad alium, tale transfertur quale apud eum fuit qui tradit. A man can ſell no more then is his. So that if Ananias had been owner but in part, he had power to diſpoſe but in part. Secondly, Though he were Dominus in ſolidum, the full Proprietary of the Field, and ſo had right enough to ſell it; yet had not the whole price been received, and in his power and poſſeſſion, he might ſtill have been excuſed for bringing but part thereof. But Ananias could plead neither of theſe: for, ſaith S. Peter, Οὐχὶ μένον σοὶ ἔμενε; whileſt it remained unſold, did it not remain thine? or waſt not thou owner? καὶ οὐχὶ πραθὲν ἐν τῇ σῇ ἐξουσίᾳ ὑπῆρχε; and when it was ſold, was not the money it was ſold for in thy poſſeſſion? The firſt words, Οὐχὶ μένον σοὶ ἔμενε; (though there be no ſuch ſpeech again in Scripture) yield the ſenſe I ſpeak of pliantly enough, nor will they bear any other meaning; unleſs ſomewhat forſaking the letter, we ſhould with others conſtrue them to imply, That Ananias was not conſtrained or urged to ſell his poſſeſſion at all, but might have kept it ſtill. Which ſenſe is moſt commonly followed, and hath the authority of Oecumenius in the words before alledged;—μὴ γὰρ ἀναγκάσας, &c. We were far (ſaith S. Peter to Ananias and Sapphira) from compelling you in the leaſt to ſell your eſtate: But whenas you were pleaſed of your own accord to offer it as a Sacrifice and Free-will-offering to God, for you afterwards to withdraw any part of what ye had devoted to God, and take it to your own uſe; this is ἱεροσυλία ἀναντίῤῥητος, downright Sacriledge without all controverſie and diſpute. Therefore Beza tranſlates the words, Nonne, ſi ſervâſſes, (ſo he renders μένον) manebat tibi?

True it is, this ſenſe makes as much for the unexcuſableneſs of Ananias as the other: For could he have alledged, that what he had done for the ſale of his land was done not ſponte, but coactè, not willingly, but by way of conſtraint; it might have excuſed him: Becauſe that act only is taken to be of force in Law which a man conſents unto; but that which is done by conſtraint or compulſion, is not done with full and free conſent, and therefore binds not. So this ſenſe agrees well enough with the ſtory, only it may ſeem ſomewhat to ſtrain the words: Howſoever if you had rather follow it, becauſe of the authority, I will not contend. Only note thus much, that the Syriack Tranſlator inclines to the firſt ſenſe; for he tranſlates, Οὐχὶ μένον σοὶ ἔμενε; לא הוא דילך הות עד לא תודבן, Was it not thine before it was ſold?

A ſecond plea for the excuſe of Ananias might have been in caſe he had not yet received the full price, and ſo had not the whole money in his hand. But this S. Peter alſo takes from him, Οὐχὶ πραθὲν (ſaith he) ἐν τῇ σῇ ἐξουσίᾳ ὑπῆρχε; Was it not, when it was ſold, in thy power? that is, was not the price it was ſold for in thine hands? For τὸ πραθὲν muſt here be underſtood for the price of what was ſold, or the Field reduced to money: otherwiſe the contrary would be true to that which Peter intimates, namely, That when it was ſold, it was now no longer in his power, becauſe he had ſold it.

But

But the latter words, ἐν τῇ σῇ ἐξουσίᾳ, in thy power, I understand to be as much as, in thy possession, or in thine hand; meaning, as I have said, that he had received the price. For not only that which a man hath dominion and propriety in, but that also which he hath but in bare possession, is rightly said to be in his power. For in the Law Jus possessionis extends farther then Jus dominii, namely, as far as habere, to have a thing: Habere autem dicitur, non solùm qui rei dominus est, sed qui rei quidem dominus non est, sed rem tenet; that is, as they speak, corpore possessioni insistit. And in this sense the price which Ananias had received is said to have been ἐν τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ αὐτοῦ, in his power, that is, in his possession. Which will not seem a forc'd exposition, if we consider that ἐν τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ hath the same sense with בידו, or in manu, in the Hebrew; which implies not dominion only, but also bare possession. As it is said of Abraham's servant, Gen. 24. 10. that all the goods of his Master were in his hand; as well as of the rich miser's son, Eccles. 5. 14. that there was nothing in his hand, that is, he was a beggar. Both which might be expressed by ἐν τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ, as manus in Hebrew, yea and in Latine too, is well enough known to be put for ἐξουσία, power.

Acts 5. 3, 4.

Possession.

Propriety.

I confess there is another Exposition usually given of these words, but it is such an one as directly contradicts the story; namely, that Was it not in thy power? should be, Was it not in thy power to have kept the price when it was sold? But first there is no such word in the Text as to keep it, and so we are not bound to understand it. It is only said, Was it not in thy power? And if any verb be to be understood to supply the sense, why should it not as well be the contrary? Was it not in thy power to dispose it according to thy Vow? intimating there might be some just impediment after the sale, whereby he could not; especially if he could not get the money. But to expound, Was it not in thy power? to be, Was it not in thy power to have kept it? is directly against the drift of the story: For how did Ananias sin in bringing but part of the price, if he might have kept all? Is not his sin expressly placed in that he purloined of the price? what other Fact of his is mentioned save only this? Nay, if this should be the meaning of the words, it would follow, a man might vow a thing unto God, and yet be at liberty, when he had done, whether he would perform it or not; he might lie unto God, and yet be guiltless. Without doubt this Exposition was it that so obscured the whole Narration, that it could not appear wherein Ananias his Sin consisted. But his Sin, as I have already shewed out of the Fathers, was Sacriledge, and of that kinde whereof Solomon speaks, Prov. 20. 25. It is a snare to the man who devours that which is holy, and after vows to enquire. He had dedicated the whole value of the Field in his conscience and the purpose of his heart, as was evident by his sale thereof to that end; and yet when he had done, he repented him, and brought but part thereof. This meaning is evidently contained in the body of the Narration, and therefore such a sense of any part as cannot stand with this is in no wise to be admitted. He that considers it, will perceive the necessity of what I say.

HAVING thus cleared the words of the Text where there was any doubt or obscurity; let us come to the Observations to be deduced thence; and the Relation affords us three evident ones.

1. That Sacriledge is a sin against God, and not against men.

2. That that which is consecrate to God must not be alienated to other uses.

3. That it is an hainous sin which God thus severely punished.

For the First, That Sacriledge is a sin against God, and not against men, is plain by the Text, Thou hast not lied (said Peter) unto men, but unto God. Observ. 1.

For

Acts 5. 3,4. For whatſoever is ſacred, is his; yea, to be ſacred is nothing elſe but to be ſet apart from man's intereſt to be God's in a peculiar propriety and relation. To ſteal then or alienate that which is ſacred, is to rob God, and not man; for he is robbed whoſe the propriety is, but of ſacred things God is the Proprietary, and not man. It is an errour therefore to be obſerved among the Expoſitors of the Decalogue, who rank Sacriledge as a Sin of the Eighth Commandment: when Sacriledge as Sacriledge is a Sin of the Firſt Table, and not of the Second; a breach of the loyalty we immediately owe to God, and not of the duty we owe to our neighbour. True it is, He that committeth Sacriledge, indirectly and by conſequent robbeth men too, namely, thoſe who live of God's proviſion; but Sacriledge it ſelf is the robbing of God. This is evident by that of the Prophet Malachi, Mal. 3. 8. Will a man rob God? yet ye have robbed me, (ſaith the Prophet in the perſon of God:) But ye ſay, Wherein have we robbed thee? In Tithes and Offerings. ver. 9. Ye are curſed with a curſe: for ye have robbed me, even this whole Nation. v. 10. Bring ye all the Tithes into the ſtore-houſe, that there may be meat in mine houſe; and prove me now herewith, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a bleſſing, that there ſhall not be room enough to receive it, &c.

The obſervation of this would be uſefull in the Queſtion of the due of Tithes; for the ſtate thereof is not rightly framed, when the Quære is made, Whether Tithes are due to the Miniſters of the Goſpel, meaning as a duty of the people unto them. We ſhould ſay rather, Tithes are due unto God; for ſo is the ſtyle of the Scripture, All the Tithes are mine: theſe I give to Levi, and not you. God maintains not his Miniſters at others charges, but out of his own Revenue which he had reſerved to himſelf: As was well obſerved by Philo the Jew, in his Book de Sacerdotum honoribus, where ſpeaking of that σεμνότερον τρόπον καὶ ἀπονώτερον, that honourable maintenance and without bodily toil, which God had provided for his Prieſthood, ὑπὲρ δὲ τοῦ μηδένα πρὸς διδόντων ὀνειδίζειν τοῖς λαμβάνουσι, to take away from them out of whoſe labours this maintenance did accrue all occaſion of upbraiding thoſe who by God's aſſignment were to receive it, he ſaith, κελεύει τὰς ἀπαρχὰς εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν κομίζεσθαι πρότερον, εἶτ' ἐνθένδε τοὺς ἱερεῖς λαμβάνειν. ἦρμοττε γὰρ θεῷ τοὺς μὴ ἐυεργετουμένους, &c. The people were commanded to bring their offerings firſt to the Temple, that thence the Prieſts might fetch them: It being not unworthy God himſelf, in token of gratitude for his infinite bounty and benefits, to take ſome part back again from him upon whom he had conferred ſo great benefits; and ſeeing himſelf, the Giver of all good gifts, ſtood in need of nothing, it pleaſed him to transfer that honourable maintenance, which was ſo returned him by way of thankfulneſs, upon thoſe that ſerved at his Altar and miniſtred about holy things: τῷ γὰρ μὴ παρ' ἀνθρώπων, (as he gives the reaſon) ἀλλὰ παρὰ τοῦ πάντων ἐυεργέτου δοκεῖν λαμβάνειν, ἀδυσώπητον ἔχει δωρεάν· becauſe they (the Prieſts) might take that their proviſion without being aſhamed, as not coming from men, but from God the Giver of all good gifts to every one. For they are his Miniſters, and not the people's; and therefore to receive their wages from their own Maſter who imploys them, and not from them. The ſtating of the Queſtion thus would make the way to the reſolution of the controverſie more eaſie, and leſs invidious, whileſt we ſhould plead for God, and not for our ſelves. For it is not needfull that all which is given unto God ſhould be ſpent upon his Miniſters; though it be true that their maintenance ſhould be out of his Revenue, and that honourable and competent. But there are many other uſes for the imployment of bona ſacra, the ſacred Revenues, if there be more then is competent for for them and theirs; building of Churches; defraying of such as are sent to Synods and imployed upon other occasions of the Church; furnishing of treasures for a Holy War; the relief of the poor, the Orphan, the Widow, the Captive and the distressed: All which belong to Christ's provision. Acts 5. 3, 4.

Thus much of the First Observation: Now I come to the Second, Observ. 2. That that which is consecrated to God may not be alienated to other uses. The Reasons whereof are,

1. Because none can alienate but he that hath the propriety and is Owner; Dominium transferre non potest qui ipse Dominus non est: But in things consecrate to God, none hath the propriety but God. For certainly a man cannot be said to have given that unto God wherein he still reserves the Title to himself as the Owner. He that gives, transferrs the Dominium from himself unto him to whom the gift is made. If therefore that which is given to God be God's, then must those who goe about to alienate it, dispose of that which is none of theirs: which whether it be just or not, let any man judge.

2. To alienate that which is given unto God is a Breach of Vow or Promise made unto him; a lying unto him, as my Text speaks. And if it be a Sin not to perform what was vowed in the purpose of the Heart onely, (as we see it was in this Story of Ananias;) much more is it to revoke a Vow already performed. Nor will it serve turn to say, This reason may indeed concern the person himself that vowed, that he should not revoke again what he hath vowed; but doth not take away from the Commonwealth or publick Magistrate their power to dispose of things subject to them. For howsoever it be true, That every private person and his goods are under the tuition of the Publick; and the interest the Publick hath in either cannot be given away by the sole act of a private person: yet in this case that Rule hath place which is given by Almighty God, Numb. 30. 3, &c. concerning a Maiden's vow in her Father's house, or a Woman's vow under covert; That if the Father or the Husband hear the Vow, and the bond wherewith she bound her soul, and disallow it not, but shall hold his peace; then the vow shall stand. So when the Commonwealth or publick Magistrate consents to and allows what is done, as in this case it is supposed they do; the vow and dedication is also irrevocable on their part.

Hence in Scripture it is made an inseparable property of that which is Sacred or God's, not to be alienable. As in Ezek. 48. 14. it is said of the portion of land to be laid out for the Levites, They shall not sell it, neither exchange, nor alienate the first-fruits of the land; (mark the reason;) for it is holy unto the Lord. This was the reason likewise why a Jew might not sell out-right his possession in the land of Canaan, but onely for fifty years term, or untill the year of Jubilee; because the whole land was holy, and God's land, and they but Usufructuaries. So saith God Levit. 25. 23. The land shall not be sold for ever, or out-right, for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me: therefore v. 24. in all the land of your possession ye shall grant a redemption for the land. Where he saith, ye are strangers and sojourners with me; the meaning is, That as the Gentiles who became Proselytes had no inheritance in the land, but dwelt therein as sojourners; so was all Israel in the sight of God, who would have none accounted Proprietaries of that land but himself, having acquired it by his own powerful conquest from the Canaanite. For although in the same land some part were yet in a more special manner the Lord's land; yet comparatively and secundum quid the whole land was Sacred and His. As all Israel was a peculiar and holy people, though the Tribe of Levi were in a more

Acts 5. 3, 4. ſpecial ſort the holy Tribe. Now if that which was but in a more general ſenſe holy and the Lord's might not be alienated; what ſhall we ſay of that which is holy and His in the moſt ſpecial manner of all? I ſpeak all this while of that which is dedicate unto God abſolutely, and not with limitation or for term of time onely; for ſuch Dedications I ſuppoſe there may be.

Now if any ſhall ask me, whether this Aſſertion, That things dedicate to God are unalienable, admits not of ſome limitations; I anſwer, It may; and that in two caſes: If either it can be proved that the Donation made unto God were a nullity; or ſhewed that God hath relinquiſhed the right which once he had. But here the water begins to grow too deep for my wading; yet I hope I may ſay thus much, That whoſoever he be that ſhall plead either of theſe Caſes to acquit himſelf of Sacriledge, had need be ſure in a point of ſuch moment that his evidence be good, and ſuch as he can ſhew good warrant for out of God's own Book: To go upon bare conjectures will not be ſafe. And for direction and caution in this Caſe, I will adde further, That not every ſinfulneſs of the perſon who is the Donor, nor every default or blemiſh in the Conſecration, makes the act it ſelf void. It appears in the ſtory of Korah, Dathan and Abiram, in that oblation of Incenſe made by the two hundred and fifty Princes of the Congregation; whoſe ſervice though it were ſo diſpleaſing unto the Lord, that he ſent fire from heaven to conſume them, yet when all was done, he gave this commandment to Moſes, Speak (ſaith he) unto Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the Prieſt, that he take up the cenſers out of the burning, and ſcatter thou the fire yonder; for they are hallowed. The cenſers of thoſe ſinners againſt their ſouls; let them make of them broad plates for a covering of the Altar: for they offered them before the Lord, therefore they are hallowed, Numb. 16. 37, 38. Mark here; Though they were offered by ſinful men, and in a ſinful manner, and were not to be uſed any more for Cenſers; yet muſt they be applied to ſome other holy uſe, becauſe they were become ſacred by having been offered unto the Lord. So Rabbi Solomon Farchi, קדשו ואסורין בהנאה שהרי עשאום כלי שרת, Unlawful for common uſe, becauſe they had made them veſſels of Miniſtery.

Obſerv. 3. My laſt Obſervation is raiſed from the Judgement which befel Ananias; That it muſt needs be a hainous ſin which God ſo ſeverely puniſhed, namely, with death: For there is no Example to be found again in the whole New Teſtament of ſo ſevere a Puniſhment inflicted by the mouth of the Apoſtles for any ſin whatſoever. But this was the firſt Conſecration of goods that ever was made unto Chriſt our Lord, after he was inveſted to ſit at the right hand of God; and this tranſgreſſion of Ananias and Sapphira the firſt Sacriledge that ever was committed againſt him: Wherefore it was requiſite that by the ſeverity of the puniſhment thereof, he ſhould now manifeſt unto men what account he made of, and how hainous he eſteemed that Sin; that it might be for an Example to the world's end unto all that ſhould afterward believe in his name to beware thereof. So ſaith S. Hierome, Ananias & Sapphira, quia poſt votum obtulerunt quaſi ſua, & non ejus cui ſemel ea voverant, præſentem meruere vindictam, non crudelitate Sententia, ſed correctionis exemplo. Ananias and Sapphira moſt worthily deſerved to be ſo ſeverely puniſhed, viz. with death; becauſe that after their vow they preſented the price of their eſtate as if it had been their own, and not God's to whom they had given it, and withall kept back and reſerved to themſelves part of that which was no more theirs, but anothers, viz. God's. Nor was this an over-ſevere and cruel ſentence, but an uſefull exemplary Severity, that others might amend, and beware of offending in the like kind. For the Firſt in every kind is the Meaſure of that which follows: and though Sacriledge be not ſince puniſhed puniſhed by God, as often as it is committed, by ſuch a viſible death; yet was it his purpoſe that by this Firſt puniſhment we ſhould take notice how great that Sin was, and how diſpleaſing in his ſight, which was a puniſhment by the greateſt viſible judgement that could be. Acts 5. 3, 4.

The like ſevere Example to this, and for the like end, was that upon him who at firſt profaned the Sabbath-day in the Wilderneſs by gathering ſticks, Numb. 15. 32, &c. who by the ſentence of God himſelf was put to death, and ſtoned by the whole Congregation: that the Jews hereby might know, that howſoever the like were not ordinarily afterward to be inflicted for the like ſin, yet the gravity thereof in the eyes of God was ſtill the ſame which that Firſt ſeverity intimated.

Furthermore, it is worthy to be noted, that we finde three Examples of ſuch a kind of coactive juriſdiction, (if I may ſo term it) exerciſed either by our Saviour when he was here on earth, or by his Apoſtles; and all three for the profanation of that which was ſacred. The firſt two by our Saviour himſelf againſt thoſe that profaned his Temple, by buying and ſelling therein as a common place: For which, at the firſt Paſſeover after his beginning to preach the Goſpel, he made him a whip, and whipped ſuch profaners out of it, ſaying, Make not my Father's houſe a houſe of Merchandiſe, John 2. 16. Another time, which was at his laſt Paſſeover, He overthrew the Tables of the Money-changers, and the ſeats of them that ſold doves, and would not ſuffer any to carry a Veſſel through the Temple; telling them, that his houſe was made for an houſe of prayer, but they had made it a den of Thieves, Matt. 21. 12. Mark 11. 15. Luke 19. 45. The third Example is this which the Apoſtle Peter exerciſed upon Ananias and Sapphira for Sacriledge. Whereby it ſhould appear that, how ſmall account ſoever we are now-a-days wont to make of theſe ſins, yet in God's eſteem they are other manner of ones then we take them for.

Another argument of the hainouſneſs of the ſin of Sacriledge is, That there was no Sacrifice appointed in the Law to make atonement for the ſame, if it were committed willingly and wittingly; but onely if it were ignorantly done. For ſo we have it, Levit. 5. 15, 16. If a ſoul commit a treſpaſs, and ſin through ignorance in the holy things of the Lord; he ſhall bring for his treſpaſs unto the Lord a ramme without blemiſh out of the flock.——And he ſhall make amends for the harm that he hath done in the holy thing, and adde the fifth part thereunto.——And the Prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, and it ſhall be forgiven him. Thus if it were done ignorantly; but if wittingly and preſumptuouſly, there was no atonement appointed for it: though for other ſins there be, even to Perjury it ſelf. For, as it is in Mal. 3. 8. Will a man rob his God?

Another proof and teſtimony of the hainouſneſs of this ſin, is that ſo ancient a cuſtome in Dedications to lade it with a Curſe: Which to be no late cuſtome (as ſome may ſuppoſe) taken up among Chriſtians, but uſed both by Jew and Gentile before Chriſt was born, may appear by that Decree of King Darius for the building of the Temple of Jeruſalem, which concludes with this Execration; The God that hath cauſed his Name to dwell there, deſtroy all Kings and people that ſhall put to their hand to deſtroy this houſe of God which is at Jeruſalem. I Darius have made a Decree, let it be done with ſpeed. Ezra 6. 12.

From this cuſtome it came, that Anathema ſignifies both a Donary given unto a Temple, and an accurſed thing, or that which hath a curſe with it. So חרם in Hebrew a thing curſed and deſtined to deſtruction, and alſo a kinde of offering or conſecration which had a curſe laid upon it, namely, a curſe to him that ſhould meddle with it. Which kind of Conſecration had this peculiar,

Acts 5. 3, 4. that even the very individual might never be altered, changed, or redeemed upon any terms, Levit. 27. 28. whereas other offerings might, so that a valuable thing or better were given for them. Such a Consecration (I mean a Cherem, or Consecration under pain of a curse in the very individual) was that of the City Jericho as the First-fruits of the conquests of Canaan.

To these Arguments I will adde two or three Examples to this of Ananias, of the Punishment of this sin, and so conclude. To begin then with the beginning of all: Was not the First sin of Mankind, for which himself, his posterity, and the whole earth was accursed, a great and capital sin? But this, if we look well into it, was no other for the species and kind of the Fact then Sacriledge: Such the ancient Jews conceived Adam's sin to have been, namely, a species of Theft; as may be gathered out of the Book De morte Mosis, where Moses is brought in deprecating death, and answering God that his case was not such as Adam's; for he transgressed by stealing, and eating what God forbad him to meddle with, and so was justly condemned, עבר אדם הראשון גנב ואכל מה שלא רצית: But who could Adam steal from, save from God onely? And therefore I say the First sin of mankind for the Fact, was the sin of Sacriledge: For whereas among all the Trees of the Garden, which God gave man freely to enjoy, there was one Noli me tangere, which he had reserved unto himself as holy, in token he was Lord of the Garden; Man by eating of this as common, violated the sign of his Fealty unto the great Landlord of the whole Earth, and committed Sacriledge: for which he was cast out of Paradise, and the whole earth accursed for his sake. Might I not say, that to this day many a son of Adam is cast out of his Paradise, and the labours of his hands accursed, for medling with this forbidden fruit? But to go on.

Achan for nimming a wedge of gold and a Babylonish garment of the devoted thing of Jericho aforementioned, brought a curse both upon himself and the whole Congregation of Israel.

For the Sacriledge of Eli's sons, who, not content with those Offerings which God allowed them for their maintenance, robbed him of his Sacrifices to furnish their own Tables, God gave not onely his people, but even the Ark of his Covenant, into the hands of the Philistins.

For the Sacriledge of the Seventh or Sabbatical year, God caused his people to be carried captive, and the land to lie waste seventy years. By the Law of Moses every Seventh year the whole land was sacred unto the Lord, so that no man that year might challenge any right of propriety, either to sow his field, or prune his vineyard, or reap that which grew of it self, or gather the fruits of his vineyard undressed; onely he might eat thereof in the field, as at other times any might of that which was none of his, as he travelled by; otherwise every man's field and vineyard was that year free as well to the Servant as the Master, to the Stranger as the Owner, to Beasts as well as to Men. The same year also were all Servants and all Debts sacred unto the Lord, and so to be released; whence that year was called The Lord's release. See Exod. 21. Levit. 25. Deut. 15. This consecration being as much as the forgoing of the seventh part of every man's profits, the covetous Jews for many years neglected the observation thereof: For which sin the Lord, as himself professeth, caused them to be carried captive, and the land to lie waste seventy years without Inhabitant, till it had fulfilled the years of Sabbath which they observed not. For their Idolatry he gave them into the hands of the Gentiles their enemies: for their Sabbatical Sacriledge he added this unto it, that they should, beside their bondage, be carried captives into a strange Country, and their Land lie desolate seventy years.

For

For the Sacrilegious profanation of Belſhazzar, in cauſing the Veſſels of God's Houſe* to be made his Quaffing-bowls for himſelf and his Lords, his Wives and his Concubines to carouſe in; was the hand-writing upon the wall ſent, which did ſo affright him, that the Text ſaies, His countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, ſo that the joynts of his loyns were looſed, and his knees ſmote one againſt another. And the ſame night God's vengeance lighted upon him. Acts 5. 3, 4. * Dan. 5. 2. Verſ. 6. Verſ. 30.

Laſtly, In the days of the Greek Kings God gave his own Temple and Worſhip to be profaned, and his People to be troden under foot by Antiochus Epiphanes a Gentile King; becauſe they themſelves had a little before profaned the ſame with Sacrilegious hands, having betraied the Treaſures and Offerings of the ſame unto a Gentile's coffers, and ſold the ſacred Veſſels to the Cities round about them. 2 Maccab. 3, 4, & 5. chapters.

DISCOURSE XXVII.

NEHEMIAH 13. 14.

Remember me, O my God, concerning this, and wipe not out my good deeds [Heb. חַסְדַּי] that I have done for the Houſe of my God and for the Offices thereof.

with Verſ. 22.

Remember me, O my God, concerning this, and ſpare me according to the greatneſs of thy mercy.

THE preſent Occaſion is Remembrance, and my Text, you ſee, is of Remembrance; and that too for good deeds done to the Houſe of God. The difference is, that in my Text is God's Remembrance, the occaſion of this meeting is * Ours: But ſeeing the one will follow from the other, the Text is every way fit enough for the Occaſion. * The Commemoration of Colledge-Benefactors.

The words I have read are the words of Nehemiah himſelf, by way of a ſhort Ejaculatory prayer and Apoſtrophe unto Almighty God. But what were thoſe good deeds, will you ask, which he ſpeaks of, done for the Houſe of his God and the Offices thereof? Of this the words going before will inform us: I perceived (ſaith he) that the portions of the Levites had not been given them; whereby the Levites and the Singers that did the work, were fled every one to his field. Then contended I with the Rulers, and ſaid, Why is the Houſe of God forſaken? And I gathered them together, and ſet them in their place (or, Station.) Then brought all Judah the tithe of the corn, and the new wine, and the oyle, unto the treaſuries (or, ſtore-houſes:) And I made treaſurers over the treaſuries, ſuch of the Prieſts and Levites as were accounted faithful; and their office was to diſtribute unto their Brethren. Verſ. 14. Remember me, O my God, concerning this, &c. Verſ. 10. Verſ. 11. Verſ. 12. Verſ. 13.

There needs no more for underſtanding the meaning of the Words:

Nehem. 13. 14, 22. I.

Now therefore let us see what Lessons we may learn therefrom. And in the first place, that which is most pregnantly to be gathered thence, and best fits our turn, namely, That to make provision for the maintenance of God's Worship and the Ministers thereof, is a worthy work, and of high esteem and favour with God: Forasmuch as Nehemiah here commendeth himself unto the Divine favour and remembrance, under that name of having done good deeds or kindnesses unto the House of God, and the Offices thereof; a manifest argument he took them to be most pleasing and acceptable unto him. The truth of this Observation appears not onely by this, but by other places of Scripture both of the Old and New Testament: Let us take some survey of them.

And first for the furnishing a place for God's worship, take notice of that famous benediction and prayer of King David, when his people offered so willingly and liberally towards the building of the Temple; In the uprightness of my heart (saith he) I have willingly offered all these things: and now I have seen with joy thy people which are present here to offer willingly unto thee. O Lord God of Abraham, Isaac and Israel our Fathers, keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and prepare their hearts unto thee. 1 Chron. 29. 17, 18. Surely therefore it was a most excellent disposition, and such as he knew God prized and esteemed.

For entertainment and provision for his Prophets and Ministers, in what account God hath it, appears by his great solicitude in his Law that they should not be neglected: Take heed to thy self (saith he, Deut. 12. 19.) that thou forsake not the Levite, as long as thou livest upon the earth. What expression can go beyond this? Again, by that story of the Shunamite woman, 2 Kings 4. who entertained the Prophet Elisha and made provision for him, when he should have occasion to pass that way: Vers. 9. Behold, (said she to her husband) this is an holy man of God which passeth by us continually. v. 10. Let us make, I pray thee, a little chamber on the wall, and let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a stool, and a candlestick; and it shall be when he cometh unto us, then he shall turn in thither. How acceptable to Almighty God was this good office done to his Prophet, appears by the double miracle he wrought for her, both in giving her a child, when her husband was now so old she despaired; and in raising him again to life, when he was dead: both in the same Chapter.

But let us come now to the New Testament, and see whether the like be not to be found there; lest otherwise any might think (as some are prone enough to do) the case were now altered. And first also to begin here with the provision of a place for God's worship, the story of that Centurion of Capernaum in S. Luke's Gospel is worthy our consideration; Who when he heard of Jesus, (saith the Text) sent unto him the Elders of the Jews, beseeching him that he would come and heal his servant. The Elders came to Jesus, and besought him instantly, saying, He was worthy for whom he should doe this. Why so? For (say they) he loveth our Nation, and hath built us a Synagogue. Luke 7. 3, 4, 5. Then Jesus (saith the Text, v. 6. without any more adoe) went with them; namely, as well approving of their Motive, that he who had done such a work deserved that favour should be deign'd him. Also concerning provision and entertainment for his Apostles and Ministers; Are they not our Saviour's own words and promise when he sent them forth? He that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, shall receive a Prophet's reward: Nay, He that should give them but a cup of cold water, should not lose his reward. According to which S. Paul, speaking of the Philippians bounty and communication towards him, I have received (saith he) of Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you, an odour of a sweet ſweet ſmell, a ſacrifice acceptable, well-pleaſing unto God. And 2 Tim. 1, 16, 18. concerning the like good office done him by Oneſiphorus, he ſpeaks in this manner; The Lord (ſaith he) give mercy unto the houſe of Oneſiphorus; for he oft refreſhed me, and was not aſhamed of my chain. The Lord grant unto him that he may finde mercy of the Lord in that day. Which is not much unlike this of Nehemiah in my Text, if it had been ſpoken in the firſt perſon by Oneſiphorus himſelf, as it is in the third by S. Paul: Howſoever, who will deny but it implies the ſame thing? Nehem. 13. 14, 22.

Matt. 10. 41. Vers. 42.

Now then, if this be ſo as I think we have proved, what ſhall we think of the times we live in, when men account them the moſt religious to God-ward who do or would unfurniſh the Houſe of God moſt, who rob his Prieſts moſt? But they have an excuſe ſufficient to bear them out; and what is that? The Prieſts, they ſay, have too much. If this excuſe would ſerve turn, ſome of themſelves perhaps might ſoon have leſs then they have: for ſure ſome body elſe as well as the Prieſt have more then they need, and might ſpare ſome of it. But whether the Prieſts have too much or not, will not be the queſtion: Suppoſe they had; hath God too much too? For theſe men conſider not that the Propriety of ſuch things as theſe is God's, and not the Prieſt's; and that to change the Propriety of what is Sacred, by alienating thereof to a profane and private uſe, (I ſay not, by diverting it from the Prieſt's livelihood to any other holy uſe, in caſe the Prieſt have more then needs) is to rob God himſelf: yea, God tells us ſo much, Malach. 3. 8, 9. Will a man (ſaith he) rob God? (as if it were a thing intolerable, and ſcarce ever heard of) yet ye (ſaith he) have robbed me. But ye ſay, Wherein have we robbed thee? In Tithes and Offerings. Ye are curſed with a curſe, becauſe ye have robbed me. (For that's the burden that goes with things conſecrated, Curſed be he that alienates them.) This Malachi lived at the ſame time with Nehemiah, and the Jews ſay 'twas Ezra; whence this exprobration of his, and this fact of Nehemiah in my Text, may juſtly ſeem to have relation one to the other. And thus much of my firſt Obſervation.

II. My ſecond is, That God rewardeth theſe, and ſo all other our Good deeds and works, not for any Merit or Worthineſs that is in them, but of his free Mercy and Goodneſs: Remember me, O my God, (ſaith Nehemiah) and wipe not out my good deeds: Why? is there any Reward due to them of Juſtice? No; But remember me, O my God, and ſpare me, חסד according to the greatneſs, or multitude, of thy mercy. Thus he expounds himſelf. And S. Paul taught us even now the ſelf-ſame thing in his Votum or Prayer for the Houſe of Oneſiphorus, for like good ſervice done to the Offices of God's Houſe; The Lord (ſaith he) grant unto him that he may finde mercy of the Lord in that day; that is, the day of Judgement, which is Tempus μισθαποδοσίας the Time of rewarding, when every one ſhall receive according to his work.

The controverſie therefore between the Romaniſts and us, is not, Whether there be a Reward promiſed unto our Works: We know the Scripture both of the Old and New Teſtament is full of Teſtimonies that way, and encourageth us to work in hope of the Reward laid up for us: We know that in keeping of God's Commandments there is great reward, Pſal. 19. 11. And that unto him that ſoweth righteouſneſs ſhall be a ſure reward, Prov. 11. 18. We know our Saviour ſaith Matt. 5. 11, 12. Bleſſed are ye, when men revile and perſecute you,——for great is your reward in heaven. Alſo that He that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, ſhall receive a Prophet's reward: and whoſoever ſhall give a cup of cold water onely to one of his little ones in the name of a Diſciple, ſhall not loſe his reward;

Nehem. 13. 14, 22.

Matt. 10. 41, 42. Again, we reade Luk. 6. 35. Love your enemies, doe good and lend, —— and your reward ſhall be great, and ye ſhall be the children of the Higheſt. We know alſo what S. John ſaith, 2. Ep. v. 8. Look to your ſelves, that ye loſe not thoſe things which ye have wrought, but that ye may receive a full reward. But the Queſtion is, Whence this reward cometh; Whether from the Worth or Worthineſs of the Work, as a debt of Juſtice due thereto; or from God's Mercy, as a recompence freely beſtowed, out of God's gracious Bounty, and not in Juſtice due to the Worth of the Work it ſelf. Which Queſtion, methinks, Nehemiah here in my Text may determine, when he ſaith, Remember me, O Lord, for my good deeds, according to thy great Mercy: and the Prophet Hoſea, Chap. 10. 12. when he biddeth us, Sow to your ſelves in righteouſneſs, and reap in mercy: and S. Paul, Rom. 6. 23. where though he ſaith, that the wages of ſin is death, yet when he comes to eternall life, he changeth his ſtyle, But (ſaith he) eternall life is χάρισμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, the gracious gift of God through Jeſus Chriſt. For as for our Works, they are imperfect; and whatſoever they were, we owed them to him in whom we live and have our Being, whether there were any Reward or not promiſed for them.

Neither do we hereby any whit detract from the truth of that Axiome, That God rewardeth every man according to his work: For ſtill the Queſtion remaineth the very ſame, Whether there may not be as well merces gratiæ, as merces juſtitiæ; that is, Whether God may not judge a man according to his works, when he ſits upon the Throne of Grace, as well as when he ſits upon his Throne of Juſtice. And we think here, that the Prophet David hath fully cleared the caſe in that one ſentence, Pſal. 62. 12. With thee, O Lord, is Mercy; for thou rewardeſt every one according to his work.

Nay more then this; We deny not but in ſome ſenſe this Reward may be ſaid to proceed of Juſtice. For howſoever originally and in it ſelf we hold it cometh from God's free Bounty and Mercy, who might have required the Work of us without all promiſe of Reward, (for, as I ſaid, we are his Creatures, and owe our Being unto him;) yet in regard he hath covenanted with us, and tied himſelf by his Word and Promiſe to conferre ſuch a Reward, the Reward now in a ſort proveth to be an Act of Juſtice, namely, of Juſtitia promiſſi on God's part, not of Merit on ours: even as in forgiving our ſins (which in it ſelf all men know to be an Act of Mercy) he is ſaid to be Faithfull and Juſt, 1 John 1. 9. namely, in the faithfull performance of his Promiſe; for Promiſe, we know, once made, amongſt honeſt men is accounted a due debt. But this argues no more any worthineſs of equality in the Work towards the obtaining of the Reward, then if a Promiſe of a Kingdome were made to one if he ſhould take up a ſtraw, it would follow thence, that the lifting up of a ſtraw were a labour or a work worth a Kingdome, howſoever he that ſhould ſo promiſe were bound to give it.

Thus was Moſes carefull to put the children of Iſrael in minde touching the Land of Canaan, (which was a Type of our Eternall habitation in Heaven) that it was a Land of promiſe, and not of merit, which God gave them to poſſeſs, not for their righteouſneſs, or for their upright heart; but that he might perform the word which he ſware unto their Fathers, Abraham, Iſaat, and Jacob. Whereupon the Levites, in this Book of Nehemiah, ſay in their Prayer to God, Thou madeſt a Covenant with Abraham, to give to his ſeed the Land of the Canaanites, and haſt performed thy words, becauſe thou art juſt; that is, true and faithfull in keeping thy promiſe. Now becauſe the Lord hath made a like promiſe of the Crown of life to them that love love him; S. Paul sticks not in like manner to attribute this also to God's Justice; Henceforth (saith he, 2 Tim. 4. 8.) is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me onely, but to all them that love his appearing. Upon which S. Bernard most sweetly, as he is wont, Est ergo quam Paulus expectat corona Justitiæ; sed justitiæ Dei, non suæ: Justum quippe est, ut reddat quod debet; debet autem quod pollicitus est. There is therefore a crown of righteousness which Paul looks for; but it is of God's righteousness, not his own: it being a righteous thing with God to give what he owes; now he owes what he hath engaged himself to by promise. Nehem. 13. 14, 22.

Deut. 9. 5.

Chap. 9. 8.

Lastly, for the word Merit; It is not the name we so much scruple at, as the thing wont now-a-daies to be understood thereby: otherwise we confess the name might be admitted, if taken in the large and more general sense, for Any work having relation to a reward to follow it; or whereby a reward is quocunque modo obtained; in a word, as the Correlate indifferent either to merces gratiæ or justitiæ, the reward of Grace or of Justice. For thus the Fathers used it; and so might we have done still, if some of us had not grown too proud, and mistook it. Since we think it better and safer to disuse it; even as Physicians are wont to prescribe their Patients recovered of some desperate disease, not to use any more that meat or diet which they find to have caused it.

And here give me leave to acquaint you with an Observation of a like alteration of speech, and I suppose for the self-same cause happening under the Old Testament; namely, of Δικαιοσύνη changed into Ἐλεημοσύνη, Righteousness into That which findeth mercy: for so the Septuagint and the New Testament with them render the Hebrew word צְדָקָה Righteousness; not onely when it is taken for Beneficence or Alms, (as in that Tongue it is the ordinary word) in which use we are wont to expound it Works of mercy; but where there is no relation to Alms or Beneficence at all. Whence I gather that by Ἐλεημοσύνη the Septuagint meant not, as we commonly take it, Works of mercy, but rather Works whereby we finde mercy at the hands of God. I will give you a place which methinks is very pregnant, Deut. 6. 24, 25. where we reade thus, And the Lord commanded us to doe all these Statutes, (you may see there what they are) to fear the Lord our God, for our good alwaies, that he might preserve us alive, as at this day. And it shall be our Righteousness, if we observe to doe all these Commandments before the Lord, as he hath commanded us. Here the Septuagint (for, And it shall be our Righteousness) have, Καὶ Ἐλεημοσύνη ἔσται ἡμῖν, And it shall be our Ἐλεημοσύνη, that whereby we shall finde mercy at the hands of God, if we observe to doe all these Commandments, &c. This place will admit no evasion; for there is no reference to Alms here. And indeed all our Righteousness is nothing else but Ἐλεημοσύνη, that whereby we finde mercy at the hands of God: and no marvell if Works of mercy, as to relieve the poor and needy, be specially so called, for they above all other are the works whereby we shall finde mercy, and receive the reward of Bliss at the last day. And thus much of my second Observation.

III. I come now to my third; That it is lawfull to doe good works Intuitu mercedis, with an eye or respect to the recompence of Reward. It is plain that Nehemiah here did so; Remember me, O my God, concerning this, &c. So did Moses, of whom it is said, Heb. 11. 25, 26. that he chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; Esteeming the reproch of Christ greater riches then the treasures of Egypt: for, saith the Text, ἀπέβλεπε (aspiciebat vel intuebatur) εἰς τὴν μισθαποδοσίαν, ἀιδω, he had respect unto the recompence of Reward. And, I confess, it seems an unreasonable thing to me, that that which is made the End (though but in part) of the Action, should not be at all looked unto by the Agent, whenas Finis is principium Actionis; and that that which God hath promised unto us as an Encouragement to make us work with the more alacrity, should not be thought on nor looked to in our working. Do not they who would perswade this go the way to discourage men from good works, by removing out of their sight the Encouragement which God hath given them?

Nehem. 13. 14, 22.

But they object, The obedience of God's Children ought to be filial, that is, free, and not mercenary, as that of Hirelings. I answer; Obedience which is onely for Reward, without all respect or motive of Love and Dutyy, is the Obedience of an Hireling; not that which acknowledgeth the te of Obedience absolute, and the Reward no otherwise due then of his Father's free love and bounty, as every true child of God doth, and ought to do.

They object again that of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 13. 5. Charity seeks not her own: now say they, the works of God's children must proceed from love and charity. I answer; What though Charity seeks not her own? may not yet a charitable man so much as look or hope for his own, or have an eye to what is promised him? But this place is altogether misapplied and abused: For that property of Charity now mentioned (as some also of the rest in that Chapter) concerns onely our Charity towards men, and not our Charity towards God; the meaning thereof being, That a Charitable man will sooner lose his own, then by seeking or contending for it break the band of Charity. And this may suffice for my third Observation.

IV. Now I come to the fourth and my last Use of this Text, which I told you in the beginning followed thereupon; namely, That if Almighty God remember them who have done good deeds unto his House and the Offices thereof; much more ought we, who are partakers of the comfort and benefit of such Bounty, to remember and honour them with a thankfull celebration of their Names.

DISCOURSE

DISCOURSE XXVIII.

PROVERBS 30. 8, 9.

Give me neither Poverty, nor Riches; Feed me with Food convenient for me, [חקי]

Leſt I be full and deny thee, and ſay, Who is the Lord? or leſt I be poor and ſteal, and take the name of my God in vain. [וְתָפַשְׂתִּי שֵׁם אֱלֹהָי]

THESE words are a part of the Prayer of Agur, a man for wiſdome ranked with Solomon; and one of the two things he deſired of God not to deny him before he died. The firſt was concerning his inward and ſpiritual eſtate; Remove far from me vanity and lyes; that is, all impiety and ſinfull hypocriſie: for ſo David expreſſed them, Pſal. 4. 2. O ye ſons of men, how long will ye turn God's glory into ſhame? how long will ye love vanity, and ſeek after leaſing? The ſecond is concerning his outward eſtate, Give me neither Poverty, nor Riches; Feed me with Food convenient, &c.

This ſecond ſuit contains two parts: 1. His Requeſt: 2. The Reaſon thereof. His Requeſt is doubly expreſſed; firſt, Negatively, what he would not have; then Affirmatively, what he would have. The Negative part in theſe words, Give me neither Poverty, nor Riches: the Affirmative in theſe, Feed me with Food convenient for me. Then follows the Reaſon, Leſt I be full and deny thee, &c.

Nevertheleſs this Requeſt, though two ways expreſſed, is not to be conceived as two, but one Requeſt; both ways tending to the ſame purpoſe: For he that would be neither poor nor rich, muſt needs be in the middle; and he that hath neither too little nor too much, muſt needs have a competency or food convenient for him. Therefore Agur reckons of this but as one petition, when he ſaith in the former verſe, Two things have I required of thee; deny me not them before I dye. Elſe the things that he required would be three, if this of my Text made two.

Again, for the underſtanding of this compound ſuit, we muſt not ſo conceive it as if he prayed abſolutely againſt Riches, or abſolutely againſt Poverty; (for ſo the Prayer were unlawfull, Poverty and Riches being of themſelves things indifferent, and the bleſſing of God may goe with both:) But it is a Prayer of choice, or a comparative prayer; as if he had ſaid, Rather then either Poverty or Riches, Give me, O Lord, if it be thy will, the Mean between both: Feed me with food convenient for me. For though all three eſtates be indifferent, yet comparatively and for choice the middle is the beſt and happieſt condition. Such ſpeeches by way of Oppoſition or Antitheſis, yet implying in their ſenſe a choice or Protimeſis, are frequent in Scripture. * I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice: not to be underſtood as though God forbade Sacrifice; but thus, I had rather have mercy then ſacrifice. So in S. Matthew, Lay not up for your ſelves treaſures upon earth; but lay up for your ſelves treaſures in heaven: not to be underſtood as a plain prohibition to lay up earthly treaſures, but by way of choice or προτίμησις: Rather lay up treaſures in heaven, then treaſures upon earth;

Matt. 6. 19, 20.

Have

Prov. 30.8,9. Have a greater care of the one then of the other: And many the like, for it is a frequent expreſſion.

I. Agur's Requeſt. Thus having made the way plain and open to my Text, I come now to conſider the ſeveral parts thereof: and Firſt, The Requeſt or Thing prayed for; where, of the two ways whereby it is expreſſed, I muſt, for the more eaſie unfolding thereof, begin with the Affirmative, Feed me with Food convenient for me. For if this be underſtood, we cannot be long ignorant of the other: If we know the Mean once which Agur chuſeth, we ſhall ſoon gueſs what he underſtands by Riches and Poverty, the Extremes which he refuſeth. Feed me (ſaith he) with Food convenient for me. This convenient food is in the Original לֶחֶם חֻקִּי, Panis dimenſi mei, The bread of my competent allowance. The Septuagint turns it, τὰ δέοντα καὶ τὰ αὐτάρκη, Things fit and ſufficient: Symmachus, Δίαιταν ἱκανὴν, Competent diet: The Chaldee Paraphraſt, לַחְמָא מְסַתְּיָ Bread or Food ſufficient for me; for ſo מְסַת or מְסַתְּא ſignifies; for it is the word for Sufficit, in the 15 verſe of this Chapter, Four things ſay not, מְסַתְּא, Sufficit, It is enough; it is the word for Sufficient, Exod. 36.7. where it is ſaid of the offering for the Tabernacle, that which was offered מְסַת was ſufficient for all the work; and in 2 Sam. 24.16. where God ſayes of the plague, מְסַת Sufficit, It is enough.

Now by Bread or Food the Hebrew underſtands All proviſions for the uſe of life: ſo competent Food is a competent Maintenance: Which to be the true meaning of this Panis dimenſi, Agur's deprecation of Poverty on the one ſide, and of Riches on the other, is a firm demonſtration: For what elſe can it be but a ſtate of Competency which he begs as the Mean between Want and Superfluity?

And this is even that Ἄρτος ὁ ἐπιούσιος, that daily bread, which Chriſt our Lord in his Prayer hath taught us all to pray for; τὸν ἄρτον ἡμῶν τὸν ἐπιούσιον δὸς ἡμῖν σήμερον, or, as S. Luke hath it, τὸ καθ' ἡμέραν, Give us day by day our daily bread: Where the meaning in general is indifferently well agreed upon; but much adoe there is what this word ἐπιούσιος ſhould ſignifie. But not to trouble you with the rehearſall of ſo many varieties of interpretation as the ſingularity of this word hath begotten, ſome nearer, ſome altogether wide of the mark; the plain truth is, That as Περιούσιος, a word like unto this, was firſt deviſed by the Septuagint; ſo was Ἐπιούσιος in this prayer made by the Evangeliſts in imitation thereof; neither of both being any where to be found but in Scripture only. For the Septuagint of περιουσία ſignifying Abundantia, Exuperantia, abundance and ſuperfluity, formed the Adjective περιούσιος to expreſs the Hebrew word סְגֻלָּה; and for עַם סְגֻלָּה * a Peculiar people, rendred λαὸς περιούσιος a Supernumerary people, a people wherein God had a Superlative propriety and intereſt, above and beſides his common intereſt to all the Nations of the world: For ſo he ſaith, Exod. 19.5. Thou ſhalt be unto me λαὸς περιούσιος a Peculiar people above all people, for all the earth is mine: as if he ſhould ſay, But you ſhall be mine in a degree above the reſt.

* Deut. 7. 6. & ch. 14. 2. & 26. 18.

According to the Example and Analogy of this Περιούσιος (I ſay) the Evangeliſts here formed Ἐπιούσιος. For as Περιουσία ſignifies an Abundance or Superfluity, of οὐσία a Being, and περὶ ultra or ſuper, as it were an Over-Being; ſo would Ἐπιουσία ſignifie a Sufficiency, as it were τὸ ὂν ἐπὶ τὴν οὐσίαν, that which is adequate to Being, or, as Suidas hath it, τὸ ὂν ἐπὶ τῇ οὐσίᾳ ἡμῶν ἁρμόζον, Fit for our Being and Supportance. Therefore as of Περιουσία Abundance, the Septuagint made Περιούσιος Abounding: ſo the Evangeliſts of Ἐπιουσία a Sufficiency, made Ἐπιούσιος Sufficient. And this is agreeable to the Syriack Tranſlation, the Language our Saviour ſpake, which hath here, לַחְמָא דְסוּנְקָנָן The bread we have need of. Thus Ἄρτος ὁ ὑπιούσιος is Sufficient bread, and and opposed to Ἄρτος περιούσιος. Superfluous and Superabounding bread. All which will appear most clearly and elegantly, if we do but parallel these two words in the Petition by way of Antithesis in this manner, Τὸν ἄρτον ἡμῶν ὑ τὸν περιούσιον, ἀλλὰ τὸν ἐπιούσιον, δὸς ἡμῖν σήμερον· Not Ἄρτος περιούσιος a Superfluous and Superabounding bread; but Ἄρτος ὁ ἐπιούσιος a Sufficient bread, give us, O Lord, this day. Pro. 30.8,9.

And thus we have seen that this Prayer of Agur, in my Text, is the selfsame with that our Saviour taught us in the Gospel; which Tremellius well observing in his most elegant Hebrew Catechism, renders that petition in these very words of Agur, הַטְרִיפֵנִי לֶחֶם חֻקִּי, as though our Saviour had reference to them.

Now for the right understanding of this Sufficiency we are to pray for, we must know, that a Competency is twofold: Either in regard of Nature, which sufficeth to support a man in his natural life and health: or secondly, a Competency in regard of a mans condition, which is sufficient to support and maintain him in that condition, order, degree and calling wherein God hath placed him. Both these degrees of Sufficiency are meant in the Prayer our Saviour taught us, Give us this day our daily bread; and in this of Agur, Feed me with food convenient for me, namely, for Agur. For perhaps that may not be sufficient for Agur's condition, which might suffice for another. But if Agur's condition were such as some mans is, that he needed no more then was convenient to maintain himself in his natural life and health; then the Competency he must pray for is no more then a Competency in regard of nature. If Agur be a Master of a Family; then that is his Competency which is convenient to maintain his wife, children and household. If Agur be a Publick person, a Prince or a Ruler of the people; then that is Agur's Sufficiency which will conveniently maintain him in that condition.

For the Competency which Agur prays for is that, which if he want, he is in poverty; if he exceed, he is rich. Now our own Reason will inform us, that those means which would make a private man rich, a King may have, a Peer may have, and more too, and yet be exceeding poor. In a word therefore, as Zeba and Zalmunna said to Gideon, *Jud.*8.21. As is the man, so is his strength; the like may I say here, As is the man, so is his Competency. And in whatsoever condition God hath placed thee, thou mayest, yea thou oughtest to pray for a convenient Food to maintain the same; but to ask more thou hast no pattern, neither in this, nor in the Prayer which Christ himself hath taught thee.

HAVING thus fully explicated (as I think) these first words of Agur's Prayer; let us now see what Observations they will afford us, before we come to the Reason in the words following, where indeed is the marrow of the Text. First therefore, If we ought with Agur to pray against Poverty, Then is that Monkish affecting of Poverty no point of Piety; their voluntary and vowed Poverty, as they would make us believe, neither a State of Perfection, nor a Religion acceptable to God. We know well enough what the Poverty of Monks and Friers hath been for many hundred years, not a State of Perfection (God knows) but a State of Hypocrisie: For what Poverty is that, I pray you, where a man is said to be poor, and to have forsaken all, because he hath nothing in proper, and yet hath a rich and plentiful share in the common? But suppose it were as they say it is, and as amongst the ancient Monks it was indeed, and perhaps still among some of their begging Friers; yet, I say, such a wilful Poverty is neither a State of Perfection, nor a Religion acceptable to God: For if it were, it could not be lawfully prayed against, nor a competent sufficiency prayed for: Observ. 1.

Prov. 30. 8, 9. But, Give me not poverty, (ſaith Agur) but feed me with food ſufficient for me.

1. But they alledge the Counſel of our Saviour to the young man in the Goſpel, Matth. 19. 21. If thou wilt be perfect, go ſell that thou haſt, and give it to the poor, and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven. Doth not Chriſt preſcribe Poverty here as the way to eternal life?

A Ship in a ſtorm is ſometimes in that danger, as there is no way to ſave her but to throw her lading into the Sea; The Body ſometime cannot be ſaved, unleſs an arm or a leg be cut off. If this young man's Soul were in danger of ſome ſuch ſpiritual Gangrene through his great poſſeſſions, then was this counſel of our Saviour a perſonal and particular advice unto him: but extraordinary caſes are not to be made an ordinary practice. But I think
Mark 10. 21. this was not this young man's caſe, for the Text ſaith, Our Saviour loved him, when he heard his replies, &c. And therefore I anſwer, that our Saviour ſpake this πειρασικῶς, Trial-wiſe; as he did to the woman of Canaan, when, to
Matt. 15. 24. prove her conſtant Faith, he told her, He was not ſent but to the loſt ſheep of Iſrael; and as he did to Moſes, Numb. 14. 12. when, to prove or ſtir up his zeal in praying, he threatned utterly to deſtroy his people Iſrael; I will (ſaith he) ſmite them with peſtilence, and diſinherit them, and will make of thee a greater Nation then they. So our Saviour ſpake here to the young man by way of Trial, to prove him, and to make him ſee and acknowledge how much he was deceived, how far ſhort he was of that Perfectneſs of heart he deemed to be in himſelf, who thought he could have been willing and ready to doe
Matt. 19. 16. any thing for the attainment of everlaſting life: Maſter, (ſaith he) what ſhall I doe, that I may inherit everlaſting life? I have done all I know, command me any thing elſe what thou wilt, I am ready to undertake it. Our Saviour anſwers, By this ſhalt thou approve thy perfectneſs with God, if thou canſt be willing for his ſake to ſell all that thou haſt, and give it unto Verſ. 22. the poor. And this was a Touchſtone indeed; for the Text ſayes, He went away ſorrowful. And I make no doubt, but if many among us, who think themſelves ſome-body, would examine themſelves upon this point, they would finde their hearts deceive them egregiouſly, and that they were not the men they took themſelves to be. Art thou rich, and yet couldſt thou be willing to forſake all thou haſt to follow Chriſt? This is a ſcouring Trial indeed. And yet ſhould every true Chriſtian be thus affected, to forſake all in the purpoſe and eſtimation of his heart, that he may Matt. 10. 37. & 19. 29. be one of Chriſt's: For, He that loveth father and mother, houſes and lands, better then him, (he that hath not forſaken them in his eſtimation and reſolution,) is not worthy of him. And this is that forſaking of the world in purpoſe and affection, to prefer Chriſt before the world, whereof S. Peter chiefly ſpake, Luke 18. 28. Loe, we have left all, and followed thee, (that is, we have ſet all at nought to follow thee,) and yet Peter kept his houſe ſtill at Capernaum. I leave it to be conſidered, whether ſuch as theſe be not the poor in ſpirit, Matt. 5. 3. that is, who in ſpirit and affection have renounced the world, and eſteem of Chriſt above all riches. For theſe words are but once found in Scripture, and S. Luke ſeems to imply as much as I ſay, when he relateth the words as ſpoken to and of the Apoſtles only; Bleſſed
Luke 6. 20. be ye poor, for yours is the kingdom of God. But I will not contend for it.

2. Secondly, The Patrons of Monkery alledge the Practice of the Primitive Church, Acts 2. 45. & chap. 4. 34, 35. who ſold their lands and poſſeſſions, and laid down the money at the Apoſtles feet. I anſwer, They were Jews that did ſo, and none but Jews that did ſo. Shew me the like done among the Gentiles, when the Goſpel came amongſt them: Which of all S. Paul's

Epiſtles

Epiſtles give any ſuch Precept, or intimate any ſuch thing? But as for the Jews; thoſe who once believed in Chriſt, believed alſo the wofull deſtruction of their own Nation to be within a few years after; and therefore they thought good, while there was yet time, to improve their Lands and Poſſeſſions to the beſt uſe, which they ſhould not many years enjoy. And the occaſion was now fit, at the firſt preaching of the Goſpel and gathering of a Church to Chriſt, to furniſh the Apoſtles and others for this ſervice and employment. And therefore when the Goſpel was alſo ſpred among the Gentiles, the Apoſtles were ſo carefull to make Collections in all the Churches for the relief of the poor Saints at Jeruſalem, even thoſe who at the firſt had diſfurniſhed themſelves of all, and at whoſe charges, as may be ſuppoſed, the Goſpel was at the beginning preached among the Gentiles. Rom. 15. 26, 27. 1 Cor. 16. 1. 2 Cor. ch. 8, and ch. 9. Prov. 30. 8, 9.

And ſeeing I have entred thus far into the queſtion of Monkery, I will take leave to examine two more Examples which they bring to that purpoſe, though not ſo near to the matter of my Text as the former.

3. Thirdly therefore, The Patrons of Monkery alledge the Example of the Rechabites, of whom we reade Jer. 35. 6, 7. that according to an Ordinance wherewith their Father Jonadab bound them, they drank no wine, built no houſes, ſowed no ſeed, neither planted nor poſſeſſed vineyards or fields; but lived in tents all their dayes. Which ſingularity of life ſeems not only to reſemble, but to warrant that of Monkery, in thoſe two main points of forſaking poſſeſſions, and abſtaining from meats, ſeeing God himſelf in that place commended thoſe Rechabites for obſerving this Ordinance of Jonadab their Father.

But I anſwer; This of the Rechabites was no matter of Religion, as that of Monks is, but a mere civil Ordinance grounded upon a National cuſtome: For the Rechabites were of the race of the Family of Hobab the Kenite, Moſes's Father-in-law, as you may reade 1 Chron. 2. 55. Now the Kenites were Midianites, and the Midianites were dwellers in Tents from the beginning. This I prove, 1. Becauſe the Arabians of thoſe parts were ſuch both then, and ſtill are at this day. 2. The Iſhmaelites and Midianites dwelt together, inſomuch that their names are confounded in Scripture, or interchangeably uſed the one for the other. For Gen. 37. 25, 28. thoſe Merchants to whom Joſeph was ſold are promiſcuouſly called ſometimes Iſhmaelites, ſometimes Midianites, as if they were both one people; as indeed they both deſcended of Abraham, the one by his handmaid Hagar, the other by his ſecond wife Keturah. So Judg. 8. 24. the Midianites which Gideon vanquiſhed are called Iſhmaelites. They had (ſaith the Text) golden ear-rings, for they were Iſhmaelites. Now it is apparent in Scripture that the Iſhmaelites or Hagarens uſed to dwell in Tents, whence 1 Chron. 5. 10. it is ſaid, the Reubenites in the daies of Saul made war with the Hagarites, who fell by their hand; and they dwelt in their tents throughout all the Eaſt-land of Gilead. Beſides, of the Iſhmaelites were thoſe famous Scenite-Arabians, mentioned in Scripture ſo oft under the name of the Tents of Kedar. Such therefore as the Iſhmaelites were, may we deem the Midianites alſo to have been, who dwelt with them: and to put it quite out of doubt, we have ſo much told us in Scripture, in the prayer of Habakkuk, chap. 3. 7. I ſaw, ſaith he, the Tents of Cuſhan (or Arabia) in affliction, and the curtains of the land of Midian did tremble. Pſal. 120. 5. Jer. 49. 28.

This cuſtome of their Nation and Country did that Midian Tribe of the Kenites (of which was the Father-in-law of Moſes) ſtill obſerve, after they came to live in Canaan with the Iſraelites. So we reade Jud. 4. 11. that Heber the Kenite, which was of the children of Hobab the Father-in-law of Pro. 30.8,9. Moſes, ſevered himſelf from the Kenites, and pitched his tent unto the plain of Zaanaim, which is by Kedeſh. See 1 Chron. 2. 55. according to Hierome. And this manner of living they ſeem to have retained, partly for to be a Badge and Cognizance of the Nation whence they were deſcended, and partly to live the more ſecurely in the Land where they were ſtrangers, either from the envie of the Jews at home, or danger of enemies abroad, to whom by this means they ſhould be the leſs ſubject, as having neither houſes to fire, nor lands to be taken from them, but onely cattell wherewith they lived, and tents, which they removed hither and thither as opportunity ſerved for paſture to feed them: Even as Abraham lived while he ſojourned as a ſtranger in the land of Canaan, and in imitation of whom, being their Anceſtor, perhaps this cuſtome was derived to the Midianites his children.

Howſoever at length it ſeems theſe Kenites, allured by the more pleaſant living of the Iſraelites, began to change this cuſtome of their Anceſtors; which occaſioned Jonadab the ſon of Rechab, a famous Kenite, to renew it again, and binde his poſterity to obſerve it; and to that end he forbade them altogether to drink any Wine, leſt deſire thereof might occaſion them to plant Vineyards, and ſo to build Houſes as the Jews did, and ſo to forſake the cuſtome of their Nation; as perhaps licorouſneſs of Wine before had cauſed many of them to doe. For certain it is, that Jonadab renewed but that which their Anceſtors had obſerved long before he was born. And thus you ſee it was no order of Religion which they bound themſelves unto, but a maintenance of a Civil cuſtome. And therefore the wilde Arabians and Tartars, who at this day live in like manner, are as good a Pattern to warrant Monkery by as they.

4. But there is another Example yet, wherein they put great confidence, as
Num. 6.2,&c. being eſtabliſhed by God himſelf; and that is of the Nazarites in the Law, who bound themſelves by a ſolemn vow to a ſingularity of life, not much unlike that of Monks, (eſpecially thoſe of the ancient form) as to ſeparate themſelves unto the Lord, to drink neither wine nor ſtrong drink, nor ſuffer a razor to come upon their heads, and to be accounted in a ſpecial manner holy unto God above other men.

I anſwer, If this be the ſample from which Monkery is derived, there needs no other Argument utterly to overthrow it; and therefore it is as ill choſen as could be. For this Law of Nazariſm is one of the things expreſly named, which the Apoſtles decreed at the Council of Jeruſalem ſhould not be impoſed upon the Gentiles who believed in Chriſt. Look Acts 21. where S. Paul having made a Nazarite's Vow at Cenchrea for a certain time, according to the manner, James and the Elders of the Church at Jeruſalem adviſed him to joyn himſelf with four others who had the like Vow upon them, (and the time thereof alſo as Paul's was then to be fulfilled, for they were ſeldome perpetual,) and to take and purifie himſelf according to the Law with them, that the Jews might take notice he was conformable to the Laws and Orders of his own Nation, till God ſhould diſſolve the ſame. But as touching the Gentiles, (ſaith James, verſe 25.) we have written and concluded, that they obſerve no ſuch thing. Is not this plain enough? If therefore the Law of Nazarites be the Pattern of Monkiſh Orders, the Apoſtles decreed the Gentiles ſhould obſerve no ſuch thing. And for the Jews, God hath now alſo diſſolved their Temple and all their Legal Worſhip.

THUS much for the firſt Obſervation againſt ſuperſtitious and affected Poverty; nor ſhall I need ſtay longer upon this part of Agur's Prayer, Give me not poverty. There are not many of us willingly guilty on this Obſerv. 2. ſide. I come therefore to the other ſide, whence my ſecond Obſervation ſhall

ſhall be, That we ought not to covet nor ſeek after Abundance and Exceſs in theſe outward things; but to have our aims and deſires ſtinted at ſuch a Competency onely, as is convenient to maintain us in that condition and ſtate wherein God hath placed us. Whatſoever is more then this, is Sin: For what we have no pattern in the Word of God to pray for, we have no warrant to covet or ſeek for. In the Pattern for all our Prayers, The Lord's Prayer, our Saviour alloweth us to pray for no more but a competency, Give us day by day our daily bread; that is, not a ſuperfluous and ſuperabounding bread, but a ſufficient bread we pray thee, O Lord, to give us this day and every day. Agur in my Text, Give me neither Poverty nor Riches; feed me with food convenient for me. Jacob in his vow, Gen. 28. 20. If the Lord (ſaith he) will give me food to eat, and raiment to put on, The Lord ſhall be my God, &c. Food he deſires, but food to eat; Clothing he deſires, but clothing to put on; ſo much as was ſufficient for him and his to eat; ſo much as was ſufficient for him and his to wear: this Jacob deſires, but no more. And under theſe two words, Food and Raiment, are comprehended all things needful for the maintenance of life; as may appear by the following words v. 22. where Jacob promiſeth, that if God will grant him this his ſuit, of all that he ſhould give him he would pay the Tenth unto him. But in the whole Book of God there is no Prayer to be found for Superfluity and Abundance. Pro. 30. 8, 9.

I would not be miſtaken: I ſay not, it is unlawful to have and enjoy Riches and Abundance, if God give them; but unlawful to covet and ſeek after them. I know, the things of themſelves are indifferent, and the good creatures of God made for the uſe of man, if man abuſe them not; yea, plenty and abundance of them are called the gifts of God, and, which is more, the bleſſings of God: The bleſſing of God (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 10. 22.) maketh rich: and it is the uſual phraſe of Scripture to ſay of thoſe that became rich, that God bleſſed them. And they are Bleſſings indeed, when God offers them, but no Bleſſings to ſuch as covetouſly hunt and gape after them. Abraham was rich, Jacob was rich, Solomon and David were rich; I mean, they had abundance wherewith God bleſſed them: But which of all theſe, or any other holy man in God's Book, do we finde to have long'd for, crav'd or labour'd after more then a portion convenient for them? which of them made their deſires carvers of ſuch abundance? No: Deſire of abundance and ſuperfluity ſutes not with the heart of God's ſervants. Jacob indeed became rich, but deſired, as you heard, but meat to eat, and raiment to put on. Solomon a King, for whoſe eſtate the greateſt meaſure of theſe things was moſt behoveful, yet when God (1 Kings 3. 5, 9.) gave him his choice to ask what he would, and he would give it him; he asked neither riches nor honour, but a wiſe and underſtanding heart; wherewith God was ſo well pleaſed, that he tells him, Becauſe he had not asked riches nor honour; therefore he would give him both riches and honour in that abundance, as no king on the earth ſhould be like him. When Riches come thus, they come then indeed as Bleſſings: For God gives them as well pleaſed, and accordingly as he ſees them good for thoſe to whom he gives them; and ſends his Grace with them, that thoſe who have them may uſe them to his glory and their own good. Verſ. 11. Verſ. 13.

On the contrary, To men whoſe hearts could never ſay, If God will give me but ſufficient and convenient for me, I will lay me down and be at reſt, and crave no further; to thoſe whoſe hearts are reſtleſs and mad after abundance and exceſs of wealth, whoſe deſires are without all bounds in ſeeking after Riches: Experience may tell us, that to ſuch as theſe Riches ſeldom or never prove a Bleſſing when they get them, but a Curſe. He that maketh haſte to be rich, (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 28. 20.) ſhall not be innocent. They that will be rich, (ſaith S. Paul, 1 Tim. 6. 9. ſpeaking of ſuch as could not reſt with a Competency) fall into temptation and a ſnare, and into many fooliſh and hurtful luſts, which drown men in deſtruction and perdition. We uſe to ſay, that thoſe who have great loſſes are undone: but here, he that getteth much is undone.

Wouldſt thou then be happy and bleſſed in the enjoyment of theſe outward things, then deſire no more in thy heart then thou mayeſt lawfully ask of God in thy Prayer: Follow the counſel of Solomon, Prov. 23. 4. Labour not to be rich, ceaſe from thine own wiſdom; viz. to ſeek to be rich, which is humane wiſdom, but indeed plain folly. Let neither thy deſires nor thy aims out-bound this of Agur's, to have food convenient for thee. If God ſees it good for thee to have more, he will give it thee, and offer thee the means and opportunity thereof, without thy ſeeking. But if he ſees it not good for thee, why wouldſt thou have it? Thou haſt enough already, if thou haſt convenient. Howſoever, God hates a large and reſtleſs deſire: Therefore be not covetous, be not greedy of much; leſt if thou come by it, God give it thee not in mercy, but in wrath and diſpleaſure.

Obſerv. 3.

My third Obſervation is, That a Competency, or the Middle eſtate between Want and Superfluity, is in choice to be preferred as the beſt and happieſt condition. We ſee Agur preferreth it before the reſt, and that his choice was a Wiſe man's choice, we cannot doubt, when the Scripture records it as a piece of his Wiſdom: yea, even the Wiſe-men of the *Heathen were not ignorant thereof. The reaſon is apparent, becauſe it is the moſt free from ſuch dangers as both Extremes are ſubject unto; which Agur mentioneth in the Reaſon of his petition, to be perils of Irreligion towards God and Injuſtice towards man: Great evils both of them, endangering the ſtate of the Soul. But I muſt not ſpeak of them particularly here, they belong to the Second part of my Text: And we ſhall not need look ſo far, for not onely in that, but even in outward reſpects, we ſhall finde this middle eſtate to be the ſafeſt condition: the low ſhrubs, Beaſts will brouze them, and trample upon them; the high Trees are moſt ſubject to the violence of Tempeſts; when thoſe of a middle ſize are free from both. So a poor eſtate is ſubject to contempt, and ſo to be wronged and injured of every one that will: The rich and mighty are envied, and obnoxious to the rage of troubleſome times, being looked upon as a booty by ſuch as are able and finde advantage to ſeiſe upon them. Onely the Mean eſtate is moſt free from ſuch perillous Extremities, being as below Envy, ſo above Contempt.

*Horat. Carm. l. 2. Od. 10.

If then our good and gracious God hath given us a convenient meaſure of means to maintain our condition, let us think our line hath fallen unto us in a pleaſant place, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, Pſal. 16. 6. and that we have a goodly heritage. He that hath once a Competency, let him be aſſured he hath all the Contentment which is to be found in theſe temporary things; and Experience will tell him, Though Riches may encreaſe, yet after a Sufficiency once attained, Contentment will encreaſe no more, though Riches encreaſe never ſo much.

II. The Reaſon of Agur's Requeſt.

THUS much of that which Agur requeſted; Now follows The Reaſon of his Requeſt, Leſt I be full and deny thee, and ſay, Who is the Lord? &c. Out of which, before we come to handle them particularly, let us make this General Obſervation, That the Rule of our deſires and endeavours, in the getting and enjoying of theſe outward things, ought to be our ſpiritual welfare welfare and the bettering of us to God-ward. This was Agur's Rule, He deſires ſuch a meaſure of outward means as might neither through fulneſs make him forget God, nor through want tempt him to ſin both againſt him and his neighbour. This is the Compaſs we ought to ſail by, if we would avoid ſhipwreck: This is the Pole-ſtar and Heavenly mark whereon our eyes in all our thriving courſes ſhould be fixed, and by it our deſires and aims meaſured. That proportion of outward things and proviſions for this life which may the beſt ſtand with our improvement to God-ward, which may the moſt further and enable us, and the leaſt endanger and hinder us, in our religious devotions to God and charitable duties to our neighbours; this ſhould be the ſtint of all our worldly deſires and endeavours under the Sun. More then may ſtand with this is ſo far from being wiſhed or ſought for, that we ought with Agur to pray againſt it, and ſay, Lord, lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. But alas! we ſet the Cart before the Horſe; we make not the Worſhip of God and our ſpiritual advantage the Rule of our aims in getting and enjoying of theſe temporal things: But on the contrary, we uſe to ſerve God and keep his Commandments ſo far as may ſtand with our profit, with our covetous and ambitious deſires, and no farther. And this was Jeroboam's ſin, who forſooth would ſerve the God of his Fathers ſo as he thought might ſtand with the ſafety of his kingdome, but no farther. But alas! what would it profit a man to win the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? But Jeroboam loſt his kingdome too, which elſe God had promiſed to entail unto his poſterity. But let us be wiſer, and, as S. Paul bids us, whether we eat or drink, or whatſoever we doe elſe, let us doe all to the glory of God. Let this be the End of all our actions, and then we ſhall be ſure to thrive here, and be bleſſed for ever in the world to come,

Pro. 30. 8, 9.

Mar. 8. 36.

1 Cor. 10. 31.

So much for the General Obſervation: Now to the particular handling of the words, Leſt I be full, and deny thee, and ſay, Who is the Lord? The words are plain, and their meaning is of Impiety and Irreligion: Give me not Riches, leſt I become ungodly and irreligious. For, as to know God in Scripture is to worſhip and ſerve him with fear and reverence; ſo to deny him is to be devoid of Religion toward him, to live as if there were no God. So it is ſaid of the ſons of Eli, that they were ſons of Belial, they knew not the Lord; that is, they acknowledged him not by love, fear and obedience, but lived as if they had ſaid, Who is the Lord?

I.

1 Sam. 2. 12.

Now that men who abound in Wealth and Superfluity are much ſubject to this malady, is ſo manifeſt by other places of Scripture, that Agur's fear was not without a cauſe. Deut. 6. 12. is a Caution given to Iſrael, when God ſhould bleſs them with Proſperity, When thou ſhalt have eaten and be full, then beware leſt thou forget the Lord which brought thee out of the land of Egypt. Again, Deut. 8. 10, &c. When thou ſhalt have eaten and be full—Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his Commandments, and Judgements, and his Statutes: Leſt when thou haſt eaten and art full, and haſt built goodly houſes, and dwelt therein, And thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy ſilver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou haſt is multiplied; Then thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God, which brought, &c. Verſ. 17. And thou ſay in thine heart, My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth. Whence it appears, not onely how dangerous Proſperity is to Piety, but what it is to forget God, which is, in my Text, to deny him, and to ask Who he is; namely, to break his Commandments, Statutes and Judgements, to be unthankfull for his Bleſſings, and to attribute all to our own power and wiſdome. Again, in Deut. 32. 15. Moſes prophetically ſings of Iſrael, Jeſurun

Pro. 30.8,9. waxed fat, and kicked: Thou art (ſaith he) waxed fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs: Then he forſook God which made him, and lightly eſteemed the Rock of his ſalvation. Verſ. 16. They provoked him to jealouſie with ſtrange gods, with abominations they provoked him to anger. And Hoſea 13.6. the Lord complains of the event of this prediction, According to their paſture (ſaith he) ſo were they filled, and their hearts were lifted up; therefore they have forgotten me. Rarâ fumant felicibus arâ. I think it is ſufficiently proved, and Experience doth every where make it good.

1. The cauſe hereof is, the weakneſs of our Nature through ſin, not able to wield the Bleſſings of God if they abound. Even as the Phyſicians ſay that a Plethora, or full ſtate of body, is dangerous in reſpect of health, even though it be without impurity of bloud; becauſe Nature, if weaker, then it cannot wield it; or if a while ſhe be of equal ſtrength, yet is ſoon, and ſometimes ſuddenly, overturned: Even ſuch is the caſe here with our life and health ſpiritual.

2. Religious Devotion ſprings from Humility and Lowlineſs of minde: but Abundance uſually puffeth up with pride; as the Lord even now complained in Hoſea, that the heart of his people was exalted, and therefore they forgot him. So in the quotation Deut. 8. 10, &c.

Laſtly, A full belly is unfitteſt for Devotion and Prayer, and therefore in our devouteſt Supplications we uſe Faſting. Even as it is in plenteous feeding, ſo is it in the very outward enjoyment of plenty: whence ye heard even now the Spirit of God to expreſs this Abundance of outward things by Feeding, Fulneſs, and Fatneſs.

Obſerv. 1. THIS Truth thus confirmed will afford us three uſefull Obſervations. Firſt, To conſider the wickedneſs of man's nature which abuſeth the Abundance of God's Bleſſings to diſhonour him that gave them. Unthankfulneſs is a moſt hatefull vice, if but to men, and for ſuch benefits as one man can afford another: How much more to be abhorred is Unthankfulneſs to God, who is the giver of all good things? Yet amongſt men Abundance of benefits will ſometimes wring an acknowledgement from an unthankfull diſpoſition, though a ſmaller kindneſs would not doe it. But the contrary, the more Benefits and Favours are heaped, ſo much the more unthankfull to grow to him that beſtows them, or the more his Benefits increaſe, the more to wrong and reproach him; this I think is not eaſily ſampled in the dealings and courteſies from man to man. Yet thus (moſt unworthy and ungratefull wretches!) are we wont to deal with our gracious God, not only to be unthankfull, (which were bad enough) but ſo much the more unthankfull, by how much his Benefits encreaſe and abound toward us. The leſs we have, the more we acknowledge him; the more he gives us, the leſs we own him; and if ſo be we once arrive at a Fulneſs, it is ten to one but we plainly deny him, and ask, Who is the Lord? and what a hideous Unthankfulneſs is this!

If this were not ſo, Agur would never have grounded his Prayer upon ſuch a ſuppoſition: If it be ſo, we ſee why God is fain, for the moſt part, to deny thoſe he loveth abundance of theſe outward things; namely, leſt by ſo giving he might quite loſe them, and utterly undoe them. He knoweth our nature better then our ſelves, and moderates his Bleſſings for our good.

Phyſick is an unpleaſing thing, (our Stomachs are much againſt it) and a Potion is bitter in taſt; yet in danger of life, if we be ſick, or if we be but crazie and in danger of ſickneſs, we are willing to ſubmit our ſelves to the will of the Phyſician, as one that knows what is good for us better then our ſelves: We can endure in ſuch a caſe to be abridged of our diet, to be reſtrained ſtrained from our pleaſure, to faſt from our deſired meat and drink; and not to be offended at him who ſhall thus abridge us, but to love him, yea reward him too, as who for this his care hath deſerved well at our hands. Come on then; Hath not God as much skill in the ſtate of our Souls, as any Phyſician in the ſtate of our Bodies? Why ſhould we then take it unkindly or impatiently, when for our ſpiritual ſafety he abridgeth us of that abundance which other men enjoy? Envie them not; it may be they are none of God's Patients, and ſo he takes no care of them, but lets them fill untill they ſurfeit and periſh: but thou art under his cure, who is the great Phyſician: if thou believeſt it, thou wilt love him therefore, and quietly ſubmit unto his will; and not be like the horſe and mule who, becauſe they want underſtanding, are impatient to be dieted or diminiſhed of their fodder, though it be for their good, becauſe they know it not. And thus much for the firſt uſefull Obſervation. Pro. 30.8,9.

Obſerve in the ſecond place, The unreaſonable Folly of men, ſo greedily to long for and purſue after that which ſo much endangereth their welfare and happineſs. For is it not a Folly never to think a man's ſelf well, untill he be in an eſtate of greateſt danger? It is as if a man ſhould ſeek a Lion in his den, when he might ſafely have paſſed by without danger; or like the ſillineſs of children, who long to have an Adder in their hands, becauſe he hath a gay skin. Were it not much better, with Agur's choice, to ſit ſomewhat low with ſafety, then to riſe aloft with continuall danger of breaking a man's neck? We would have we know not what: we daily pray that God would not lead us into temptation, and yet we long to be tempted: or it may be we are of Socrates his minde, who choſe a ſhrew to exerciſe his patience; ſo we would have wealth in abundance, to approve our moderation. But as Ariſtotle thinks it not true Valour and Magnanimity to be φιλοκίνδυνον, to long to be in danger, but rather to acquit himſelf well when he ſhall encounter it: ſo I think of a wiſe man; he that ſhall doe otherwiſe, I think him not wiſe; if I ſhould, I muſt take Agur for a fool. Obſerv. 2.

Some perhaps are daring out of ignorance, whom, if they have no better experience, yet even Nature her ſelf ſeems willing in ſome ſort to inform, who by Divine Providence is ſo ordered, that in thoſe places where Gold and Silver groweth, there grows neither Graſs nor Plant nor other thing that is any thing worth; to ſhew us how fruitfull the hearts and mindes of ſuch are wont to prove as long after them, being as barren of Goodneſs as thoſe Countries of Graſs. But if any one, after he knows and is informed of the danger of ſuch a condition, ſhall ſay with Nero's mother, when the Mathematician had told her her Son ſhould indeed be Emperour, but put her to death, Me verò occidat, modò imperet; So he may reign, let him kill me: If any ſhall ſay ſo here, Let me be rich, though I periſh; I yield him as worthy Simon Magus his bleſſing, Pecunia tua ſit tecum in perditionem, Thy money periſh with thee, Acts 8.20.

My third and laſt Obſervation is, A Leſſon of caution to thoſe who are rich in this world, to keep a continuall watch over themſelves, that they forget not God in their abundance. For though this eſtate be fickle and dangerous, as I have already ſhewed; yet it is poſſible to be happy therein, if competent and fit means be uſed; and the beloved of God have been ſo. And thoſe here have the beſt hope of ſucceſs, who have not by their covetous and ambitious deſires tempted God in getting their abundance. Howſoever, as the wealth, ſo the care alſo and watchfulneſs of the owner muſt be exceeding and abundant; for a ſhip of ſuch ſaile requires a skilfull Pilot and extraordinary care in the ſteerage. Obſerv. 3.

Beſides

Beſides the General means in all Eſtates to prevent declining from God, there is one more Special means in this caſe of Abundance, which if it be not uſed, I am perſwaded the danger neither can nor ever will be avoided; and that is, To be fruitful in good works; to be liberal and open-handed to the relief of the poor, and furtherance of all godly and ſacred uſes. It is S. Paul's charge, 1 Tim. 6. 17, 18. Charge them that be rich in this world, —— that they doe good, that they be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate, &c. If thou wouldſt have God's bleſsing go with thee, follow Solomon's counſel, Honour him with thy ſubſtance, and with the firſt-fruits of all thine increaſe. For the earth is the Lord's and the fulneſs thereof; and he requires this as a Tribute whereby we may acknowledge him to be the Giver of what we have. Away with words or mere verbal thankſgivings: God is thy Landlord, he requires a Lords-Rent; thoſe who uſe not to pay it, will ſoon forget who is their Landlord; which is the proper fountain of all the evil that comes by Abundance. Nay, he that thinks this Tribute of his goods is not due, doth already diſclaim his Landlord, and deny God to be his Lord. When David made that bountiful and glorious offering for the building of the Temple, 1 Chron. 29. 10, 11, 14. he bleſſed him in this manner, Thine, O Lord, is the kingdome, and thou art exalted over all: Both riches and honour come of thee, and thou reigneſt over all, and in thine hand is power and might, and in thine hand it is to make great, and to give ſtrength unto all. All things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee. If thou wouldſt have the grace to ſay as David ſaid, thou muſt doe as David did.

Prov. 30. 8, 9.

Pſal. 24. 1.

THUS we have conſidered the Firſt part of the Reaſon of Agur's Prayer, Why he prayed againſt Riches: let us next examine the Second, which moved him to pray againſt Poverty alſo, Leſt (ſaith he) I be poor, and ſteal, and take the Name of my God in vain. Poverty, we ſee, and want of things needfull, hath her dangers and evils, as well as Riches and Abundance.

1. Firſt, Stealing; Leſt I be poor, and ſteal. Where by Stealing we muſt underſtand as much as is forbidden in the eighth Commandment: not only Stealing by force and violence, which we call Robbery; but Stealing by fraud, couſenage, or detention of anothers due; though not ſo much puniſhed by the Laws of Man, yet as great a Sin before God as forcible robbing. You may finde all theſe kinds of Stealing reckoned up together Levit. 6. and one and the ſame Sacrifice appointed by God for atonement of them; whereby it appears, their guilt is the ſame in his eſtimation, whatſoever men think of them. Lev. 6. 2. If a ſoul ſin, and commit a treſpaſs againſt the Lord, and lye unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, or in fellowſhip, (or dealing,) or in things taken by violence, or hath deceived his neighbour, Ver. 3. Or hath found that which was loſt, and lieth concerning it, and ſweareth falſly; in any of all theſe that a man doth, ſinning therein: Ver. 4. Then it ſhall be, becauſe he hath ſinned and is guilty, that he ſhall reſtore that which he took violently away, or the thing which he hath deceitfully gotten, or that which was delivered him to keep, or the loſt thing which he found, Ver. 5. Or all that about which he hath ſworn falſly: he ſhall even reſtore it in the principall, and adde the fifth part more thereto, &c. Then followeth the Sacrifice for atonement. Here you may eaſily ſee how far this ſin of Stealing extends. And there is none of all theſe but a poor man in extremity of want is in danger to fall into; as not only Agur's fear, but daily experience may tell us, and therefore it needs no further proof.

2. The ſecond danger that Agur nameth, is, of Taking the Name of God in vain; vain; that is, of perjury and falſe ſwearing, as that which would follow upon Stealing, as Stealing doth upon Poverty. The danger of Perjury, upon committing of Theft, was greater among the Jews then amongſt us, by reaſon of a Cuſtome and Law amongſt them, to tender an oath to thoſe who were accuſed or ſuſpected of Theft, to clear and purge themſelves. For becauſe Theft was not puniſhed by death according to the Divine Law, but by reſtitution and recompence; this courſe with them was juſt and reaſonable, when no other evidence ſufficient could be brought, to give an oath to the accuſed; it being ſuppoſed that the guilty party, where the puniſhment for Theft was but reſtitution, would rather confeſs his offence, then incurre ſo hainous a ſin as the ſin of Perjury. But with us, who puniſh Theft with death, this way of triall by oath would be moſt unreaſonable, it being moſt true (though ſpoken by the father of lies) that Skin for skin, and all that a man hath, he will give for his life. But that this manner of triall was practiſed among the Jews, the place I even now quoted out of Leviticus, for the kinds of Theft, doth ſufficiently manifeſt, where it is ſaid, If a ſoul hath committed ſuch or ſuch a kinde of theft; and lieth concerning it, and ſweareth falſly; and again it is ſaid, he ſhall reſtore all that about which he hath ſworn falſly. And Exod. 22. 8, 11. there is an expreſs commandment to give an oath in a caſe of Theft there mentioned. Hence it is that the prohibition of Theft and Perjury are joyned together, Lev. 19. 11, 12, 13. becauſe the one depended of the other: Ye ſhall not ſteal, neither deal falſly, neither lie one to another. And ye ſhall not ſwear by my Name falſly, neither ſhalt thou profane the Name of thy God; I am the Lord. Thou ſhalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him: The wages of him that is hired ſhall not abide with thee all night untill the morning. The Perjury and falſe ſwearing here mentioned the Jews underſtood to be ſpecially intended in caſe of Theft. For the ſame reaſon Theft and Swearing are coupled together, Zech. 5. 3, 4. and a curſe pronounced againſt them both, The curſe, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, ſhall enter into the houſe of the thief, and into the houſe of him that ſweareth falſly by my Name; and it ſhall remain in the midſt of his houſe, and ſhall conſume it.

Prov. 30. 8, 9.

Job 2. 4.

Lev. 6. 2, &c.

And thus you ſee what ſpecial reaſon Agur had, in regard of the cuſtome of his Nation, to adde to the firſt evil of Stealing, this ſecond danger of Taking God's Name in vain, becauſe the one was like to bring on the other.

Yet I would not have you ſo to take me, as if I thought that we were altogether exempt from this danger; for though the occaſion be leſs, yet we finde by experience that our Thieves will alſo forſwear themſelves, though no Law or Judge conſtrains them to ſwear at all. And for Lying, the next neighbour to it, we finde that to be the ordinary, and almoſt unavoidable, conſequent of this ſin. So that Agur's reaſon will fit us well enough.

THUS much ſhall ſerve for the Explication of the words, that ye might underſtand Agur's meaning. Now let us ſee what Leſſons and Obſervations we may gather from them, which are theſe. Firſt, That it is not lawfull to ſteal, no not in a caſe of want and neceßity. For though Agur were poor, and wanted food convenient for him, yet were it a ſin for him to ſteal; which makes him pray againſt it, Leſt I be poor, and ſteal. For that which is of it ſelf unjuſt and ſinfull, no neceſſity can make lawfull or diſpenſable. Indeed in Ceremonies and things by nature indifferent the caſe is otherwiſe; neceſſity there diſpenſeth, as it did with David in eating of the Shew-bread: For the eating of that Bread more then other was not of it ſelf unlawfull, but only for ceremony ſake: But Injuſtice is alwaies Injuſtice,

Pro. 30. 8, 9. juſtice, and ſuch a one among other ſins is Theft, when we take that from another which is his, and by no right is ours.

It is therefore a prepoſterous plea which Poor men are wont to uſe, therewith to excuſe themſelves. 1. What would you (ſay they) have us doe? the world hath forſaken us; we have no friend to help us. Alas! have men forſaken you? and will you make God forſake you too? Will no body help you? and will you make your ſelves uncapable of God's help too? This is not the way to eaſe your croſs, but to procure a curſe, and to draw a greater miſery upon your heads. Nay, if you had not uſed theſe unlawfull courſes, but had recourſe to God your heavenly Father, and truſted upon him who clotheth the graſs and lilies of the field, he would have provided for you: but now you ſhut the gates of his bleſſing and mercy againſt your ſelves. 2. Yea, but I am a poor man, and he from whom I have taken it is well able to ſpare it; it will doe him no harm, and me good. But who made thee a divider of other mens goods? Thou muſt not look only whether he can ſpare it, but by what means thou comeſt by it. 3. But it is a ſmall thing. The more baſe and abject ſinner thou, who wilt corrupt thy conſcience for ſuch a trifle. Take heed; he that will ſerve the Devil for ſo ſmal advantage, if the Devil once mend his wages, it is ten to one but he will mend his work.

Obſerv. 2. This is the firſt Obſervation, and if we mark it well, here will be ground and roomth for another: For if it be a ſin for a Poor man to ſteal in his want from thoſe that have enough; how much more hainous is it for a Rich man to rob the poor? as many do by fraud, oppreſsion, detaining the hire of the labourer, and the like. The poor man's need is a ſtrong temptation to make him ſteal; therefore Agur makes Theft the poor man's danger, and not the rich; Leſt I be poor (ſaith he) and ſteal: not, Leſt I be rich, and ſteal; for why ſhould the rich man ſteal? he hath no need, as we ſay, he hath no direct temptation thereto, as the poor man hath, and therefore his ſin is the greater. And indeed there can be no other reaſon for his Theft, but the rich man's malady; He hath forgotten God, and ſaith, Who is the Lord? and then no marvell if he be ready for any ſin.

The hainouſneſs and unreaſonableneſs of this Sin may appear by that parable of Nathan, wherewith David was ſo much incenſed and convinced, 2 Sam. 12. 1, &c. There were two men in one city (ſaith he,) the one rich, the other poor. The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds: But the poor man had nothing ſave one little ewe-lamb, which he had bought and nouriſhed up—And there came a traveller unto the rich man, and he ſpared to take of his own flock, and of his own herd, to dreſs for the way-faring man that was come unto him, but took the poor man's lamb, and dreſſed it for the man that was come to him. And David's anger (ſaith the Text) was greatly kindled againſt the man; and he ſaid to Nathan, As the Lord liveth, the man that hath done this thing ſhall ſurely die; And he ſhall reſtore the lamb fourfold, becauſe he did this thing, and becauſe he had no pity.

Hence in Scripture, for the rich to ſpoil the poor, is accounted a crying ſin; which kinde of ſins are in a degree above the ordinary rank of ſins, viz. ſuch as call for ſome viſible and remarkable judgement upon the head of the committers. Judge of the reſt by that which S. James ſaith of one kinde of robbing the poor, by detaining their wages. Little know ſome men, who out of a kinde of pride in their own might, and contempt of the poor, as ſcorning to acknowledge themſelves obliged to them for their ſervice, commit this ſin, little conſider they how grievouſly they offend: Behold (ſaith S. James, ch. 5. 4.) the hire of the labourers which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entred into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. To conclude this observation, Men do not despise a thief, saith Solomon, Prov. 6. 30. if he steal to satisfie his soul when he is hungry; yet if he be found, he shall restore seven-fold. If the poor man's theft be punished seven-fold amongst men; sure, with God, the rich man's shall be punished seventy times seven-fold. Pro. 30. 8, 9.

My third Observation shall be, That we must avoid the occasions of sin, as well as sin it self. Agur prayes not, that he might not steal, &c. but that God would keep him out of that condition which might occasion him to commit those sins. This might have been observed from the other part of Agur's reason as well as from this; for there he desired God to keep him from that Fulness which might occasion him to deny and forget God: but I chose rather to defer it hither. Opportunity, we say, makes a thief. It is as true in the general, That occasion is a snare whereby a man becomes a prey unto sin. Eve, by talking with the Serpent, was at length caught to eat of the forbidden fruit. David, by seeing Bathsheba washing her self, was tempted to commit adultery with her. Peter, by intruding himself into the high Priest's Hall out of too much confidence in his own strength, came to deny his Master. For this cause God commanded his people in the Law, not only that they should worship no Idol, but that they should demolish all the Monuments of them; that they should make no covenant nor affinity with those who worshipped them: and all lest they might be drawn by these occasions to commit idolatry with them. Observ. 3.

If this be so, we may see hence how much they deceive themselves who think it makes no matter what company they keep, or what places they come in; they will look to themselves forsooth, and mean not to be corrupted, but only to observe the fashions, either to satisfie their curiosity, or, as some will pretend, for the greater loathing of such abhorred courses. This is a dangerous principle, to play with the flames, as the fly doth. If thou wouldst avoid the Sin, avoid the Occasion also. And let me adde one thing more: Several sins have their several occasions and their proper gins; but Evil company is the Devil's Magazine, wherein are contained all Occasions of all sins.

Now I come to the fourth and last Observation, which I gather from the last words of Agur's Reason, That the commission of one sin makes way to another. Agur thought, if he were once brought to steal, he should not stay there, but be carried farther, even to forswear, and take God's Name in vain; Lest I steal, (saith he,) and take the Name of my God in vain. Peter first denied Christ; but the Devil would not let him stay there, but made him curse and forswear him. David having once committed adultery with the wife of Uriah, the Devil took the advantage to make him commit murther too. Sin is like a Serpent; if it can but once get in the head, it will draw the whole train after. While there is no rift in a block, it is hard for the wedge or axe to enter; but if a rift be once made, it will enter all with a little driving: So with sin. Observ. 4.

The reason is, Because he that commits a sin, puts himself thereby, more or less, into the Devil's power; who is not so negligent as to lose or not to ply his advantage. The Devil is the Prince of death, Heb. 2. 14. Now death comes by sin; therefore sin gives the Devil a title; and first brought, and still bringeth man into the Devil's jurisdiction. Hence those who are converted to God and acquitted of their sins, are said to be delivered from the power of Satan unto God, Acts 26. 18. But sin makes them again obnoxious to his power; it reaches him a new hold of us, which though (perhaps) it be not so much as he may quite pull us from God, yet will it serve him to pull us into many a transgression, and cost us much work and a great deal of sorrow before we get free again.

DISCOURSE XXIX.

ISAIAH 2. 2, 3, 4.

And it shall come to pass in the last dayes, that the Mountain of the Lord's House shall be established [or, prepared] in the top of the Mountains, and exalted above the Hills; and all Nations shall flow unto it, &c.

HILLS or Mountains are States, Kingdoms or Societies of men; which consisting of degrees, rising unto a height one above another, are compared unto Mountains raised above the ordinary Plain and Level of the Earth.

The mountain of the Lord's House is that State and Society of men which is called the Church and People of God: Regnum Cœlorum, the Kingdom of Heaven; that is, a Kingdom whose both King and King's Throne have their residence and place in the Heavens.

These words therefore are a Propheſie or prophetical Promise of the glorious exaltation, wonderful inlargement, and unheard-of prosperity of this Society of men, called the Church, above all other States or Societies of men whatsoever.

The glory and exaltation is expressed in the words, The Mountain of the Lord's House shall be one day exalted, yea mounted, not only above the lesser Hills, but the highest Mountains, though at this time it were depressed, and trampled under foot by the proud enemies thereof.

The inlargement and ampleness thereof, in the words, All Nations shall flow unto it: that is, Though, at the time of this Prophecy, it were reduced to a small remnant; yet the time was to come, when it should not only consist of the one Nation of the Jews, as then it did, but of all Nations under the whole heaven.

The prosperity thereof begins to be described from these words in the 4th verse, they shall beat their swords into plow-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, &c. that is, Although the greatest part of Jacob were already captive, and Judah and Jerusalem in a continuall fear and no less danger of the arms and invasion of the King of Babel; yet the time should one day come, that the People or Church of God should not only be the most exalted State upon the earth, and the most ample and universal Dominion that ever was in the world, but the most peaceable, quiet and flourishing State that ever was since man was first created.

This is the Prophecy. But now comes the Question, Whether this, as we have described it, be and hath already been fulfilled; or whether the time thereof be yet to come; or if already any wayes fulfilled, whether it be not in part only performed, and the full accomplishment reserved for the time to come.

Our Adversaries would fain finde here the constant and perpetual Visibility of the Church. And I must needs grant them that it is meant of a time when the Gentiles shall be called; for the words of the Text, viz. [All Nations]

Nations] tell us so. But, without doubt, he that will have this place for his purpose, must shew us not only a naked and single Visibility, but more then that, a glorious Visibility; yea, the most glorious among the sons of men. For a Visibility is one thing, and a glorious Visibility is another: for many things are visible which are not glorious to look upon; and oftentimes good and rich metall may be within, when the outside glisters not. We must therefore, when we talk of the Churche's visibility, distinguish between these two, and not confound them. The Church might be Visible, though it were but a Hill; much more if it be a Mountain: but here it is to be established on the Tops of Mountains, and exalted above the Hills; so that no other State shall overtop or overlook it, much less trample it under feet. Now whether there were ever yet such a time, when this was compleatly fulfilled, though all be granted our Adversaries they can ask, yea and that the Romish Church be that Church here spoken of, I leave it to any mans indifferent judgement, who can compare the Description of the Prophet with the Stories of forepast and present Times. Isaiah 2. 2, 3, 4.

But, suppose it were to be fulfilled and fully accomplished in the times which have already been; and I will not deny but in part it hath been so; yet how doth it follow from this Propheſie, that this glorious Visibility should be constant and continual, and never interrupted or eclipsed?

Is not the Propheſie true, and hath not God made his Promise good, if he hath at any time performed the thing here spoken of; though it neither were done all at once, and though this exaltation and glory did not alway continue? If one skilful in Divination or Astrology should meet with a private man for the present in great want, distress, contempt and misery, and should tell him, that it was his fortune to rise to the greatest honours, and to become the greatest man that was in the Kingdom; If this fell out so at any time of his life, according as it was foretold him, though perhaps it proved not long durable (as such exaltations use not to be,) had he any reason to say that the Astrologer had lied unto him in that he had foretold him? I think any man in reason will think him unjustly charged. Why then may not the like be said and thought of the Church, and (as I may so speak, with reverence) of the prediction of the Churche's fortune? But if the time of the full performance of this Prediction be yet to be expected, as perhaps it is, then it will serve our Adversaries to far less purpose: for were not Joseph's dreams and visions true, that the Sun, Moon and twelve Stars should worship him, and all his brothers sheaves should bow to his sheaf? was not this true (I say,) though his brothers first sold him, though he became afterward a slave, and long a prisoner in a strange Land, before he was so suddenly exalted to be the great Viceroy under Pharaoh King of Egypt? Or would you have an Example of a glory afterwards eclipsed and almost extinguished? Were not God's first Promises made to the Israelitish Nation, That he would make them a renowned Kingdom, fully performed in the days of Solomon, when there was no kingdom upon the earth like unto it for glory and magnificence; though this so great glory lasted not long, but began a little to be obscure in the end of Solomon's days, and afterwards was quite eclipsed and clouded, the Sun but now and then (as it were) shewing it self through a cloud? And what is the Church of the Gentiles, or what priviledge have they above the Church of the Jews, that the like should not befall it which we are sure befell them? and yet nevertheless God always made good his Promises unto them, and no word of his mouth failed.

When we therefore talk of the Churche's Visibility and glory, we must distinguish of Times; and know that there are Times when the Church is indeed visible, but not glorious; secondly, Times when it is neither visible nor glorious; thirdly, Times when it is to be both visible and glorious.

In the Times immediately after Christ's passion, or (if you will) at his Passion, I think any man will grant, that it was then neither visible nor glorious. In the Times of the persecuting Emperors, when the Church had taken foot among the Gentiles, and the Nations began to flow unto it, it was a society indeed visible, but not glorious: I am sure, it was not in the tops of the Mountains; but the Imperial Mountain of Rome not onely overtopped it, but ever trampled it under their feet. For we must know here, that we speak all this time of the external glory, for that is the thing whereabout the quarrel is. In the Times of Constantine and thereabouts, after three hundred years cruel persecution, the Sun seemed as it were to break forth of a cloud, and the Christian society became for a while both visible and glorious; but presently after, even as it was in the end of Solomon's reign, this glory of the Church was not onely eclipsed, but even the visibility thereof, in a manner, covered and altogether darkned with that thick and universally-overspreading cloud of Arianisme. And thus farre our adversaries will goe with us: But we require they should grant us something more, namely, That this Arian cloud was no sooner blown over, but another great cloud of that fore-prophesied Apostasie of the Church began to arise; whereby the Churche's glory was not onely eclipsed, but at length again the visibility thereof wholly overshadowed with the thick darkness of Idolatrous Antichristianism; untill that after a long day of darkness, and a black night, it pleased God, even of late, somewhat to dispel the cloud, whereby the Society of true Believers became again outwardly visible and conspicuous unto the world. And we hope, when the cloud shall be wholly consumed by the beams of the Sun of the Gospel, it shall become not onely more visible then yet it is, but far more glorious then ever hitherto it hath been, when the fulness of the Gentiles (as S. Paul speaks) shall come in. But of this more hereafter.

Rom. 11. 25.

In the mean time, that you may the better understand what is already discoursed concerning the Visibility of the Church, as likewise know what was the State of true Believers when this Visibility was overshadowed, take this which followeth; viz. That there hath been in all Ages since Christ, without interruption, a Company or Society of Christian men, agreeing or joyned together in the inward and invisible communion of the Faith, concerning such Divine Truths as we profess needful to Salvation. And, for so much of this Faith as was not acknowledged by the rest of erring men, called Christians, in that respect this Society was a distinct Society from them: yet nevertheless, for so much of this their true Faith as was still acknowledged by those erring ones we speak of, they were a part of the same Society with them: For the Apostasie of the Church was not total, and therefore in all the sound parts of their Faith, our true-believing Society neither was nor is divided from them.

But if the Question be asked of a Visible Christian Society professing the same Essential Faith with us, Whether such a one hath always been, First, we must know that by Visible Society, in this question, is meant, A society of Christian Believers joyned together in one external Communion, of the same publick profession, use of Sacraments, and Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction or Government: For these make the outward Form, whereby this Society is discernible from other Societies of men; and a Society by this out-side severed and distinguished from other Societies, is a Society visible and conspicuous to other Societies of men.

The Question therefore is, Whether that Society of men, agreeing together gether in the Points of our Christian Belief, hath been in all Ages, in this kinde and sort, joyned, and distinguished from other companies, not onely of the world, but even of Christian men: or in shorter terms thus, Whether the society of men of our Christian Belief hath in all Ages been, for the out-side, a distinct Corporation from all other Societies and States of men. Isaiah 2. 2, 3, 4.

My Answer is, That for divers of the First Ages, as before was shewed, it was in that manner visibly distinguished; but after an Apostasie had overspred and deformed the beautiful Spouse of Christ, then was the Society or Belief, as it were, covered and involved with the same external mantle with them, and as it were hidden in that dark cloud, and so not a distinct external Society from the rest. But though in the inward communion of the sincerer Faith it was diverse and distinguished, yet it still for the most part continued a member of the same external (I say, external) body with them; being begotten by the same Sacrament of Baptism, taught, in some part, by the same Word and Pastors still continuing amongst them, and submitting to the same Jurisdiction and Regiment, so farre forth as these or any of these had yet some soundness remaining in them: But for the rest, whether in Doctrine or Practice, that was not compatible with their sincerer Faith, either wisely avoiding all Communion with it; or if they could not, then patiently suffering for their Conscience sake under the hands of Tyrants, termed Christians. Of this see the Treatise of The Apostasie of the latter Times.

For understanding this, take this Simile: When good Gold is mixed with a greater quantity of counterfeit metall, so that of both becomes one mass or lump, though each metall still retains and keeps his nature diverse from the other, yet can they not outwardly be discerned asunder by the eye; for becaus they are incorporated into one external body, the outside or visible dimensions which are seen are one and the same: But when the Refiner comes and severs them, then will each metall appear in his own out-side and his own proper colours, whereby they are easily discerned asunder one from the other. Such must the State of the Church needs be, when an Apostasie shall rise out of the bowels thereof; and such do we affirm was the State of the Church of Christ in that great prevailing Apostasie, from which we are separated, viz. The purer metall of the Christian body was not outwardly discernible from the base and counterfeit, whiles one out-side covered them both; but when the time of refining came, then was our Church, not first founded in the true Faith, (God forbid;) but a part of the Christian body newly refined from such corruptions as Time had gathered: as Gold refined begins not then first to be Gold, though it began then first to be refined; so our Church began not a hundred years ago to be a Church, though then it first began to be a Reformed Church.

And is this any thing more then that which befel the Jewish Church in her frequent Apostasie? Was the seven thousand that had not bowed their knees to Baal a visibly-distinguished Society from the rest of the body of Israel? were they such as were outwardly known unto others who were not of their Communion? nay, were they known one to another? yea, to Elias himself? I think no man will easily affirm it: Yet were they a distinct Society joyned in the visible Communion of the same true Worship, and in that respect separate from the rest of that Idolatrous body: yet nevertheless, as farre as there was any thing which was found yet remaining for the external Regiment and Ceremonies, it is most certain that they could not but be to the eyes of the world of one external body with the rest, as receiving the same Circumcision, and living under the same Priests and Ceremonies, so farre forth as any soundness in either of them remained. 1 King. 19. 18.

Nay, do not our Adverſaries themſelves in their good mood grant us as much as we have ſaid, though it be becauſe they cannot will nor chuſe (as is the Proverb:) For it is a thing chiefly to be conſidered and remembred in this Quarrel between them and us, about the Viſibility of the Church, it is (I ſay) to be conſidered, That when all granted and pleaded on both parts is well examined, the point of difference between them and us is onely this, They hold the glorious Viſibility of the true Church to be in preſent; and the overſhadowing of the light, and eclipſing of the glory thereof under Antichriſt, to be yet to come; at which time of his being in the world they grant and affirm more of the eclipſing and overſhadowing of the true Church then we do for our hearts. He that reads their conceits of Antichriſt ſhall eaſily finde this to be true: For they hold that then the publick exerciſe of Chriſtian Religion, ſaying of Maſs, and all ſhall utterly ceaſe, untill Antichriſt's dayes be out: this is their Tenet. We on the contrary hold this clouding of the Churche's viſibility to have been already, and the greateſt glory (in probability,) or at leaſt ſome part thereof, to be yet to come. So that we both agree, That in the great Apoſtaſie the Churche's viſibility and glory ſhould ceaſe; but we ſay that this Apoſtatical time hath been already; they ſay it is yet to come: we ſay that that time was to laſt many ages; they ſay that when it comes, it ſhall be but three ſingle years and a half.

Why then are they not aſhamed to choke us with this Argument of the Churche's Viſibility and glory, as though the Church could never be without it, when yet themſelves confeſs that there is a time to come, when the caſe will be ſuch, that the ſame Argument may be alleged againſt the true Church, though it were theirs, as is now alleged againſt ours? This is too great partiality.

Seeing therefore the whole Controverſie lies in this, Whether the Churches great Apoſtaſie be already paſt, or in being, or yet to come; It is a great deal the quicker courſe for them and us to examine the condition and quality of both Religions by the Scriptures, and not to diſtract our ſelves with every point of difference; (for every Errour is not a part of this Apoſtaſie:) But let us examine our Religion in that point alone, wherein the Scripture it ſelf places and limits the quality of this Apoſtaſie, namely, that it ſhould be Spiritual Fornication or Idolatry; for Babylon is not called the Lier of Babylon, the Tyrant of Babylon, the Heretick of Babylon, the Murtherer of Babylon, but the Whore of Babylon. It is very like indeed, that as Whores have commonly many other foul qualities, ſo may the Spiritual Whore have alſo: Yet as every ill quality of a Whore is not a part of her Whoredom; no more is every Errour of the Spiritual Whore, how groſs ſoever, a part of Spiritual Fornication. Let us therefore examine her by the Mark which God ſets upon her, and by that Abomination for which onely in a manner (if we obſerve the Scripture) God did uſe to puniſh, and wrathfully complain of his old people Iſrael, though (no doubt) they had many other corruptions beſide; but had they been faithful in that one, God could have winked at many other. As we know a Husband, if his Wife be faithful and true to him in that point which ſo nearly toucheth his jealouſie, he will the eaſier bear with other ſhrewiſh conditions.

Now if the Church of Rome be not an Idolatreſs, or a Spiritual Whore, proſtituting her ſelf to other gods, to ſtocks and ſtones, and many wayes breaking her Faith to her one Lord and Mediator Chriſt Jeſus, by committing fornication with (I know not how many) other Mediators; there never was a Whore in the world.

And certainly, if the Church of Rome may herein be juſtified, the Church of of Israel had but hard measure to be condemned, who could as truly plead that she never forsook the true God altogether, onely she would worship him in Calves and such Images as other her neighbour-Nations used to doe; and that though she was for variety, yet she reserved the chief place for her Jehovah, and in all other respects could as well as the present Roman Church excuse her practice in that kinde. And yet we know how she is branded by the Prophets for a Whore; and not a simple fornicating Whore, but an Adultereß, and is threatned to be proceeded with and judged as those that break wedlock and shed bloud are judged, to have bloud given her infury and jealousie. And such an Example of God's fury and jealousie hath he made them to all the world, as no other people (how great soever their Idolatries) have ever equall'd or come near their sufferings. Isaiah 2. 2, 3, 4.

See this more fully discoursed of in the Treatise of The Apostasie of the latter Times.

And thus farre we have in a manner yielded to our Adversaries for a time, That the time of fulfilling this Prophecy hath already been; for we would deny them no favour willingly which we could lawfully yield them. Nevertheless I verily believe, that this Prophecy hath never yet received his full accomplishment, nor is to do, Untill, as S. Paul saith, Rom. 11. 25. the fulneß of the Gentiles be come in; and so all Israel shall be saved.

For we shall finde in the Prophecies of the Scriptures, that there are two Sorts and Times of the Calling of the Gentiles: The first is that which should be with the rejection and casting off of the Jews, and (as S. Paul saith) to provoke them to jealousie: such a Calling as should be in a manner occasional, that God might not want a Church the time the Jews were to be cast out; for this is that which S. Paul means, Rom. 11. 15. That the casting away of the Jews is the calling of the Gentiles or reconciling of the world: whence we may see, that the Apostles were not to preach Christ to the Gentiles, untill being first offered to the Jews, they refused him. And this is that Calling of the Gentiles which hitherto hath been for many Ages. Rom. 11. 11.

But there is a second and more glorious Calling of the Gentiles to be found in the Prophecies of Scripture; not a Calling, as this is, wherein the Jews are excluded; but a Calling wherein the Jews shall have a share of the greatest glory, and are to have a preeminence above other Nations, when all Nations shall flow unto them, and walk in their light: For the calling of the remainder of the world which is not yet under Christ, is reserved for the solemnizing of the Jews restitution. This is that Calling and that Time which he calls the Fulneß of the Gentiles; I would not brethren (saith he) have you ignorant of this mystery, that blindneß in part is hapned to Israel, untill the fulneß of the Gentiles be come in; and so all Israel shall be saved. This is that time whereof he speaks, that if the present fall of the Jews be the riches of the world, and their decay the riches of the Gentiles, how much more shall their fulneß be the fulness of the Gentiles? This is that glorious time which the Prophecy of this Text principally, if not altogether, intended: For if the fulneß of the glory and inlargement of the Church be here described, then it must needs be that the time hereof hath never yet been, because as yet the Fulneß of the Gentiles, whereof S. Paul speaks, is not come in. While the Roman and Iron part of Nebuchadnezzar's Image was yet standing, a Stone was hewn out of the mountain without hands: This is the First State of the Kingdom of Christ, and Calling of the World; which hath been hitherto. But at length this Stone, when the time of the Image's brittle feet came, smote the Image upon those feet, so that the wind blew the whole Image away, and there was no more place found for any part thereof: which Rom. 11. 25. Vers. 12. Dan. 2. 34.

Iſaiah 2. 2, 3, 4. * Dan. 2. 35.

was no ſooner done, but the* Stone which ſmote the Image ſwelled into a great Mountain, and filled the whole earth: This is the Time of the Fulneſs of Chriſt's Kingdom, the Fulneſs of the Gentiles: This is the Time when the Mountain of the Lord's Houſe ſhould be eſtabliſhed upon the tops of the Mountains; namely, when the ſmall Stone of Chriſt's Kingdom, which is now in being, ſhall ſmite the brittle feet of the laſt Remainder of the Roman State now ſubſiſting in the Popedome, in whom the divided Toes of too many Kingdomes are in a ſort (though but brittlely) united together; and ſo that great ſeven-hilled City ſtill Ladies it over the Nations of the Earth.

DISCOURSE XXX.

JUDGES 1. 7.

As I have done, ſo God hath requited me.

THESE are the words of Adonibezek, one of the Kings of Canaan, whom the ſons of Judah and Simeon having taken priſoner in war, they cut off the thumbs of his hands, and great toes: The juſtneſs of which puniſhment ſo evidently ſampling his forepaſt ſin, forced him, though with a heavie heart, to give glory unto God, and ſay, Threeſcore and ten Kings, having their thumbs and great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my table: As I have done, ſo God hath requited me.

Theſe words (without any longer Preface) may be conſidered two waies; either ſimply or abſolutely in themſelves, or with reference to him who ſpake them. In themſelves they are an Affirmation or Hiſtorical narration, That as Adonibezek had done, ſo God requited him. If we conſider them with reference to the ſpeaker, they are a Confeſſion, as being ſpoken by him who did the fact, and ſuffered now the puniſhment; Adonibezek himſelf it is who ſaith, As I have done, ſo God hath requited me.

I. The firſt Conſideration of Adonibezek's words.

In the Firſt Conſideration I obſerve four things.

1. That God puniſheth ſin with temporal puniſhment in this life, as well as with eternal in the life to come. Thus this miſerable King here feels the hand of God fall ſo heavy upon him, while he was yet in the world, that it makes him bitterly cry out, I have done cruelly, and God hath even here requited me.

2. That God doth not alwaies preſently inflict his Judgements, while the ſin is freſh, but ſometimes deferrs that long which he means to give home at the laſt. So ſaith our King here, As I have done; not as I did even now, but as I did long ago, and thought by this God had forgotten mè, yet now I ſee he requiteth me.

3. That theſe Divine Judgements by ſome conformity or affinity do carry in them as it were a ſtamp and print of the ſin for which they are inflicted. So ſaith this unhappy King, As I have done; even juſt as I have done to others, now I ſuffer my ſelf: Seventy Kings thumbs in my cruelty I cut off, and in my pride made them to feed like dogs under my table: now the meaſure which I mete unto others, is measured unto my self; for just as I have done, so God hath requited me. Judg. 1. 7.

4. That the Profit and Pleasure which men aim at when they commit sin will not so much as quit cost even in this life: For if God's punishments be requitalls, certainly the profit we have gotten by sin he will make us lose in the punishment; the pleasure we hope to finde, and seek after in sin, will be overpoised in the pain we are sure to feel when the just hand of the Almighty shall require us.

And thus have you heard already the Summe of what I mean to speak of in the First consideration of these words. Now I will return again, and speak more largely of them all, and that in the same order I gave them out.

The first Collection therefore which I made was, That God punisheth the sins of men with temporal punishment in this life, as well as with eternal in the life to come. This verity (to use the words of Zophar, Job 20. 4.) was known in the daies of old, and found true ever since man was placed upon the earth. For as the Apostle saith of righteousness, that it hath both the promise of this life and of the life to come; so it is most true of unrighteousness, that it hath the curse of this life as well as of the life to come. Observ. 1. 1 Tim. 4. 8.

The first sin of our first Parents, whereof we all stand guilty, was thus punished, as it were to be a Rule and Law of what God would doe after. I say, the first sin of our first Parents was punished with a curse in things of this life. From hence come all the outward calamities and miseries of mankinde, wherein the happiest man on earth hath his share; hence our labour and vexation of spirit; hence our pain, our want, and all our trouble wherein we travell under the Sun. No man in the world is exempted from this Law; all of us as well feel a present punishment here in this life, as fear that which shall be to come hereafter in the world to come.

Now as the universal misery we all feel is a temporal punishment of an universal sin; so the clods of daily sin, which we adde unto this great mountain of transgression, doth usually bring us under some special kinde of punishment, above that which we have in common with other men. The whole History of the Bible, if we look well into it, is most part taken up in Examples of this one Maxime: whosoever thinketh otherwise, he hath taken too slight a view and too short a survey of the world's affairs. Perhaps he sees the person of a Tyrant, of an Oppressor, of a Blasphemer, to live long in jollity, and to end his daies in tranquillity; or, to use the words of Job in the same argument, to spend their daies in wealth, and in a moment (without any more trouble) go down into the grave. How is it then true, That God requiteth sin in this life, or that any regard should be had to any temporal calamities or worldly disasters; since these come alike to the just and unjust, to the fool and to the wise, to those whom God favoureth as well as those he favoureth not? Chap. 21. 13.

But for Answer hereunto, we must know, That the way of God in temporal punishments is one, and his way in eternal and spiritual another; he deals not after the same fashion in both. For eternal punishments in the world to come, the person which sinneth shall alone suffer, and no other for him; but as for temporal punishments, which are seen in this world, sometimes God laies them upon the person, sometimes upon the posterity of the offender, or sometimes upon others which in such like respects are near unto them, as he sees best in his wisdome. When therefore thou seest a man live in open and gross sins, confine not thine eye unto his person only, but look farther about him, survey his whole family; if nothing appear while he is living, yet after his death consider of his posterity, and thou Judg. 1. 7. thou wilt finde the waies of God to be just and glorious in the avenging of sin and wickedness.

This question was long debated between Job and his friends, and at last came to this very issue, Job himself determining and assoiling it after this manner; I will teach you (saith he, chap. 27. v. 11, &c.) by the hand of God; that which is with the Almighty will I not conceal. Behold, all ye your selves have seen it, why then are you thus altogether vain? This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage of oppressors, which they shall receive of the Almighty. If his children be multiplied, it is for the sword, and his off-spring shall not be satisfied with bread, &c.

The reason of this difference between temporal punishments and eternal is to be gathered from the several and differing Ends of them both: Because they are for divers Ends and Purposes, therefore the way of God is diverse in the execution of them. The End of eternal punishments is to satisfie the justice of God, in avenging sin; but the End of temporal punishments is chiefly exemplary; that is, for example and warning unto others, that they might hereby know that God regardeth and observeth the actions of men, and therefore fear lest the like might come unto themselves which they have seen to have befallen other men.

Now for such an End as this, it is not alwaies requisite that God should punish every offender in his own person; because the punishment here respecteth not so much the person of the offender himself, as others who have been witnesses of his sin, that they might take heed of committing the like. Now this End may be as well attained in the punishment of a mans posterity, subjects, servants, as of his own person: For by both alike may others see that God observeth the sins of men, and hath plagues in readiness for those which commit them: And by both alike will men be afraid of the hand of God; seeing most men do most vehemently wish the good and happy condition of their posterity and others having like relation unto them; Kings the weal of their Subjects, Fathers the good of their Children, Husbands the good of their Wives; and therefore will refrain from doing that which they see by experience of others may bring a plague or a curse upon any of them.

Yea God so much regardeth this exemplary End in temporal punishments, that I think this to be one chief reason why God forgiving the sin, and consequently eternal punishment, yet he remitteth not temporal plagues and chastisements; lest when the sin is notoriously known and scandalous, those who saw the sin, and could not so well know of the inward reconciliation between God and the sinner, might stumble and doubt in their hearts Whether there were a God or no, who observeth the waies of men. In this sort, and for this end, was David punished; whom though upon his
2 Sam. 12. 13. humble repentance Nathan had told, The Lord hath put away thy sin, thou Vers. 11. shalt not die: yet nevertheless did God raise up evil against him out of his Vers. 10. own house, he took his wives from before his eyes, and gave them unto his neighbour, and the sword never departed from his house, according as the Lord had spoken. The reason hereof follows in the Text, in the words of Na-
Vers. 14. than; Because, saith he, by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme, the child also which is born unto thee shall surely die. The child also; that is, all the former plagues, together with the death of the child, shall come upon thee for this end.

This then being so plain, what End God chiefly aims at in his outward and visible judgements; we ought hence to learn what to doe as often as we see the hand of God fall heavie upon any open and known sinner; namely, to accomplish in our selves the End which God aims at, to examine our actions past, to amend our lives, lest as bad, if not a worse thing, befall us or ours. And if at any time we see an Example of this upon one of God's own children, as we heard of David before, a man after God's own heart; let us learn to fear and tremble, and say, If such things befall those whom God most loveth, what shall become of us if we sin likewise? Again, when we see God thus punishing sin in the eyes of the world, let us acknowledge his All-seeing Providence, and say with those, Rev. 15. 3, 4. Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy waies, thou King of Saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorifie thy Name, when thy judgements are made manifest? and with David, Psal. 9. 16. and Psal. 11. 7. The Lord is known by the judgement which he executeth; for the righteous Lord loveth righteousness. Judg. 1. 7. See also Psal. 52. 7.

AND thus I come to the second thing I observed, namely, That God often forbears and defers his punishments. As I did long ago, saith Adonibezek; yea again and again, seventy times one after another; so long and so often, that I thought God had either not seen, or quite forgotten me: yet now I see he requiteth me. Observ. 2.

How true this Observation is, is sufficiently witnessed by their experience who have little less then stumbled and staggered hereat. This made Cato, a Heathen man, to cry out, Res divina multum habent caliginis, The disposals of Divine providence are not a little cloudy and dark. This made David, a man after God's own heart, to confess and say, My feet were almost gone, my steps had well-nigh slipped. Psal. 73. 2. This made Jeremy cry out from the botrome of an amazed soul, Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee; yet let me talk with thee of thy judgements. Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? why are they happy that deal very treacherously? Jer. 12. 1. Yea those Martyred Saints, Rev. 6. 10. are heard to cry from under the Altar, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our bloud on them that dwell upon the earth?

Now as these forenamed have stumbled at God's delaying and forbearing his judgements, so others there are who have been quite deceived, verily believing that with God Quod defertur, aufertur, what was forborn, was also forgotten. Such an one was Adonibezek here, who having escaped so long, thought to have escaped ever. And such were those whereof David spake, Psal. 10. 6. Who say in their hearts, We shall never be moved, we shall never be in adversity. Such an one is the great Whore of Babylon, that sings, Κάθημαι βασίλισσα, I sit like a Queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Rev. 18. 7. Such an one was Pherecydes Syrius, master of Pythagoras, and a famous Philosopher, and one that is said to have been the first Philosopher that taught among the Greeks the Soul to be immortal; and yet among all his knowledge had not learned this one Principle, The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdome. Prov. 1. 7. For, as * Ælian reports, he used among his scholars to vaunt of his irreligion after this manner, saying, That he had never offered sacrifice to any God in all his life; and yet had lived as long and as merrily as those who had offered severall Hecatombs. But he that thus impiously abused the long-suffering of God, came at length to an end as strange as his impiety was unusuall; for so they report of him, that he was stricken (like Herod, by the Angel of the Lord) with such a disease, that * Serpents bred of the corrupt humours of his body, which eat and consumed him being yet alive.

* Var. hist. l. 4. c. 28. μισεῖ τοὺς θεοὺς θύοντας καὶ ὅμως ἁδὺν ἦγεν καὶ ἥδιον βεβιωκέναι καὶ ἀλύπως ἢ μεῖον τοὺς ἑκατόμβας καταθυόντων.

* Plinie l. 7. nat. hist c. 51. Pherecydes copiâ serpentium ex corpore ejus erumpente exstinctus.

But that we may neither distrust the righteous waies of God, nor prevent his unsearchable counsels with our over-hasty expectation, let us a little consider of the Ends why God oftentimes defers and prolongs his Judgements. These Ends I suppose may be referred unto four heads.

1. For

Judg. 1. 7.

Gen. 18. 32.

1. For the ſake of godly ones, for whom God uſeth to forbear even multitudes of ſinners. So had there been but ten righteous perſons in Sodom, Sodom had never been deſtroyed; I will not deſtroy it (ſaith God) for tens ſake. So for good Joſiah's ſake God deferred the plagues he had decreed to bring upon that people, that Joſiah might be firſt gathered unto his fathers in peace, and his eyes might not ſee all the evil that he was to bring upon that place: as it is 2 Kings 22. 20. For as the new wine (ſaith the Lord, Eſa. 65. 8.) is found in the cluſter, and one ſaith, Deſtroy it not, for a bleſſing is in it: even ſo will I doe for my ſervants ſakes, that I may not deſtroy them all: That is, I will ſpare a whole cluſter of men, even for one or two bleſſed ſervants of mine which I ſhall finde therein. This is the firſt End; and this is moſt, if not onely, found in publick judgements and common ſins, ſuch as concern whole ſocieties of men; for in ſuch properly doth God, for the ſake of godly ones, forbear a multitude of ſinners.

2. The ſecond End is, To give time of repentance and amendment: For the Lord is long-ſuffering, not willing that any ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to repentance, as it is 2 Pet. 3. 9. This is ſhewed by the parable of the Fig-tree, Luk. 13. 7. Three years the husbandman came to ſeek fruit, and found none; and the fourth year he expected, before he would cut it down. An hundred and twenty years the old world had given them before the Floud came. And Jonah proclaimed (not, Yet one day, but)

Yet fourty daies, and Nineveh ſhall be deſtroyed. This End concerns ſuch puniſhments as deprive men of life, and of the means of ſalvation, and of amendment of life: For ſuch as theſe onely can God be ſaid to forbear, to give time of repentance. For as for other puniſhments (not the forbearance, but) the haſtening of them rather would cauſe repentance; ſeeing men then uſe to remember and call upon God when they are in miſery and affliction.

3. The third End of God's deferring his puniſhments is, The opportunity of example by them unto others, and of manifeſting his own glory. God is Lord of Times; and as he created them, ſo he alone knows a fit Time for all things under the Sun. He therefore who knows all occaſions, when he ſeeth a fit Time for his Judgements, to profit other men by example, and moſt of all to ſet forth his own glory, then he ſends them forth, and till then he will defer them.

4. The fourth End or Reaſon hath ſome affinity with this, and it is, When God intending ſome extraordinary judgement, ſuffers mens ſins to grow unto a full ripeneſs, that their ſin may be as conſpicuous unto the world as his purpoſe is their puniſhment ſhall be. Thus God puniſhed not the Canaanites in Abraham's time, but deferred it till Iſrael's coming out of Egypt; and that, as himſelf witneſſeth, Gen. 15. 16. Becauſe the iniquity of the Amorites was not yet full. And therefore is not this laſt End to be looked for in all God's delayes; but it ſeemeth proper to his extraordinary puniſhments: when God meaneth, as it were, to get himſelf a name amongſt men, then God ſtaies to have the ſin full, upon which he will poure a full vial of wrath and indignation.

Having thus ſeen how many Ends there are why God ſhould oftentimes defer the execution of his Judgements; the conſideration hereof may be a double leſſon unto us. 1. A leſſon of ſpiritual wiſdome, that we ſhould not think with Epicures and children of this world, That God's delay in puniſhing for a time is any argument he means not to puniſh at all. But, with wiſe Solon, let us account no man happy, but him who ends happily. 2. We may learn here alſo a leſſon of Chriſtian Patience. When we behold the proſperity of wicked men, let it not grieve us to ſee ſin a while lye unreven-unrevenged; let it not grind our hearts to see those who make a trade of wickedness a while to triumph, and be, as it were, at defiance with Heaven it self: For either God doth it for the good of some of his Saints; and then how can we but bless him? Or else to give them time of repentance; and then who art thou, O man, that repinest at the mercifulness of thy God? Or else to wait a fit time when thy self and others may be the most edified thereby, or his own glory most illustrated, or when men may take greatest notice of his Justice. Admire therefore his Wisdome, and let the expectation of that renown which God will one day purchase to himself make thee rest in hope and possess thy soul in quietness. Why should the Heathen go before us in this duty? They knew not so much as we have heard this day, and yet could they rest themselves in an assured expectation of God's justice, though a while it were deferred: As is very observable in the words of Agamemnon, expressed by Homer, Iliad. 4. upon occasion of the Trojans perfidious perjury; Judg. 1. 7.

Εἰ μὲν γάρ τι καὶ αὐτίκ' Ὀλύμπιος οὐκ ἐπίλεσσεν,
Ἐκ τε καὶ ὀψὲ τελεῖ,——

Though, saith he, the God of heaven avenge not this presently, yet sure at last he will doe it.

Εὖ γὰρ ἐγὼ τόδε οἶδα,——

For of this I am sure,

Ἔσσεται ἦμαρ ὅταν ποτ' ὀλώλῃ Ἴλιος ἱρή, that there will be a day when stately Troy shall be overthrown:

Nam licèt haud fontes præsenti puniat irâ;
Sera tamen sumit Deus & graviora malorum
Supplicia——

Though God doth not alwaies presently inflict his judgements upon offenders, yet he will pay them home at last; and the punishments he deferrs long, are the more grievous when they come. What could Job, David, or Jeremy have spoken more freely in such a case? Methinks I durst almost apply the words of our Saviour concerning the Centurion, We shall scarce finde so great Faith in Israel. Matt. 8. 10.

BUT now I pass unto the third point I observed (and it is chiefly to be observed) in these words, namely, The conformity between the Sin and the Punishment: Temporal punishments have for the most part, as it were, a character stamped upon them, in which men may reade their sins as well, oftentimes, as if they heard God himself to speak from heaven. Adonibezek could doe it with small learning; he saw his punishment so evidently branded with the mark of his sin; Threescore and ten kings (saith he) having their thumbs and great toes cut off, &c. Observ. 3.

Which Rule of God's Justice appears by those words of our Saviour, With what measure ye mete unto others, the same shall be measured unto you: Matt. 7. 2. and by that of the Prophet Obadiah, vers. 15. thus threatning Edom, As thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee; thy reward shall return upon thine own head.

But for the better discerning of this Conformity with the Sin which God stampeth upon the punishment thereof, we must know that it is of four several kindes. The first is, Ταυτοπάθεια, When we suffer by the hand of God the very same things ourselves which we have done to others. Such was Adonibezek's punishment here, and such was that wherewith Habakkuk, chap. 2. 8. threatens the Chaldeans; Because thou hast spoiled many nations, all the remnant of the people shall spoil thee: and Ezekiel the Edomites; As thou didst rejoyce at the inheritance of the house of Israel, because it was desolate, so will I doe unto thee; Thou shalt be also desolate. Thus 1. Chap. 35. 15.

Judg. 1. 7.

Pharaoh, who * commanded all the males of the Hebrews to be drowned as ſoon as they were born, himſelf with all his Hoaſt was drowned in the Red Sea. The depths covered them, they ſunk unto the bottome like a ſtone, Exod. 15. 5. * David committed Adultery with the wife of Uriah; his own ſon Abſalom did the like with his Concubines in the ſight of the Sun and face of all Iſrael. * Joram like a vilain ſlew all the ſons of his Father; and ſo did the Arabians by the will of God ſlay all his ſons likewiſe, only Jehoahaz excepted. Jehoiakim, who ſlew Urijah the Prophet, Jer. 26. 23. and would not ſuffer his body to have honeſt burial, himſelf, according as Jeremy had foretold, Chap. 22. 19. was likewiſe ſlain, and buried with the burial of an Aſſe, being caſt forth beyond the gate of Jeruſalem. I ſhall not need trouble you with profane ſtories, or tell you how Brutus and Caſſius were forced to ſlay themſelves with the ſame ſwords wherewith they ſlew Cæſar; with many other like:

*Exod. 1. 22. & 12. 29.
* 2 Sam. 11. 4. Chap. 16. 22.
* 2 Chr. 21. v. 4, & 17.

2. But I come unto the ſecond kind of Conformity, Ὁμοιοπάθεια, When we ſuffer not the very ſame, but yet that which hath ſome Analogy and reſemblance with our ſins. Thus the univerſal overflowing of ſin in the old world was puniſhed with an univerſal overflowing of waters. It was the common puniſhment of the Jews, when they ſerved other Gods beſides their own, for God to make them ſerve other Lords and Kings beſides their own. Look in the Scripture, and ſee whether this were not the regular puniſhment of Idolatry with God, thus to requite his people with that which reſembled their ſin: to give them over to ſerve other nations, when they ſerved other Gods beſides himſelf. As Jer. 5. 19. Like as ye have forſaken me, (ſaith the Lord) and ſerved ſtrange Gods in your land, ſo ſhall ye ſerve ſtrangers in a land that is not yours. So alſo, 2 Chron. 12. 5. Ye have forſaken, or left [עֲזַבְתֶּם] me, and therefore have I alſo left you [עֲזַבְתִּי] in the hand of Shiſhak. And after they had humbled themſelves, the Lord ſaies by Shemaiah the Prophet, verſ. 7. They have humbled themſelves, therefore I will not deſtroy them, but grant them ſome deliverance, &c. verſ. 8. Nevertheleſs they ſhall be his ſervants, that they may know my ſervice, and the ſervice of the kingdomes of the countries: Vulg. Ut ſciant diſtantiam ſervitutis meæ & ſervitutis regni Terrarum, That they may know the difference between my ſervice and the ſervice of the kingdoms of the lands.

And certainly, if we look into the condition of the Church ſince Chriſt's time, we ſhall finde the way of God's dealing in this caſe to have been the ſame. The Saracens, who ſpoiled and ſubdued ſo great a part of Chriſt's Church, were never heard of till ſix hundred years after Chriſt, even at the time when Chriſtians began generally to fall to Idolatry, and to worſhip Images, Saints and Angels: Then God firſt gave us over to ſerve other Nations, when we began to ſerve other Gods beſides the Lord our God. The Turkiſh fury could never be ſtayed from caſting more and more this yoke of bondage upon our necks, untill Judah (I mean, the now Reformed Churches) began to put away her Idols, ſome one hundred years ſince: From that time unto this, that God which would have ſpared Sodome for ten righteous ſakes, hath ſpared the remnant of Chriſtendome for their ſakes who have turned again to the Lord their God to ſerve him as he would be worſhipped.

But to go on: Solomon, when he divided that worſhip which was due unto the Lord alone, between him and the Idols of Zidon, Moab and Ammon, the Lord, to give him the ſame meaſure, divided his kingdome, and that allegeance which was only due to him and his poſterity, between himſelf and his ſervant Jeroboam: Becauſe he ſerved God with an imperfect heart, God left him an imperfect kingdome; Becauſe he beſtowed divine honour upon upon the vaſſals of the Lord of heaven, the Lord alſo beſtowed his honour upon his vaſſal Jeroboam. Nebuchadnezzar, who had lived like a Beaſt in his Palace, God made him to eat graſs like an Oxe in the field, till he knew the moſt High ruled in the kingdomes of men, Dan. 4.25, 32, 34. Otho Biſhop of Mentz, in a time of famine ſhut up a great number of poor people in a Barn, promiſing to give them ſome relief: But when he had them faſt, he ſet the Barn on fire; and hearing then the moſt lamentable and piteous cries and ſhreekings of the poor in the midſt of the flames, he ſcoffingly ſaid, Hear ye how the mice cry in the Barn. But the Lord, the juſt revenger of cruelty, ſent a whole Army of Mice upon him, which haunted him a great deal worſe then the Frogs did King Pharaoh, not only coming into his bed-chamber and upon his bed, but following him into a Tower which he had built for his laſt refuge in the midſt of the River Rhene, never leaving him till they had quite devoured him. Socrates hath a memorable ſtory of one Cyricius Biſhop of Chalcedon, who in a meeting of many Biſhops inveighed very bitterly againſt good S. Chryſoſtome, and amongſt other ſpitefull language called him often ἀγόνατον, a kneeleſs fellow, becauſe in a good cauſe he would never be gotten to bow and cr[illegible] to obtain the favour of men, which Cyricius accounted a ſtubb[illegible]nd obſtinate diſpoſition. But when he had thus uttered his malice, Marathas another Biſhop by chance trode upon his toe; which being at the firſt eſteemed (as it was indeed) a very ſmall hurt, yet afterwards ſo ranckled, that for the ſafety of the reſt of the body his leg was fain to be cut off; which done, the other leg alſo was in like manner affected, and that ſo, that being otherwiſe incurable, it was fain to feel the ſame remedy the other had done. Thus he who called the holy man a kneeleſs fellow in one ſenſe, God made him a kneeleſs Biſhop in another. By which and the former Examples we ſee how God in puniſhing requites men with that which hath ſome reſemblance with their Sin. And ſo much for Ὁμοιοπάθεια.

Of this Otho or Hatto 11. ſee Trithemius, Iſengrinius l. 10. Rerum Spir. &c.

I come now to the third kind, which is Conformitas ſubjecti, The Conformity of ſubject; When though we ſuffer not the ſame, nor perhaps like unto that we have done unto others, yet are we puniſhed in that ſubject wherein and whereabout we have ſinned. Thus Adam our firſt Parent ſinned in eating the fruits of the earth; and he and all his poſterity are puniſhed in the curſe of the ſame, in that now in ſorrow we eat of them all the dayes of our life. Touching God's dealing with Iſrael in this kind, ſee Wiſdome chap. 11. verſ. 7, 13. Korah and his company ſinned in offering ſtrange fire unto the Lord, and were puniſhed by a ſtrange deſtruction: the earth opened its mouth and ſwallowed them up quick; and there came out a fire from the Lord, and conſumed the men that offered incenſe. Numb. 16. verſ. 32, and verſ. 35. The Levites wife in * Judges, ſinned in the Commiſſion of Fornication, and therefore died by the ſame, being forced to death by the men of Gibeah. Eli, by too much indulgence towards his ſons, ſinned againſt God, and was puniſhed in them, being ſlain by the Philiſtines, and the Ark of God taken, which they had carried with them. David gloried in the number of his people, and was puniſhed in the Conſumption of ſeventy thouſand of them by the peſtilence, 2 Sam. 24. 1, 15. Hezekiah, who ſinned in ſhewing by way of oſtentation his treaſures and riches unto the Ambaſſadors of the King of Babylon, had his puniſhment threatned by the ſame things, that all he had thus gloriouſly ſhown ſhould one day be carried unto Babylon, 2 Kings 20.13, 17. Laſtly, The Jews, who crucified our Saviour by the hands of the Romans, had their City and Temple raſed by the ſame hands.

* Judg. 19.2, 25. 1 Sam. 2.22, &c. Chap. 4. 11.

Now I come unto the laſt kind of Conformity, which I call Conformity of circum-

Judg. 1. 7.

circumſtance; When the Time and Place of Puniſhment agrees with the Time and Place of the Sin. Of the agreement of Place I find theſe Examples. The firſt of Ahab and Jezebel, In the place where the dogs licked the bloud of Naboth, they licked the bloud of Ahab and Jezebel; 1 Kings 21. 19. and 2 Kings 9. 36. In the place where Baal's Prieſts had committed Idolatry, were their bones, being dead, and the bodies of thoſe who were alive, ſlain and burnt by Joſiah upon the Altar of Bethel, 2 Kings 23. 16.

Examples of concurrence of Time I finde theſe. At the ſame time of the year wherein the Jews crucified Chriſt, hapned that fatal and final ſiege by the Romans, when that heavy curſe fell upon them, His bloud be upon us and our children. The Spies, which brought an evil report upon the land, had ſpent fourty daies in ſearching it; and therefore God for this ſin, that Time might agree with Time, made them wander up and down fourty years in the wilderneſs. They are the words of God himſelf, According unto the number of dayes (ſaith he) in which ye ſearched the land, even fourty dayes, (each day for a year) ſhall ye bear your iniquities. Laſt of all, (becauſe I will not be tedious in Examples) Pompey the great is reported to have died moſt miſerably upon the very ſame day he triumphed for the ſpoil of Jeruſalem.

Num. 13. 25.

Num. 14. 33, 34.

Obſerv. 4. AND thus having ſpoken of the three firſt Obſervations, I come now to the fourth and laſt Obſervation, namely, That the Profit and Pleaſure which men ſeek for in the works of ſin will not ſo much as quit coſt in this life: Becauſe God's puniſhments are requitals; the Profit gotten by ſin we ſhall loſe wholly, if not doubly, in the Puniſhment thereof; the Pleaſure found in ſin will be overpoiſed in the pain of ſorrow we ſhall undergo for the ſame. It is hard to conceive that a man ſhould be ſo much the ſon of Belial, as to commit ſin only for his mind ſake, without any aim to a farther end. But rather we may think, That as all actions are done for ſome End, ſo even in ſinfull and wicked actions men have ſome Ends why they commit them: And it is the conceit and apprehenſion of ſome ſuch thing to be gotten by ſin, which makes that which is indeed Evil to have a ſhadow of an appearing Good. To be ſhort, The Ends men aim at in the commiſsion of ſin are thoſe two baſtard goods, Utile & Jucundum, worldly Profit and carnall Pleaſure. Within the compaſs of which two fall all thoſe kinds of falſe Happineſs whereabout the Philoſophers were ſo divided, Riches, Honours, Pleaſures, Bodily eaſe, &c. All are comprehended within the verge of theſe two, Utile & Jucundum, Profit and Pleaſure.

Nemo animi ſui cauſâ malus eſt.

Theſe are verily thoſe two baits of the Devil wherewithall he inveigleth the Souls of men; with theſe two he inſnared our Firſt Parents in Paradiſe. Our mother Eve ſaw the forbidden fruit, that it was like to be as pleaſant to the taſte as it was pleaſing unto the eye: on the other ſide, Knowledge like unto God, which ſhe hoped to attain hereby, was a thing exceeding commodious and worth the compaſsing: Upon theſe Motives therefore ſhe fell miſerably: and upon the like do we fall every day. Nay the Devil thought with theſe to have tempted our Saviour Chriſt himſelf to worſhip him; for he ſhewed him, as we read, All the kingdoms of the earth, with the glory of them. In a Kingdom all kinds of Profit and means of wealth abound; and for Pleaſure, what delight is equal unto that which is to be found in the glory of a Kingdom?

Matt. 4. 8.

To ſpeak of them ſeverally: What power and force a Motive of Gain and Profit hath to ſway our affections to commit ſin, S. Paul hath told us, 1 Tim. 6. 9. Thoſe, ſaith he, that will be rich, fall into temptation and a ſnare; and verſ. 10. that Covetouſneſs is the root of all evil. The ſame alſo alſo is apparent by the words of our Saviour, It is eaſier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, then for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God, Matt. 19. 24. Judg. 1. 7.

And for the other, to wit, carnal Pleaſure, ſo forcible it is, ſo much prevailing in tempting and drawing us unto evil, that the wiſe Son of Syrach ſticked not to ſay, He that reſiſteth pleaſures crowneth his own ſoul. Beſides, theſe Ends are ſo nearly linked together, that the one of them is commonly deſired for a Means unto the other; for therefore do many deſire wealth, that they might have means to live voluptuouſly. Chap. 19. 5.

But be they as they will be, If this be all the good men do or can expect from the works of ſin; if theſe only be thoſe fair Ends we ſtrive to attain by ſo foul a means; and when we have gotten them, if the juſt God requites the Pleaſure we expect with pain and ſorrow, and the Gain we hoped for with an equal yea with a greater loſs: if the Pleaſure of a moment be entertained with a remaining ſorrow; if a ſingle Gain be rewarded with a double loſs, and that in this world: Surely it will not quit the coſt to commit the moſt gainfull or pleaſing ſin in the world. But certain it is that God uſeth thus to meet with our intendments, and to make us alwaies fall ſhort, firſt or laſt, of what we hoped for by ſin.

For as for Pleaſure and Heart's-eaſe, as we call it, alas! who ever found this gotten by ſin to be worth the while? To overpaſs ſuch requiting pains as fall within the obſervation of other mens eyes; as when God makes our pain and ſorrow to grow even from thoſe members, thoſe hands, thoſe things from which we ſought delight, as I ſhewed you in the laſt Obſervation: I will, I ſay, omit theſe, and put you in minde only of that ſecret pain, which no man knows but he that feels it, The ſting of Conſcience. Is there any man that finds not the honey of ſin mingled with this gall? Surely the ſting of Conſcience never leaves a ſinner, but is in all our pleaſure like unto thoſe wilde gourds, 2 Kings 4. 39, &c. wherewith the young Prophets of Gilgal ſpoiled their whole pot of pottage: We cannot taſte ſo much as one ſpoonfull of this falſe pleaſure, but preſently we muſt cry as they cried, Mors in olla, Death is in the pot.

As for Profit and Wealth; It is even gotten into vulgar experience, that what in this kinde is gotten by ſinfull and bad means, is nothing durable. Treaſures of wickedneſs (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 10. 2.) profit nothing; and wealth gotten by vanity ſhall be diminiſhed, Prov. 13. 11. Yea, as the feathers of an Eagle are ſaid to conſume the feathers of other birds; ſo a little gotten by indirect and bad means often conſumes a man's whole ſubſtance. I cannot ſtand to inlarge upon this point: I will only ſhew in the example of our firſt Parents, how God in this manner requited them.

Firſt, They looked for Pleaſure in the taſte of ſo pleaſing a fruit. This hope God repai'd them with pain and ſorrow; I will multiply thy ſorrow, (ſaith he unto the woman) and in pain ſhalt thou bring forth children: and to the man, In ſorrow ſhalt thou eat the fruits of the earth all the daies of thy life. They looked, ſecondly, to have gained much, and to have profited themſelves exceedingly; as namely, to have gotten more knowledge then God had given them. This hope God requited, not only with the loſs of that knowledge they had before, but even of the outward things they enjoyed in Paradiſe. Primum in unoquoque genere eſt menſura conſequentium, The Firſt in every kind is the meaſure of that which follows. Thus God dealt with them, and thus will he deal with us unto the world's end. Sin is utterly unprofitable; whatſoever is gotten thereby is like the change Diomedes made with Glaucus; like that which Rehoboam made of the ſhields in the houſe of the Lord, ſhields of braſs for ſhields of gold. Gen. 3. 16. Verſ. 17. Verſ. 24. 2 Chron. 12. 10.

Judg. 1. 7. Let us therefore hence learn to withſtand ſuch fooliſh motives and ſuch vain hopes: when we are in danger to be enſnared by theſe baits, let us thus reaſon with our ſelves, What will it profit a man to enjoy an hour's pleaſure, for many a year's pain? What will the ſweet doe us good which is mixt with ſo much four? What will it profit a man to be rich in his youth, and a beggar in his age? What will it profit a man by guile and oppreſſion to raiſe his houſe while he liveth, by that which ſhall moſt certainly ruine it when he is dead and gone? And laſtly, if none of all this
Mar. 8. 36. were, yet What will it profit a man to win the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul?

II. The Second conſideration of Adonibezek's words. NOW having done with the Firſt conſideration of theſe words, I come unto the Second, which is with relation to him that uttered them, and ſo they are a Confeſſion. In which I obſerve Three things.

1. That the ſuffering of puniſhment extorts the Confeſſion of ſin. Thus this miſerable King is made, for all his pride and ſtomach, to lament with an Ego feci, with an I have done.

2. God's Juſtice in the puniſhing of ſin viſibly is one of the ſtrongeſt Motives to make an Atheiſt confeſs there is a God. Adonibezek, who ſcarce believed, or perhaps not well remembred, there was a God till now, is here forced to confeſs, The unreſiſtible God, that cruſheth down the proud, he hath requited me.

3. As the Puniſhment in general bringeth ſin to minde, which elſe would be forgotten: ſo the faſhion and kinde thereof well conſidered may lead us, as it were by the hand, to know the very ſin we are puniſhed for. Many ſins had Adonibezek committed; the condition and manner of his puniſhment made him remember his cruel uſage of the ſeventy kings, and ſay, As I have done, &c.

Obſerv. 1. To begin with the Firſt; I ſay, The ſuffering of puniſhment extorts the confeſſion of ſin. The reaſon whereof is the very nature of Puniſhment, which alwaies implieth ſome offence, and therefore is a good remembrancer of the ſame. Thus Joſeph's brethren, when they were diſtreſſed in Egypt,
Gen. 42. 21. cried, We are verily guilty concerning our brother. Proud Pharaoh, when he Exod. 9. 27. ſaw the plague of hail and thunder, ſaid, I have now ſinned; the Lord is righteous, and I and my people are wicked. The proud ſtomachs of the Iſraelites came down, when once the fiery ſerpents ſtung them, and then
Num. 21. 7. they came to Moſes, and ſaid, We have ſinned; for we have ſpoken againſt the Lord, and againſt thee. Manaſſes, whom all the threatnings of God's Prophets in fifty years ſpace could never move, yet when he was
2 Chron. 33. 12. bound in fetters, and carried priſoner unto Babylon, Then he beſought the Lord his God, and humbled himſelf greatly before the God of his fathers. Whoſoever therefore he be that feels not this fruit, and makes not this uſe of his croſſes and afflictions, is worſe then hard-hearted Pharaoh, worſe then cruel Adonibezek. But if by this means we come to ſee and acknowledge Pſal. 119. 71. our ſin, then may we ſay with David, It is good for me that I was afflicted; and give thanks and praiſe unto our God, who is able out of ſuch hard rocks as theſe to make flow the ſaving waters of repentance.

Obſerv. 2. And thus I come to my ſecond Obſervation, which is, That God's judgements for ſin is one of the ſtrongeſt motives to make an Atheiſt confeſs there is a God. Thoſe who ſay, There is no God, David accounts them in the number of fools: The fool ſaith in his heart, There is no God, Pſal. 53. 1. Now Solomon ſtyleth Puniſhment Eruditio ſtultorum, the Schoolmaſter of fools. If for all fools, then alſo for Atheiſticall fools, that they either by their own, or by example of God's plagues upon others, may be taught to put away their folly.

Moſt

Moſt certain it is, The not obſerving of God's judgements, or the ſuppoſed examples of ſome who ſeem to eſcape the hand of God in the greateſt ſins, is a main occaſion of Atheiſm. This made David himſelf to ſay, My feet were almoſt gone, my ſteps had well-nigh ſlipped: For I was envious at the fooliſh, when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked. It is reported of Diagoras Melius, ſurnamed the Atheiſt, that at the firſt he was very devout, and a great worſhipper of the Gods; but having committed ſome certain money unto a friend's keeping, and afterwards demanding it again, his friend, loth to forgo ſuch a booty, forſware that he ever received any: whom when Diagoras ſaw, notwithſtanding this horrible perjury, to thrive and proſper, and no divine judgement to fall upon him, he preſently turned Atheiſt and enemy to the Gods, and laboured by all means to bring other men to the like impiety. Judg. 1. 7. Pſal. 73. 2. 3.

For this cauſe therefore David, as jealous of God's honour, and knowing what force God's Judgements have to keep Atheiſm from creeping into the hearts of men, deſireth God, Pſal. 59. 13. that he would avenge himſelf of evil-doers, even for this end, that it might be known he was the Lord: Conſume (ſaith he) in thy wrath, conſume them, that they may not be; and let them know (that is, that men may know) that God ruleth in Jacob, unto the ends of the earth. And hence it is alſo that God often in Ezekiel doth plainly affirm this to be the End of his judgements, that it might be known that he was the Lord. As in chapter 6. v. 6. thus he threatens Iſrael, Your cities ſhall be laid waſte, and your high places ſhall be deſolate, &c. v. 7. And the ſlain ſhall fall in the midſt of you, and you ſhall know that I am the Lord. And again, v. 12, 13. He that is far off, ſhall die by the peſtilence; and he that is near, ſhall fall by the ſword. Then ſhall ye know that I am the Lord. And chap. 25. 17. concerning the Philiſtins, I will execute great vengeance upon them, ſaith the Lord, with furious rebukes: and they ſhall know that I am the Lord, when I ſhall lay my vengeance upon them. If this then be ſo as ye have heard, let us learn hence a good preſervative againſt Atheiſm, and all the ill motions of the devil and our fleſh drawing thereunto: not lightly, as moſt men doe, to paſs over the Judgements of God upon ſin; but duly and diligently to obſerve them: if in our ſelves, then more ſeverely; if in our neighbours, curiouſly, but charitably.

And ſo I come to the third and laſt point, which is, That as Puniſhment in general bringeth ſin to minde, which elſe would be forgotten: ſo the faſhion and kinde thereof well conſidered may lead us, as it were by the hand, to know the very ſin we are puniſhed for. I have ſhewed already at large, That God's viſible judgements have uſually in them a ſtamp and mark of conformity with the ſin for which they are inflicted: For either we ſuffer the ſame thing our ſelves that we have done to others, or ſome reſembling or like unto it; or elſe are puniſhed about the ſame thing wherein our ſin was; or laſtly, in the place or time where and when we ſinned. I am perſwaded there is no judgement which God ſends for any ſpecial ſin, but it hath one of theſe marks in it. Come therefore to Adonibezek, and let us learn of him, by God's ſtamp in our puniſhment to find out what ſin he aims at. If we would once uſe to reade this Hand-writing of God in our croſſes and afflictions, what a motive would it be to make us leave many a ſin wherein the Devil nuzzles us the greateſt part of our life without ſenſe and feeling? For if any thing would rouze us and ſcare us from ſin, ſure this would, to hear word from God himſelf what the ſin is he plagues us for, and ſo ſharply warns us to amend. Whenſoever therefore any croſs or calamity befalls us or any of ours, either in body, goods, or name, or in the ſucceſs Obſerv. 3.

Judg. 1. 7. of any thing we take in hand, let us not rebell againſt God with an impatient heart, or fret at the occaſion or author of our miſery; but let us take a juſt account of our life paſt, and thus reaſon with our ſelves, This is ſurely none other but the very Finger of God; I am puniſhed, therefore have I ſinned: I am puniſhed thus and thus, in this or that ſort, in this or that thing, in this or that place or time; therefore God is angry with me for ſomething I have done, the ſame with that I ſuffer, or ſomething like unto it, or becauſe I ſinned in this thing, or at this time, or in this place, when and where I now am puniſhed: As I have done, ſo ſurely God hath requited me. Therefore I will not look any longer upon any other cauſe or occaſion of this miſery, of this croſs or calamity, but look unto my ſin, and give glory unto God, who ſent the hand which hath done all this unto me.

Thus did the ſons of Jacob, having no doubt learned of their good father to make this uſe of their croſſes and afflictions: For when they ſaw themſelves ſo roughly entertained in Egypt, being challenged for ſpies of the countrey; when their brother Simeon was to lie in priſon in a ſtrange land; and not only this brother, but another brother, ſo dearly beloved of his father, muſt needs be taken from him, and come into the like jeopardy; when all this diſtreſs fell ſtill upon the head of a brother, and nothing but a brother; they preſently diſcovered the Hand-writing of God, and cried Gen. 42. 21. out, We are guilty, and therefore is this evil come upon us: Behold the Finger of God. All this evil ſtill lights upon one or other of our brethren; for we are verily guilty concerning a brother, our brother Joſeph, *in that we ſaw the anguiſh of his ſoul, when he beſought us, and we would not hear; there-*Verſ. 22. fore is this diſtreſs come upon us. Ah! ſaid Reuben, I told you, I ſpake unto you that you ſhould not ſin againſt the child, but you would not hear: therefore behold his bloud is now required. Yea this writing of God is yet more evident, for we ſinned in the dearly-beloved of our Father, Joſeph, and now are we diſtreſſed about our brother Benjamin, the child whom our Father loveth: As we have done, ſo God hath requited us.

This is the laſt point I obſerved in theſe words, and it contains the Uſe of all the former. Verbum ſapienti, one word is enough to him that is wiſe, and one Example is ſufficient for him that is willing to follow it.

DIS-

DISCOURSE XXXI.

S. MATTHEW 11. 28, 29.

Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavie laden, and I will give you reſt.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye ſhall finde reſt unto your ſouls.

I SHALL not need trouble you with prefacing of the coherence: The words I have read are an intire ſenſe of themſelves, without dependence on what went before. For the matter, they are ſuch, as I might call them an Epitome or Brief ſumme of the whole Goſpel, containing in few words the compleat method of Salvation, and as in a ſmall map a full view of the way to the gates of Eternal life; whither he is moſt unworthy to come who will not learn ſo ſmall a Catechiſm as this. They are propounded unto us by way of an Invitation, conſiſting of Three parts: 1. The Thing, 2. The Perſons, 3. The Benefit.

1. The Thing invited to, which is double, to wit, Chriſt and his yoke. Come unto me, ſaith he, and take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly.

2. The Perſons invited, Thoſe that labour and are heavie laden: Come all ye that labour and are heavie laden.

3. The Benefit to thoſe who embrace the invitement, Reſt and Eaſe; which you ſhall finde in every corner of this Invitation. I will give you reſt, or, I will eaſe you: again, Ye ſhall finde reſt unto your ſouls: and in concluſion, My yoke is eaſie, and my burthen is light. A Benefit ſo tranſcendent, as might allure any eare, that is not wholly ſtopped up with ſpiritual deafneſs, to liſten after the means whereby it is attained.

Let us therefore conſider theſe Three points in order; and firſt, that which muſt firſt be known and learned, The quality of the perſons invited; Thoſe that labour, and are heavie laden. Which before I tell you what they mean, I muſt firſt tell you how to conſtrue them, viz. by the Figure called Hendiadis, underſtanding the conjunction [and] cauſally; and ſo contriving the two things named into one, in this manner, labour and heavie laden, into labouring of being heavie laden: As if it had been ſaid, Come unto me all ye that labour of, or by, being heavie laden; All you that are toiled with, and weary of, your heavie burthen, come unto me, and I will eaſe you. I.

For after this manner are many things in Scripture which are uttered conjunction-wiſe to be underſtood. I will multiply thy ſorrow and thy conception, (ſaith God unto the woman, Gen. 3. 16.) that is, I will multiply thy ſorrows of conception, or the ſorrows which come of conception. You ſhall finde often in Scripture, Doe judgement and righteouſneſs; that is, Doe judgement according to righteouſneſs; Doe ſuch judgement as proceeds from juſtice and righteouſneſs. Pſal. 116. 1. I love the Lord, becauſe he hath heard my voice and my ſupplication, that is, the voice of my ſupplication.

Jer.

Matt. 11. 28, 29.

Jer. 29. 11. The Lord promiſeth his people to give them an end and expectation; that is, the end of their expectation, or the end they look for. In this Goſpel, ſaith S. John Baptiſt, chap. 3. verſ. 11. He that cometh after me, ſhall baptize you with the holy Ghoſt and with fire; that is, with the fire of the holy Ghoſt. So in my Text, weary and heavie laden, is weary of being heavie laden; ſuch as labour, ſuch as are toiled and tired out by the weight of their loading. And thus are the words to be conſtrued.

—— Patcris libamus & auro (ſaith the Poet,) that is, Libamus patcris ex auro: — Chalybem frænoſque momordit, i. frænos ex chalybe, or chalybeos frænos.

Now to the meaning of them. Thoſe that labour of being heavie laden, are ſuch as grieve and groan under the burthen of their ſins. According to the Law, none ſhould appear before the Lord empty*: what offering, what ſacrifice then muſt we bring when we come in to Chriſt, but that which David (who well knew) tells us Pſal. 51. 17. The ſacrifice of God (ſaith he) is a broken ſpirit: A broken and contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not deſpiſe? Thus muſt they come furniſhed whom Chriſt inviteth. For this is that which S. Paul calls, 2 Cor. 7. 10. a ſorrow after God, or a godly ſorrow, which, ſaith he, worketh repentance to ſalvation, not to be repented of. For underſtanding therefore of this Metaphor in my Text, we muſt know, That Sin is compared in Scripture unto a burthen, wherewith every ſinner is loaden, yea overcharged; a burthen intolerable. So Pſal. 38. 4. Mine iniquities, ſaith David, are gone over mine head; as a heavie burthen they are too heavie for me. Ver. 6. I am troubled, I am bowed down greatly. Ver. 8. I am feeble and ſore broken; I have roared becauſe of the diſquietneſs of my heart. S. Paul followeth the like manner of ſpeech, when he tells us, 2 Tim. 3. 6. of ſilly women laden with ſins, and led away with divers luſts. This loading and preſſure of ſin is in reſpect of a twofold weight which oppreſſeth the Soul, the one of Puniſhment, the other of Loathſomneſs. For the weight of Puniſhment; it is the ordinary ſtyle of the Prophets to term God's Judgements for ſin by the name of burthens. Jehu calls his execution upon Jehoram, the burthen which the Lord laid upon his father Ahab, 2 King. 9. 25. So S. Paul ſaith, Gal. 6. 5. that every one ſhall bear his own burthen. For the other, the Loathſomneſs of ſin, that alſo weighs heavie. Ah ſinful Nation! (ſaith the Prophet Eſay, ch. 1. 4.) a people laden with iniquity, a ſeed of evil doers——and it follows, v. 6. From the ſole of the foot, even unto the head, there is no ſoundneſs in it, but wounds, and bruiſes, and putrefying ſores. This alſo is a part of David's burthen, Pſal. 38. 5, 6. My wounds ſtink and are corrupt, becauſe of my fooliſhneſs. I am troubled, (or wryed, עָוִיתִי Incurvatus ſum,) I am bowed down greatly.

Sin a burthen and load in reſpect of the weight of { Puniſhment. / Loathſomneſs.

Is Sin indeed ſo heavie a thing? how then do we make it ſo light a matter? Nullum onus (ſaith Ambroſe Ep. 18.) gravius eſt quàm ſarcina peccatorum & pondus flagitiorum, No burthen is more heavy, no load more preſſing to the Soul, then the weight and load of Sin. If every thing that preſſeth down be heavy, how heavy is that which preſſeth down to Hell, that is, unto that depth of woe whoſe bottome can never be fathomed! Is Sin ſo heavy a thing indeed? how comes it then to paſs we feel it not? Our caſe is ſo much the more fearful and dangerous. For, ſaith Chryſoſtome, Διὰ τοῦτο μέγα δεῖ κακὸν, ὅτι ἀδὲν εἶναι δοκεῖ, The evil is ſo much the greater, by how much it ſeems to be the leſſer. For Phyſicians all agree, that thoſe are moſt dangerouſly ſick who have no ſenſe and feeling of their ſickneſs; whereas on the contrary, to be ſenſible of pain is a ſign the ſickneſs is not deadly. Happy therefore are thoſe who can adde the other word to this, being not onely πεφορτισμένοι laden, but κοπιῶντες labouring under the weight of their burthen. Theſe are thoſe whom Chriſt calleth; and theſe are thoſe whoſe condition we are now to conſider, that we may know it, and whether our ſelves be any of that number.

That

That a man therefore may truly be said to labour and be weary of his burthen, two things are requisite: First, That he feel and be sensible of the weight thereof; Secondly, That he desire to be rid thereof. Mat. 11. 28, 29.

1. He must feel and be sensible of the weight thereof. Now the weight of sin, as I told you, is twofold: First, The weight of Punishment; and secondly, The load of Loathsomness. The first and sooneſt felt is that of Punishment; which as it is the grossest weight, so may it be felt while the sense of the Soul is yet but gross and dull: But to feel the other, that is, to loath our sin, requires a quicker and more tender sense; which is not easily attained to, unless the Soul be first well rubbed and galled with the weight of Punishment. The entry therefore and, as it were, the porch of Penitence, are those Terrours and Pangs of the Soul affrighted with the apprehension of the Wrath of God for Sin, and of the danger we are in therefore. When the piercing sting of an accusing conscience upbraids us, and tells us we are in a state to be damned eternally: That if I should die this day, this night, this houre, I must go to the place of weeping and gnashing of teeth, there to yell and howl with devils in pains unspeakable, and be tormented for ever and ever. When our Soul is stricken with horror, to think how long we have lived in this danger, and how little we thought thereof; nay, how securely we encreased our score, as though we should never have come to a reckoning for the same; how often God might have taken me away in the midst of my sins, and where had I been then? yea, what shall become of me, if he should doe it now? O how am I afraid of this moment, who feared nothing so many years! These are those arrows of the Almighty, which must go through our Souls at the beginning of our Repentance. That we may take up the words of David, Psal. 38. 1. O Lord, rebuke me not in thy wrath, neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure. v. 2. For thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore. v. 3. There is no soundness in my flesh, because of thine anger; neither is there any rest in my bones, because of my sin.

This is a good beginning; but is no more then a beginning: for yet we labour not enough; yet we are not weary enough for Christ to call us unto him. This is but as the prick of a needle, making way for the thread. We must go further, else this will doe us no good. For thus far, as to be sensible and affected with the punishment due for sin, to be terrified with the weight of the wrath of God which lies upon us for the same, thus far he may come who shall be damned. For it is common to the desperate reprobate, as well as to the children of God; to Judas, who hanged himself; to Cain, whom God drave out from his presence; for he could say and confess to God himself, My punishment is greater then I can bear, Gen. 4. 13. Let us therefore see what we are further to adde unto it.

And that is a sense and feeling of the foulness, loathsomness and odiousness of Sin. If we feel not our selves affected with this weight, the former groaning will be accounted no better with God then hypocrisie and slavish fear; for this is the soul and the life of a godly sorrow indeed, without which the other is but a carkase, if it be alone. But if by rubbing and galling our Hearts, it makes them at length so tender as to be sensible not only of the punishment, but to loath Sin it self as a foul and ugly thing; then indeed it begins to live and give some proof it will be sincere. For as a surfeit of meats, how dainty and delicate soever, will afterward make them loathsome: So if we be indeed surcharged with the burthen of our sins, the appetite of the Soul will begin to loath them, though they have been never so full of delight; yea, it will make us loath our selves, and cry out in a mournful manner with S. Paul, Rom. 7. 24. O miserable man that I am! who shall deliver me from this body of death? Even as a man who is covered over with with noisome boils and sores, is not affected onely with the bodily pain caused by them, but even abhors the sight and smell of that which causeth it, as filthy and ugly: So must it be in this leprosie of sin. And indeed, were our eyes once open to see it, Sin is the most ugly, beastly, filthy and noisome thing in the world: For being wholly opposite to God, the most glorious Beauty and most delectable Good; it is contrary to whatsoever is any way seemly, comely, graceful and beautiful: for all these carry in them some Image and resemblance of him; but Sin, none at all. Nay, it is a distasteful and loathsome thing to the Reasonable nature of man, as appears by the continuall upbraiding and griping of the Conscience, which can never down with it. In meats, if any go against our stomach, we abhor and loath them: how much more loathsome is that which the Conscience cannot digest, the stomach and taster of our souls? O how nice and daintie we are, that no loathsome and unpleasant meat should offend (so much as by the sight thereof) our fleshly appetite, which is common to us with beasts! but our Souls, our nobler part, whose safety so much concerns us, we cram and choak with the loathsome filthiness of Sin, and perceive it not. But as those who cannot endure a cat or a mouse, or the like, by Antipathie of nature, when any such thing comes within their sight or near their person, presently they start, and shew some extremity of passion or other; and if they cannot fly it, it casts their body into a cold sweat: So must we labour under the sight of our sins, that we may be of those whom Christ here calleth for. O Lord, supple our hearts with thy quickning grace, that they may be so tender as to feel this part of their burthen as well as the other.

The reason of Sin's Loathsomness.

Thus have we heard the first requisite of such as may be truly said to labour, and be weary of their burthen; namely, To feel and be sensible of a double weight thereof.

2. Now follows the next and last requisite, A desire to be rid thereof. He that truly and unfeignedly labours under the burthen of his sin, he that is indeed weary thereof, will desire to be rid of it: for Sorrow is so much against the good liking of Nature, that he that is pressed with the burthen thereof, will earnestly desire to be eased; will endeavour to shake off his burthen, and remove that which procures his Sorrow. He therefore that is not so far toiled with the pressure of his sins as to have a purpose to forsake and leave them, is no true penitent, none of those who are yet weary enough to go unto Christ for ease.

And lest we might deceive our selves, and think we have a purpose to leave our sins, when we have not; let us examine our selves by these three Rules following.

1. That this purpose must be general, without reservation of any darling sin: For he that retains any sin, is not yet weary enough of his burthen. He that looks for a forgiveness of all his sins, must purpose to forsake them all; he must not with Herod in the Gospel have a reservation of Herodias, his brother Philip's wife: God will not be served with halves; he will have our whole Hearts, or none.

2. He that devises not how to cast off the burthen of his sin, though it pains him, but how to carry it more handsomely and conveniently, by qualifications, distinctions, and the like, he is perhaps heavy laden, for he feels his shoulders pincht; but he is not wearie of carrying; but thinks to ease himself as he in the Fable did his horse of the plough, who sitting still upon his horse back, carried the plough on his own neck: So was the horse eased by a distinction, for now his master carried the plough, and not he.

3. He that hath indeed a purpose to cast off the burthen of his sin and to forsake it, is willing to make amends where he hath wronged; as we see by by the example of Zacchæus in the Gospel. For he that cannot wish from the bottome of his heart that what he hath done were undone, and if it were to doe again, he would never doe it, is no true penitent, nor heartily sorry for his sin. But how can he say thus who hath ill-gotten goods, and will not restore them; who hath power in his hands yet in some sort to undoe his sin, as far as the injury concerneth man, and yet will not doe it? Matt. 11. 28, 29.

And thus you have seen How the persons must be qualified, and what preparation is required of them who are capable of this sweet Invitation of our Saviour, Come unto me all ye that are weary or labour of being heavy laden, and I will ease you.

But you will say, How should a man come to be thus affected? How should he come to be touched with remorse for sin? and what means is to be used? I answer, By a serious and often meditation upon the Law of God, which is a glass wherein to behold the deformity of sin and depth of our misery. Dost thou in deed and good earnest believe that God Almighty hath given this Law to men? Dost thou believe thou hast transgressed and broken every part thereof? Dost thou believe (tell me truly) that all those who have done so are under the wrath of God and in the state of eternal damnation, to be tormented with the devil and his angels for ever? Dost thou, or canst thou, believe all this, and thy heart not yield and bleed to think how woful and fearful a condition thou art in? If it doth not, I say thou dost not yet fully and in earnest believe any of these things. Thou mayest perhaps say so, and think so too; but thou deceivest thine own heart: The devil deludes thee. I say again, Thou believest not; thy perswasion is too slight: For every unrepentant sinner, that knows and hears the law of God without sorrow and contrition of heart, is a piece of an Infidel; and it is Unbelief, and nothing but Unbelief, which makes his Heart so unmoveable and unrelenting.

If a Proclamation came from an earthly Monarch, that whosoever had at any time committed such and such misdemeanours should have his estate confiscated, or suffer some grievous and exquisite torments, as a Traitor unto his Prince: if I should see a man deeply liable unto all this, who could hear of such a Proclamation securely, without trouble and astonishment, that could sleep quietly, and be no whit dejected or cast down therewith; might I not justly think, either he believed himself not guilty of any of the crimes there mentioned, or took it for a counterfeit, or onely some scarecrow never meant to be put in execution? I know your selves would think so. How then is it possible that a man should firmly and seriously give credence to the Law of God and the threats contained therein, and yet his Heart never smite him, his Soul be never touched with remorse? No, without doubt, this Legal faith (for so I call the belief I speak of) is yet a weak one, a superficial and unsetled perswasion (perhaps,) but no grounded or firm impression. Wouldst thou amend it? wouldst thou drive it deeper? Rub thy Heart continually with a fixt and frequent meditation of the severity of God's Law, of the number and greatness of thy transgressions, of the dreadfulness of wrath and vengeance due for the same. Never cease doing this untill thy Heart shall yield, and thy bowels melt within thee. One drop of water weareth not a stone, but continual dropping will doe it. Gutta cavat lapidem, &c. If one meditation will not melt thy Heart, yet a continuance therein will doe it. Those who let bloud will rub the Vein often to make it swell: so must thou rub thy Heart often to make it bleed. A hard skin, with often grinding and fretting, will at length grow thin and tender.

I COME now to the Second thing I propounded in this Invitation, II.

The thing invited to; which is double, Coming unto Chriſt, and Taking his yoke upon us. I begin with the firſt. This coming unto Chriſt is the approaching to him by Faith; which is manifeſted by thoſe places of Scripture where coming and believing are interchangeably uſed as one and the ſame thing. He that cometh to God (ſaith S. Paul, Heb. 11. 6.) muſt believe that God is, and that he is a rewarder of them that ſeek him. John 6. 35. I am (ſaith our Saviour) the bread of life: He that cometh to me, ſhall never hunger; he that believeth on me, ſhall never thirſt. Here coming is expounded by believing. Ver. 37. All that the Father giveth me, ſhall come unto me; and he that cometh to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out. In John 1. 12. it is called a receiving of Chriſt: But as many as received him, to them gave he power (or priviledge) to become the Sons of God, even to them that believed on his Name.

Here therefore obſerve, That a Saving Faith, a Faith which makes Chriſt our own, and hath promiſe of eaſe by him, in a word, that Faith which gives us an intereſt in Chriſt Jeſus, is more then a bare aſſent or perſwaſion that the Goſpel is true, which ſaies that Chriſt is the Son of God, and the Redeemer and Saviour of mankinde. It is a coming Belief, a coming Faith; that is, an aſſent inclining the Soul to Chriſt, to be made partaker of the Benefits through him. Not a bare Speculative aſſent, which remains in the Brain, and proceeds no farther; but ſuch an aſſent as reſts not there, but worketh a motion in the Will, to ſeek and embrace that which is believed. Such an aſſent as not onely believes the Promiſes made in Chriſt, but goes unto him, relies upon him, clings unto him for them. Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavie laden; and I will eaſe you.

To believe the Goſpel is true, that Chriſt Jeſus is the onely means of Salvation ordained by God, I grant it to be a Faith, though it go no farther: But it is an inſufficient Faith, an imperfect and impotent Faith, which is uſually called Hiſtorical Faith; which I make no queſtion but you all have: But if you ſtay here, the Devil believes as much as you do. But a Saving Faith, though it begins with this, yet it ſtaies not there: It ſtands not onely gazing upon Chriſt, but is effectual and powerful upon the Soul, to make it apply and betake it ſelf unto him. This height of Faith the Devils have not, nor can have. They can believe, as well as we, that Chriſt is a Saviour; but never ſo far or ſo much as to have any hope, affiance, or confidence in him. For if a King ſhould proclaim a general pardon to a number of known rebels, and vow execution without mercy upon ſome principal offenders who had cunningly and maliciouſly ſeduced the reſt; both of them might equally believe the Proclamation to be true: yet the one would be encouraged to relie upon the King's clemency, and to ſue out his pardon; but the other would be utterly diſheartned, as being uncapable. Such altogether is the caſe of men and wicked Angels in the Proclamation of the Goſpel: Men hearing Chriſt took the woman's Seed, are encouraged with hope of pardon; the Devils knowing he in no wiſe took the nature of Angels, the better they believe his Incarnation, the leſs are their hopes of their own redemption.

Heb. 11. 6.

Come we therefore to application. He that cometh unto God (ſaith S. Paul) muſt believe that God is, and that he is a Rewarder of them that ſeek him: So ſay I, He that cometh unto Chriſt muſt believe that he is, and that he is the Eaſer of them that ſeek unto him. He that believes this ſufficiently, cannot but go unto Chriſt. You therefore that labour, and are heavy laden with your ſins, do you believe that Chriſt is, and that he is the Eaſer of them that being weary of their ſins ſeek unto him? How can your Soul then but fly unto him with truſt and confidence in him? Yea

but

but, will some men say, I believe that Christ is, and that he is the Easer of them that seek him; yet for all this I can put no trust and confidence in him. Yea, but dost thou believe it so well as to finde thy Soul on wing toward him, to seek and sue for pardon? If thou findest this, thou hast some trust and confidence in him, more or less: For didst thou quite despair of Ease from him, thy Heart could never seek to him: for where a man utterly despairs to obtain, he will not so much as stir a foot to make a suit. Matt. 11. 28, 29.

The motion or flight of the Soul is Desire. He that outof a true sense and feeling of his sin (for no other can doe it in good earnest) desires Christ, he goes unto him. And Christ thou seest requires no more, but that all those who are weary and heavie laden should thus come unto him, and he will ease them. And this is the first degree of a Faith which is Justifying, and gives interest in Christ Jesus: For this Faith is not barely Historical and in speculation, but a Faith in motion, and able to walk and go unto Christ Jesus whom it believeth; which, if cherished, will in time gather such further strength as will fill the Soul with a full and stedfast confidence.

But if thou sayest, Thou believest that Christ is, and that he is the Easer and Saviour of those which seek him, and yet thy Soul is not on wing, nor any motion in thy Heart advancing to him; I say then, either thy Sorrow for thy sin is not true, and therefore thou yet feelest no need of him; or thy Belief is deficient. Whatsoever thou sayest and thinkest of thy self, thou believest not yet throughly and indeed, that Christ Jesus is a Redeemer and Saviour of those that come unto him. For, as I told you before that he believed not the Law throughly and indeed, that could hear it without remorse of Conscience and contrition of Soul: so he believes not the Gospel throughly and firmly, who being laden and grieved for his sins, yet is not able to flie and betake himself unto Christ for mercy. For if you saw a man condemned to die, and in great affliction for the same, who hearing of a Pardon proclaimed for all in his case who would demand it, should nevertheless sit still, and never go about to seek it; who would think but that either he misdoubted the report, or gave but little credence to the word of the King? Such is the case here: There is certainly some defect in believing: And this must be cured after the same manner as that in believing the Law; namely, by a sober and frequent meditation, reading, hearing, and thinking of that great Mysterie revealed of Redemption in Jesus Christ, and of the gracious Promises of the Gospel in and through him. This is Faith's whetstone, which, if it be blunt, will make it keen. This is the onely means to establish thy Belief, if it be deficient or unsetled; if there be any metall in it, this will give it an edge; if there be any sparkles, this will blow them into a flame.

Thus you have heard what Coming to Christ is, that is, what a Saving Faith is; namely, so firmly and effectually to believe that Christ is a Saviour of those that seek him, as doth incline thy Heart to goe unto him, to sue out a Pardon and rely upon him for mercy and redemption.

III. NOW follows the Benefit, Ease and Rest to thy Soul; I will ease you, or give you rest; that is, I will free you of your burthen, I will ease you of your sin, I will acquit you. And this is that we call Justification of a sinner, which is an Absolution or remission of sins by the onely merits and satisfaction of Christ accepted for us and imputed to us: An acquitting and cancelling of all bonds and obligations of transgression for Christ's sake, through the onely merit of his death, passion, and shedding of his bloud. For he that hath right to Christ, hath right in Christ to be partaker of his righteousness and of whatsoever satisfaction he hath undergone for the sins of mankinde; whereby he is justified, that is, acquit before God of the guilt of ſin, and of the puniſhment according to the Law due for the ſame. For God (ſaith S. Paul, 2 Cor. 5. 21.) made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him. Rom. 5. 19. For as by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners: ſo by the obedience of one many are made righteous.

Matt. 11. 28, 29.

This is the Eaſe, this is the Reſt here mentioned, the unlading and unburthening of a ſinner, where Chriſt diſchargeth him of his loading, and beareth it upon his own back. For he (ſaith Eſay, chap. 53. 4, 5, 6.) hath born our griefs, and carried our ſorrows: He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was bruiſed for our iniquities; the chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him, and with his ſtripes we are healed——The Lord laid upon him the iniquity of us all. Thus he eaſed Peter, when his heart was ready to break for denying him: Thus he eaſed Mary Magdalen, a woman laden with ſins, when ſhe bathed his feet with tears, Luke 7. 48. Thus he refreſhed trembling Saul, the perſecutor, Acts 9. 6. And ſtill he caſteth the eyes of his mercy upon every one that is poor and of a contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at his word, Eſa. 66. 2.

See therefore here to whom alone a troubled ſoul is to have recourſe for Eaſe. Neither to Angels nor Archangels: For thoſe who doe ſo hold not the head, Col. 2. 19. Neither to Saints nor Martyrs, to Peter nor Paul, no not to the bleſſed Virgin her ſelf: For Abraham is ignorant of us, and Iſrael knows us not, Eſa. 63. 16. and, Curſed is he that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm, and whoſe heart departeth from the Lord, Jer. 17. 5. Nor to the Law given by Moſes: For the Law worketh (not eaſe, but) wrath, Rom. 4. 15. Nor will our merits and good works, pilgrimages, faſtings or almsdeeds, purchaſe this Eaſe: For although we could doe all we ought to doe, yet muſt we ſay we are unprofitable ſervants, and that we have done but that which was our duty to doe, Luke 17. 10. It is Chriſt Jeſus, and onely Chriſt Jeſus, who can give Reſt to a troubled ſoul, that Lamb of God which taketh away the ſins of the world.

Joh. 1. 29.

AND thus you have in part had a view of the Three points conſiderable in this Invitation: 1. The Perſons, who; 2. the Invitation or Thing invited to, what; and 3. the Benefit to be attained. But I muſt call you to the Second point again, there being one part thereof not yet ſpoken of. For I told you The thing here invited unto was double, Chriſt himſelf, and His yoke. The firſt, concerning Chriſt himſelf, I have ſpoken of in thoſe words, Come unto me. Now it remains to ſpeak of the ſecond, Take my yoke upon you. Thoſe who come unto Chriſt, muſt alſo take his yoke upon them. But what is this yoke? even the yoke of obedience; which ſhould have been ours, but Chriſt for our ſakes took it upon him, and made it his. Yet not that we ſhould draw our necks out of the collar, but ſtill doe our endeavours by denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, to live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly in this preſent world, looking for that bleſſed hope to come. As therefore in coming unto Chriſt you had faith in the Eaſe by him, Acquitting or Juſtification: ſo in the taking his yoke ye have Sanctification or Holineſs of life. All which are ſo linked together, that neither muſt they nor can they be put aſunder. No man comes to Chriſt by Faith, but ſhall be eaſed; but no man can ever truly and ſeriouſly come unto him to be eaſed by him, but he muſt take his yoke upon him: No man puts on Chriſt to be juſtified, but he takes on his yoke alſo to be ſanctified. That which God hath joyned together, let no man put aſunder.

2 Tit. 12, 13.

Matt. 19. 6.

True it is, and nothing more true, That no works of ours in this life can abide the Touch-ſtone of God's Law, and therefore not able to juſtifie us in the preſence of God, but to condemn us. But it is true alſo, That we are therefore juſtified through Faith in the bloud and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, that in him we might doe works pleaſing and acceptable to Almighty God, which out of him we could not doe. For as the bloud and ſufferings of Jeſus Chriſt, imputed to us through Faith, cleanſeth and acquitteth us of all the ſins whereof we ſtood guilty afore we believed: ſo the imputation of his righteouſneſs when we believe makes our works (though of themſelves far ſhort of what they ſhould be, yet) to be acceptable and juſt in the eyes of the Almighty; Chriſt ſupplying out of his Riches our poverty, and by communication of his obedience continually perfecting ours where we fail; that ſo we might receive the reward of the righteous of him that ſhall reward every man according to his works. Being therefore in Chriſt, we are ſo much the more bound to frame our lives in holy obedience unto God's Commandments; in that before we were juſtified we could not, but now henceforth we are enabled to doe that which for Chriſt's ſake will be acceptable and pleaſing to Almighty God our Father. Mart. 11. 28, 29.

are

This is that which S. Peter tells us, 1 Epiſt. 2. 24. That Chriſt his own ſelf bare our ſins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to ſin, ſhould live unto righteouſneſs. So S. Paul, Tit. 2. 11, &c. The grace of God (ſaith he) that bringeth ſalvation hath appeared unto all men; (wherefore?) Teaching us, that denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly in this preſent world; Looking for that bleſſed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 14. Who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purifie unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Here you may ſee, that Chriſt is therefore given us to be a propitiation for our ſins and to juſtifie us, that in him we might walk before God in newneſs of life; ſo to obtain a crown of righteouſneſs in the world to come.

But if this be not enough to perſwade us to take on this yoke of Chriſt, yet I hope this conſideration will doe it; when I ſhall ſhew you, that That Faith can never be true which is not attended with theſe fruits. Nor is there any other mean to aſſure us we are truly come to Chriſt, and ingraffed in him, but this. If we have taken up this yoke of Chriſt, we may know then we have put on him: If we have never put our necks to his yoke, we never put on him. It is S. John's expreſs aſſertion, 1 Epiſt. 1. 6. If we ſay we have fellowſhip with him, and walk in darkneſs, we lye, and doe not the truth. Chap. 2. 3. Hereby we know that we know him, (viz. to be our Advocate with his Father, and the propitiation for our ſins) if we keep his commandments.

The Reaſon is plain; Becauſe the one follows the other, as the heat doth the Fire, or the light the Sun. Which I thus demonſtrate, both on Chriſt's part and ours. On ours thus: He that ſincerely ſues to and ſeriouſly relies upon another for a Favour which nearly concerneth him, and no other can doe for him, will by all means endeavour to avoid whatſoever he knows may diſtaſte his Patron, and doe his beſt to approve himſelf in whatſoever he can learn is moſt pleaſing unto him. If you ſhould ſee a man having a Suit to ſome great Courtier for a pardon of his life, and yet ſhewing no care of doing in his preſence what he knew would deeply offend him, and wilfully neglecting that he knew would give him the beſt content; would you think ſuch a man in earneſt, and ſufficiently perplext with fear of death, and ſeriouſly relying upon that man to ſave it? I know you would not. If therefore, out of a true affrightment and ſenſe of the wrath of God for ſin, with a ſincere and ſerious Faith, thou ſueſt unto and relieſt upon Chriſt for mercy and redemption, as the onely name under heaven Acts 4. 12.

heaven whereby thou canst be saved; how canst thou but love him with all the Powers of thy Soul, and therefore doe thy best to please him, upon whom thou dependest for so great and unvaluable a benefit? If thou dost not, surely thou hast not yet weighed thy misery sufficiently, thy Faith is insufficient and counterfeit, it never yet came home to Christ, that he might ease thee.

The same appears on Christ's part: For unto whomsoever Christ is given for Justification, through the imputation of his merits and righteousness, in him God creates a new heart, and reneweth a right spirit (as the Psalmist speaketh, Psal. 51. 10.) that is, by virtue of this union he conferreth upon him the grace of his Spirit, for the abolishing of the body of sin, and enabling the Soul in some measure against the assaults thereof, to abandon at least the more eminent, notorious, enormous and mortal sins, though sins of ordinary infirmity shall not be quite subdued in this life. If therefore I see a man run still without restraint into gross and open sins, and walk not blameless in the eyes of men, I conclude he hath not this Spirit of grace within him, and therefore was never ingraffed into Christ by a true and lively Faith. Wheresoever therefore is a true faith and unfeigned, 1 Tim. 1. 5. there follows a new life. He that cometh to Christ sincerely, takes his yoke upon him too. Labour therefore, as S. James saith, to shew your faith by your works; for Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, but he that doth the will of my Father (saith Christ) shall inherit the kingdome of heaven.

James 2. 18. Matt. 7. 21.

THE Words which follow are a continuing of the former Exhortation to take upon us the yoke of Christ: First, in general, That we follow his Example, Learn of me: Then in particular, wherein we should follow him, In Meekness and Lowliness; For I am (saith he) Meek and Lowly in heart. Then the Profit we shall reap thereby; Doe this, And ye shall finde rest unto your souls.

For the first, Learn of me: Observe, That Christ is given unto us not onely for a Sacrifice for sin, but for an Example of life. They are the words of one of our Collects. For he is our Lord and King, and Subjects we know will naturally conform and fashion themselves unto the manners of their Princes;

Regis ad exemplum totus componitur orbis:

And those which doe so, are accounted the most devoted to them, and are the best accepted of them. If Christ then be our Lord and King, we must acknowledge him to be such by conforming to his Example, and endeavouring to follow his steps. Besides, since he took this yoke of obedience upon him out of love to us, how can we chuse but offer our necks thereto our selves, out of duty to him? If he hath done so much to make our yoke easie, which before was so unsupportable; should we now think much to put it on? Nay, it is the very character of God's chosen ones, to carry in them a conformity and resemblance of Christ. For whom (saith S. Paul Rom. 8. 29.) he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren.

And this duty of conforming unto Christ consists not onely in doing as he did, but suffering also as he hath done. 1 Pet. 2. 20. If when ye doe well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently; this is acceptable with God. ver. 21. For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an Example, that we should follow his steps. See also 1 Joh. 3. 16. And this conformity and sampling (as I may say) of Christ, extends not onely to those Acts of his which he did as man, where the imitation is plain and direct; but in a certain sort to those supereminent ones, which exceed the nature of a mere man, and were done by the concurrence and power of his Godhead; which becauſe otherwiſe unimitable, we muſt expreſs by way of a myſticall reſemblance. Thus are we to imitate his expiatory Death and Burial, by our dying unto ſin. Shall we continue in ſin, (ſaith S. Paul, Rom. 6. 1.) that grace may abound? v. 2. God forbid. How ſhall we that are dead to ſin, live any longer therein? v. 3. Know ye not that ſo many of us as are baptized into Jeſus Chriſt, were baptized into his death? To the ſame purpoſe, 1 Pet. 4. 1. Foraſmuch, ſaith he, as Chriſt hath ſuffered for us in the fleſh, arm your ſelves likewiſe with the ſame mind; for he that hath ſuffered in the fleſh, hath ceaſed from ſin, &c. So likewiſe in ſuffering one for another, Eph. 5. 1. Be ye followers of God, as dear children, v. 2. And walk in love, as Chriſt hath alſo loved us, and hath given himſelf for us an offering and a ſacrifice to God. In the like manner muſt we imitate his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion. S. Paul Rom. 6. 4. Therefore (ſaith he) we are buried with him into death; that like as Chriſt was raiſed from the dead by the glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life. Accordingly, Col. 3. 1. If then ye be riſen with Chriſt, ſeek thoſe things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God. All which you ſee are grounded upon this one Principle, Learn of me. Some Phyſiognomers conceit the Head of a man to be the modell of the whole Body; and where there is any ſpot, wart, or like mark about the Face or other part of the Head, that there is another anſwerable to it in ſome ſutable part of the Body; and upon this ground they will adventure to diſcover ſome hidden mark in the unſeen parts of the Body. But whatſoever it be in the natural Body, I am ſure it is true in the myſtical Body of Chriſt, That every character in the Head, Chriſt, muſt have ſomething anſwerable to it in his Body, the Church.

Matt. 11. 28, 29.

THUS much for the general, We muſt learn of Chriſt. But what is that here in my Text which Chriſt would have us learn of him? It followeth, I am Meek and Lowly in heart. And this we muſt learn of him; this is that yoke of his he would have us wear, that we may finde reſt unto our ſouls. For under theſe two words our Saviour comprehends the whole Habit of Obedience, they being two ſuch diſpoſitions of the mind as make it tractable and pliable to put on and wear the yoke he ſpeaks of. As if he had ſaid, I am wholly qualified to obedience, I am fitted for this yoke; learn of me to put it on, for I am meek and lowly.

Now though Lowlineſs and Meekneſs are of very near affinity, and ſuch, as both of them do diſpoſe a man for the duties of both Tables of God's Commandments: yet hath Lowlineſs (as I take it) a prerogative in our devotion to Godward; and Meekneſs is more proper for the duties we owe to our neighbours. I will therefore conſtrue them here, as others have done before me, as dividing the whole Decalogue between them; Lowlineſs, as a mother, including the Duties of the Firſt; and Meekneſs, thoſe of the Second Table. Which are the two parts of that Yoke which Chriſt wore for us, and which every one that cometh to him muſt learn to put on.

Of Lowlineſs.

In the handling whereof I will therefore rather chuſe to follow the order of the Decalogue, and firſt begin with Lowlineſs, though it be laſt placed in the words. Lowlineſs therefore, as I ſaid, ſtands here for the whole duty of the Firſt Table, which is Cultus Dei, religious ſervice or devotion towards God; or, as the Scriptures phraſe is, The fear of the Lord: Which as it is founded upon the acknowledgement of the Superlative and Tranſcendent Excellency of God in his Soveraignty of Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs; ſo the firſt and mother-diſpoſition and affection of the Heart to his Worſhip and Service is Humiliation of the ſoul and Lowlineſs of mind: For all Excellency is worſhipped with humility, reverence and ſubmiſſion; that is,

Matt. 11. 28, 29. as we ſometimes, and rightly, ſpeak, By keeping a diſtance: And the Soveraign or Supreme Excellency of God muſt be adored with the loweſt demiſſion of mind, and with the greateſt ſtoop the Soul can make. We finde by experience, that diſpoſition of the eye which fitteth it to behold the viſible Sun, makes a man blind when he looks down upon himſelf: So here the apprehenſion of the Excellency of God, ten thouſand times brighter then the Sun, muſt needs darken all overweening worthineſs in our ſelves. The greater we would apprehend his Power, the more ſenſible we muſt be of our own Weakneſs. The greater we acknowledge and adore his Goodneſs, the leſs Goodneſs muſt we ſee in our ſelves. The more we would apprehend his Wiſdom, the leſs we are to be puffed up with our own knowledge. As in a pair of ſcales, the higher we would raiſe the one ſcale, the lower we pull down the other: ſo the higher we raiſe God in our hearts, the lower we muſt depreſs our ſelves. Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. And this is that Lowlineſs of heart which Chriſt would have us learn of him, Who being in the form of God——made himſelf of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a ſervant——And being found in faſhion as a man, he humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Croſs, Phil. 2. 6, 7, 8.

Matt. 5. 3.

Hence it comes, that the humbleſt nature and the humbleſt condition are the fitteſt for devotion. For humble natures, experience ſhews them the moſt religious; whereas thoſe which the world ſo much commendeth for high and brave ſpirits, of all others do buckle the worſt unto devotion. God ſeeth not as man ſeeth: It is not the talleſt Eliab, but the humbleſt David, who is the man after God's own heart: He that humbleth himſelf as a little child, the ſame is the talleſt and goodlieſt ſoul in the kingdom of heaven. The ſtarrs in the firmament, howſoever they here ſeem ſmall to us, yet are bigger then the earth: So he that is deſpicable and ſmall here in the eyes of men, is there a great one in the eyes of God.

1 Sam. 16. 7.

As the humbleſt nature, ſo the humbleſt eſtate and condition is beſt fitted for Religion; as the poor rather then the rich. Therefore Agur deſired of God, not to give him riches, more then food convenient for him; leſt being full, he ſhould deny him, and ſay, Who is the Lord? Such likewiſe is the ſtate of adverſity and affliction, being a ſtate of lowlineſs, and an eſtate wherein our hearts are taken down; and therefore more fit to bring us home to God then that of proſperity: whence you know that David ſaies, Pſal. 94. 12. Bleſſed is the man whom thou chaſteneſt, O Lord; and Pſal. 119. 67, 71. Before I was afflicted I went aſtray, but now I have kept thy word. It is good for me that I have been afflicted.

Prov. 30. 8, 9.

For diſeaſes (ſay the Phyſicians) muſt be cured by contraries. It was Pride which cauſed the diſloyalty and rebellion both of Men and Angels againſt their Creator: whence is that of the Son of Sirach, Eccluſ. 10. 12. The beginning of Pride is, when one departeth from God, and his heart is turned away from his Maker. ver. 13. Pride is the beginning of ſin, and he that hath it ſhall pour out abominations. If Pride then be the beginning of our rebellion againſt God, then muſt Lowlineſs be the proper diſpoſition of thoſe who fear and worſhip him. And, Tanto quiſque eſt vilior Deo, quanto eſt pretioſior ſibi; The higher any one is in his own eſteem, the lower he is in God's.

Now from this near affinity and inſeparable dependance between a Religious devotion and an Humble and Lowly minde, it is that the Scripture uſeth them as equipollent terms. Prov. 22. 4. By humility and the fear of the Lord are riches, honour, and life. Prov. 3. 33. The curſe of the Lord is in the houſe of the wicked; but he bleſſeth the habitation of the juſt. Ver. 34.

Surely

Surely he ſcorneth the ſcorners, but he giveth grace, or ſheweth favour, unto the lowly. Where ſcorners and the wicked on the one part, and the lowly and the juſt on the other, are interchangeably uſed for one and the ſame. In like manner ſpeaks the ſon of Sirach, Eccluſ. 12. 4, 5. Give to the godly man, and help not a ſinner. Which in the next words he altereth thus, Doe well unto him that is lowly, but give not to the ungodly. In the ſame notion of Humility and Lowlineſs, S. Paul tells the Epheſian Elders at Miletus, that he had ſerved the Lord with all humility of mind, Acts 20. 19. Matt. 11. 28, 29.

I have dwelt the longer upon this point, To ſhew that Lowlineſs of mind is the proper diſpoſition for devotion and the mother of a religious fear, becauſe the preſent occaſion, if you examine it, is nothing elſe but the exerciſe of what I ſpeak of. For the end of Faſting is to beget lowlineſs and humbleneſs of mind, that ſo we might be rightly diſpoſed and affected to approach the Divine Majeſty, and tender our ſupplications unto him: Eſpecially at ſuch times when his dreadful rod is ſhaken over us, to bid us down and cry for mercy, leſt we periſh. Are they not ſome of the firſt words we uttered this day? O come, let us humble our ſelves, and fall down before the Lord with reverence and fear. Hence Faſting and Humbling a mans ſelf go in Scripture for equipollent terms. My clothing was ſackcloth (ſaith David, Pſal. 35. 13.) I humbled my ſelf with faſting. So Ahab humbled himſelf, and thereby deferred his judgement, 1 King. 21. 29. Hezekiah humbled himſelf, both he and the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, 2 Chron. 32. 26. Manaſſeh likewiſe beſought the Lord, and humbled himſelf greatly before the God of his Fathers, 2 Chro. 33. 12.

If we take a view of the Ceremonies of this Diſcipline which the Ancients uſed, and we in ſome part continue, they imply nothing elſe but Lowlineſs; either to expreſs it, if we be already ſo affected; or to work and beget it in our hearts, if as yet we have it not. They are reducible to three heads: 1. of Habit, 2. of Geſture, 3. of Diet. For Habit, it was anciently Sackcloth and Aſhes. By the courſneſs of Sackcloth they ranked themſelves, as it were, amongſt the meaneſt and loweſt condition of men. By Aſhes, and ſometimes Earth, upon their heads, they made themſelves lower then the loweſt of the creatures of God: For the loweſt of the Elements is the Earth, then which we uſe to ſay a man cannot fall lower.

Qui jacet in terra, non habet unde cadat.

For Geſture, they ſate or lay upon the ground, which in the Primitive Church was called χαμαιτυπία· a natural ceremony both to expreſs and ingenerate or increaſe Lowlineſs of mind; and as frequently practiſed among the Chriſtian Fathers, as it is ſeldom or never uſed among us. It were a thing moſt comely, and undoubtedly moſt profitable, if either theſe ceremonies, or ſome other anſwerable to them, were again revived. If we were all of us this day attired (not in Sackcloth, for perhaps it ſutes not with the cuſtome of our Nation, yet) in the dolefulleſt habit of mourners, if we lay all groveling upon the ground; would not ſuch a ſpectacle, would not the very ſight of ſuch an uncouth Aſſembly much affect us? The mournful hue of Funeral ſolemnities, we know by experience, will often make them to weep who otherwiſe had no particular cauſe of ſorrow.

But the Principal ceremony, and which we retain, is Abſtinence from meat and drink, from which this whole exerciſe hath the name of Faſting: the End thereof being to bring down our bodies, thereby the better to humble our ſouls, or to expreſs ſo much; I mean, to expreſs our ſorrow and dejection, if we be already ſo affected. Mores animi ſequuntur temperamentum corporis: If the Body be full and luſty, the Mind will be lofty and refractary, and moſt unfit to approach the Divine Majeſty with reverence and fear. How incompoſed is that Heart to ſue to God for mercy and averſion verſion of his judgements, which hath rebellious, unclean, proud and luſtfull thoughts all the while barking within it, as ſo many dogs of hell: But theſe are all engendered and cheriſhed by full feeding, and cannot be eaſily quelled unleſs they be ſtarved. When I fed Iſrael to the full, (ſaith the Lord, Jer. 5. 7, 8.) then they committed adultery, and aſſembled by troups in harlots houſes, &c. Jeſhurun (ſaith Moſes in his prophetical ſong, Deut. 32. 15.) waxed fat and kicked, and forſook the Lord that made him, and lightly eſteemed of the rock of his ſalvation.

Wherefore S. Paul was fain to pinch his Body, and bring it down with faſting: I keep under my body (ſaith he, 1 Cor. 9. 27.) and bring it into ſubjection; leſt that by any means, when I have preached unto others, I my ſelf ſhould be a caſt-away. Hilarion, a religious young man, when after much abſtinence and courſe diet he felt his fleſh ſtill unruly and rebellious, Ego, (inquit) Aſelle, faciam ut non calcitres, nec te hordeo alam, ſed paleis, fame & ſiti te conficiam: thus threatning his Beaſt, (that is, his Body) that he would take an order with it, that it ſhould not kick; and that he would no longer feed his Aſs with corn, but give it a little chaffe or ſtraw; nay puniſh it with hunger and thirſt. Such is the danger of a pampered Body, and ſuch the neceſſity of keeping it under.

Thus you ſee what is the chief End we are to aim at in this our ſolemn abſtinence; namely, to beget this lowlineſs in our hearts, this humiliation in our ſouls, to ſubdue the high-mounting flames of our unruly deſires, by withdrawing the fuell which breeds and nouriſhes them. Which as it is at all times requiſite in ſome meaſure, whenſoever we approach the Majeſty of God for mercy and forgiveneſs; ſo then eſpecially and in a more then uſuall manner, when God ſhakes the rod of his judgements over our heads, and bids us down and proſtrate both ſouls and bodies before him, leſt his judgements break us in pieces, if we bow not. He that attaineth this, hath faſted well: he that hath not, may thereby know he hath not done enough, or not as he ſhould doe. If the boiling of our luſts be cooled and calmed; if the ſwelling conceits of worth in our ſelves be taken down, with a true and feeling apprehenſion of our vileneſs and wretchedneſs by reaſon of ſin, which makes us the moſt unworthy creatures in the world; if thoſe ramping weeds of contempt and deſpiſing of others be cropped and withered; if after this manner we be affected, then are we humbled: if not, we are not yet ſufficiently taken down; all our ſervice is hypocriſie, nor will our devotion be accepted of that All-ſeeing Majeſty who reſiſteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble.

James 4. 6. 1 Pet. 5. 5.

Of Meekneſs.

THUS much of Lowlineſs, the mother of the duties of the Firſt Table. Now I come to Meekneſs, which implies our obedience to the Second. What Meekneſs, or Manſuetudo, ſignifies in Ethicks every one knows, that Vertue which tempereth anger; or, as I may ſo call it, Unangrineſs. But ſometimes whileſt we take words in Scripture according to our own or the Philoſophical notion, we ſlip into a miſtake; as it falls out in this word Meekneſs, whoſe notion in the Hebrew and Scripture uſe is as large wellnigh as of Vertue it ſelf, ſo far as it hath reſpect to the Second Table. For it ſignifies, as I may ſo ſpeak, yokeableneſs, or a pliableneſs and tractableneſs to be ordered; a certain tameneſs of diſpoſition to obedience of laws, for untamed cattel are not fit for yoke; and may be expreſſed, as I think, by Ingenuity, or Ingenuous goodneſs; or, as we ſpeak, Fair-conditioned; by which we underſtand a general diſpoſition to be well ordered in ſuch actions as are exerciſed in the converſation of men.

Thus it is taken in that of our Saviour, Bleſſed are the meek, for they ſhall inherit the earth, Matt. 5. 5. Which appears out of Pſal. 37. 10, 11. whence it it is taken, where the meek and the wicked are opposed as terms of equal extent. For yet a little while (saith David) and the wicked shall not be: but the meek shall inherit the earth. Who seeth not that by meek is here meant the opposite party to the wicked? So I understand that, Psal. 76. 9. God arose to judgement, to save all the meek of the earth; id est, omnes probos terræ, all the honest or vertuous of the earth. And Psal. 149. 4. For the Lord taketh pleasure in his people; he will beautifie the meek with salvation. Zeph. 2. 3. Seek the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgement, seek righteousness, seek meekness: It may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger. Amos 2. 6. For three transgressions and for four of Israel, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes. Vers. 7. That pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor, and turn aside the way of the meek. Here that which in the first is expressed poor and righteous, in the next is changed into poor and meek, shewing meek and righteous to be equipollent terms. So S. James 1. 21, 22. as writing to Hebrews, useth the Hebrew notion; Wherefore (saith he) lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the ingraffed word, which is able to save your souls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers onely. Again, ch. 3. 13. Who is a wise man and indued with knowledge amongst you? let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom: where it is evident, that meekness cannot be taken in that restrained sense of Philosophers, for that would be non-sense.

Matt. 11. 28, 29.

Yet I deny not but Meekness in Scripture also is taken for a special vertue: and for the excellency of that vertue amongst men, were all the rest denominate thereof: For it is an usual Trope of the Scripture, to make that which is taken for the most eminent and notable in any kinde, to bear the name of the whole kinde; as the fore-man speaks for the whole Jury, and Armies are comprised in the names of their Chieftains. In the Decalogue it is a regular Synecdoche; Father and Mother, for all sorts of Superiours; Murther, for whatsoever hurt to the body of our neighbour; Adultery, for all sins of intemperance; Theft, all injuries in our neighbour's goods; the sanctifying of an holy day, to comprehend the holy usage of all things sacred and consecrate to divine uses. So Peace, the chief of blessings, stands in the Hebrew style for happiness; that is, all blessings whatsoever. Whence is their salutation, Peace be unto you. So Meekness, of near a-kin to Peace, stands here for a general name to all probity or honesty; as Lowliness did for Religious devotion. For the yoke of devotion to God hath its peculiar, to be taken on with stooping and humbleness; the yoke of a well-ordered converse with men, with this tameness or meekness. For as Meekness in the special sense is a vertue exercised onely towards men: so in this general notion thereof, I extend it no farther; making, as I told you, Lowliness and Meekness to share the Decalogue betwixt them.

Here now I might observe at large, How Meekness seasoneth all our actions and carriage towards men, giving that genuine sweetness and relish of Vertue to them all; this being the reason of that so general acception of the word in the phrase of Scripture. I might also inlarge my self unto all the several offices and duties of this Vertue. But let me commend unto you those two which are most principal and immediate, and therefore expressly required in our Liturgie, as the truest tokens of repentance; namely, forgiving of offences, and satisfaction of injuries; both of them genuine off-springs of this Meekness.

And

Matt. 11. 28, 29.

And ye ſhall finde reſt unto your ſouls.

HERE is that ineſtimable Benefit which befalleth thoſe who take up Chriſt's yoke and learn of him to be meek and lowly; they ſhall finde reſt unto their ſouls. For the underſtanding whereof we muſt know, that there is a twofold Eaſe mentioned in this invitation of our Saviour. The one, to thoſe who come unto him by faith, Come unto me, &c. and I will eaſe you, or give you reſt. The ſecond, to thoſe who take upon them his yoke, that is, the yoke of obedience to God's commandments; a yoke which Chriſt firſt wore for our ſakes, and made it his, that ſo he might make it poſſible for us to wear it, whileſt the main weight ſtill reſts upon his ſhoulders: Thoſe who put their necks to this yoke ſhall finde reſt unto their ſouls.

Theſe two Reſts are near of kin, but not the ſame: The firſt Reſt is that which Chriſt gives; the ſecond, the Reſt which we ſhall finde. All thoſe who come and by Faith apply themſelves to Chriſt ſhall have Eaſe: But there is ſomething elſe to be done before our ſelves ſhall finde and know it; we muſt put our necks into the collar, and take his yoke upon us, and then there ſhall not onely be Reſt obtained for us, but we ſhall finde and feel our ſelves eaſed.

For a ſinner hath a twofold Burthen; 1. The weight of his ſin, and 2. The pain he feels thereby; for ſuch is the condition we know of every one that is laden. Anſwerable therefore to this twofold Burthen, there is a twofold Reſt and Eaſe to be attained. The firſt is by taking off the burthen by remiſſion of our ſin in our juſtification, when Chriſt diſcharges thoſe who come unto him of their load, and beareth it upon his own back, by juſtifying and acquitting them of ſin. The ſecond is the ceaſing of the pain which the preſſure of ſin hath cauſed; when a ſinner by wearing of the yoke of Chriſt finds peace of conſcience, and eaſe and reſt unto his ſoul. For the pain and aking of the ſoul for ſin doth not preſently ceaſe, though ſin be taken off. A man condemned to die, doth not preſently feel the comfort of his pardon as ſoon as it is obtained; for it may be gotten many daies before he knows it, and till then his pain and diſcomfort will be as if it were not gotten at all. Alſo a man that hath overlong born a burthen too heavie for him, is often, we know, ſo benummed, that he thinks he feels the preſſure of his burthen ſtill, ſome while after it is taken off his back. So is the eaſe here; the pain of the ſoul will not preſently ceaſe when Chriſt hath taken off our ſin, nor will the joy and comfort of our pardon be ſo ſoon found as our pardon is obtained.

1. Let this then be the firſt Obſervation, That as thoſe onely are juſtified and diſcharged of their ſin by remiſſion who flee unto Chriſt by Faith: ſo onely thoſe have promiſe of reſt and peace of conſcience who take his yoke upon them; and being, as he was, meek and lowly, ſtoop unto God, and ſubmit their lives unto his Commandments. Art thou heavy laden, and wouldſt thou be diſcharged of thy ſin? Go unto Chriſt, and he will eaſe thee. Wouldſt thou know thy ſins are acquitted? wouldſt thou have peace, and feel thy conſcience ſweetly comforted? Take this yoke upon thee, learn of him to be yokeable, to be meek and lowly, to walk in the waies of God, and thou

1 John 2. 3. ſhalt finde reſt to thy ſoul. By this, ſaith S. John, we know that we know him, (namely, to be our Advocate, and the propitiation for our ſins) if we keep his Commandments. There is no way but this to feel and have notice thy ſins are forgiven thee.

Many do truſt all to a ſuppoſed Faith as a ſhort and compendious cut to quiet their conſcience: but never look to finde peace with God ſo long as thou thou haſt peace with ſin: There is no peace unto the wicked, ſaith the *Prophet. What Jehoram, 2 King. 9. 22. asked Jehu, Is there peace, Jehu? What peace (ſaith Jehu) ſo long as the whoredomes of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are ſo many? So ſaith God to all ſuch whoſe life and converſation is unreformed; What peace can be unto thy ſoul, ſo long as contempt of his worſhip, extortion, defrauding of thy neighbour, covetouſneſs, drunkenneſs, backwardneſs to all good duties, reign ſtill within thee? If thou wouldſt have peace in thy ſoul; if thou wouldſt have the wringing torments of a troubled conſcience to be calmed within thee; if thou wouldſt finde out that peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding; let thy whole life and converſation, as far as thou art able, be ruled by the Law of God; wear that yoke which Chriſt thy Saviour hath made ſo eaſie; learn of him to be meek and lowly, and thou ſhalt finde reſt unto thy ſoul.

* Matt. 11. 28, 29.
* Eſa. 48 22.
Phil. 4 7.

But ſome perhaps will ſay, What needs ſo much preciſeneſs and ſtrictneſs of life? For my part, I doe as other men doe; I can diſpenſe ſometime and take my pleaſure in ſin, and am not thus yoked (as you ſpeak,) but take my liberty according as I ſee advantage, either for my profit or contentment; and yet am not diſquieted, but finde my ſoul at reſt and eaſe without thus much ado.

I anſwer, It is hard to conceive that a man ſhould give himſelf the reins to commit ſin, and his Conſcience not to twitch him more or leſs, though he uſeth all the means he can to ſmother it. But if it doth not, thy caſe is ſo much the more woful and dangerous: For, alas! it is not a reſt and eaſe of ſoul, as thou miſdeemeſt, but hardneſs and deadneſs of heart, which thou miſtakeſt for reſt and quietneſs. A condition then which there cannot be a worſe, and of all eſtates of the ſoul the moſt hopeleſs. And this is the fruit of a cuſtomary violation of the Conſcience, which being often bruiſed, ſcratched at firſt with ſmaller ſins, and at length rent and torn with greater, contracts one ſcar and brawn all over, and ſo becomes ſenſeleſs and unfeeling. How dreadful therefore is it, if men would conſider it, to adventure the Conſcience upon the leaſt violence? if it endure but a ſcratching once or twice, it is ſecretly, and before a man is aware, hardned to endure a wound. O let us be then tender to keep our Conſcience tender, elſe we are undone. Is it therefore indeed ſo with thee, that thou canſt take thy ſinful liberty, and yet finde no ſcruple check thee? Canſt thou caſt off the yoke of Chriſt, and yet thy heart be at reſt within thee; or at the worſt, if it pants a little, it will ſoon have done? O rouſe it up in time, elſe the time will come, when thy Conſcience will be ſo awaked, that all the world cannot quiet and ſtill it. The longer it hath been ſmothered, the more dreadful and unquenchable will the flame be when it once breaketh out. No tongue of mortal man is able to expreſs the terrours which then ſhall overwhelm thee.

In the day-time we know Spirits and Hobgoblins uſually walk not, but in the night-time, when darkneſs covereth the face of the earth: So in the brightneſſe and Sun-ſhine of health and proſperity, what marvell though this terrible Fiend, an evil Conſcience, doth not much haunt a dull and ſtupid heart? but in the darkneſs of ſickneſs, in the midnight of death, when the black times of calamity ſhall ſurpriſe thee, then will this griſly and gaſtly Spirit begin to affright and ſcare thee; then will he roar in the chamber of thy ſoul, and moſt hideouſly rattle his chains about thine eares.

As the blows and bruiſes received in the flower of our youth, though then we feel them not, will pain us in the decay of our ſtrength, in our declining years: So the blows and bruiſes given the ſoul by ſin in the daies of our jollity and proſperity, will moſt grievouſly torment us when by ſickneſs, fear of death, or other calamity, our wonted mirth and tranſitory contentment ſhall be eclipſed. Then as the carkaſe of him that is ſlain, though it ſeemed ſtark and ſtiff, is ſaid to bleed afreſh at the preſence of the murtherer: So when our former and unfelt ſins, whereby the ſoul was wounded and murthered, ſhall preſent themſelves unto our view, as at ſuch times they uſe to do, then our ſtark and benummed Conſcience will guſh out ſtreams of bloud, and be in danger to bleed unto eternal death. What would a man then give for this Reſt unto his ſoul? even all the gold of Ophir, all the riches of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies; yea, he would be content never to have had eaſe, never to have enjoyed any contentment (no not lawful) in theſe worldly and tranſitory things all the daies of his life, ſo he might have but one dram of that comfortable quietneſs of ſoul which a good conſcience bringeth.

2. A good conſcience therefore, from a life well led, is a Jewel unvaluable, for which a man ſhould undergo the hardeſt task, and forgo all the contentments of the world, if it could not otherwiſe be gotten. Which is the ſecond thing I here obſerve. For our Saviour we ſee propounds it as a Reward and Prize, ſuch as he thought ſufficient to allure any reaſonable man, even to abandon his liberty and freedom, and to enter a bondage, and to take a yoke upon his neck; a yoke the ſweeteſt that ever was worn, and far ſurpaſſing the greateſt liberty in the world.

A good conſcience, ſaith Solomon, Prov. 15. 15. is a continual Feaſt; that is, an everlaſting Chriſtmas. The twelve-daies-Feaſt of our Bleſſed Saviour's Nativity, how is it longed for before-hand? how welcomed when it comes? and yet it laſts but a ſhort time. But a good conſcience is a Feaſt that laſts all the year, yea all a mans life long; and that too without ſatiety, without fulneſs, without the leaſt weariſomneſs. There are three things in a Feaſt which make it ſo pleaſing and deſirable, Mirth, good Company, and good Chear. In this Feaſt all three of them are ſuperlative.

For Mirth, all the merriment and muſick, all the wine and good chear in the world will not make a man's heart ſo light and merry as the wine which is drunk at the Feaſt of a good conſcience. This is no ſuperficial matter, but rooted in the very centre of the ſoul. Whereas your Wine-mirth is but the ſmothering ſometimes, if not drowning, of a deeper grief; like the luſtick fit in ſome Countries of ſuch as are going to execution. Give ſtrong drink (ſaith Solomon) unto him that is ready to periſh, and wine unto thoſe that be of heavie hearts.

Prov. 31. 6.

For Society and Company, what Feaſt in the world can afford the like this doth? For it hath not onely exceeding good, but all ſuitable and homogeneal, where is no admixture of ill. Here you ſhall have no unruly perſons blaſpheming God or men, to make themſelves or others paſtime: no unſavoury communication to ſtain and pollute by degrees the purity of the ſoul, and make a reckoning unſupportable, when the day ſhall come wherein we muſt give accompt of every idle word. But a good Conſcience hath ever good Company, and ſo good as will admit no ill. For the Father is with it, that great and mighty God who made us: The Son is with it, even Chriſt himſelf who redeemed us; they ſup and feaſt together: The Holy Ghoſt is with it, who chears up and ſanctifies the hearts of all who come to this Table. What Feaſt in the world can ſhew ſo honourable, ſo loving, ſo chearful company as this?

And for the laſt thing which makes a Feaſt deſirable, good Chear; it is a Table richly furniſhed with all Varieties and Dainties, a collection of all the Rarities and Delicacies, not which Sea and Land onely, but which Heaven it ſelf affords. Who would not come upon any invitation to partake of ſuch a Feaſt as this?

DIS-

DISCOURSE XXXII.

ACTS 10. 4.

And he ſaid unto him, Thy Prayers and thine Alms are come up for a memoriall before God; or (as it is ver. 31.) are had in remembrance, &c.

WHEN the Jews had crucified our Bleſſed Saviour, the Lord and Prince of Life, though their impiety were moſt horrible, and ſuch as might ſeem to admit of no expiation or atonement, yet would not God for that reject them; but after he was riſen from the dead, his Apoſtles and Meſſengers were ſent to offer and tender him once more unto them, if ſo be they would yet receive him as their Meßiah and Redeemer which was promiſed to come: telling them that what they had formerly done unto him, God would (namely, according to our Saviour's prayer upon the Croſs, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they doe) paſs by it as done of Ignorance on their part, whileſt himſelf was by the diſpoſition of his Providence fulfilling that which was long before ſpoken by the mouth of all his Prophets, That Chriſt or Meßiah ſhould ſuffer death. All which you may reade in the Sermon which S. Peter preached unto them in the Temple, Acts 3. 12,&c. Thus the Lord ſhewed himſelf according to his ſtyle, A God gracious and mercifull, long-ſuffering and ſlow to anger. Luk. 23.34. Nehem. 9.17. Joel 2. 13.

But when theſe Jews, notwithſtanding this ſecond tender, not only continued in their former obſtinacy, refuſing to accept him for their Redeemer, but alſo miſuſed and perſecuted his Ambaſſadors ſent unto them; this their ingratitude was ſo hideous and hainous in the eyes of God, that he could bear with them no longer, but reſolved thenceforth to caſt them off, and chuſe himſelf a Church among the Gentiles.

To prepare a way whereunto, he ſent a Viſion much about the ſame time both to Peter, (who was then by reaſon of the Jews perſecution fled to Joppa) and to Cornelius a Gentile, Captain of the Italian Band, living at Cæſarea upon that coaſt; ordaining the one (Peter) to be the Meſſenger and Preacher; and the other (Cornelius) to be the firſt Gentile which ſhould be partaker of the Faith of Chriſt. Therefore accordingly Peter's Viſion was to admoniſh him, not to make ſcruple, as all Jews did, of converſing with a Gentile as unclean; ſignified by a ſheet let down from heaven, wherein were all manner of four-footed beaſts of the earth, and wild beaſts, and creeping things, and fowls of the aire, that is, of all both clean and unclean; wherewith came alſo a Voice, ſaying, Riſe, Peter, kill and eat. Whereunto when Peter anſwered, Not ſo, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean: the Voice replies, What God hath cleanſed, that call not thou unclean. Now as this Viſion was to give Peter commiſſion to go unto Cornelius; ſo was Cornelius his Viſion to command him to ſend for Peter. For he ſaw in a Viſion, at the ninth hour of the day, an Angel of the Lord coming unto him, and ſaying, Cornelius. Verſ. 11, 12. Verſ. 13. Verſ. 14. Verſ. 15. Verſ. 3.

Acts 10. 4. * Verſ. 4. * Verſ. 5. * Verſ. 6. * Whom when Cornelius beholding and being afraid, ſaid, What is it, Lord? The Angel ſaid unto him, Thy Prayers and thine Alms are come up for a memoriall, or had in remembrance, before God. * And now ſend men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whoſe ſurname is Peter, * and he ſhall tell thee what thou ought eſt to doe. And thus have I brought the Story as far as my Text; which is, as you ſee, a part of this Meſſage of the Angel to Cornelius, namely, his Report; And he ſaid unto him, Thy Prayers and thine Alms, &c.

Wherein I will conſider two things. Firſt, Who was the man, and what was the condition of this perſon to whom the Angel ſpake, namely, Cornelius: And the Angel ſaid unto him. Secondly, What the Meſſage or Report he brought importeth: Thy Prayers and thine Almsdeeds are come in remembrance before God.

1. To begin with the Firſt; The man here ſpoken to (as you may reade in the beginning of the Chapter, and as I have in ſome part already told you) was Cornelius, a Gentile, Captain of the Italian Band at Cæſarea, and ſo no doubt himſelf of that Nation. To underſtand which, ye muſt know that at this time the Land of Jury, like as moſt other Nations were, was under the Romane Empire, and ruled by a Preſident of their appointing: which Preſident had his Court and Seat at Cæſarea, a great and magnificent City upon the Paleſtine coaſt, ſome ſeventy miles from Jeruſalem, where was continually a guard of Souldiers, both for the Preſident's ſafety and awing the ſubdued Jews: and among theſe was our Cornelius a Commander, being Captain of the Italian Band. But howſoever he were by race and breeding a Gentile, yet for Religion he was no Idolater, but a worſhipper of the true God, the God of Iſrael, or God the Creatour of heaven and earth: For the Text tells us, that he was a devout man, and one that feared God with all his houſe, who gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway: which is as much as to ſay, he was a Proſelyte; for ſo were thoſe converted Gentiles called, who left their falſe Gods and worſhipped the true. Yet was he not circumciſed, nor had taken upon him the yoke of Moſes Law, and ſo was not accounted a member of the Church of Iſrael: wherefore according to the Ordinances of the Law he was eſteemed unclean, and ſo not lawfull for Peter, or any other circumciſed Jew, to company with him, had not God given Peter an Item that he ſhould thenceforth call no man unclean, forasmuch as that badge of ſeparation was now diſſolved.

Verſ. 2.

See Diſcourſes III, and XI. For the better underſtanding of this, we muſt know, there were, while the Legal worſhip ſtood, two ſorts of Proſelytes or converted Gentiles. One ſort which were called Proſelytes of the Covenant: Theſe were ſuch as were circumciſed, and ſubmitted themſelves to the whole Moſaicall Pedagogy; Theſe were counted as Jews, and converſed with as freely as thoſe which were ſo born. But there was a ſecond ſort of Proſelytes inferiour unto theſe, whom they called Proſelytes of the Gate: Theſe were not circumciſed, nor conformed themſelves to the Moſaicall Rites and Ordinances; only they were tied to the obedience of thoſe Commandments which the Hebrew Doctors call the Commandments of Noah, that is, ſuch as all the ſons of Noah were bound to obſerve. Which were, 1. To worſhip God the Creator; 2. To diſclaim the ſervice of Idols; 3. To abſtain from Bloud, namely, both from the effuſion of man's bloud; and 4. from eating fleſh with the bloud therein; 5. To abſtain from Fornication and all unlawfull conjunction; 6. To adminiſter Juſtice; and 7. To abſtain from Robbery, and doe as they would be done to. And ſuch Proſelytes as theſe, howſoever they were reputed Gentiles, and ſuch as with whom the the Jews might not converſe, as being no free denizons of Iſrael; yet did the Jewiſh Doctors yield them a part in the life to come. Such a Proſelyte was Naaman the Syrian; and of ſuch there were many in our Saviour's time; and ſuch an one was our Cornelius. Acts 10. 4.

Hence it was, that when afterward there aroſe a Controverſie in the Church, Whether or no the Gentiles which believed were to be circumciſed, and ſo bound to obſerve the Ordinances and Rites of Moſes; S. Peter in the Council of the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem determined, It was the will of God they ſhould not; and that upon this ground, Becauſe Cornelius the firſt believing Gentile was no circumciſed Proſelyte, but a Proſelyte of the Gate only; and yet nevertheleſs when himſelf was ſent (as ye have heard) to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt to him and his houſe, the Holy Ghoſt came down upon them as well as upon the Circumciſion: Whereby it was manifeſt, that God would have the reſt of the Gentiles which believed, to have no more impoſed upon them then Cornelius had: and accordingly the Council concluded that no other burthen ſhould be laid upon them, but only thoſe Precepts given to the ſons of Noah, To abſtain from pollutions of Idols, from bloud, from things ſtrangled, and from fornication, and the reſt, which they had received already in becoming Chriſtians, and ſo needed not to be expreſly mentioned. For that enumeration in the Apoſtles Decree is to be underſtood with a וכולי or an Et cætera; a Scheme uſuall in the allegation not only of Texts of Scripture, but of paſſages commonly and vulgarly known. We may find an Example of it, Hebr. 12. 27. in the citation of that Text of Haggai, Yet once more, and I will ſhake not the earth only but the heavens; which the Apoſtle there repeats with this Σχῆμα ἐνδείας, Τὸ δὲ, Ἔτι ἅπαξ, This, Yet once more, (ſaith he) ſignifies the removing of things that are ſhaken; that is, Τὸ δὲ, Ἔτι ἅπαξ, καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ, (or, as the Hebrews ſpeak, וגומר or וכולי) This, Yet once more, and the reſt, ſignifies ſo much: for Ἔτι ἅπαξ [Yet once more] alone ſignifies it not, but that whole Sentence. Verſ. 20. Hag. 2. 7. See Diſcourſe III. at the end.

Now that I may not have held your eares all this time with ſo long a ſtory, without ſome matter of Inſtruction; let us obſerve by the example of this Cornelius, How great a favour and bleſſing of God it is to live and dwell within the pale of his Church, where opportunity and means of Salvation is to be had. If Cornelius had ſtill dwelt among his Countrymen the Italians, where he was bred and born, or in any other Province of that Empire, he had in all likelihood never come to this ſaving and bleſſed knowledge of the true God, but died a Pagan as he was born. But by this occaſion of living at Cæſarea, within the confines of the land of Iſrael, where the Oracles and Worſhip of the moſt High God were daily reſounded and profeſſed, he became ſuch an one as ye have heard, a bleſſed Convert unto the true God, whom with all his houſe he ſerved and worſhipped with acceptation.

If this be ſo, Then ſhould we our ſelves learn to be more thankfull to God then moſt of us uſe to be, for that condition wherein by his Providence we are born. For we might, if it had pleaſed him, have been born and had our dwelling among Pagans and Gentiles, who had no knowledge of his Word or Promiſe; (and ſuch our Nation once was.) But behold his goodneſs and mercy! we are born of Chriſtian Parents, and dwell in a Chriſtian Country, and ſo made partakers of the name and livery of Chriſt as ſoon as we were born. How great ſhould our thankfulneſs be for his mercy? Nay, we might have been born and bred in a Chriſtian Nation too, and yet ſuch an one where Idolatry, falſe worſhip and Popery ſo reigned, as there had been little hopes or means either to be ſaved: But Acts 10. 4. behold, we are born, bred, and dwell in a Reformed Chriſtian State, where the Worſhip of God in Chriſt is truly taught and practiſed; where no God is worſhipped but the Father, and in no other Mediator but his Son Jeſus Chriſt. How ſhould we then magnifie our good God for his ſo great and abundant mercy towards us! Luther, or ſome other, tells a ſtory of a poor German peaſant, who on a time beholding an ugly Toad, fell into a moſt bitter lamentation and weeping, that he had been ſo unthankfull to Almighty God, who had made him a Man, and not ſuch an ugly creature as that was. O that we could in like manner bewail our Ingratitude towards him who hath made us to have our birth and habitation not among Pagans and barbarous Indians, a people without God in the World, but in a believing and Chriſtian Nation, where the true God is known and the means of Salvation is to be had! Thankfulneſs for a leſs benefit is the way to obtain a greater. To acknowledge and prize God's favour towards us in the means, is the way to obtain his grace to uſe them to our eternal advantage: Whereas our neglect of Thankfulneſs in the one, may cauſe God, in his juſt judgement, to deprive us of his Bleſſing in the other. Conſider it.

AND thus much concerning the Perſon to whom the Angel ſpake, 2. Cornelius, And he ſaid unto him. Now I come to the Meſſage it ſelf, Thy Prayers and thine Alms are come up into remembrance before God. Where before I make any further entrance, there is an Objection requires to be anſwered; namely, How Cornelius his ſervice could be accepted of God, (as here it is ſaid to be,) whenas he had no knowledge of Chriſt, without whom no man can pleaſe God. I anſwer; Cornelius pleaſed God through his Faith in the Promiſe of Chriſt to come, as all juſt men under the Law did: which Faith God did ſo long accept after Chriſt was come, till his Coming and the myſtery of Redemption wrought by him were fully and clearly made known and preached; which had not been to Cornelius untill this time: For though he had heard of his preaching in Galilee and Judæa, and that he was crucified by the Jews; yet he had not heard of his Reſurrection from the dead and Aſcenſion into glory, or was not aſſured of it, till it was now confirm'd unto him by one ſent from God himſelf. And it is like that having heard ſomewhat of the Apoſtles preaching and of the Jews oppoſing their teſtimony, and ſo knowing not what to believe; he had earneſtly beſought God in his Devotions to lead him in the way of Truth, and make known unto him what to doe.

This being premiſed, I return again unto the Angel's words; wherein I will conſider Three things. 1. The conjunction or joyning of Almsdeeds with Prayer; Thy Prayers and thine Alms. 2. The efficacy and power they have with God; Thy Prayers and thine Alms are come up into remembrance before God. 3. I will adde the Reaſons why God ſo much accepteth them, which are alſo ſo many Motives why we ſhould be carefull and diligent to practiſe them.

I. For the firſt, The joyning of Almsdeeds with Prayer: Cornelius we ſee joyn'd them, and he is therefore in the verſes before-going commended for a devout man and one that feared God. And by the Angel's report from God himſelf, we hear how graciouſly he accepted them; giving us to underſtand, that a Devotion thus arm'd was of all others the moſt powerfull to pierce into his dwelling-place and fetch a bleſſing from him. Therefore our Saviour likewiſe, Matt. 6. 1,—5. joyns the Precepts of Alms and Prayer together, teaching us how to give Alms and how to Pray in one Sermon, as things that ought to goe hand in hand, and not to be ſeparated aſunder. It was alſo the Ordinance of the Church in the Apoſtles times, that the First day of the week, which was the time of publick Prayer, ſhould be the time alſo of Alms. So ſaith S. Paul, 1 Cor. 16. 1. Now concerning the collection for the ſaints, (ſaith he) as I have given order to the Churches of Galatia, even ſo doe ye. 2. Upon the firſt day of the week (that is, upon the Lord's day) let every one of you lay by himſelf in ſtore, as God hath proſpered him, that there be no gatherings when I come. Which Inſtitution ſeems to be derived from the Commandment of God in the Law * twice repeated; Let no man appear before the Lord empty. For the words annexed to that Law Deut. 16. (where it is applied to the three great Feaſts, when all Iſrael was to aſſemble to pray before the Lord in his Tabernacle) the words, I ſay, there annexed ſound altogether like unto theſe of S. Paul concerning the Lord's day; Three times a year (ſaith the Text there) ſhall all the males appear before the Lord: and they ſhall not appear before the Lord empty. Every one ſhall give as he is able, according to the bleſſing of the Lord thy God which he hath given thee. Is not this the ſame in ſenſe with S. Paul's, Let every one lay by himſelf in ſtore, as God hath proſpered him? The Primitive Church after the Apoſtles followed the ſame precedent, and our own Reformed Church hath ordained the ſame in her Service-book, were it accordingly practiſed as was intended: For after the Epiſtle and Goſpel ſhe appoints divers choice Sentences of Scripture to be read, which exhort us to Alms and other Offerings to the honour of Almighty God; and then, as ſuppoſing it to be done, in the Prayer for the whole eſtate of Chriſt's Church, We humbly beſeech him moſt mercifully to accept our Alms, and receive our Prayers, which we offer unto his Divine Majeſty.

Acts 20. 4.

* Exo. 23. 15. Deut. 16. 16.

Shall I now need to exhort you (Brethren) thus to furniſh and ſtrengthen your Prayers which you daily offer unto God, to couple them with Almsdeeds, to come before God with a preſent and not empty-handed? Whom neither God's Commandment, the Practice of his Church, the Example of his Saints, nor the Acceptance of ſuch Prayers as the hand which dealeth Alms lifteth up to him; whom theſe will not move, no words of mine will doe it.

But ſome may ſay, Would you have us always give Alms when we pray? No, I ſay not ſo, but I would not have you appear before the Lord empty; that is, ſuch as are not wont to give them, nor mean to do: For you may give them before, or ſecond your Prayers with them after; you may have ſet and appointed times for the one, as you have for the other. Or when the Law of man injoyns you any thing in this kinde, doe it heartily, faithfully, and with a willing minde, without grudging, that ſo God may accept it as a ſervice done to him. Or laſtly, Thou mayeſt doe as the holy men in Scripture were wont, vow and promiſe unto God, if thy Prayer be heard, to offer ſomething unto him either for relief of the poor, the Widow, the Orphan, and diſtreſſed one, or the maintenance of his Service and Worſhip. If God will be with me, (ſaith Jacob, Gen. 28. 20, &c.) and keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, &c. Then ſhall the Lord be my God, and this ſtone which I have ſet for a pillar ſhall be God's houſe: and of all that thou ſhalt give me, I will ſurely give the tenth unto thee. (See the uſe of vowing by ſuch as came to pray in God's Houſe, Eccles. 5. 4.) If thou comeſt before God in any of theſe ways, thou ſhalt not come empty-handed. But ſend not thy Prayer ſingle and alone: The Prayer with Alms is the Prayer God loveth. Hear what himſelf ſaith Pſal. 50. 14, 15. Offer unto God thankſgiving, (Alms is an Offering of * Thankſgiving) and pay thy vows unto the moſt High. So call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie me.

* Eccl. 35. 8.

NOW I come to the ſecond thing I propounded, The power and efficacy II.

Acts 10. 4.

ficacy which Prayer and Alms have with God; Thy Prayers and thine Alms (ſaith the Angel) are come up for a memoriall (or, are had in remembrance) in the ſight of God. God is ſaid to remember our Prayers when he grants them, our Alms and good deeds when he rewards them, or, in a word, when he anſwers either of them with a bleſſing: as on the contrary he is ſaid to remember iniquity, when he ſends ſome judgement for it. So God is ſaid to remember Hannah, when he heard her prayer for a Son, 1 Sam. 1. 19. and Nehemiah ſpeaking * of his deeds of mercy and bounty ſhewed unto his poor brethren returned from captivity, ſayes, Think upon me, or [זָכְרָה לִי] Remember me, O my God, for good, according to all that I have done for this people. Thus were Cornelius his Prayers and Alms remembred. Prayers therefore and Alms, be they performed as they ſhould be, are powerfull and approved means to obtain a bleſſing at the hands of God.

* Chap. 5. 19.

To ſpeak firſt of Prayer: What is it that Prayer hath not obtain'd? It hath ſhut and opened Heaven; ſee the ſtory of Elijah. It hath made the Sun and Moon to ſtand ſtill; reade the Book of * Joſhua. It is the Key that openeth all God's Treaſures of bleſſings, both ſpiritual and corporal. For ſpiritual bleſſings, Cornelius we ſee obtained thereby Illumination and Inſtruction in God's ſaving Truth. And S. James ſaith, If any man lack wiſdome, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally; and it ſhall be given him. Ephraim in Jeremy 31. 18. prays for converting grace, Turn thou me, O Lord, and I ſhall be turned: To whom God preſently replies, v. 20. Is Ephraim my dear Son? is he a pleaſant Childe? for ſince I ſpake againſt him, I do earneſtly remember him ſtill. Therefore my bowels are troubled for him, I will ſurely have mercy on him, ſaith the Lord. Prayer obtains remiſſion of ſins; I ſaid (ſaith David Pſal. 32. 5, 6.) I will confeſs my tranſgreſſions unto the Lord, and thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin. For this ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee in a time when thou mayeſt be found. Prayer alſo obtaineth corporal bleſſings. When Heaven was ſhut, and it rained not, Elijah prayed for rain, and it rained: Hannah prayed for a Son, and ſhe conceived: If we be ſick (ſaith S. James chap. 5. 15.) The prayer of faith ſhall heal the ſick: Nehemiah prayed that he might finde favour in the ſight of King Artaxerxes, Chap. 1. 11. and found it, Chap. 2. 4.

Jam. 1. 5.

1 Kings 18. 1 Sam. 1.

But ſome man will ſay, If Prayer have ſuch power and efficacy, how comes it to paſs that many even godly men oft pray, and yet ſpeed not? I anſwer, There are divers cauſes thereof. Either 1. we pray not as we ought; or 2. we are not diſpoſed as we ought to be when we pray.

1. We pray not as we ought, either 1. when we pray not heartily, or not conſtantly: For God regards not formal and ſuperficial prayer, but prayer that comes from the Heart, and loves to be importuned before he grant; as our Saviour tells us in the Parable of the woman and the unjuſt Judge, whom though at firſt he would not hear, yet importunity made him doe her juſtice. Or 2. We rely not upon God as we ought when we pray; but truſt more to ſecond means, to our Wit, to our Friends, or the like, then to Him. And this ſeems to be that wavering in prayer S. James ſpeaks of, when he bids us pray in faith without wavering, Chap. 1. 6. that is, without reeling from God to reſt upon ſecond means: But as with our mouth we pray to him, ſo ſhould our Hearts rely upon him to give us what we ask. But we often pray to God for faſhion, but indeed we look to ſpeed by others; and ſo God takes himſelf mocked, and ſo no marvell if he hears us not. If it were our own caſe we would not liſten to ſuch ſuiters. Or 3. We pray and ſpeed not, when we make not God's glory the End of what we ask; Ye ask (ſaith S. James Chap. 4. 3.) and receive not, be- cauſe ye ask amiſs, that ye might conſume it upon your luſts. Or 4. We may ask ſomething that croſſeth the Rule of Divine Providence and Juſtice, and then alſo we muſt not look to ſpeed. David prayed for the life of his childe by Bathſheba, Uriah's Wife; but was not heard, becauſe it ſtood not with the Rule of Divine Juſtice, that ſo ſcandalous a ſin, which made the Enemies of God to blaſpheme, ſhould not have an exemplary puniſhment. In like manner ſundry times when the children of Iſrael rebelled againſt the Lord, and murmured againſt Moſes and Aaron their Governours, Moſes poured forth very earneſt prayers to God for removing his judgements from off the people; but God would not hear him, becauſe their ſins were ſcandalous and committed with ſo high a hand, that it could not ſtand with the Rule of his juſtice not to inflict puniſhment for them.

Acts 10. 4.

2 Sam. 12. 16, &c.

2. Again, ſometimes, and that too often, we are indiſpoſed for God to grant our requeſt. As firſt, when ſome ſin unrepented of lies at the door, and keeps God's bleſſing out. Pſal. 66. 18. If I regard (ſaith David) iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me. So God would not hear Joſhua praying for the Iſraelites, when they fled before the men of Ai, becauſe of Achan's Sacriledge; * Get thee up, (ſaith God) why lieſt thou thus upon thy face? Iſrael hath ſinned——for they have taken of the accurſed thing, (that is, the thing that curſed were thoſe that medled therewith:) Therefore the children of Iſrael could not ſtand before their Enemies,——becauſe they were accurſed. Neither will I be with you any more, except ye put the accurſed thing from among you. Or laſtly, our Prayers often are not heard, becauſe we appear before the Lord empty; we doe not as Cornelius did, ſend up Prayers and Alms together: we ſhould have two ſtrings to our bow, when we have but one. This is another indiſpoſition which unfits us to receive what we ask of God: For how can we look that God ſhould hear us in our need, when we turn away our face from our brother in his need? When we refuſe to give to God, or for his ſake, what he requires, why ſhould he grant to us what we requeſt? Hear what an ancient Father of the Church, S. Baſil by name, in Concione ad Divites, ſaith; Οἶδα πολλοὺς νηστεύοντας, προσευχομένους, σενάζοντας, ὀβολὸν δὲ ἕνα μὴ προϊεμένους τοῖς θλιβομένοις· τί ὄφελος τούτοις τῆς λοιπῆς ἀρετῆς; I have known many (ſaith he) who would faſt, who would pray, who would ſigh; but not beſtow one halfpeny upon the poor: But what then will their other devotion profit them?

See Pſal. 50. 16. Prov. 28. 9. * Joſ. 7. 10, 11, 12.

3. Adde to all theſe Reaſons of diſpleaſure a Reaſon of favour, why God ſometimes grants not our requeſts; namely, becauſe we ask that which he knows would be hurtfull for us, though we think not ſo. We ask ſometimes that which if he granted us would utterly undoe us. As therefore a wiſe and loving Father will not give his child a knife or ſome other hurtfull thing, though it cries never ſo much unto him for it: ſo does God deal with his children. And how wiſe ſoever we think our ſelves, we are often as ignorant in that which concerns our good as very babes are; and therefore we muſt ſubmit our ſelves to be ordered by the wiſdom of our heavenly Father.

Moreover, we muſt know and believe, that God often hears our Prayers when we think he doth not; and that three manner of ways. As namely 1. When he changes the means, but brings the end we deſire another way to paſs. We ask to have a thing by our means, but he likes not our way, but gives it us by another means which he thinks better. S. Paul, that he might the better glorifie God in ſerving him, deſires the thorn in the fleſh might be taken from him: God denies him that means, but grants him grace ſufficient for him; that ſo being humbled by the ſight of his own

own infirmity, he might glorifie God for his power in mans weakneſs. And is it not all one, whether a Phyſician quench the thirſt of his Patient by giving him Barberies or ſome other comfortable drink, as by giving him Beer which he calls for? 2. God often grants our requeſt, but not at that time we would have it, but defers it till ſome other time which he think's beſt. Daniel prays for the return of the Captivity in the firſt year of Darius, but God defers it till the firſt of Cyrus. We muſt not therefore take God's delays for denials. The ſouls of the Saints under the Altar, Rev. 6. 10. cry out aloud for vengeance: God hears that cry, and cannot deny the importunate cry of innocent bloud; yet he defers it for a little ſeaſon, ſaith the Text v. 11. and why? becauſe their fellow-ſervants and brethren that ſhould be ſlain as they were might be fulfilled. Laſtly, God ſometimes grants not the thing we ask, but gives us in ſtead thereof ſomething which is as good, or better; And then we are not to think but that he hears us.

2.

And thus much concerning the power and efficacy of Prayer. Now I come alſo to ſhew the like of Alms, how powerfull a means they are to procure a bleſſing from God: Not thy Prayer only, ſaith the Angel, but thine Alms alſo are come up for a remembrance in the ſight of God. For Alms is a kinde of Prayer, namely, a viſible one, and ſuch an one as prevails as ſtrongly with God for a bleſsing as any other. Hear David in Pſalm 41. 1. Bleſſed is he that conſidereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. 2. The Lord will preſerve him and keep him alive, and he ſhall be bleſſed upon earth; and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies. 3. The Lord will ſtrengthen him upon the bed of languiſhing: thou wilt make all his bed in his ſickneſs. A place ſo evident as flaſhes in a man's eye. But hear Solomon ſpeak too, Prov. 19. 17. He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given, he will pay him again. And Prov. 28. 27. He that giveth unto the poor, ſhall not lack: but he that hideth his eyes, ſhall have many a * curſe. Alſo Prov. 11. 25. The liberal ſoul ſhall be made fat; and he that watereth, ſhall be watered alſo himſelf. Likewiſe Eccles. 11. 1. Caſt thy bread upon the waters, for thou ſhalt finde it after many days. Theſe are for corporal bleſsings, and of this life: But hear alſo for ſpiritual bleſsings, and thoſe of the life to come. David, Pſal. 112. 9. (quoted by S. Paul, 2 Cor. 9. 9.) He hath diſperſed, he hath given to the poor, his righteouſneſs remaineth for ever, &c. that is, he ſhall be remembred not only in this life, but in the life to come. Luke 16. 9. Make to your ſelves (ſaith our Saviour) friends of the * unrighteous Mammon, (that is, of theſe deceitfull and uncertain riches;) that when you fail, they (that is, the friends you have made) may receive you into everlaſting Tabernacles: that is, that God looking upon the Almsdeeds you have done, and hearing the Prayers and bleſſings of the poor, may reward you with eternall life. So S. Paul, 1 Tim. 6. 17, &c. Charge them that be rich in this world,——that they truſt not in uncertain riches, but in the living God,—— That they doe good, that they be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate; Laying up in ſtore for themſelves a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternall life. Non memini (ſaith S. Hierome) me legere malâ morte mortuum, qui libenter opera charitatis exercuit; habet enim multos interceſſores, & impoßibile eſt multorum preces non exaudiri. I do not remember in all my reading that ever any one died an ill death who was in his life-time ready to good works and acts of Charity; for indeed ſuch a one hath many to intercede and pray for him, and it is impoßible but that the prayers of ſo many in his behalf ſhould be heard and accepted by God.

What

* Compare Prov. 21. 13.

* Μαμωνᾶ ἀδικίας, The Mammon of unrighteouſneſs, is not here Goods unlawfully gotten (as I am afraid ſome take it,) nor Mammon about which the ſons of men are wont to be unrighteous (as others take it;) but as the Hebrews call it מָמוֹן שֶׁקֶר, or as the Chaldees ſpeak, מָמוֹן דְּשִׁקְרָא (Mamona falſitatis, deceiveable and uncertain riches. For among the Helleniſts ἀδικία is the ſame with ψεῦδος, and ſo the Lxx often render שֶׁקֶר. Agreeable whereunto S. Paul 1 Tim. 6. as it were paraphraſing this of our Saviour, ſaith, Charge the rich that they truſt not in uncertain riches, that is, ממון דשקר or μαμωνᾶ ἀδικίας.

What ſhould I ſay more? Shall we not receive our ſentence at the laſt day according to our works of mercy? Come ye bleſſed of my Father, and inherit the Kingdome prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For when I was hungry, ye gave me meat; when I was thirſty, ye gave me drink, &c. ye know the reſt. O the wonderfull efficacy of Alms in prevailing with God! What favour do they finde in his ſight! how are they remembred! but not for any merit in them, which is none; but of his mere mercy and mercifull promiſe, who accepts them in Chriſt our Saviour. Whence is that Prayer of Nehemiah, c. 13.22. concerning this caſe of good works, Remember me, O my God, concerning this, and ſpare me according to the greatneſs of thy mercy. Acts 10. 4. Matt. 25. 34, 35.

Thus much of the efficacy and prevalency which Prayer and Alms have with Almighty God to procure a bleſſing from him; Thy Prayers and thine Alms are come up for a memoriall before God.

NOW I come to the third thing propounded, The Reaſons why God requires them, and why they are ſo pleaſing unto him: which Reaſons when they are known, will be alſo ſtrong Motives to us why we ſhould frequent them. For though indeed their Efficacy alone were a Motive ſufficient to invite any reaſonable man to doe them; yet will theſe Reaſons adde a further enforcement thereunto. III.

To begin then with Prayer; The Reaſons why God requires this duty at our hands (I will name but the chief) are theſe.

1. That we might acknowledge the property he hath in the gifts he beſtows upon us: otherwiſe we would forget in what tenure we hold thoſe Bleſſings we receive from his hands. Though therefore he be willing to beſtow his Benefits upon us, yet he will have us ask them before he doth it. Even as Fathers doe with their children, though they intend to beſtow ſuch things upon them as are needfull, yet they will have their children to ask them. Unleſs therefore we ask of God the things which are his to give; as we ſhall not receive what we have not, ſo we cannot lawfully uſe any thing we have.

2. Another Reaſon is, That we might be acquainted with God: Acquaint now thy ſelf with God, (ſaith Eliphaz Job 22. 21.) and be at peace; thereby good ſhall come unto thee. Now acquaintance we know grows amongſt men by converſing together, by intercourſe and ſpeaking to one another. So is it here, by accuſtoming to ſpeak to God in Prayer we grow acquainted with him: otherwiſe if we grow ſtrangers to him, and he to us, we ſhall not dare to behold him.

3. Prayer is the way to keep our Hearts in order: For to come often into the preſence of God, breeds an holy awe in our Hearts; it makes us to call our ſins to remembrance with ſorrow and ſhame, and to be afraid to commit them. We may know it by experience: men are afraid to offend thoſe into whoſe preſence they muſt often come to ask and ſue for favours; and if they have offended, they are preſently aſhamed; and the firſt thing they doe will be to ſue for pardon.

Theſe are the Reaſons for Prayer: Now let us ſee the Reaſons alſo why Alms are required; which are near of kin to thoſe for Prayer.

For 1. We are to offer Alms, to teſtifie our acknowledgement of whom we received, and of whom we hold what we have. For as by Prayer we ask God's creatures before we can enjoy them; ſo when we have them, there is another Homage due for them, namely, of Thankſgiving, without which the uſe of the creature which God gives us is unclean and unlawfull to us. Every creature of God (ſaith S. Paul, 1 Tim. 4. 4.) is good, if it be received with thankſgiving; not elſe. And the ſame Apoſtle

1 Cor.

1 Cor. 10. tells us, that even thoſe things which according to the manner of the Gentiles were offered unto Idols, (that is, to Devils,) a Chriſtian might lawfully eat, ſo it were done * with thankſgiving to the true and only God: For ſo he ſhould profeſs, he eat not meat of the Devil's gift, or Devil's Table, but of the Lord's, whoſe of right was the Earth and the fulneſs thereof. Whether therefore, ſaith he, v. 31. ye eat or drink, or whatſoever ye doe elſe, doe all to the glory of God; that is, give him the glory of the Lordſhip of his creature by your thankſgiving: For to doe a thing εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ to the glory of God, in the Apoſtle's meaning, is that which the Jews ſay, To doe it לשם שמים, ſo as the Majeſty and Dominion of God may be acknowledged thereby, which the Scripture calls His Glory.

* Verſ. 30. Εἰ ἐγὼ χάριτι μετέχω, If I with thanksgiving be a partaker, why am I evil ſpoken of for that for which ἐγὼ εὐχαριστῶ I give thanks?

Now our Thankſgiving to God for his creature muſt not expreſs it ſelf in words only, but it muſt be alſo in work and deed; that is, we muſt yield him a Rent and Tribute of what we enjoy by his favour and bleſſing; which if we do not, we loſe our Tenure. This Rent is twofold: either that which is offered unto God for the maintenance of his Worſhip and Miniſters; or that which is given for the relief of the poor, the Orphan and the Widow, which is called Alms. For not only our Tithes, but our Alms are an Offering unto Almighty God. So Prov. 19. 17. He that hath pity on the poor, lendeth to the Lord: and Chap. 14. 31. He that hath mercy on the poor, honoureth his Maker. And our Saviour will tell us at the day of Judgement, that what was done unto them, was done unto him. This then is the Reaſon why we muſt give Alms, becauſe they are the Tribute of our Thankſgiving, whereby we acknowledge we are God's Tenants, and hold all we have of him, that is, of the Manner of Heaven, without which duty and ſervice we have not the lawfull uſe of what we poſſeſs. Whence our Saviour tells the Phariſees, who ſtood ſo much upon the waſhing of the Cup and Platter, leſt their meat and drink ſhould be unclean, Give alms, ſaith he, of ſuch things as you have, and behold, all things are clean unto you, Luke 11. 41.

Matt. 25. 40.

Now that this acknowledgement of God's Dominion was the End of the Offerings of the Law, both thoſe wherewith the Prieſts and Levites were maintained, and thoſe wherewith the poor, the Orphan and the Widow were relieved, appears by the ſolemn profeſſion thoſe who pay'd them were to make, Deut. 26. where he that brought a baſket of firſt-fruits to the houſe of God, was to ſay, * I profeſs this day unto the Lord, that I am come unto the Country which the Lord ſware unto our Fathers for to give us. And when the Prieſt had taken the baſket, he was to ſay thus; * A Syrian ready to periſh was my Father, and he went down into Egypt and ſojourned there with a few, and became there a Nation great, mighty, and populous. And the Egyptians evil intreated us, &c. —— And the Lord brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand and out-ſtretched arm, &c. —— And brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, even a land that floweth with milk and honey. And now, behold, I have brought the firſt-fruits of the land, which thou, O Lord, haſt given me. And thou ſhalt ſet it (ſaith the Text) before the Lord thy God, and worſhip before the Lord thy God. This was to be done every year. But for Tithes, the profeſſion was made every third year, becauſe then the courſe of all manner of Tithing came about. For two years they pay'd the Levite's Tithe and the Feſtival Tithe, the third year they pay'd the Levite's Tithe and the poor man's Tithe: So that year the courſe of Tithing being finiſhed, the party was to make a ſolemn profeſſion: * When thou haſt made an end (ſaith the Lord) of Tithing all the Tithes of thine increaſe, the third year,

* Verſ. 3.

* Verſ. 5, &c.

* Verſ 12, &c.

which is the year of Tithing, (that is, when the Tithing courſe finiſheth) and haſt given it to the Levite, the Stranger, the Fatherleſs, and the Widow, that they may eat within thy Gates and be filled: Then thou ſhalt ſay before the Lord thy God, I have brought away the hallowed thing out of mine houſe, and alſo have given it to the Levite, and to the Stranger, to the Fatherleſs, and to the Widow, according to all the Commandments which thou haſt commanded me.——Look down from thy holy habitation, from heaven, and bleſs thy people Iſrael, and the land which thou haſt given us, as thou ſwareſt to our Fathers, a land that floweth with milk and honey. Acts 10. 4.

What we have ſeen in theſe two ſorts, is to be ſuppoſed to be the End of all other Offerings for pious uſes, (which were not Sacrifices,) namely, To acknowledge God to be the Lord and Giver of all. As we ſee in that royall Offering which David with the Princes and Chieftains of Iſrael made for the building of the Temple, 1 Chron. 29. 11, &c. where David acknowledgeth thus; Thine, O Lord, is the Kingdom, and thou art exalted as Head over all: Both riches and honour come of thee, and thou reigneſt over all, and in thine hand is power and might, and in thine hand it is to make great, and to give ſtrength unto all. Now therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praiſe thy glorious Name.——For all things come of thee, and * of thine own have we given thee.

* Hebr. מִיָּדְךָ. of thine hand. Vulg. Lat. Quæ de manu tua accepimus, dedimus tibi.

For this Reaſon there was never time ſince God firſt gave the Earth to the ſons of men, wherein this Acknowledgement was not made by ſetting apart ſomething of that he had given them, to that purpoſe. In the ſtate of Paradiſe among all the Trees in the garden, which God gave man freely to enjoy, one Tree was Noli me tangere, and reſerved to God as holy, in token that he was Lord of the garden: So that the firſt ſin of Mankind for the ſpecies of the fact was Sacriledge, in profaning that which was holy. For which he was caſt out of Paradiſe, and the Earth curſed for his ſake, becauſe he had violated the ſigne of his Fealty unto the great Landlord of the whole Earth. Might I not ſay, that many a man unto this day is caſt out of his Paradiſe, and the labours of his hands curſed, for the ſame ſin? But to go on.

After man's ejection out of Paradiſe, the firſt ſervice that ever we reade was performed unto God was of this kinde: Abel bringing the beſt of his flock, and Cain of the fruit of his ground, for an Offering or Preſent unto the Lord. The firſt ſpoils that ever we reade gotten from an Enemy in war, paid Tithes to Melchiſedek the Prieſt of the moſt High God, as an Acknowledgement that he had given Abraham the Victory: Melchiſedek bleſſing God in his name to be the poſſeſſour of heaven and earth, and to have delivered his enemies into his hand: To which Abraham ſaid Amen by paying him Tithes of all. Jacob promiſeth God, that if he would give him any thing, (for at that time he had nothing) he would give him the Tenth of what he ſhould give him: which is as much to ſay, as he would acknowledge and profeſs him to be the Giver, after the accuſtomed manner. Gen. 4. 3, 4. Gen. 14. 19, 20. Gen. 28. 20, &c.

For the Time of the Law, I may skip over that; it is well enough known, no man will deny it. But let us come to the Time of the Goſpel, which though it hath freed us from the bondage of Typicall Elements, yet hath it not freed us from the profeſſion of our Fealty unto God as Lord of the whole Earth. 'Twere ſtrange methinks to affirm it: I am ſure the ancient Church next the Apoſtles thought otherwiſe. I will quote for a witneſs Irenæus, who Lib. 4. cap. 32. tells us that our Saviour, when he took part of the Viands of his laſt Supper, and giving thanks with them, consecrated them into a Sacrament of his body and bloud, set his Church an example of dedicating part of the creature in Dominicos usus; Dominus (saith he) dans discipulis suis consilium primitias Deo offerre ex suis creaturis, non quasi indigenti, sed ut ipsi nec infructuosi nec ingrati sint, eum qui ex creatura panis est accepit & gratias egit, &c. Et Novi Testamenti novam docuit oblationem, quam Ecclesia ab Apostolis accipiens in universo mundo offert Deo, ei qui alimenta nobis praestat, primitias suorum munerum in novo Testamento. But this is no proper occasion to follow this Argument any further: I will therefore leave it, and proceed to a second Reason why God requires Alms and such like offerings at our hands.

See this (and the like passages out of Irenæus) quoted more at large and explained in the Treatise of The Christian Sacrifice.

2. Namely, That we might not forget God: our Blessed Saviour Matt. 6.19,20. and *Luk.*12.33, &c. speaking of this very matter of Alms, Lay not up (saith he) for your selves treasures upon earth;——but lay up for your selves treasures in heaven:——For where your treasure is there will your heart be also. The proper evil of Abundance is to forget God and our dependence upon him: the remedy whereof most genuine and natural is, to pay him a Rent of what we have: So shall we always think of our Landlord, and lift up our Hearts to Heaven in whatsoever we receive and enjoy. Yea, when this service is so acceptable to God, that he promiseth a great reward to those who thus honour and acknowledge him; how can it chuse but detain our hearts in heaven in that respect also, when we shall so often think of God, not only as the Lord and Giver of what we have, but as the Rewarder also of the acknowledgement we perform?

3. The last Reason why we should give Alms is, that we may be fit subjects of Mercy at the day we look for Mercy: (for all that we can look for at the hands of God is nothing but Mercy: Nehem. 13. 22. Remember me, O my God, concerning this also, and spare me according to the greatness of thy Mercy.) Now it is the will of God revealed, That unless we shew mercy unto our brethren, he will shew none to us. Ye know the condition of the fifth petition in the Lord's Prayer, and the * Parable of the unmercifull servant in the Gospel. This is the reason why among all other works we shall receive our doom at the last Day according to our works of Mercy, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you;——For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat, &c. How then can they look to be saved at that Day, who doe not these works of Mercy? Can our Saviour pass this blessed sentence upon them? Or will he change the form of his sentence for their sake? No certainly; if the sentence of bliss will not fit, the other will and must; Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire——For I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat, &c. Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.

PROVERBS 4. 23.

Keep thy heart with all diligence [Heb. מִכָּל־מִשְׁמָר above all keeping:] For out of it are the issues of life.

EVERY way of man (saith the same mouth which uttered this) is right in his own eyes: but the Lord pondereth the hearts, Prov. 21. 2. And chap. 16. 2. All the wayes of man are clean in his own eyes: but the Lord weigheth the spirits. Which words have this Discretive sense, that Although the eyes of men judge of the rightness of the ways of men by that which appeareth to the eye: yet God he is not as man, nor judgeth like him; but he pondereth the heart and spirit. Therefore in Scripture he is styled A God that searcheth the heart and reins: Jer. 17.10. I the Lord search the heart, I trie the reins; even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings. Which words our Saviour useth Revel. 2. 23. in his Epistle to Thyatira, I am he which searcheth the reins and the hearts; and I will give unto every one of you according to your works: that is, Men esteem of works as they see; but I judge and reward them as I see. Men punish and reward according to the outside only, which comes under the view and stands in awe of men: but God judges and rewards according to the Heart or inward man, which he only sees, and which therefore stands in awe and fear of none but him. For as for the outward act, it may as well be done for the praise and awe of men, as for love and fear of God; and therefore by it cannot be discerned whether our obedience be to God or man: But the Heart is that divine Touch-stone, as that which hath none to fear, none to please, none to approve it self unto, but him who alone sees it and is only able to try and examine it.

If therefore any Precept, any Admonition in the whole Book of God deserve the best of our attention to hear, and greatest care to put in practice, this of my Text is worthy to be accounted of that number; Keep thy heart above all keeping: For out of it are the issues of life.

The words divide themselves into two parts; An Admonition, and A Motive. The Admonition, Keep thy heart above all keeping: The Motive, For out of it are the issues of life; that is, Even as in the life of nature the Heart is the fountain of living, and the well-spring of all operations of life; so in the life of grace, we live to God through it.

I. The Admonition. Keep thy Heart, &c.

In the Admonition consider 1. The Act, Keep: 2. The Object what we are to keep, our Heart: 3. The Manner and Means how it must be kept, with all diligence, or above all keeping.

I. The Act, Keep.

Of the Act Keep I shall not need say much; it is an easie word, and we shall not forget it in that which follows, but ever and anon have occasion to repeat it. Onely here observe in general, That our Hearts are untrusty, unruly, and obvious to be surprised; for such things we are wont to keep: and so much therefore is implied, in that they are to be kept, else they needed no keeping. This is therefore the condition of our Hearts. 1. They are untrusty. The heart is deceitful above all things, Jer. 17.9. Therefore it stands

Prov. 4. 23. in hand to watch it, to ſuſpect it, and deal with it as we would with a notable Jugler or with an untruſty and pilfering ſervant, to have a jealous and a watchful eye over it: For if our eye be never ſo little off, it will preſently break out into ſome unlawfull liberty or other. 2. It is an unruly thing; if it be once loſt, a man cannot recover it again without much time and labour. For it is like unto a wild horſe; if the bridle be once let go, he will be gone, and not gotten again in haſte; yea it may be we ſhall be forced to ſpend as much time in recovering him, as would have ſerved to have diſpatched our whole journie: So if the bridle of watchfulneſs be once let go, and our Hearts get looſe, they will not eaſily be regained; it will ask us no ſmall time to temper and tune them again for the ſervice of God. Laſtly, our hearts are continually liable to ſurpriſe; we walk in the midſt of ſnares, encompaſſed with dangers on every ſide. What is that almoſt which will not entice and allure ſo fickle a thing as the Heart from God? We can be ſecure of it at no time, neither ſleeping nor waking; in no place, neither houſe nor ſtreet, neither bed nor board; not in our Cloſet, no not in the Church and Pulpit.

THUS much ſhall ſuffice to have been briefly obſerved by way of implication from the Act, Keep.

II. The Object, Thy Heart. Now I come to the Object it ſelf, The Heart, Keep thy Heart. By Heart we muſt underſtand the inward thoughts, motions and affections of the Soul and Spirit, whereof the Heart is the Chamber. But not a natural man's Heart, for that is not worth a keeping; but ſuch a Heart as lives to Godward, a good and gracious heart, which conſiſts in two properties, in Purity and Loyalty. This is the ſtate and temper we muſt keep our Hearts in. I will ſpeak of them in order.

I. Matt. 5. 8. And firſt of Purity and Cleanneſs: We muſt keep our Hearts in Purity and Cleanneſs; For Bleſſed are the pure in Heart, for they ſhall ſee God; and none but ſuch ſhall ever ſee him. It behoves us therefore to know what this Cleanneſs is, the having or not having whereof concerns us ſo nearly. Know then, A clean or pure Heart is that which loaths ſin, and loves righteouſneſs. For the better underſtanding whereof, we muſt further know, that an abſolute cleanneſs and pureneſs of the heart and ſoul from ſin is not attainable in this life: Prov. 20. 9. Who can ſay, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my ſin? Yet is there a cleanneſs of heart which muſt be had, and without which we ſhall never ſee God, as you heard before. Such was that which David prayes for, Pſal. 51. 10. Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right ſpirit within me. And 2 Tim. 2. 22. true Chriſtians are deſcribed to be ſuch as call upon the Lord out of a pure heart. 1 Tim. 1. 5. The end of the Commandment, ſaith the Apoſtle, is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conſcience, and of faith unfeigned. And himſelf 2 Tim. 1. 3. thanks God whom he ſerved from his forefathers with a pure conſcience.

But if this Purity of the heart were no other then a total freedom thereof from all unclean thoughts and ſinful motions and deſires, in ſuch ſort as a man ſhould never be troubled and defiled with them; alas! who then ſhould ſee God? who ſhould be ſaved? That Cleanneſs therefore, that meaſure of Purity which God requires to be in the heart of every one who ſhall ſee him, and with whom he will vouchſafe to dwell, is (as I told you) the loathing of ſin, and the love of righteouſneſs: that is an accepted Cleanneſs through Faith, when the hate of impurity and love of cleanneſs in the heart is accepted with God for cleanneſs and pureneſs it ſelf. Though not a cleanneſs of all our affections, yet at leaſt (and what can God require leſs?) an affection to all cleanneſs: For God accepts the will for the deed. If we love, if we deſire, if we delight heartily in that which is clean and pure in the eyes of God;

God; if we hate and abhorre, if we loath in our ſelves all ſinful impurities and pollutions both of fleſh and ſpirit; howſoever we finde in our ſelves a great want of the one, and our hearts much and often vexed and troubled with the other; yet is this affection of our hearts accepted with God for a pure and cleanſed heart indeed. And where this diſpoſition is, the Heart cannot chuſe but grow cleaner and cleaner, even with real and formal cleanneſs. For a man cannot but cheriſh that which he loveth, and rid himſelf as much as may be of what he loatheth. So he that loveth and affecteth cleanneſs of heart, will cheriſh and make much of every good motion which the Spirit of God ſhall put into it; and if he indeed loath and abhor unclean and ſinful thoughts, will doe his beſt to ſtifle them and remove them far from him. Prov. 4. 23.

This Cleanneſs and Purity of Heart is that which the Scripture ſtyleth Holineſs, even that Holineſs without which, S. Paul tells us, Heb. 12. 14. no man ſhall ſee the Lord. For in the Law, the legal cleanſing, waſhing and purging of that which any way belonged to God or was prepared for his preſence and ſervice, is called ſanctifying or hallowing, Exod. 19. 10. When the Lord was to come down upon Mount Sinai, Go unto the people, (ſaith he to Moſes) and ſanctifie them to day and to morrow, and let them waſh their clothes. 2 Chron. 29. 5. Hezekiah ſaith to the Levites, Sanctifie now your ſelves, and ſanctifie the houſe of the Lord God of your fathers, and carry forth the filthineſs out of the holy place. And accordingly in the 16. ver. the Prieſts go in to cleanſe it; which cleanſing in the next verſe is called their ſanctifying it. In Deut. 23. 14. where a Law is given for cleanneſs and neatneſs in the Camp, the reaſon is rendred in theſe words, For the Lord thy God walketh in the midſt of the Camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee: therefore ſhall thy Camp be holy, that he ſee no unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee. The ſame expreſsion S. Paul applies to ſpiritual cleanſing, 2 Cor. 7. 1. Let us (ſaith he) cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſs of the fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God. Here, with S. Paul alſo, Holineſs is Cleanſing, and Cleanſing is Holineſs. So Eph. 5. 26. That he might ſanctifie and cleanſe it, &c.

As therefore under the Law that place was not fit to entertain the preſence of God, nor any thing duly prepared to approach or come near him, which was not thus externally cleanſed and ſanctified: Such is the caſe of the inward cleanſing of the heart; unleſs it be ſanctified with purity and cleanneſs, God will never dwell in it, nor ſuffer ought from it as acceptable to come near him. Wherefore it is not without good reaſon we pray in our Liturgie, O Lord, make clean our hearts within us; And take not thy holy Spirit from us: For God's Spirit will not dwell in a ſty; it is a clean Spirit, and will have a clean habitation. That which S. Paul ſpeaks of the whole man (2 Cor. 6. 16, 17.) Ye are the Temple of the living God, wherefore touch no unclean thing, and I will receive you, is principally true of the heart and ſpirit. The reſt of the Body is but as the Court of the Temple; but the Seat of his preſence in the ſpiritual man, as the Holy place, is the Heart: even as it is alſo the Seat of life in the natural; primum vivens & ultimum moriens, the firſt that lives and the laſt that dies.

But by what means ſhould a man get and keep ſuch a Heart as this? How is this Holineſs and Cleanneſs of heart to be come by? I anſwer, The General means on our part to obtain this and all other Graces of God is faithful and devout Prayer; but this being common to all Graces, is not proper to be ſpoken of in this place. Let us therefore ſee a means more ſpecial and peculiar for obtaining this Cleanneſs and Purity of heart; ſuch a one as, though it may have ſome uſe for other Graces, yet I think is more proper

Prov. 4. 23. unto his then unto any other whatſoever: and that is, For a man always to poſſeſs his heart with the apprehenſion of God's preſence, and to walk before him as in his eye. Whereſoever thou art, there is an Eye that ſees thee, an Ear that hears thee, and a Hand that regiſtreth thy moſt ſecret thoughts: For the wayes of man (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 5. 21.) are before the eyes of the Lord, and he pondereth all his goings. How much aſhamed would we be that any one we loved and honoured ſhould ſurpriſe us in our corporal uncleanneſs, to ſee and behold any naſty pollution either of our bodies or chambers? How would a man bluſh and be confounded to be taken and ſeen in the manner, as we ſpeak? But every unclean thought, wicked deſire and motion of our heart, is more open and revealed to the eyes of God then the works themſelves, if we ſhould put them in execution, could be viſible to the eyes of men. Yea and theſe thoughts and deſires wherewith our hearts are beſmeared are as foul, ugly and loathſom in his ſight, as the works themſelves would appear ſhameful in the eyes of men, if we ſhould commit them openly in the ſtreet and in the ſight of the Sun. Nay, ſuppoſe that men could ſee our hearts as well as they may our out-works, would we not be as much aſhamed they ſhould behold the foulneſs of the one, as ſee the ſhameſulneſs of the other? Conſider it; What if ſuch a Patron, ſuch a Friend, ſuch a one to whom I deſire to approve my ſelf, ſhould know what I now ruminate in my heart, what unchaſt pollution, what other abhorred deſire and thought it now wallows and delights in? ſhould I not bluſh and be aſhamed?

What horrible Atheiſm doth this argue, That the preſence of man, yea ſometimes of a little child, ſhould hinder us from that wickedneſs which God's preſence cannot? If we did throughly and indeed believe this Ubiquity of God's Eye, and let it make a firm impreſſion in our minds, how would it quaſh the firſt riſing of evil thoughts in our hearts? The Eye of man draws from us a care of our outward behaviour; why then ſhould not the All-ſeeing Eye of God, if we loved him, if we honoured him, if we deſired at all to approve our ſelves unto him, draw from us a care of the inward behaviour of the Heart? ſince he ſees thy Heart better then man ſees thy Face, and underſtands thy Thoughts better then any man thy Works and Words. Little children when in the midſt of their diſorders they ſpie once their Father's eye, they are huſhed preſently: So ſhould it be with us, when, through forgetfulneſs of this All-ſeeing Eye of our Heavenly Father continually overlooking us, our Hearts begin to break looſe and to ſport themſelves in vain and idle thoughts and deſires, then ſhould we conſider that all this while God looked upon us and beheld our misbehaviour; then ſhould we cry him mercy with Jacob at Bethel, Surely God was here, and I was not aware.

Gen. 28. 16.

2. And thus I come to the ſecond requiſite of that gracious Temper a good Heart muſt be kept unto, which is Loyalty unto God; We muſt keep a loyal heart. The Loyalty of the heart to God conſiſteth in an univerſal purpoſe of obedience, and reſolution againſt all ſin, without Reſervation and Exception. Sceptra non ferunt ſocium; Kings can endure no copartners. Nor can a purpoſe of obedience mingled with Exceptions and Reſervations ſtand with a true faith and allegeance to Chriſt our Lord. In Anima in qua peccatum regnaverit, non poteſt Dei regnare regnum, ſaith S. Jerome; In the Soul where Sin reigns and has got dominion, God's Kingdom can never be ſet up nor eſtabliſhed. For how can he be a faithful ſervant of Chriſt, who ſtill holdeth correſpondence with, and is a Penſioner to, his Arch-enemy the Devil? Even ſuch an one is he who hath any ſin which he holds ſo dear, that he hath no purpoſe nor will to part with it. What will it profit thee to keep keep thy Heart at all, unless thou keepest it loyal? Will God accept a piece of thy Heart? No, he will have a whole Heart and a whole Soul, or none. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, and whole mind: otherwise thou keepest not thy heart to God, but betrayest it unto the Devil. For one breach in the walls of a City exposeth it to the surprise of an enemy; one leak in a Ship neglected will sink it at last into the bottom of the Sea. Prov. 4. 23.

1. If thou wilt therefore have a Loyal heart, know that such a heart cherisheth no darling sin, no Herodias, no bosome sin; such a dead fly as this will marre the whole box of oyntment. Eccles. 10. 1.

2. A Sound and Loyal heart is not that which boggles and scruples at small sins, but makes no conscience of greater, like the Pharisees straining at a Gnat, and swallowing a Camel; nor the contrary, whose conscience is onely for the greater matters of the Law, Mercy and Judgement, without any regard of Mint or Anise. A Loyal heart is like unto the Eye troubled with the least mote. Matt. 23. 24.

3. A Loyal heart as it hates all sins, so at all times. Sometimes the unsound heart will hate sin, when there is no benefit by it; but if it chance to be once beneficial to our selves, then we love it. Here is the triall of a Loyal heart to God, to prefer vertue before vice then, when in humane reason vertue shall be the loser, vice the gainer. This note discovered Jehu, who destroyed the worship of Baal with a great shew of zeal; but when it came to * Jeroboam's Calves, he dispensed with them, left it might prove dangerous to his Kingdom, if the Israelites should go worship at Jerusalem. 2 King. 10. 18, &c. * Vers. 29.

To conclude; A Loyal heart is that which the Scripture calls in the old Testament A perfect heart, לֵבָב שָׁלֵם, or תָּמִים. Not perfect in respect of degrees, for such a perfection is not attainable in this life; but perfect in respect of parts, Cor integrum, a heart wherein no part is wholly wanting, howsoever weak and a great deal short of due proportion. 1 Kings 11. 4. when *Solomon was old, his wives turned away his heart after other Gods, and his heart was not * perfect with his God, as was the heart of David his Father:* not because he served not the Lord at all, but that he served him not onely and intirely, Joshua 24. 14. Now therefore, saith he, fear the Lord, and serve him in sincerity and truth, (Heb. בְּתָמִים in perfectness and truth,) and put away the Gods which your Fathers served: which was as much as to say, Serve the Lord wholly, and quite renounce all service to others. 2 Kings 20. 3. Hezekiah prayes in his sickness, *Lord, I have walked before thee in truth, and with a * perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight.* He saith not, he had done perfect Actions, or performed perfect service, (for who can doe such?) but yet that he walked with a perfect heart, that is, with a loyal heart before God. So 1 Kings 15. 14. it is said, That though Asa failed in his Reformation, and the high places were not removed; *nevertheless his heart was * perfect* (that is, loyal) with the Lord all his dayes. A Loyal heart and a Perfect heart the same. * שָׁלֵם * שָׁלֵם * שָׁלֵם

THUS much shall suffice to have spoken of the Act, Keep; and of the Heart, the Object of our keeping: which are the two first things I considered in this Admonition.

III. The manner how the Heart is to be kept, With all diligence.

The Third remains, which is the Manner or Means how our heart is to be kept, viz. with all diligence, or above all keeping, saith the Text: that is, with the best, the surest, the chiefest kind of keeping; which is not onely now and then to look unto it, but to set a continual guard about it. Nature hath placed the Heart in the most fenced part of the body, having the Breast as a natural Corslet to defend it. If the Heart be in fear or danger, Prov. 4. 23. all the bloud and ſpirits in the body will forſake the outward parts, and run to preſerve and ſuccour it. If Nature be ſo provident for that which is but the fountain of a natural life, what care ſhould the ſpiritual man have to keep his heart and ſoul guarded and fortified againſt all annoiances ſpiritual? The life we loſe, if this be wounded or poiſoned, is ineſtimable; the other of Nature is of no great value.

Yea but perhaps a natural man's heart is liable to more natural dangers then the heart of a man that lives to God-ward is to ſpiritual annoiances. I anſwer, The contrary is true: For the Heart we ſpeak of, whence the Iſſues of the life of grace proceed, is like a City every moment liable both to inward commotion and outward aſſault: Within, the fountain of original Impurity is continually more or leſs bubbling with Rebellion; Without, the World and the Devil continually either aſſault it, or lye in Ambuſcado to ſurpriſe it. The World batters it with three great and dangerous Engines, of Pleaſures, Riches, and Honours, wherewith ſhe endeavoureth to lay it waſte, and rob it of all heavenly treaſure. The Devil watcheth every opportunity to hurl in his fiery darts, to caſt all into a combuſtion, and thereby farther to invenome and enrage the already-too-much impoiſoned vitiouſneſs and impetuouſneſs of our corrupt nature. How needful a thing is it therefore to follow this precept of Solomon, to keep our hearts with all diligence, or above all keeping; to keep them with a continual guard, to keep a continual watch and ward, leſt the enemies ſurpriſe them? Watch and pray, (ſaith our Saviour, Matth. 26. 41.) that ye enter not into temptation. Watch in all things, ſaith S. Paul to Timothy, 2 Tim. 4. 5. Be ſober, be vigilant, (ſaith S. Peter, 1 Pet. 5. 8.) becauſe your adverſary the devil as a roaring lion walketh about, ſeeking whom he may devour. If the heart be to be kept with all diligence, or above the keeping of any thing elſe, then is this Watch we hear commanded, and this Guard of Prayer (and this is a ſtrong Guard) to be chiefly and above all applied unto it.

But for a more particular direction of this guarding of the Heart, we muſt be careful to obſerve this order following.

1. As thoſe who keep a City attempted or beſieged by an Enemy have ſpecial care of the Gates and Poſterns whereat the Enemie may get in: So muſt we in this Guard of the Heart watch eſpecially over the Gates and Windows of the Soul, the Senſes; and above all the Eye and the Ear, whereat the Devil is wont to convey the moſt of thoſe pollutions wherewith the Heart is waſted. Firſt, concerning the Eye, David's example may warn the holieſt men to the world's end to keep a watchful jealouſie over it. What a number of Cut-throats did one idle glance upon Bathſheba let in, who made that Royal Heart, whoſe uprightneſs God ſo much approved, to become a ſty of uncleanneſs, and robbed it of thoſe heavenly ornaments wherewith it was ſo plentifully adorned? For the Ear, take heed of obſcene and wanton talk, which by thoſe Doors or Windows entring like Balls of Wilde-fire, inflame the heart with luſt. We muſt beware alſo of the ſlanderer's mouth and backbiter's tongue, whoſe lying reports and malicious tales, if they get in, would ſow in thine heart the ſeeds of heart-burning ſpight and mental murther, which in that ſinfull ſoil will fructifie very rankly. And think them no ſmall ſins which make thee guilty of innocent bloud; for thine heart and tongue may kill thy brother as well as thy hand.

2. As thoſe who keep and defend a City make much of ſuch as are faithful, truſty and ſerviceable; and if any ſuch come, will entertain and welcome them with much kindeneſs; but a Traitor, or one of the enemie's party, they preſently cut ſhort as ſoon as they diſcover him: So muſt we make exceedingly much of all good motions put into our hearts by God's Spirit, Spirit, howſoever occaſioned, whether by the Word of God, mindefulneſs of death, good Admonition, ſome ſpecial croſs or extraordinary mercy, any way at any time: Theſe are our Heart's friends; we muſt cheriſh, encreaſe and improve them to the utmoſt with meditation, prayer and practice. But, on the contrary, we muſt reſiſt and cruſh every exorbitant thought which draws to ſin at the firſt riſing. Tutiſſimum eſt, It is moſt ſafe (ſaith S. Auſtin Epiſt. 142.) for the Soul to accuſtome it ſelf to diſcern of its thoughts; Et ad primum animi motum, vel probare, vel reprobare quid cogitat; ut vel bonas cogitationes alat, vel ſtatim extinguat malas; And at the firſt motion thereof either to approve or elſe to diſallow what the Minde is thinking of; and ſo either to cheriſh and improve the thoughts and motions of the Minde if good, or preſently to extinguiſh them if evil. Prov. 4. 23.

3. Laſtly, Let him that will indeed guard his Heart as it ſhould be, take heed of familiar and friendly converſe with lewd, profane and ungracious company. There is a ſtrange attraction in ill company to poiſon and pervert even the beſt diſpoſitions. He that toucheth pitch (ſaith * the Son of Sirach) ſhall be defiled therewith. Can a man take fire in his boſome (ſaith Solomon) and his clothes not be burnt? For believe it, when a man is accuſtomed once and wonted to behold lewd and ungodly behaviour, there ſteals upon him inſenſibly, firſt, a diſlike of ſober courſes; next, a pleaſing approbation of the contrary; and ſo preſently, an habitual change of affections and demeanour into the manners and conditions of our companions. It is a point that many will not believe, but few or none did ever try but to their coſt. It was wiſe counſel, had it not been in a ſinful buſineſs, which Jeroboam adviſed; If this people (ſaith he) go up to ſacrifice at Jeruſalem, then ſhall the heart of this people turn again to their lord, even to Rehoboam king of Judah, and they ſhall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam king of Judah. O that ſome men would be as wiſe for their good as he was for his ſin! * Eccluſ. 13. 1. Prov. 6. 27. 1 King. 12. 27.

THUS I have done with the firſt part of my Text, The Admonition, Keep thy heart with all diligence, or above all keeping: Now I proceed to the Motive, For out of it are the iſſues of life; that is, All ſpiritual life and living actions iſſue from thence. All living devotion, all living ſervice and worſhip of God iſſues from the Heart, from thoſe cleanſed and loyal affections and diſpoſitions of the ſoul and inward man whereof I ſpake before. Where ſuch a Heart is not the Fountain, there no action to God-ward liveth, but is ſpiritually dead, how gay and glorious ſoever it may outwardly ſeem. No outward performance whatſoever, be it never ſo conformable and like unto a godly man's action, yet if it be not rooted in the Heart inwardly ſanctified, it is no iſſue of ſpiritual life, nor acceptable with God. Even as Statues and Puppets do move their eyes, their hands, their feet, like unto living men; yet are they not living actions, becauſe they come not from an inward Soul, the fountain of life, but from the artificial poiſe of weights and device of wheels ſet by the workman: So is it here with heartleſs actions; they are like the actions of true Chriſtians, but not Chriſtian actions, becauſe they iſſue not from a heart ſanctified with purity and loyalty in the preſence of God, who tries the heart and reins; but from the poiſe of vain-glory, from the wheels of ſome external reſpects and advantages, from a rotten heart, which wrought not for the love of God but for the praiſe of men. As therefore we judge of the ſtate of natural life by the Pulſe and beating of the Heart; ſo muſt we do of ſpiritual. No member of the body performs any action of natural life, wherein a Pulſe derived from the Heart beats not: So is it in the ſpiritual man and the actions of Grace; That lives not, which ſome ſome gracious and affectionate influence from the Heart quickens not.

II. The Motive. For out of it are the Iſſues of life.

Prov. 4 23. Now this Iſſuing of our works and actions from the Heart is that which is called Sincerity and Truth, ſo much commended unto us in Scripture: For this Sincerity and Truth which is ſaid to be in the works and actions of all ſuch as fear and ſerve the Lord with acceptance, is nothing elſe but an agreement of the outward work ſeen of men with the inward and ſutable affection and meaning of the heart, which God and our ſelves alone are privy to. For as our words and ſpeeches have truth in them when we ſpeak as we think; ſo our works and actions are done in ſincerity and truth, when they are done according to our heart's affection. Sincerity therefore and Truth is the life of all our works of devotion and obedience unto God; without this they are nothing but a carkaſe; they are dead, they live not, neither doth God accept them: For he deſireth truth in the inward parts, Pſal. 51.6. that is, truth which proceedeth or iſſueth from the inward parts. The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him, that call upon him in truth, Pſal. 145.18. For God is a Spirit, and they that worſhip him muſt worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth, John 4.24. Whatſoever ye doe, (ſaith S. Paul, Col. 3.23.) doe it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men. Our faith muſt be unfeigned, 1 Tim. 1. 5. that is, in truth and in ſincerity. Alſo our Love muſt not be in ſpeech and tongue onely, but in deed and truth, 1 John 3. 18.

And this is the higheſt Perfection attainable in this life, for which God accepteth of our Obedience as perfect which ſpringeth from it, though it be ſtained with much corruption and full of imperfection: That which is wanting in the meaſure of obedience and holineſs, is made up in the truth and ſincerity thereof. If it have not this, whatſoever it be, it is good for nothing, becauſe it wants the Iſſue of life.

And ſuch Actions are all the Actions of Hypocrites; for Hypocriſie is the contrary to Sincerity, and whereſoever Sincerity and Truth is not, there Hypocriſie is, being nothing elſe but a counterfeiting and falſehood of our actions, when they come not from a Heart ſutably affected: and therefore is otherwiſe in Scripture underſtood by the name of Guile; when thoſe who ſerve God in ſincerity and truth, are ſaid to be without guile, that is, without hypocriſie. So Nathanael (John 1. 47.) is called an Iſraelite indeed, in whom there was no guile. And of the Virgin-Saints, Rev. 14.5. it is ſaid, that in their mouth was found no guile; for they are without fault before the Throne of God: that is, they ſerved God without hypocriſie, in ſincerity and truth; and therefore God accepted of their obedience as if it were without fault and imperfection; as he is wont to do the works of thoſe who ſerve him in that manner. If therefore Sincerity be the life of our obedience, and that which makes it graceſull in the eyes of God; then is Hypocriſie the death thereof, which makes him loath and abhor it as a ſtinking carkaſe.

Hitherto have I ſpoken of the Influence of life into a Chriſtian's actions in general. But as in natural life, ſo in ſpiritual, are many branches, as the words of my Text imply; ſpeaking not ſingularly of one Iſſue, but plurally of many Iſſues of life. For that which lives, exerciſeth many living acts, as ſo many ſtreams flowing from the Fountain of life; none of which belong unto that which liveth not. Theſe Iſſues in Nature are five; Health, Nouriſhment, Growth, Senſe, and Motion: and the Heart is the Fountain of them all; without it they are not, they cannot be; but as it fareth, ſo fare they all. The like unto theſe are to be found in our ſpiritual life, of which I will ſpeak ſomewhat in ſpecial, the rather becauſe every of them are as ſo many Motives to incite us to the attainment of this life to God-ward, by ſerving him in Sincerity and Truth.

1. The

1. The first Issue of Spiritual life, flowing from the Heart, is spiritual Health: For the curing of our Souls of their spiritual diseases must begin at the Heart, and the inward causes of corruption must thence be purged, before there can be any true reformation or sound Health in the outward parts: Even as the heat of the Face is not much abated by casting water and cooling things upon it, but by allaying inwardly the heat of the Liver. Again, That which seems to spring and flourish in our lives, unless it be rooted in the Heart, will wither and die. The Fig-tree that onely made a show with leaves, having no fruit, in the end, being cursed, lost the leaves too wherewith it deceived our Saviour. So the Seed which sprouted upon the stony ground is said to have withered, because it had no root. And if an Apple seem never so beautifull, yet if it be rotten at the core, it will quickly putrefie. Prov. 4. 23.

2. The second Issue of Spiritual life is spiritual Nutrition, whereby the Soul continually feeds upon Christ in his Word and Sacraments. But this is in none whose works and actions issue not from the Heart by Sincerity and Truth. For where hunger and thirst is not, the body is not nourished: He must have a stomach to his meat that will have good by it: Chewing in his mouth will not doe it, though he swallow it; if his stomach be against it, he will vomit it up again. And can this spiritual hunger and spiritual thirst be where the inward man is not sanctified? Can he have a spiritual stomach whose heart is not cleansed?

3. The third Issue of Spiritual life is spiritual Growth. It is God's wont to reward the sincerity of a little grace with abundance of great graces. Nathanael, a man of no great knowledge, yet being a true Israelite, void of guile, is further enlightened by our Saviour, who gives him a sight of the true Messiah, indues him with true faith, and promises him still greater matters. A weak and dimme knowledge had the Eunuch and Cornelius in the Mystery of Godliness: yet because they worshipped God sincerely, an Evangelist was sent to the one, and an * Angel and an Apostle to the other, to give them clearer light of the Gospel and a fuller largess of spiritual gifts. The curse of God is upon Hypocrisie, to destroy a great deal, a great stock of grace; but his blessing is upon Sincerity, to improve a little portion to a greater measure. A little Spring is better then a great Pond; for in Summer, when Ponds are dried up, little Springs will still hold out. John 1. Acts 8. 29. * Ch. 10. 3, 28.

4. The fourth Issue of Spiritual life is spiritual Sense, the Sense and feeling of the favour of God: This no man shall ever finde who lives not the life of sincerity. For this is the most sound and undeceivable evidence of our portion and interest in the power and purity of Christ's saving passion and sanctifying bloudshed.

5. The fifth Issue of Spiritual life is spiritual Motion, such I call Alacrity and Courage. Sincerity is the cause of these: It makes us chearfull in all duties of service and obedience unto God; it makes us valiant and courageous in all dangers, trials and temptations, begetting in us a true, manly, generous and heroicall spirit. The wicked (saith Solomon, Prov. 28. 1.) flee when no man pursueth, but the righteous are bold as a Lion.

DIS-

DISCOURSE XXXIV.

Isaiah 55. 7.

Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.

Will not ſpeak of the coherence of theſe words, for they are an entire ſenſe of themſelves, and contain in them two parts: Firſt, The Converſion of a ſinner; Secondly, The Condition of one ſo converted. The Converſion of a ſinner is expreſt in three degrees: In the forſaking of wicked waies; In the forſaking of evil thoughts; and thirdly, In returning again unto the Lord. Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return to the Lord. The Condition or State wherein he ſtands who hath done all this, is no ſtate of Merit, but of Mercy; no not ſo much as a little Merit, but even abundant Mercy. If the Lord after all this accepts him, it is becauſe he will have mercy upon him: if our God forgive, he doth even abundantly pardon.

Of theſe I intend to ſpeak in order; and firſt of the Firſt, which is The Converſion of a ſinner, which is (as I have ſaid) laid down in three degrees or ſteps, the latter alwaies excelling the former. Even as in the Temple of Solomon, he that would approach the Mercy-ſeat of God muſt aſcend through three parts of the Temple, the Court, the Holy Place, and the Holy of Holies: So muſt he that will attain this Condition of Mercy mount theſe three ſteps of Repentance, that he may enter into that glorious Sanctuary which is not made with hands, where the great God that ſhews mercy unto thouſands lives for ever and ever.

The firſt two of theſe forementioned degrees [To forſake a wicked way, To rid the heart of evil thoughts] leſt they ſeem but one thing expreſſed in many words, I muſt handle both together, that by comparing I may the better diſtinguiſh them.

I. As for the latter therefore of theſe words, they have no great difficulty, and therefore will not need much explication; but in the former [Let the wicked man forſake his way] the Metaphor of way cauſeth ſome obſcurity, which I think is thus to be unfolded. Every way implies a walking, a way being that wherein men uſe to walk: In whatſoever ſenſe therefore the Metaphor of walking is taken elſewhere in Scripture, in the ſame is way taken here. But To walk, in Scripture, ſeems in a ſpecial and proper ſenſe to ſignifie the outward life and converſation of men. For as in the natural man the act of progreſſion or moving to and fro is the moſt externall act of all others, and the moſt obvious to the ſenſe of every one: ſo in a man ſpiritually conſidered, his way or walking ſhould be the outward actions of his life, which are or may be ſeen of others. And as in the natural man, his moving to or fro is the execution of the hidden intendments of his

Fancy:

Fancy: ſo in a man ſpiritually conſidered, To walk, is to put in execution outwardly what the Heart conceives inwardly. Iſaiah 55. 7.

I will not deny but this phraſe of walking, or treading out a way, is in Scripture ſometimes taken more largely, for the whole courſe of our life whatſoever: but here the Antitheſis of the words following, viz. evil thoughts, do manifeſtly imply that the former, viz. a wicked man's way, is to be taken for an evil Converſation, in the ſenſe I have ſpoken. So alſo in Pſal. 1. 1. Bleſſed is the man that hath not walked in the counſel of the ungodly; the collation of walking with ungodly counſel may warrant the like expreſſion, that the counſel of the ungodly ſhould ſignifie evil thoughts and purpoſes, walking in theſe counſels the practice and execution of them.

Moreover, if I did delight in ſuch ſubtilties, I might confirm this Expoſition by the word here uſed for a wicked man, רשע, which ſignifies properly Πονηρὸς, a laborious ſinner, a practitioner in ſin; the verb רשע ſignifying to make a ſtir, to be exceeding buſie, unquiet, or troubleſome: whence ſome do expound that Eccles. 7. 17. אַל תִּרְשָׁע Be not too wicked, for Be not too buſie, or too ſtirring; Keep not too great a coile, namely, in things of this world. Semblably here, Let the wicked man forſake his way, is, let him that beſtirs himſelf in the execution of ſinfull counſels leave his buſie practice; and in the next place, he that hath but evil thoughts or bad deſires, purge his heart of them alſo. Let the man who walks wickedly in his outward converſation, forſake his evil way; this is the firſt ſtep of a Convert: But more then this, Let him that hath but an evil heart, though his actions were outwardly blameleſs, baniſh even all his evil thoughts and cogitations; and this is the ſecond degree of a ſinner's converſion.

This Expoſition therefore being taken for a ground, now I come to the Obſervations I collect from thence. The firſt Obſervation I gather, is common to both theſe degrees of a ſinner's converſion; and that is from the word [forſake:] For to forſake is an Emphaticall word; To forſake ſin is more then a bare refraining from ſin, or a withdrawing a mans ſelf from doing wickedneſs; To forſake ſin is to give over all acquaintance, all dealing with ſin, or to forgoe it altogether: For as a man that refrains a friend's company, is not by and by ſaid to forſake him; no more can he that onely refrains from ſin be ſaid to forſake it.

Hence therefore we learn, That whoſoever retains any one darling ſin, is no forſaker of ſin, though he refrain from all other; for this is not to break off all acquaintance with ſin, but rather to make choice of his ſin, to chuſe what ſin he will uſe, and what ſin he will refuſe. Thus did Herod in the Goſpel, he reformed many things at the preaching of John Baptiſt, but ſtill he kept Herodias his brother Philip's wife, Mark 6. 19, 20. But we muſt know that he that keeps any one ſin, hath forſaken none: ſo ſaith S. James, chap. 2. verſ. 10. He that offends in one point, he is guilty of all. God muſt have our whole heart or none, he will not be ſerved by halfs: For that were to ſay as David ſaid to Mephiboſheth, 2 Sam. 19. 29. concerning his lands, Thou and Ziba divide the lands; ſo we, God and the devil his ſlave divide our hearts between them.

What will it profit to guard never ſo ſtrongly all the other parts of a City walls, if any one part be left open for the enemy to enter? or what is a Ship the ſafer, though all other parts be ſtrong and ſound, if but one leaking hole be unſtopped? will not this ſink the whole Ship, be it never ſo ſound? Even juſt ſo will it be with us, if we leave any one place in our Soul for any one ſin to enter. Do we not know that a little crack in one place of a Bell marrs the ſound as well as if it were crackt clean through?

Iſaiah 55. 7. So will any one crack of ſin marre the muſick of our ſouls in the eares of the Almighty. Do we not know that the laying but a finger upon the edge of a thing which giveth ſound, damps the ſound, as well as the whole hand? Even ſo if the devil lay but his finger upon our heart, he damps all our actions of devotion, and makes them give but a dead ſound in the hearing of the Lord of heaven. How true this is, I appeal unto every man's conſcience who hears me this day, whether he finds not, in his own experience, that the cheriſhing of any one ſin makes him dead-hearted toward God, dull and heavy in all works of devotion.

THUS much of this general Obſervation: Now I come to ſeveral Obſervations I gather from the ſeveral parts. The firſt whereof was (as you may remember) The forſaking of wicked ways, which I expounded in this place, The forſaking of ſin in our outward walkings and converſation before men. If this therefore be the Firſt degree of Converſion, then may we

1. learn, That thoſe who want this, have not gone the firſt ſtep of a new life. Indeed in the eyes of God, who ſees that which no body elſe can ſee, no man appeareth blameleſs or free from ſin: but that thoſe who are entred the way of a new and holy life ſhould walk ſo, that men may not accuſe them of open crimes, this, I ſay, is required of every true Convert. So it is ſaid of Zachary and Elizabeth, Luke 1. 6. that they walked in the Commandments of God blameleſs; yea even many Heathen men have come thus farre, that men could not accuſe them, and yet they periſhed everlaſtingly.

Let no man therefore deceive or flatter himſelf; Thoſe who fall into open and grievous ſins, are not yet in the ſtate of a true convert ſinner. If any man (ſaith S. James 1. 26.) ſeem to be religious, and bridles not his tongue, he deceiveth his own heart; his religion is vain. What S. James ſaith of wicked ſpeakers, may be ſaid of open wicked doers: If any man who is a drunkard, an extortioner, or falls into ſuch open ſins, if he ſeem religious, he deceiveth his own heart; his Religion is in vain. Remember therefore what Chriſt ſaith in the Goſpel, and let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they

Matt. 5. 16. ſeeing your good works, may glorifie your Father which is in heaven.

2. Secondly, If a Reformed converſation before men be required of every true Convert, then are they deceived who think it ſufficient if they keep their hearts to God, though they apply their outward and bodily actions unto mens liking. No matter, they think, what their ſpeeches and geſture and their outward ſeeming be, ſo that in their hearts they condemn and abhorre ſuch ſinfull actions as outwardly they ſeem to approve. This is the opinion of too-too

Matt. 10. 33. many: But let us hear what our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, He that denieth me before men, him will I deny before my Father which is in heaven. Would any man excuſe his wife's adultery, though ſhe ſhould ſay never ſo often ſhe kept her heart and love only unto him? No more will Chriſt excuſe us, when we yield our outward man to wickedneſs, though we ſay we keep our hearts intire to him. Chriſt ſuffered not onely in ſoul, but alſo in body, that he might redeem us both body and ſoul from everlaſting deſtruction: And ſhall not we glorifie him with both? Yes verily; and ſince God hath given us both a body and ſoul, it becomes us, as S. Paul ſaith, 2 Cor. 7. 1. to cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſs of the fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God.

II. THUS having ſpoken ſufficiently of the firſt degree of Repentance, I come unto the ſecond, which is contained in theſe words, Forſaking of evil

1. thoughts. Whence firſt I obſerve, That Concupiſcence, or the evil diſpoſitions and motions of our hearts, are ſins before God, though we never conſent to put them in execution. For this is the ſtyle of the Holy Ghoſt in my Text, not only to call the bad liver a wicked man, but the owner too of evil evil motions, unrighteous. If we ſeek for a Law whereof they are a breach, it is the laſt Commandment of the Decalogue, which prohibits all irregularity of our deſires and thoughts whatſoever. Non concupiſces, Thou ſhalt not ſo much as covet any thing amiſs; if thou doſt, it will be ſin. The natural man could not know thus much; S. Paul himſelf confeſſing, that he had never known concupiſcence to be ſin, had not the Law ſaid, Non concupiſces, Thou ſhalt not covet. Concupiſcence he calls not the Faculty or nature of the Act it ſelf, but the Anomaly of the Act; not the deſire only, but every motion of the heart not agreeable to the will of God; and that from the Style of this Commandment, Non concupiſces. If any ſhall ſay that the inward motions of our Minde are involuntary, and paſt the command of the Will, and therefore not ſinfull; I anſwer, Ab initio non fuit ſic, It was not ſo from the beginning: we procured this evil unto our ſelves in the ſin of our firſt parents, and therefore the fault is our own. Secondly, It is not neceſſary that whatſoever is ſin ſhould be under the maſtery of our Will, for ſo original ſin ſhould be none: But this is neceſſary, that all ſhould in ſome ſort belong unto the Will; and ſo do our deſires, affections, and all other motions (as we call them) of the Minde. If any ſhall further adde, that the Apoſtle James, 1. 15. ſaith of Concupiſcence, that it bringeth forth ſin, and therefore it ſelf not like to be ſin, the Cauſe being alwaies diverſe from the Effect: I anſwer, The Apoſtle ſaith not, it is the cauſe of ſin ſimply or all ſin, but only of outward ſins or ſins of fact: and howſoever, this reaſon is ſo far from proving Concupiſcence not to be ſin, that it argueth the mere contrary; for that ſo bad an off-ſpring as ſin cannot finde a more natural parent then ſin it ſelf.

Iſaiah 55. 7.

Rom. 7. 7.

The ſerious conſideration hereof ſhould be a cooling to the pride of our nature, and a ſtrong motive to Humility in the eſteeming of our ſelves and our beſt actions. Alas! what are we, that any good work we doe ſhould make us ſo highly conceit of our ſelves! Let us examine our inward thoughts, our hopes, our fears, our by-reſpects, our vain-glory, the whole Regiment of Concupiſcence, and it will make us even aſhamed to think what we have done, howſoever that which is ſeen outwardly be blameleſs and glorious in the eyes of men. If the Peacocks wings of a laudable work, or the gay feathers of ſeeming worth do make thee ſwell; do but caſt thine eyes a little upon the legs whereon thou ſtandeſt, upon the rotten poſt whereon thou haſt reared thy work ſo glorious without, and then thou wilt caſt down thy high looks, and cry with S. Paul, Rom. 7. 18. Lord, whatſoever men ſee without me, I know there dwelleth no good thing within me.

The ſecond thing I obſerve from hence is, The Priviledge the Law of God hath above the laws of men. It is true, in the Laws of men, that Thoughts are free; but with God's law it is not ſo. Mens Laws are not broken, though onely the outward man obſerve and keep them; but God's Laws are broken, if the inward man alone tranſgreſs them, be the outward man (I mean, a man in outward converſation) never ſo conformable. And this is our meaning when we ſay That the Law of God onely doth bind the Conſcience, meaning the inward actions of the ſoul and ſpirit, thoſe actions which onely God and our Conſcience are privy unto: But the Laws of men do bind onely the outward man, that is, to the performance of outward actions, which men either doe or may take notice of. 2.

Which that we may the better underſtand, we muſt know that Laws are ſaid to bind in two regards: 1. in commanding the doing of ſome actions, which elſe were at our choice; and 2. in making liable to an agreeable puniſhment if they be tranſgreſſed. Now whoſoever commandeth, muſt be Lord of what he commandeth; whoſoever maketh liable to puniſhment, Iſaiah 55.7. muſt both be able to take notice of the fault, and of power to inflict the puniſhment. Seeing then God alone is Lord of the ſoul and ſpirit, he alone can bind them by Commandment: Seeing God alone can take notice of the ſins of the heart, and is onely able to inflict the puniſhment, namely, everlaſting death and damnation, the proper puniſhment which the conſcience feareth; he alone may command upon pain of eternal damnation. Man's Law therefore, in this ſenſe which I have ſpoken, binds not the conſcience or inward man, becauſe no man is Lord of anothers conſcience, nor can take notice of the actions thereof; nor yet hath in his power to inflict the puniſhment which it onely feareth.

In one word, conceive it thus; The actions whereunto the Conſcience alone is privie are not the object of the Laws of man, but onely ſuch actions as fall within the notice of men. And yet this is alſo true, Though the Laws of men do not bind the Conſcience, yet a man is bound in Conſcience to obey the Laws of men; but this bond is from the Law of God, which commands us to uſe ſutable affections in obeying the Laws of 1 Pet. 2, 3. men: Obey every Ordinance of men, not for fear of puniſhment, but for conſcience ſake.

If now we did truly acknowledge this Prerogative of the Laws of God, we would witneſs the ſame by our extraordinary care in keeping them, in an extraordinary fear of breaking them. But what doe we? even the clean contrary; we fear man more then God, thoſe that can but kill the body, above him that hath power to caſt both body and ſoul into hell-fire. Who would not be loth to break a Kin'gs laws in a King's ſight? and yet for God's Laws who fears, though our moſt ſecret thoughts be always in his ſight? In the outward work which men ſee, we are carefull to reſtrain our hands and tongues from ſlipping, leſt man's Law might take hold of us; but the thoughts of our heart we with all ſecurity let run at random, and never once curb them. What is this but to account the Laws of God as cobwebs, the Laws of men as chains of Iron; or openly to profeſs that of men we have ſome little fear, where they command with God, but where God commands alone, no fear at all? Even as thoſe wicked ones whereof David ſpeaks in the 94. Pſalm, v. 7. who ſay, The Lord ſhall not ſee, neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard it. But he that planted the ear, (ſaith David v. 9, 10, 11.) ſhall he not hear? he that formed the eye, ſhall he not ſee? He that teacheth man knowledge, ſhall he not know? (yes) The Lord knoweth

Ch. 51. 12, 13. the thoughts of man, &c. Who then art thou (to uſe the words of Eſay) that art afraid of a man who ſhall die, and of the ſon of man who ſhall be as the graſs? and forgetteſt the Lord who made thee, who ſtretched out the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth?

3. The laſt thing I mean to obſerve from theſe two firſt degrees of a ſinner's converſion is, Wherein the life of a true Convert doth exceed the works both of the heathen and the hypocrite. Glorious things are ſpoken of Ariſtides, of Scipio, of Socrates: But their beſt works are but like unto counterfeit coin, the outſide gliſtering with gold, but the inſide lead or worſe metall; their hands, their feet, their walk like the gate of an Iſra-

1 elite, but their heart was uncircumciſed like the heart of a Philiſtine; for they wanted the purity of the heart ſeaſoned with the love of God, they wanted theſe cleanſed thoughts, theſe holy affections, and therefore were their beſt works no better then glorious ſins. Even as ſtatues and puppets do move their eyes, their hands, their feet, like unto living men, and yet they are not living actions, becauſe they come not from an inward Soul, the Fountain of life, but from the artificial poiſe of weights and wheels ſet by the workman: Even ſuch were the vertues of the heathens, very puppet-

playes, like unto the actions of Chriſtian men, but not Chriſtian actions; becauſe they came not from a pure heart, which gives life unto a Chriſtian, but from the poiſe of vain-glory, from the wheels of corrupt affections, from a rotten heart, which wrought not for the love of God, but for the praiſe of men. Iſaiah 55. 7.

And no better are the works of Hypocrites, nay worſe: for they knew not that the heart was to be cleanſed, or how it ſhould be cleanſed; but theſe know that God requires the heart, and yet their works are nothing but ſhews unto men. Such were the Phariſees, of whom Chriſt ſaith, Matth. 23. 27, 28. Woe unto you, Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye are like unto whited ſepulchers, which indeed appear beautifull outward, but are within full of dead mens bones and of all uncleanneſs: Even ſo ye alſo outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocriſie and iniquity; and v. 25. ye make clean the outſide of the cup and platter, but within ye are full of extortion and exceſs. But if we are loth (as who would not?) to ſhare our portion with the Gentiles, or to have our lot fall with the Hypocrites; let our righteouſneſs then exceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees: Let us remember that God challenges the heart and inward man as his peculiar due; let us not therefore onely forſake the walk and external gate of wickedneſs, but even bad thoughts and evil motions, with all the occaſions of them: Let us (I ſay) with Solomon, Prov. 4. 23. Keep our heart above all keeping, for out of it are the iſſues of life: But the joy of the hypocrite (ſaith Zophar, Job 20. 5.) is but for a moment. v. 6. Though his excellency mount up unto the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds; v. 7. Yet ſhall he periſh for ever, like his own dung.

Having ſpoken of the two firſt degrees of Repentance, I come now to the third, which is Returning unto God. It is not enough to forſake the works of wickedneſs, or the heart to forgoe the thoughts of unrighteouſneſs; but this is more required of a ſinner, that he ſhould return unto the Lord. He that hath gone out of his way, (and knows it) will not onely make a ſtop and go no farther in the wrong way; but if he means to arrive at the place he deſireth, will ſeek the new and right way and follow it: for he that ſtandeth ſtill, will never come at his journies end: Even ſo muſt every ſinner doe in his journie of Repentance. The putting off the old man we heard before, now come we to the putting on of the new. In the two former ſteps we had eſchewing of evil; in this we have doing of good; and without this the other is altogether vain. That tree is not called a good tree which bringeth forth no ill fruit, but that is a good Tree which bringeth forth good fruit; and Every Tree that bringeth forth no fruit, ſhall be hewn down and caſt into the fire. III. Matt. 7. 17, 19.

But for the better underſtanding of this, we will conſider two things proper to a man that returneth; 1. To go a way clean contrary to the way he went before; 2. To out-tread and obliterate his former ſteps. Both of theſe every one muſt perform who truly returns unto God by Repentance.

Firſt, (I ſay) He muſt go a way clean contrary to his former way. Many men think that the way to Hell is but a little out of the way to Heaven, ſo that a man in a ſmall time with ſmall adoe may croſs out of the one into the other; but they are much deceived: for as Sin is more then a ſtepping aſide, viz. a plain and direct going away from God; ſo is Repentance or the forſaking of ſin more then a little coaſting out of one way into another: croſſing will not ſerve; there is no way in the world to come to the place we ſeek, but to go quite back again the way we came.

The way of pleaſure in ſin muſt be changed for as extreme a ſorrow for the ſame. He that hath ſuperſtitiouſly worſhipped falſe Gods, muſt now

Isaiah 55. 7. Esay 58. as devoutly serve the true; the tongue that hath uttered swearings and spoken blasphemies, must as plentifully sound forth the name of God in prayer and thanksgiving; the covetous man must become liberal; the oppressor of the poor as charitable in relieving them; the calumniator of his brother, a tender guarder of his credit; in fine, he that hated his brother before, must now love him as tenderly as himself.

What traveller is there that knowing himself to be in a contrary way, and admonished that he must go back again, would not return speedily? Who but a fool would not consider that the longer he went forward, the further he had to go back again; the sooner he returned, the easier would be his return; the longer he went forward, the more hard and difficult? Why, this is the case of every sinner, every step he takes, the further he is from God: How painfull then and tedious will that return be which is not speedily undertaken? Nay, when looking back we shall behold the infinite distance between God and us, how can our heart almost but faile us and despair utterly that so long a way can ever be accomplished? The Stork in the heavens knoweth her appointed time, (Jer. 8. 7.) the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Swallow observe the time of their coming: Let the wise man be ashamed that knows not, the sinner that considers not the time of his Return.

2. The second thing proper to a man's returning is, To obliterate and tread out his former footing. This is also required of every truly-repentant sinner, that whereſoever any footing remains of his former works, he should tread them out; for a repentant sinner must return by a line in the very path and track of his sins. Now some sins do vanish in the act, and so leave no print behinde them; and such, because they perish in the doing, remain not to be undone by repentance. But other sins there are which pass not away in the very doing, but leave as it were a footing behind them; I mean the work of the sin remains when the act is past, and these works are to be undone in repentance. Of this sort are sins most-what against the eighth Commandment, Robbery, Cousenage, all ill-gotten and ill-withholden gain; for in these, Restitution is as it were the recalling, undoing, and treading out the mark of the sin committed. He that hath taken a man's purse, may give it him again; but he that hath blasphemed, cannot recall his blasphemy, nor the refractary his former disobedience. He that hath taken his brother's life, cannot give it him again; nor he that hath defamed him, undoe the word he hath spoken. In these and such like Restitution hath no place; but onely God forgive me, and doing the contrary hereafter. But in Robbery, Bribery, Cousenage, and all ill-gotten goods, the goods we have taken from our neighbour remaining in our hand and power, there is no repentance, no forgiveness, no returning, without restoring what we have gotten.

In what things Restitution takes place.

Upon this I will dwell a while, because I verily think that many men do not believe it, but think it enough to cry God mercy; but as for restoring of ought, he must pardon them. Surely Zaccheus the Publican had never learned this Evasion, who to make good his Repentance, gave half his goods unto the poor, and promised fourfold Restitution of what he had gotten from any man wrongfully. But if we will live by Laws, and not by Examples, hear the express Law of God Levit. 6. 2, &c. where the Lord thus speaks unto Moses: If a soul sin in fellowship or dealing, or in a thing taken away by violence, or hath deceived his neighbour, &c. or hath found that which was lost, and lieth concerning it, &c. Then it shall be, because he hath sinned and is guilty, that he shall restore what he hath taken violently, or the thing that he hath gotten deceitfully, &c. he shall even restore the principal, and adde the fifth part more thereunto in the day of his treſpaſs-offering. The day of our treſpaſs-offering who are Chriſtians, is the day wherein we offer Chriſt unto his Father by a lively Faith for atonement for our ſin; the day of our repentance or our turning to God. If the Jew's ſacrifice could not be accepted without thus doing, no more ſhall a Chriſtian's repentance. Iſaiah 55.7.

Neither will it be enough to confeſs our ſins and cry God mercy as we ſay; for Numb. 5. 7. where this ſame law is repeated, Thoſe, ſaith the Lord, which have thus ſinned, ſhall confeſs their ſin which they have done, and yet recompenſe his Treſpaſs too with the principal thereof, &c. Yea ſo rigid is the Lord in exacting this, that if the man himſelf who was thus wronged were dead, and had no kinſman living; yet the party offending was not ſo excuſed, but was to make a recompence unto the Lord himſelf, by giving it to his Prieſt, as ye may ſee in the ſame place, v. 8.

Hence it is that the Lord, Ezekiel 33. 14, 15. maketh Reſtoring a main part of Repentance or Returning unto him; If the wicked (ſaith he) turn from his ſin, and doe what is lawfull and right, if he reſtore the pledge, give again what he hath robbed; then he ſhall ſurely live, he ſhall not die: If he will not doe this, it is eaſie to imagine what will follow, namely, that he ſhall ſurely die, and not live.

But thou wilt ſay, I am not able to make Reſtitution. Why, then ſhew thy ſelf willing unto thy power, for in this caſe God accepts the will for the deed. But take heed thou diſſemble not with him that knows thy moſt inward thoughts; for he it is that trieth the heart and reins, and nothing can be hid from him: upon perill therefore of thy ſalvation deal truly with him that made thee; for he is not as man that thou ſhouldſt mock him, or as the ſon of man that he ſhould be deceived.

But thou wilt ſay, I cannot doe it, unleſs I leave my wife and children to beggery. Alas! wilt thou venture thy own ſoul to periſh eternally, to ſave thy houſe from beggery? I muſt ſay unto thee as Peter ſaid to Simon Magus, Acts 8. 21, 23. Thou haſt neither part nor lot in the life to come, for thy heart is not right in the ſight of God: Thou art in the gall of bitterneſs and in the bond of iniquity; thou preferreſt the momentany glory of thy houſe before the everlaſting ſafety of thy ſelf. Thou fool, what will it profit thee to win the whole world, and loſe thy own ſoul?

But I ſhall (thou wilt ſay) in ſo doing proclaim mine own ſhame unto the whole world. What then? wouldſt thou not be willing to undergo a greater penance then this for thy ſoul's ſafety? or how comes it to paſs thou art more loth that men ſhould know thy ſhame, then God himſelf who made thee? Lord, how hard will it be for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven!

If men would think of this in their unjuſt dealing, if they would remember this who ſcrape unto themſelves riches by unlawfull and ungodly means; if thoſe who get by extortion, by couſening tricks of Law, by bribery, by ſacrilegious Simony, would think of this, methinks it ſhould make them pull back their hand. For what joy and pleaſure ſhould a man take in that gain which he knows he muſt one day forgoe as willingly as now he deſireth covetouſly? when he might thus ſay with himſelf, "The "time muſt come, that I muſt wiſh from the bottom of my heart that this "I now doe had never been done, if ever I mean to find mercy at the hands "of God: The time muſt one day come, that I muſt reſtore all this I have "thus unlawfully gotten; yea make recompence beſides for the injury I "have done; or elſe woe worth the time that ever I was born, and curſed "be the night wherein I was conceived." If men would conſider this, "Alas! I ſhall never ſay unto God on my death-bed, I repent from the Iſaiah 55. 7.

"bottome of my heart, if I bequeath one jot of this I have thus gotten; I "ſhall never ſay unto God, I wiſh from my ſoul this ſin I have done were "undone; or if it were now to doe again, no motive in this world ſhould "make me doe it. Alas! how can I ſay this, whiles it is in ſome ſort in "my power to undoe ſin by reſtoring, if I will not? Surely he that had this in his mind, would think it would not quit the coſt to attain any of this world's goods unlawfully. But let them think as they will, as ſure as God is true, Without Reſtitution Repentance can never be true, and without true Repentance it is impoſſible to be ſaved. And thus much of this Third degree of Repentance, and of the Firſt part of my Text.

I COME now to the Second, which is The Condition and State he comes unto who hath done all this, and that (as ye hear) is a State of Mercy; The repentant ſinner is capable of the Mercy of God to pardon and forgive his ſin: If the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous his thoughts: The Lord will have mercy on him, our God will abundantly pardon.

The Mercy of God is here (as you ſee) his loving-kindeſs unto a ſinner, to ſet him free from that evil he is liable to through ſin, and to reſtore unto him the good he hath loſt thereby; that is, with commiſeration of his miſery to forgive him, and reſtore him to that bleſſedneſs which is in the favour of God. This mercy or merciſulneſs of God is here expreſt, firſt ſimply, in the words, The Lord will have mercy on him; and ſecondly, with a degree, he will pardon abundantly. Of theſe I will ſpeak briefly, and ſo make an end.

And firſt of the firſt: If the forgiveneſs of our ſins, and the accepting of us into the everlaſting favour of God, be a work of Mercy; then not of any Merit or deſerving on our part; for theſe two cannot ſtand together. So ſaith S. Paul, Tit. 3. 5. Not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, but according to his mercy he hath ſaved us. For if when we have done all we can, we are ſtill the ſubjects of pity, it needs muſt be we are ſtill in miſery; for no man ſhews pity or commiſeration but to thoſe that are in a pitifull caſe; whereſoever Mercy is ſhewn, the party aileth ſomething: But to be in caſe of Merit, is no pitifull caſe; what can he aile for his ſin, to whom Heaven is due for his merit? who need not be beholden to God for his kindneſs, but may challenge him for juſtice? If this then be the manner of God, to ſhew mercy unto thoſe who deſerve nothing at his hands, it is our part to be like unto him: We are not in actions of charity to look upon the merit, but the miſery: the beſtowing of Alms is no paying of wages, or giving of rewards, but an act of holy pity. The like I might ſay of forgiving the offences of our brethren: If he repent him of the injury, thou art not to exact a merit of forgiveneſs; but let thy love be as ingenuous unto thy brother as God's was free unto thee.

The laſt thing to be conſidered is, The degree of God's mercy in delivering us from our ſins: It is no ſmall favour, for he pardoneth abundantly. Amongſt all the works of God his works of Mercy toward mankind are in ſurpaſſing meaſure: Hence it is that he proclaims himſelf by this as by his principal ſtyle, Exod. 34. 6. The Lord, the Lord God, mercifull, gracious, long-ſuffering: which David expounds, Pſal. 103. 8: The Lord is mercifull and gracious, ſlow to anger, and plenteous in mercy: S. Paul deſcribes him Epheſ. 2. 4. A God who is rich in mercy.

This may appear by the admirable way of our Redemption, in ſending his own Son from heaven to ſuffer the ignominious death of the Croſs for our ſake: Even ſo God loved the world, ſaith S. John, that he gave his only-begotten Son for the ſame. This may appear by his patience and long-ſuffering in induring ſin: In the 65 chap. of this Book, v. 2, 3. He ſpread-

eth out his hands all the day long unto a rebellious people, which walked in a way that was not good, yea, which provokes him to anger continually to his face. Iſaiah 55.7.
Laſtly, It may appear by that huge proportion wherein his Mercy exceeds his Vengeance; He viſits the ſins of the Fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate him: but ſheweth mercy unto the thouſandth generation of thoſe who love him and keep his Commandments. Exod. 20. 5, 6.
This may ſerve for our conſolation in the moſt grievous temptation about the greatneſs of our ſin: The Lord is rich in mercy, and therefore he will forgive the moſt grievous ſin; for the mercy of the Lord is greater then the ſins of the whole world. This argument of comfort Moſes bringeth in Deut. 4. 31. Becauſe the Lord thy God is a mercifull God, he will not forſake thee, nor deſtroy thee, nor forget the Covenant of thy Fathers, which he ſware unto them.

DISCOURSE XXXV.

JEREMIAH 10. 11.

Thus ſhall ye ſay unto them, The Gods that made not the Heavens and the Earth, (even) they ſhall periſh from the Earth, and from under theſe Heavens.

THESE words are written in the Chaldee tongue, whereas the reſt of the Prophecy is in the Hebrew: the reaſon whereof you ſhall then have, when we have firſt ſeen the Occaſion, Coherence and Summe of the words; which is as followeth. The Prophet having in the end of the laſt Chapter threatned the Jews and all the neighbouring Nations with captivity, Edom, Ammon, Moab, with the Arabians of the wilderneſs: in this Chapter leaving out the reſt he ſingles out the Jews, to inſtruct them for their demeanour and carriage in their captivity; to wit, that they ſhould not learn the way of the Heathen whither they ſhould be carried, that they ſhould not worſhip the ſignes of Heaven, nor regard their Gods of Gold and Silver, which could doe neither evil nor good.

But leſt they ſhould think they had acquit themſelves well if they abſtained from what they ſhould ſee the Heathen doe; he tells them, they muſt yet doe more then this, they muſt make open profeſſion againſt their Gods; they muſt proclaim againſt their Idolatry and falſe worſhip: and therefore in the middle of his exhortation he enterlaceth theſe words in the Chaldee tongue, Thus ſhall ye ſay, &c.

Theſe words then contain a Proclamation which the Jews are enjoyned from God to make againſt the Gods of the Gentiles, when they ſhould be carried captive to Babylon: wherein are to be conſidered two things. 1. The Proclaiming it ſelf. 2. The Summe of the Proclamation. The Proclaiming, in theſe words, Thus ſhall ye ſay unto them: The Summe of the Procla-

Jer. 10. 11. Proclamation in theſe, The Gods which have not made the Heavens and the Earth, &c. In the Proclaiming are three things conſiderable. 1. The Perſons Who. 2. The Perſons To whom. 3. The manner, How. The Perſons Who, in the word Ye; that is, Ye Jews, who are the worſhippers of the living God; Ye captive Jews carried out of your own land, and living as ſlaves and vaſſals under your proud Lords the Babylonians; Ye ſhall ſay unto them. 2. The Perſons To whom; To them: what Them? even your Lordly Maſters of Babylon; Ye ſhall ſay unto them. 3. The manner, How; Thus: that is, not in cryptick or myſticall termes, or in your Hebrew mutterings, a language which they underſtand not; but in the vulgar tongue of Babylon, in plain Chaldee, Thus ſhall ye ſay unto them,—&c. אֱלָהַיָּא דִּי־שְׁמַיָּא וְאַרְקָא לָא עֲבַדוּ, The Gods which have not made the Heavens and the Earth, &c.

In the ſecond part, which I called The Summe of the Proclamation, are two things contained. 1. A deſcription of falſe Gods, in theſe words, The Gods which made not the Heavens and the Earth. 2. Their doom, in theſe, They ſhall periſh from the Earth, and from under theſe Heavens.

1. I ſhall ſpeak of theſe in order; and firſt of the Perſons who muſt make this Proclamation, namely, The Iſraelites: Ye Iſraelites; Ye ſervants of the God of heaven; Ye ſons of promiſe, and peculiar heritage of the Lord of hoſts; Ye, upon whom the dew of grace is ſhed from heaven; Ye, to whom the moſt High hath given his Oracles, and made his Name known amongſt you; Ye ſhall ſay unto them. Hence I obſerve,

That it is the office of every one who is a member of God's Church and the child of Grace, to endeavour to bring others to the knowledge of God and godlineſs. Firſt, All things in nature deſire and covet the propagation of that kinde wherein themſelves are ranked. The Fire is no ſooner kindled, but preſently it will turn all it lays hold upon into its own nature. As it is with the Fire of Nature, ſo muſt it be with the Fire of Grace: it is as poſſible for the Sun to want light, and the Fire to be without heat, as the Fire of Grace to be kindled in their hearts who endeavour not to inflame others with the ſame heavenly fire.

Do we not ſee every Citizen, every member of any Company or Society, how eagerly they deſire and how forward they are to further the enlargement of that Commonwealth and Society whereof they are members? What one nobly deſcended but deſireth the enlargement of his houſe and kindred continually? What true Engliſh-man but deſireth the encreaſe of our King's ſubjects, the amplifying of his dominions, and the Revenues of his Crown? We would account them monſters who ſhould be otherwiſe affected; nay unworthy to live any longer as members, or enjoy the rights of ſubjects. How canſt thou then be a member of God's kingdome and not labour the encreaſe of God's ſubjects? or how dareſt thou uſurp the name of a Chriſtian, or think thy ſelf a child of Grace, who endeavoureſt not the propagation of that heavenly Hierarchie whereof thou calleſt thy ſelf a member? The woman of Samaria had no ſooner found the Meſſias, but ſhe runs and calls the whole City to be partakers of her happineſs, John 4. 29. Chriſt bids Peter, Luke 22. 32. When thou art converted, ſtrengthen thy brethren.

Acts 26. 29. S. Paul in nothing more expreſſed the Character of a Chriſtian then in this: In the preſence of Agrippa ſo fervent was his wiſh, that all who heard him that day were even as he was: ſo great was his zeal, Rom. 9. 3. that ſo his loſs might have been recompenſed with the gaining of the whole Jewiſh nation unto Chriſt, he could have been willing to be taken out of the Roll himſelf; himſelf; I could wiſh (ſaith he) that my ſelf were accurſed from Chriſt for my brethren my kinſmen according to the fleſh. Jer. 10. 11.

The Devil was no ſooner fallen, but he preſently laboured to bring Man to the ſame ruine; nay the reſtleſs compaſſer ſtill goeth about like a roaring Lion, ſeeking continually whom he may devour. His Inſtruments are like him. The ſons of Belial, how buſie are they in debauching others and making them like themſelves? The Phariſees ran over ſea and land, and ſpared no labour to bring numbers to their Sect, though but to make them, as Chriſt ſpeaks, filii Gehennæ, ſons of Hell. The Jeſuits how run they up and down into all corners of the world, from the Sun riſing unto the going down thereof, to propagate their Hereſies? Nay, the very Mahumetans run about the world to gain Proſelytes for their beaſtly Prophet Mahomet. And ſhall the children of the Kingdome of heaven only want this deſire, this zeal, this endeavour? Impoſſible: And if any ſuch ſeem to be, who doe it not, ſurely they are but baſtards, and ſuch as God will never own to be his. 1 Pet. 5. 8. Matt. 23. 15.

Some report of Mules and other ſuch like creatures of Mongrel and mixt generation, that they beget not again: Even ſuch Mongrels are thoſe Chriſtians who beget not unto God, who labour not the converſion and drawing of others unto Chriſt. We pray unto God every day, Let thy kingdom come: Let that which is our daily prayer, be alſo our daily endeavour, even of all that ſay to God [Our Father;] elſe he will be no Father of ours. Indeed the kingdome of God ſhall come in deſpight of the Devil and all his Regiment, but happy are thoſe who further it: For thoſe that turn many unto righteouſneſs, ſhall ſhine as the ſtars in the firmament for evermore. Thus much ſhall ſuffice for the firſt Obſervation. Dan. 12. 3.

One thing more I have yet to obſerve from the condition of the perſons to whom this word [Ye] hath relation: Ye ſhall ſay; namely, Ye captives, Ye whom the Lord your God hath given into the hands of your enemies, and made you as the offſcouring and refuſe in the midſt of the people; Ye whoſe City, the glory of the whole earth, is conſumed with fire, whoſe Prieſts and Princes are all ſlain with the ſword, and the remnant of your people carried into a ſtrange land; Ye a people overwhelmed with the flouds of affliction, and (as farre as the eye of fleſh can ſee) forſaken of the God whom ye worſhipped; Ye, even ye, ſhall ſay unto them, The Gods that made not the Heavens and the Earth, &c. Hence obſerve, No men ſo fit to glorifie God, whether by confeſſion of the mouth or devotion of the heart, as his ſervants when they are humbled by affliction. The Reaſons are plain: for

1. It is the love of the world which quencheth our love toward God. So long as the world pleaſeth us, ſo long our love to God is weak and feeble: but if once we are weaned from our delight and content in worldly things, then (if ever) we cleave firmly unto God; then are our hearts inflamed, and our whole ſpirit fixt in heaven, which before ſtuck faſt in earth. Even as the Fire in coldeſt weather ſcorcheth moſt; ſo doth the zeal of God's ſervants burn moſt in the midſt of affliction. The righteous are like the Palme-tree, which then riſeth higheſt, when the burthen laid thereon weigheth heavieſt: So it is with them, the weight of their affliction makes them riſe up to heaven.

2. In affliction onely it will appear whether men feared and loved God for his own ſake or no, or whether for ſome worldly reſpect only. It is the property of a true Chriſtian not to diſclaim God in affliction, as hypocrites do, but then to confeſs him moſt when the world ſees leaſt cauſe why they ſhould at all. Untill the ſtorms and winds came, the houſe built upon Matt. 7. 26.

upon the ſand ſeemed to ſtand as ſtrong as that upon the rock.

Jer. 10. 11.

This triall was it that Satan would have God put Job unto: Doth Job (ſaith he) fear God for nought? Haſt thou not made a hedge about him, and about all he hath? &c. But put forth thy hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thee unto thy face. As if he had ſaid, While all things proſper in his hand, who knows whether he be a man that truly feareth thee? but ſtrike and afflict him, and then it will ſoon appear what he is. And indeed the Devil ſaw ſoon what Job was unto his little liking, when the weight of his afflictions preſſed theſe words out of his mouth, Though he kill me. I will truſt in him.

Job 1. 9, 10, 11.

Job 13. 15.

For this cauſe, That it might appear the Church was reared upon no earthly foundation, the Wiſdome of God would have it planted in Martyrdom, and watered with the bloud of his Saints. For the ſame cauſe alſo was the glorious name of Confeſſors in the Primitive Church given unto thoſe who had held their faith in the time of triall and perſecution: and for this cauſe would God have his people here to avouch him in the land of their captivity; that the more the world wondred, the more he might be glorified.

Seeing therefore we are moſt fit to glorifie God in the time of our affliction, Let this be a Motive unto us both of Comfort in the depth of ſorrow, and of Patience in the midſt of pain; always when the hand of God is upon us, confeſſing with David Pſal. 119. 71. Bonum eſt, Domine, quòd humiliaſti me, It is good, Lord, that thou haſt humbled me.

2. AND thus I come to the Perſons to whom this Proclamation is to be made, intimated in the word [Them;] Thus ſhall ye ſay unto them: what Them? even your Lords and Maſters, even your Lordly Maſters, your Rulers, your proud Conquerours.

Sins therefore againſt the Perſon of God are to be reproved without all reſpect of Perſons. Such ſins are ſins of Idolatry, or ſins of the firſt and ſecond Commandment: For when falſe Gods are worſhipped, whether mediately or immediately, the Perſon of God is diſhonoured. In theſe ſins therefore the Cautions concerning perſons who ſhould reprove, and perſons who are to be reproved, which in other ſins Wiſdome makes conſiderable, have no place at all: Be the perſon reproving, or the perſon to be reproved, publick or private, greater or leſſer, it skilleth not; for in caſe of Idolatry, the pooreſt begger on the earth may admoniſh the greateſt Emperour in the world. Indeed the quality or condition of perſons may be oppoſed to all other reſpects whatſoever, and ſo make ſome time and ſome place unfit for reproof or admonition; nay the quality of the perſons of men may be ſuch as doth exclude ſome perſons from reproving them: But when the caſe concerns the Perſon of God himſelf, then to ſpare or regard the perſons of men is Idolatry it ſelf; for this is to honour men more then God himſelf; this is to ſuffer God to be diſhonoured, leſt the honour of men ſhould be impeached. I confeſs the danger is great in regard of the fleſh; but we muſt know what our Saviour ſaith, He that loveth father or mother, yea his own life, better then me, is not worthy of me.

Matt. 10. 37.

Thus the glorious Martyr Ignatius reproved Trajan the Emperor, whileſt he was ſacrificing to his Gods, even at the very Altar, and in the face of his whole Army, being at Antioch. And for the ſame ſin we ſee here the poor captive Jew was to reprove his great Babylonian Lord, the miſerable and contemptible ſlave the conquerour of the world, the miry foot the head of gold: For thus ſhall ye ſay even to them, The Gods which made not the heavens and the earth, &c.

3. AND ſo I will leave the Perſons both Ye and Them, and come to the third third and laſt circumſtance I conſidered in this act of proteſting or proclaiming againſt the Gods of the heathen, and that is, The manner how it ſhould be done, intimated in the word Thus; Thus ſhall ye ſay unto them: that is, in plain Chaldee; not in Hebrew, how holy a tongue ſoever, but in the vulgar tongue of Babylon; Thus ſhall ye ſay unto them. Here we ſee That God will have his Church to utter his Oracles in the vulgar tongues of the Nations. When ye inform the Gentiles of any part of the knowledge of me, Thus ſhall ye ſay unto them. Surely our Prophets ſudden changing of his Dialect here was a Præludium to that great publiſhing of God's name to the Gentiles in their vulgar tongues after the Meſſias ſhould come; which Theodoret* avoucheth to have been when he ſaith, that the words of the Apoſtles and Prophets were turned into the languages of the Romans, Egyptians, Perſians, Indians, Armenians, Scythians, Sauromatans, and all the languages which any Nation uſed. Jer. 10. 11. 3. *Therapeut. 5.

Certainly, to keep the Scriptures in an unknown tongue, is of all other the moſt unreaſonable madneſs; but to teach Pagans the Articles of their Creed at their firſt converſion in the Latine tongue, as the Spaniards have done with the Indians, is a moſt ridiculous folly. Is not the Word of God his revealed will unto his whole Church? But how is it revealed in an unknown tongue? Or is the Word of God a revealed will unto thoſe only who are learned, and hidden to others?

But if the Scriptures were in vulgar Tongues, they might be occaſions of many hereſies, by the miſtakes of the vulgar, if they might reade them. This is ſtrange: Can every Frier in a pulpit, when he preacheth, warrant his words from being miſtaken or perverted to hereſie? and are the words and ſayings of God himſelf ſo obnoxious that they may not be read? Nay, if God himſelf may not ſpeak in a vulgar tongue, I ſee far leſs reaſon why a Frier ſhould: And ſo ſhould the people know nothing at all concerning God, if a good may not therefore be done becauſe ſome will abuſe it to evil.

NOW I come to the ſecond main part of my Text, The Summe of the Proclamation, containing in it two things. Firſt, A deſcription of falſe Gods, The Gods which made not the heavens and the earth. Secondly, Their doom, They ſhall periſh from the earth, and from under theſe heavens.

To begin with the firſt, The Gods which made not, &c. He ſaith not, Thoſe who were not Abraham's Gods, or Jacob's Gods, nor the Gods which brought not Iſrael out of Egypt, or ſuch like; but, The Gods which made not the heavens, &c. Whence note,

That men are to be dealt with and perſuaded out of the Principles they acknowledge and are addicted to. Ethnicks, out of the Principles of Reaſon and Nature, or the like; Jews, out of Moſes and the Prophets; Chriſtians, out of the Goſpel: In ſumme, All ſorts of men, from that they are addicted to. This is a Maxime of wiſdome which God himſelf hath approved. 1.

So the Jews acknowledging Propheticall doctrine, are dealt with out of the Prophets; A Virgin ſhall bear a Son. But the Magi of the Eaſt, being addicted to Aſtrologie, are drawn to Chriſt by the apparition of a Star: and therefore the Star appeared not in Judæa, becauſe the Jews uſed not to heed ſuch things, they had the Oracles of God; but it appeared in the Eaſt, that is, was ſeen by them only who dwelt in the Eaſt; which made the wiſe men wonder and joy ſo much, when afterward it went before them going to Bethlehem. Eſa. 7. 14. Matt. 2. 2. Verſ. 10.

So S. Paul, being to preach a God the Athenians knew not, avouched and defended his fact by an Altar of their own, inſcribed Ἀγνώστῳ Θεῷ To the unknown God; whence they might be convinced, that a God whom Acts 17. 23.

Jer. 10. 11. their fathers knew not might yet be a God to be worshipped. The same Apostle teacheth Titus to convince the Cretians out of their own Poets, Titus 1. 12. Κρῆτες ἀεὶ ψεῦσται, κακὰ θηρία, γαστέρες ἀργαί.

On the contrary, S. Peter having to deal with the Jews and Proselytes, Acts 2. useth no other grounds but the Prophecies of * Joel and * David.

* Vers. 16.
* Vers. 25.

Again, S. Paul being to enter with the Ethnicks of Lystra, Act. 14. 15. who would needs have sacrificed to him as to a God, insinuateth with an Argument from Nature and from the Creation of the world; Why doe ye (saith he) these things? we are also men of like passions with you; and preach unto you, that you should turn from these vanities unto the living God, which made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein.

As it is with diverse Sects in Religion, so is it with diverse sorts and conditions of men; an Argument or Motive suitable to one sort is altogether unfit for another. All Vessels are best handled by their ansæ or ears, on what part soever they stand: he that handleth them otherwise, handleth them but awkwardly: So it is with mens minds; there are in every man's opinion or affections certain ansæ or ears, whereon a wise perswader should lay his hold, to draw men unto him. For this cause Aristotle in his Rhetoricks describes the several dispositions of several sorts of men; of men, of women; of young, of old; of rich, of poor; of noble, and ignoble; that a Rhetorician might suite his motives accordingly. A Dog is toll'd with a bone, a worm is a bait to catch a fish, a pigeon brings the hawk unto the Falconer's lure: So must every wise fisher of men, every wise angler of souls, make choice of Motives according to the several dispositions and conditions of the hearers; according to that of S. Paul, 1 Cor. 9. 20, 21, &c. Unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might save the Jews; to them which are without the Law, as without the Law, that I might gain them that are without the Law: To the weak I became as weak, that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. And thus much shall suffice for this first Observation.

2. My second Observation from these words is this, That the true God may be known by the Principles of Nature, or the Creation of the Heaven and Earth. For that which is a character or note of false Gods must needs likewise imply an argument for the true; Rectum est index sui & obliqui: If those who made not the Heaven and the Earth are false Gods, he then that made them is the true.

How the Understanding ascends to God by the Scale or Ladder of the Creatures.

This is that which some call Natural Theologie; others, the Ascent of the Soul to God by the Scale of the creatures, the steps whereof are to be ordered as followeth. 1. All men by God do understand some Person, or a living and Reasonable Essence. 2. All men will grant that which is God to be the most excellent of all Persons or Living Essences. 3. The Perfections of a Living and Reasonable Essence are threefold; In the Understanding, In the Will, and In the Faculties of working: In the Understanding is Wisdom; In the Will, Goodness; In the Faculties, Power: Whatsoever therefore hath a Soveraignty in these three, is the most excellent of Living and Reasonable Essences. All men therefore, if they want not the ordinary use of Reason, will assent, That under the name of God they mean Him to whom belongs a Soveraignty of Wisdom, a Soveraingty of Goodness, and a Soveraignty of Power and Might. Thus far we agree and walk together: But the errour of the Nations hath been in the Application; namely, To whom belonged this Soveraignty, and whether it belonged to many, or to one alone.

Rom. 1. 21, 23. But howsoever the Gentiles in this Application became vain in their Imaginations, ginations, and transformed the glory of this incorruptible Soveraignty into the image of corruptibility; yet, as the Apostle saith, God left them not without a witness, in that those invisible things of him are seen by the creation of the world:* For a workman is known by his work. The greatest work and the goodliest work that ever was, is the Creation of the world. He then that made the Heaven and the Earth is he alone to whom this threefold Soveraignty belongeth: He alone is Almighty, He alone is All-good, He alone is All-wise.

Jer. 10. 11. * Vers. 20.

What greater Power can there be then to make the Heaven and the Earth of nothing? what Might so mighty as that which made whatsoever else is mighty; even so many millions of powers as are in the Heavens above; so admirable variety of faculties as are found in the Earth below? Is there any Wisdom like unto his, who in so manifold a work made nothing superfluous or vain, but all things for their end; who ordered and appointed such means for every end as better could not be devised; who settled so goodly an Order, and gave to every thing a Law and Rule which it should observe? What Goodness so unspeakable, as to have bestowed upon every thing some portion of goodness, and to have sufficiently furnished them with endowments to attain and preserve the same? What Goodness can be like unto that which he hath shewn unto us, in making and ordaining all that ever he made for our use and service? Thus we see the admirable Power, the incomparable Wisdome, and unspeakable Goodness of him that made the Heavens and the Earth. He therefore is the true and living God, and lives for ever. Those Gods which made not the heavens and the earth are no Gods, and shall perish from the earth, and from under these heavens.

Thus have I let you see one part of The Scale of the creatures, by which the Soul ascends unto God. But there is another half yet behind, to make a compleat Jacob's ladder: For the Ascent of the Soul unto God by the contemplation of the creatures, is either the Ascent of the Understanding, to know him, or the Ascent of our Will, through obedience to worship him. The first is that which I have hitherto spoken of: The second, though it be not here used and applied by our Prophet, yet it is implied by his example in the former, in that he hath therein taught us what use to make of the consideration of the creation of the world, and creatures of God.

How the Will ascends to God by the Scale of the Creatures.

The Ascent therefore of the Will consists in its conformity and the conformity of all our Affections and Actions to the Will of God, so far as it may be seen in the works of the creatures: For God, in that he hath given them a Law, hath as it were stamped in them the character of his Will, which is the Law and Rule they observe in working. By this Ladder we may ascend two waies; either by expres Example, or by Analogie. By expres Example, where the Law which the Creatures observe in their workings is the very same which we ought to express in our actions. By Analogie, when the properties or actions of the Creatures, especially if they be otherwise unsutable unto our nature, are emblematically and by way of resemblance applied to admonish us of our duties. To this kind belong Parable-similies, framed according to the will of the applier; whereof we shall find examples in the Scripture. But because the Ascent by Example is the firmer and surer, I will onely shew some few examples of it.

We see all Natural agents neglect their private good and proper end, to maintain the publick good of the Universe; the Water ascends upward, the Aire downward, against nature, to maintain the connexion and indivulsion of the parts of the world: So should every good member of a Commonwealth or Society pass by his private profit and private pleasure, to further the common good of the weal publick. Every natural body will

Jer. 10. 11. rend and break in pieces, rather then the Order of the world ſhould be violated by a penetration of dimenſions: So ſhould every good member hazard, yea loſe, both his life and eſtate, for the common behoof of that body whereof he is a member. All things of inferiour nature give place without reluctancy to thoſe which have a ſublimity of nature above them; the Water willingly ſubmitteth unto the Air, the Air unto the Fire, &c. yea, the one doth further, as far as it can, the aſcent of the other above it: The like ſhould we expreſs in the ſubordination of degrees and conditions amongſt men. All things which grow upon the earth turn their heads and faces upward, toward that by whoſe influence they grow and are preſerved:

Acts 17. 28. So ſhould we unto him in whom we live, and move, and have our being.

Theſe are onely general Inſtances for a taſte, drawn from the general rule of the Creatures, to admoniſh us of general duties. If I ſhould from hence take a view of every ſeveral creature in his kind, I might ſhew you in clay all Ethical and Oeconomical vertues ſampled in one kinde or other of them.

Prov. 6. 6. Go to the piſmire, thou ſluggard, ſaith Solomon. * Be wiſe as ſerpents, ſaith a

Jer. 8. 7. The Stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; the turtle, and the crane, and the ſwallow obſerve the time of their coming, ſaith our Prophet

Matt. 6. 28. Jeremy. Go to the lilies of the field, and learn of them, ſaith our Saviour. To ſay no more, There is no creature in the world but upbraids us with ſin, in daily and continually breaking the Law of our creation, which they ſo inviolably obſerve.

We ſhould therefore hence learn to uſe the Creatures not for our bodies onely, to array them and feed them, and ſuch like, but for the ſpiritual good of the inward man; that ſo in them and with them we may glorifie our Creatour. God made all the Creation for the ſervice of man: but not for the ſervice of his Body alone, as moſt conceive it; but alſo for the ſervice of his Better part, the Soul and Underſtanding. We ſhould never therefore uſe, behold or look upon any one of our fellow-creatures, but we ſhould be raiſed by them unto God, invited to devotion, and ſpurred to conform our Wills and Affections to the pattern of that Eternal Will which they any way expreſs.

I doubt not but the Philoſophy of Solomon was of this ſtrain, when he

1 King. 4. 33. ſpake of herbs and trees, and of living creatures; the fragments which here and there remain in the Proverbs may give us ſome taſte thereof.

If we would doe thus, it would abate our Pride, and make us know our ſelves better. Lord, what is man but the moſt unreaſonable creature upon the face of the earth, the moſt unjuſt, lawleſs, irregular creature that walks under the Sun? Conſider the marches of that Royal hoſt of Heaven; look upon the fowls of the Air and fiſhes of the Sea; ſurvey all that ſpringeth, all that moveth and creepeth upon the Earth; and tell me, from the circumference above unto the centre below, what one creature, what worſt creature of God's making, what ſilly worm doth ſo tranſgreſs the Law of his creation as Man doth? And yet Man hath Reaſon given him, whereby he knoweth the Law and Rule he is to follow; Man hath alſo a liberty of Will: But what doth he with them? His Reaſon he abuſeth to moſt unreaſonable actions; his Will, to moſt licencious and abominable liberty. It is a wonder the Earth can endure to bear him ſo vile a burthen, or the Sun to ſhine upon him the moſt unworthy creature in the world. Thus much concerning The deſcription of the falſe Gods, in the words, The Gods that made not the Heavens and the Earth.

It remains I ſhould ſpeak of their Doom, in the laſt words, They ſhall periſh from from the Earth, &c. Wherein I shall observe two things: 1. Their destiny it self, which is perishing; They shall perish: and 2. The circumstances of this perishing; from the Earth, and from under these Heavens. I make them two, because they will yield different Observations and Instructions. Jer. 10. 11.

To begin therefore with the first, The Doom or Destiny it self, which is perishing; They shall perish. These words you see were a Prophecy of what was to come upon the Gods of the Heathen in after-times; for at the time and age wherein they were spoken, things in the world were far otherwise then here is foretold they should be: For the dominion and jurisdiction of Jehovah, the God of Heaven, seemed exceeding small; his Name being onely known in Jacob, and his Greatness and Throne amongst the Sons of Israel; whereas Idols, false gods, and false worship, overwhelmed as it were the face of the whole earth. The kingdom of God was but a small parcel; whereas Devils and Idols commanded and swayed all the Nations of the earth besides. The dew of grace lay onely upon the fleece of Gideon; but all the earth besides was drie. This was the state of the times when this Prophecy was uttered, nay worse at that time then ever it had been before: For even that small portion of men which acknowledged the Lord God of heaven, was now almost quite extinguished and devoured by the vassals of the Gods of the Nations; Israel being carried away captive into a strange land, with much unlikelihood of return, and the most High God as it were mastered by the Gods of the Nations.

The State of the Times when this Prophecy of the downfal of Ethnicism was delivered.

Ye have heard the state of the times wherein this Prophecy is commanded: Now let us consider of the Event; and this we shall finde partly already accomplished, and partly yet to come. For the first, We have seen with our eyes, we have heard with our ears, and our fathers have told us the wondrous works of the Lord. We have heard and daily reade of the admired Oracles of the Gentiles, of Apollo at Delphos, of Jupiter Ammon in Egypt, and many mo, too long to be named: but all of them are long since perished from the earth, and from under these heavens. We have heard of the names of many Gods in former times of great renown in these Islands of the Gentiles; Jupiter, Mars, Apollo, Neptune, Juno, Vesta, Venus, Minerva, Diana, &c. all Europe, Italy, Greece, and the lesser Asia, swarming with their Temples and Ceremonies: and yet now are they perished from the earth, and from under these heavens. Where is now Bel the God of Babylon, Nisroch the God of Assyria, Baal and Ashteroth the Gods of the Sidonians, Rimmon the God of the Aramites? Where is now Dagon of the Philistines, Milcom of the Ammonites, Chemosh of Moab, and Tammuz of the Egyptians? Even these also, whose names we hear so frequent in Scripture, are perished with their very names from this earth, and from under these heavens. And the Nations which once worshipped them, worship now the great God, Creatour of heaven and earth, once all of them, and yet the most of them, truly and savingly in Christ Jesus the Saviour and Redeemer of the world.

The beginning of this strange and wonderful Change was about the Birth and Incarnation of Christ our Saviour, at which time the Gods of the Gentiles grew speechless in their Oracles: or if at any time they answered, it was to testifie the nearness of that time wherein they were to be cast out, and the presence of him who should doe the same. As it is reported of Augustus, who consulting the Oracle of Apollo, who should reign after him, received this answer;

Παῖς Ἑβραῖος κέλεταί με, θεοῖς μακάρεσσιν ἀνάσσων,
Τόνδε δόμον προλιπεῖν, καὶ αἴδην αὖθις ἰκέσθαι.
Λοιπὸν ἀπ' ἐμοῦ σιγῶν ἐκ βωμῶν ἠμετεράων.

Jer. 10. 11.

The meaning whereof is this; The Hebrew childe, which rules the blessed Gods, bids me leave this house, and presently pack to hell: From henceforth depart thou with silence from our Altars. Whereupon it is said that Augustus reared an Altar in the Capitol with this Inscription, ARA PRIMOGENITI DEI, The Altar of the First-begotten of God. * Porphyrie, though an enemy of Christians, reports three farewell Oracles of Apollo. The first whereof is this:

* in his Περὶ τῆς ἐκ λογίων φιλοσοφίας, quoted by Eusebius and Theodoret.

Οἴ οἴ μοι, τρίποδες συναχήσετε, οἴχετ' Ἀπόλλων,
Οἴχετ', ἐπεὶ φλογέον με βιάζει οὐράνιον φῶς·
Ἦν Ζεύς, ἔστι τε νῦν, ἠδ' ἔσται, ὦ μεγάλε Ζεῦ.
Οἴ οἴ μοι, χρησμῶν κατλείπει ἠὲ γέγηθα.

In English thus; O woe is me! lament ye Tripods, for Apollo is gone, he is gone, he is gone; For the burning light of heaven, that Jupiter which was, is, and shall be, O mighty Jupiter, he compells me. Ah woe is me! the bright glory of my Oracles is gone from me. And to the Priest which last consulted him, his demand being, Which was the true Religion, he answered in this manner;

Μὴ ὄφελες πύματόν με καὶ ὕστατον αὖτις ἐρέσθαι,
Δύσμορε προπόλων, περὶ θεσπεσίου γενετῆρος,
Ἀμφί τε πνευγάτοιο πανομφαίου βασιλῆος,
Καὶ Πνοιῆς ἣ πάντα περιξ βοερηδὸν ἔέργει, &c.

Then,

Οἴ μοι, καὶ σὺ ἐθέλοντα δόμων ἀπὸ τῶνδε διώξει,
Αὐτίκ' ἐρημαῖον δὲ λελείψει δῶ Φοῖβος.

In English thus; Thou unhappiest of the Priests, oh that thou wouldst not have asked me, being now at my last, of the Divine Father, and of the dear begotten of that famous King, nor of the Spirit which comprehendeth and surroundeth all things For, woe is me! He it is that, will I, nill I, will expell me from these Temples; and full soon shall this divining seat become a place of desolation. And if at any time he were extremely urged by inchantments and exorcisms to break off this uncouth silence, he answered, Eusebius Præpar. Evang. lib. 5. cap. 16.

* Πυθῶνος δ' ἐστὶ ἔσιν ἀναρρῶσαι λαὸν ἄμφην,
Ἤδη γὰρ δολιχοῖσιν ἀμαυρωθεῖσα χρόνοισιν
Βίβλῃ κληῖδας ἀμαιτόφυτου σιωπῆς.
Ῥέξατε δ', ὡς ἔθος ἐστὶ, θεοπρόπα δύματα Φοίβῳ.

Apollo's voice is not to be recovered, it is decayed through length of time, and locked up with the keys of never-divining silence: but doe you, as ye were wont, such sacrifices as it beseemeth Phœbus to have.

The ceasing of Oracles, in ancient times so frequent, made the Heathen wonder what the cause should be; for being grown very rare as the coming of Christ drew near, and at the time of his being upon the earth, the chiefest of all, the Oracle of Delphos, grown speechless, as Strabo living at that time witnesseth, before the end of that Age all the Oracles of the world in a manner held their peace.

Plutarch's account of the Causes why Oracles ceased.

Plutarch, as ye all know, at that time writ a Tract of the decay of Oracles, wherein he labours to finde the cause of their ceasing; and after much search and many disputes, he concludes the Reason partly to be from the absence of his Demoniacall spirits, who by his Philosophy might either die through length of years, or flit from place to place, either exiled by others more strong, or upon some other dislike; and partly from the alteration of the soile where Oracles were seated, which might not yield such Exhalations as in former times they had done. This is the Summe of the Reasons in that Discourse.

The true Cause of their ceasing.

But as we embrace this Testimony of Plutarch for the use and decay of Oracles;

Oracles; so we are better enabled to give a true reason thereof then he was or could be: namely, As Meteors and smaller lights vanish and appear not when the Sun begins to rise; so did these false lights of the Heathen vanish when the Sun of righteousness, Christ Jesus, arose unto the world. Jer. 10. 11.

As Dagon fell down when the Ark of God was brought into his Temple; so when the true Ark of God, Christ Jesus, came into the world, all the Dagons of the Nations fell down: The time was come when, as our Saviour saith John 12. 31. the Prince of this world was to be cast out; The night was past, and the day was come; and therefore such Bats and Birds of darkness as these were not any longer to play such reaks as in times past they had done. 1 Sam. 5. 3. Rom. 13. 12.

Now began that War in heaven between Michael and the red Dragon, whereof we reade in the Revelation, Michael and his Angels fought against the Dragon and his Angels: that is, Christ our Lord and his undaunted souldiers fought with the Devil and all his Ethnick forces led by the Roman Emperours. Which War, though it lasted long, and cost the bloud and lives of many a thousand valiant Martyrs; yet in the daies of Constantine the Dragon received so great an overthrow, that he never could recover it: and though in the daies of Julian he made head again and kept the field a while; yet was he soon fain to quit it, and leave the victory unto Michael's army: Which defeature of his was accompanied with an ominous signe of his utter overthrow, his Throne or Temple at Delphos with earthquakes, thunder and lightening, being utterly ruined. For as by the rending of the veil of the Temple of Solomon was signified the abolishment of Legal worship: so by the prodigious destruction of the chiefest Temple the Devil had in all the world, was, as it were, sealed the irrecoverable overthrow of Ethnicisme, which in the Event immediately following proved true. For though he retained some strength under Valens in the East, by still enjoying his wonted sacrifices; yet in the daies of Theodosius he was utterly and finally vanquished, when his last champion Eugenius, who threatned to be another Julian, and to restore Ethnicisme again, with his whole Army was discomfited by the prayer and proweſs of Theodosius, about the year of our Lord three hundred and ninety. For after this time Ethnicisme was never publickly maintained in the Roman Empire, nor any open attempt made for restoring it again; whereby it seems the red Dragon was cast down to the earth, and that now was perfected the Triumph of Michael's victory, when the Gods that made not the heaven and the earth were fully perished, as concerning their Empire, from the earth, and from under these heavens. Rev. 12. 7.

As the War was long, so the Victory was not gotten all at once, but by certain degrees, as it were; beginning with Constantine Anno 300. and ending in Theodosius, about (as I said) the year 390. And though it be hard to pitch the time of this Trophee exactly; yet I doubt not but it falleth in some part of the time included in the foresaid limits.

Thus then have we seen the Truth and Power of God in fulfilling of this Prophecy, for so much as is already past, and may say with David, Psal. 48. 8. As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of the Lord of hosts, in the city of our God; God will establish it for ever. But who would have believed this at the time when the words were spoken, when the worshippers of the most high God were at so low an ebbe? Hence therefore must we learn to believe the Promises of God, be they never so unlikely to humane Reason: For he it is that saies, Esay 46. 11. I have spoken, and I will bring it to pass. It is he that saies, Jer. 32. 27. I am the God of all flesh, and there is nothing too hard for me. Though Abraham be never so old, and Sarah's wombe be dead; Gen. 17. 17. & 18. 11, 12.

Jer. 10. 11. dead; yet if the Lord ſaies it, he ſhall be Father of many Nations. Though * Gideon be the leaſt of the houſe of Manaſſes; yet if the Lord ſaies it, by him ſhall Iſrael be delivered from the Midianites. Though * David follow the ſheep; yet if God promiſe, he ſhall be King of Iſrael. Be the famine in Samaria never ſo extreme, that women eat their own children; yet if God ſay it, within twenty four hours ſhall corn be ſo cheap, that a meaſure of fine flour ſhall be ſold for a ſhekel, and two meaſures of barley for a ſhekel, in the gates of Samaria. Let us take heed therefore we ſay not with him on whoſe hand the King leaned, If God would make windows in heaven, it could not be; nor with the Iſraelites, when the ſpies brought them news of the ſtrength of the Inhabitants of Canaan, of chariots of iron, and the giant-like ſons of Anak, let us not ſay with them, we ſhall not enter: For that Lord who ſet humane reaſon againſt the Word and Promiſe of God, never eat of the abundance of Samaria; and the Jews which diſtruſted God, never entred the land of Canaan. But let us know, for a concluſion, that God is faithfull and true, and * his Promiſes yea and amen.

HITHERTO we have ſpoken of the accompliſhment of this Prophecy for ſo much as is already paſt; now let us ſee What that is which we expect as yet to come. For though in regard of former times, when Ethniciſme was ſo large, and the worſhippers of the living God ſo ſmall a ſcantling, the Extent of the Church be now at this day a goodly and large portion of the world: yet if we conſider the numbers of nations yet Pagans, or not Chriſtians, it will ſeem too ſcant as yet to be the accompliſhment of this and other Prophecies concerning the Largeneſs of Chriſt's Kingdome before the end of the world.

For one hath well obſerved, That Chriſtianity at this day is not above the ſixth part of the known world; whereas the Mahumetans have a fifth, and all the reſt are Ethnicks and Pagans. So that if we divide the World into thirty parts, Chriſtianity is but as five in thirty, Mahumetaniſm as ſix, and Ethniciſm as nineteen: and ſo is Chriſtianity the leaſt part of all, and plain Heatheniſm hath far above the one half of the known world; and the better part of the other is alſo Mahumetans. And though Chriſtianity hath been embraced in former times where now it is not, yet is it now ſpred in thoſe places where in thoſe times it was not. And therefore all laid together, we may account Chriſtianity at this day as large, I think, as ever it was ſince the Apoſtles time.

But that this is not that Univerſal Kingdome of Chriſt, that flouriſhing and glorious eſtate of the Church, which yet we expect and hope for, my Reaſons are theſe.

1. Firſt, Thoſe frequent places of Scripture which intimate that the Lord ſhould ſubdue all people, all kingdoms, all nations, and all the ends of the earth unto himſelf, and that all theſe ſhould one day worſhip and acknowledge him. Pſal. 22.27. All the ends of the world ſhall remember and turn unto the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations ſhall worſhip before him: for the Kingdome is the Lord's, and he is governour among the nations. And Pſal. 47. 1, 2, 3. Clap your hands all ye people,——for the Lord is a great King over all the earth: He ſhall ſubdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet. And again, v. 7, 8. God is King of all the earth——and reigneth over the Heathen. Pſal. 66. 1, &c. Make a joyfull noiſe unto God, all ye lands——Through the greatneſs of thy power ſhall thine enemies ſubmit themſelves unto thee. All the earth ſhall worſhip thee, and ſing of thee; they ſhall ſing unto thy Name. The whole 67. Pſalm, which we reade every day, is as it were a Prophecy and Prayer for this great Kingdome: That the way of God may be known upon earth, and his ſaving health among all nations. Let the people people praise thee, O God, let all the people praise thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase, &c. God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him. And Psal. 86. 9, 10. All nations whom thou hast made, shall come and worship before thee, O Lord, and shall glorifie thy Name. For thou art great, and doest wondrous things; Thou art God alone. And Esa. 2. 18. which is a Prophecie of Christ's kingdome, it is said, that the Idols the Lord shall utterly abolish; or, as some reade, the Idols shall utterly pass away. So Esay 54. 5. speaking of the Amplitude of the Church of the Gentiles, Thy Redeemer, (saith the Prophet) the holy One of Israel, the God of the whole earth shall he be called. Certainly, this constant style of Universality implies more then this scantling which yet is, it being but one of the least parts of the whole earth. Jer. 10. 11.

Secondly, The same conclusion may be gathered from 1 Cor. 15. 25, 26. compared with Heb. 2. 8. Christ must reigne (saith S. Paul in the first place quoted) till he hath put all his enemies under his feet. The last enemy which shall be destroyed is death. Hence it follows, That Christ shall subdue all his enemies, whereof the Prince of this world is the chief, before the last rising of the dead: For the subduing of death, that is, the rising of the dead, shall not be afore the rest shall be done; the vanquishing of death being the last act of Christ's reigning; which done, he shall yield up the Kingdome unto his Father. 2.

In the other place, Heb. 2. 8. the Apostle speaking of the same thing, alledgeth that of Psal. 8. 6. Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet; (and then adds) For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now (mark it) we see not yet all things put under him.

If any say that the Apostle speaks here of the Kingdome of Glory in heaven, and not of the Kingdome of Grace on earth:

I reply 1. out of the former place, That he speaks of such a subjection whereof the rising of the dead shall be the last act of all, and which shall be before he yields up the Kingdome to his Father: But neither of these can be affirmed of the Kingdome of Glory, but the contrary; viz. The rising of the dead is at the beginning, and not at the end of the Kingdome of Glory; and so is also the yielding up of his kingdome unto his Father.

2. I reply out of this place, That the Apostle speaks of that Kingdome and subjection of the Earth, or state of the Earth, which was to come. For so he speaks, ver. 5. * Unto the Angels he hath not put in subjection τὴν οἰκουμένην τὴν μέλλουσαν, the Earth, or state of the Earth, which shall be, περὶ ἧς λαλοῦμεν, of which we speak. Here he affirms, that οἰκουμένη μέλλουσα is that of whose subjection he meaneth. If then Οἰκουμένη signifie only the Earth and the Earth's inhabitants, and is no where in the whole Scripture otherwise used; I cannot see how this place can well bear any other exposition.

* See this more fully explain'd in a particular Tract of his, Οἰκουμένη μέλλουσα.

First then to confirm this, Οἰκουμένη is the same which the Hebrews call תֵּבֵל; for so the Septuagint renders it, whose use of speaking I doubt not but the Apostle follows. But תֵּבֵל most constantly signifies the habitable earth, or the earth with the things that live and dwell thereon: whence the Septuagint, though they commonly render it Οἰκουμένη, yet sometimes they render it ἡ γῆ, The earth; sometimes ἡ ὑπὸ τὸν οὐρανὸν, That which is under heaven. Therefore with the Septuagint Οἰκουμένη is ἡ γῆ, and ἡ ὑπὸ τὸν οὐρανὸν, The earth, and That which is under the heavens.

If this suffice not, we may yet consider, That Οἰκουμένη is a Participle of the feminine gender, and therefore understands ἡ γῆ, quasi γῆ ἡ οἰκουμένη, the earth which is inhabited.

Lastly,

Jer. 10. 11. Heb. 1. 10. Laſtly, Whereſoever elſewhere this word is found in the New Teſtament, it is moſt expreſly uſed of the earth and inhabitants thereof. In the beginning of this Epiſtle we reade, Thou, Lord, in the beginning haſt laid the foundations of the earth τὴν οἰκουμένης, and the heavens are the works of thine hands. Matt. 24. 14. This Goſpel of the kingdome ſhall be preached ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ οἰκουμένῃ, over all the earth, and then ſhall the end come. Luke 2. 1. Then went a decree from Auguſtus that all the world ſhould be taxed, πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην. The reſt behinde are far more expreſs; but I leave them to your own leiſure, and will only adde this one thing, That our Heb. 2. 5. Engliſh rendring in this place of the Hebrews, Οἰκουμένη τὴ μέλλουσα, The world to come, makes it not only ambiguous, but ſeeming to mean The Kingdome of Glory. But we ſhall finde that The world in that ſenſe is alwaies αἰὼν ἐρχόμενος, and αἰὼν μέλλων, but no where in all the Bible οἰκουμένη ἡ μέλλουσα. And ſo I leave this, with ſubmiſſion to the judgement of others.

3. My next Reaſon ſhall be from that we reade in the Revelation, where the Church, by the conqueſt of Michael, ſet free from the Dragon's fury, is ſaid Rev. 12. 6. to eſcape into the wilderneſs; that is, into a ſtate, though of ſafety, peace and ſecurity, yet of hardſhip, miſery and ſcarcity: For it ſeems to be an alluſion to the Iſraelites eſcaping the tyranny of Pharaoh, by going into the wilderneſs. In this wilderneſs, or place of hardſhip, ſcarcity, miſery and Verſ. 14. much affliction, the Church muſt remain (ſaith S. John) a time, times, Verſ. 6. and half a time; or, as he elſewhere ſpeaketh, a thouſand, two hundred and threeſcore daies; that is, a year, years, and half a year: and when this time ſhall be expired, (that is, as learned Divines think, when ſo many years ſhall be ended as thoſe daies are, taking the beginning of our reckoning from Michael's Trophee) then, ſaith our Apoſtle, ſhall the kingdoms of the world become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Chriſt, and he ſhall reign for ever and ever, Rev. 11. 15. Whereby it ſhould ſeem that the Church is yet in the Wilderneſs; and that the promiſed happineſs of the ample and flouriſhing glory thereof before the end of the world is yet to come.

4. My laſt Reaſon ſhal be from Rom. 11. where S. Paul ſpeaking of the future reſtoring and calling of the Jews, ſaith it ſhall be when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is come in; I would not (ſaith he) that ye ſhould be ignorant of this myſterie, &c. v. 25. Now becauſe the Jews are not yet called, it followeth that the fulneſs of the Gentiles is yet to come: and what ſhould then this Fulneſs be, but the Fulneſs of the Goſpel's extent over all the nations of the world; which our Apoſtle, ver. 15. of the ſame chapter, calls life from the dead? For if the caſting away of the Jews be the reconciling of the world; what ſhall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead? As if the Church of the Gentiles were as yet half dead, if it be compared with that glorious vigour and acceſſion which ſhall come unto it when the Jews ſhall be again received into favour.

In brief, The Fulneſs here ſpoken of is either a Fulneſs of grace, a Fulneſs of extent, or a Fulneſs of time. A Fulneſs of time only it cannot be, Verſ. 25. εἰσέλθῃ. becauſe our Apoſtle ſaith, this Fulneſs ſhall enter in; namely, ſhall enter into the Church of Chriſt: but this I ſee not how it can be ſpoken of a period of time. As for a Fulneſs of grace and ſpiritual gifts, that was greater when S. Paul ſpake then ever it was ſince; and therefore if it be meant, it muſt be yet to come. And for the Fulneſs of extent, it was as large for the number of Nations in the Apoſtles times as it is now in ours; (For as for the American Chriſtians, they are only ſo in name, being forced only to ſeem ſo by the Spaniards.) Whatſoever Fulneſs then the Apoſtle here meaneth, is yet to come.

I will adde only one thing more, and ſo end this point. Some think that S. Paul

S. Paul in this place hath reference unto that ſpeech of Chriſt, Luke 21. 24. where he foretells, That the Jews ſhould fall by the edge of the ſword, and be led captive into all nations, and Jeruſalem ſhould be troden down of the Gentiles, untill the times of the Gentiles ſhould be fulfilled, or accompliſhed. But it ſeems to me, that the Fulneſs of the Gentiles and the Fulfilling or Accompliſhment of their times ſhould not be the ſame, howſoever they may be coincident. It ſhould rather ſeem that our Saviour hath reference, as to a thing known, unto the Prophecy of Daniel, where the Times of the Gentiles, or the times wherein the Gentiles ſhould have dominion, with the miſery and ſubjection of the Jewiſh Nation, are ſet forth in the Viſion of a fourfold Image, and four Beaſts, which are the four Monarchies, the Babylonian, Perſian, Greek and Roman. The firſt began with the firſt captivity of the Jewiſh Nation, and through the times of all the reſt they ſhould be in ſubjection or in a worſer eſtate under them: But when their times ſhould be accompliſhed, then, ſaith Daniel, The Saints of the moſt High God ſhall take the kingdome, and poſſeſs the kingdome for ever and ever; that is, there ſhall be no more kingdoms after it, but it ſhall continue as long as the world ſhall endure. Three of theſe Monarchies were paſt when our Saviour ſpake, and the fourth was well entred. If then by Saints there are meant the Jews, which we know are called the holy People, in that ſenſe their countrey is ſtill called the holy Land, and their city in the Scripture the holy City, viz. relatively; then is it plain enough what Daniel's and our Saviour's words import, namely, a glorious revocation and kingdome of the Jews, when the time of the fourth Monarchy, which then remained, ſhould be expired and accompliſhed.

Jer. 10. 11.

Dan. Chap. 2, & 7.

Chap. 7. 18.

But if here by the Saints of the moſt High are in general meant the Church, yet by coincidence of time the ſame will fall out on the Jews behalf; becauſe S. Paul ſaith, that at the time when the Fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall come in, the Jew ſhall be again reſtored.

Rom. 11. 25.

For a concluſion; The laſt limbe of the fourth Monarchy is, in Daniel, The Horn with eyes which ſpake proud things againſt the moſt High, which ſhould continue a time, times, and half a time; that is, a year, years, and half a year. In the Revelation it is The Beaſt with ſo many heads and horns, full of names of blaſphemy, which was to continue forty two months: the ſame period with the former, which was expreſſed by times or years, and the ſame time with a thouſand, two hundred and ſixty daies of the Churche's remaining in the wilderneſs.

Rev. 12. 6.

When theſe Times, whatſoever they be, ſhall be ended, then is the period of the Times of the Gentiles and of the Jews miſery, whereto our Saviour ſeems to refer in the Goſpel: then, by S. Paul, ſhall the Fulneſs of the Gentiles enter in: then, ſaith S. John, ſhall the kingdoms of the earth be the Lord's and his Chriſt's: then, ſaith Daniel in the former place, ch. 7. 27. ſhall the kingdome, and dominion, and the greatneſs of the kingdome under the whole heaven, be given to the people of the Saints of the moſt High; whoſe kingdome is an everlaſting kingdome, and all dominions ſhall ſerve and obey him.

Rev. 11. 15.

The Uſe we are to make upon this long Diſcourſe is Hope and comfortable Expectation. Experience (ſaith S. Paul, Rom. 5. 4.) engendereth hope: Let therefore our experience of God's Power and Truth in that which is paſt, be as a pledge and pawn unto us of the future. We have ſeen a great part of this Doom of falſe Gods fulfilled already: what though we ſee not the means of the full accompliſhment? If thou ſhalt ſay in thy heart, (ſaith Moſes, Deuter. 7. 17, 18.) Theſe nations are more then I; how can I diſpoſſeſs them? Thou ſhalt not be afraid of them, but ſhalt remember what the

Jer. 10. 11. the Lord thy God did unto Pharaoh and unto all Egypt. So if any of us ſhall ſay, How can this be? let us remember what the Lord hath done already, in ſubduing ſo great a part of the world unto himſelf, which once ſate in darkneſs and in the ſhadow of death.

DISCOURSE XXXVI.

DEUTERONOMY 33. 8.

And of Levi he ſaid, Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy Holy One.

THIS Verſe is part of that Bleſſing wherewith Moſes the man of God bleſſed the children of Iſrael before his death; and theſe words are part of the Bleſſing of Levi: a Bleſſing which much exceeds thoſe that went before it, and is far above all that come after it. For as S. Paul proves Heb. 7. 6. Melchiſedec to be greater then Abraham, becauſe he bleſſed Abraham; and worthier then Levi, becauſe he tithed Verſ. 9. Levi in the loins of Abraham: So may we ſay of this Bleſſing, That it is the greateſt of all, becauſe it is the Bleſſing of him who by his Office was to bleſs all the reſt; and the worthieſt of all, becauſe by it the party bleſſed is enabled to bleſs the reſt of his Brethren. Ἀεὶ δι' ὃ ὑπάρχει ἕκαστον, ἐκεῖνο μᾶλλον ὑπάρχει, Always that by which another is, that thing it ſelf is more then the other.

In the words themſelves we will conſider firſt The Subject bleſſed; and then The quality of the Bleſſing it ſelf. The Subject bleſſed is expreſſed both by name, and by deſcription: by name, Levi; by deſcription, God's Holy One. The Bleſſing it ſelf is contained in words few, but for ſubſtance plentifull; Urim and Thummim; nay, more then ſo, Thy Thummim and Thy Urim: that we might know whence this Bleſſing comes; how that it is θεῖόν τι, & χάρισμα θεοῦ, a divine thing, the gift of God, who is the Author and Giver of all good things: And of Levi he ſaid, Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy Holy One.

To begin firſt with the Subject, Levi. What Levi was is ſo well known, that it were needleſs to ſay much to make it better known. Only this, that Levi was the Tribe which God had eſpecially bequeathed to himſelf, and ſet apart for the Miniſtery of the Altar. Concerning whoſe Name, (though Obſervations drawn from Names are like an Houſe raiſed upon the ſand, yet becauſe of old, and among the Patriarchs, Names were given by the Spirit of Prophecy,) it will not be altogether unworthy our ſpeculation, to remember the reaſon why this Name Levi was impoſed; which we ſhall ſee as truly verified in that Function to which God did advance his poſterity, as it was by his Mother fitly given to himſelf upon the good hope ſhe conceived at his birth.

For Levi ſignifies a Conjoyner, an Uniter or maker of Union: For thus Gen. 29. 34. ſaid Leah when ſhe bare him, Now at this time will my husband be joyned to me, me, becauſe I have born a third ſon: And ſhe called his name Levi. She called him Levi; but for ought we reade, in regard of her ſelf, ſhe found him no Levi as ſhe hoped: but ſhe propheſied of that ſacred Office whereby all the ſons of Levi became Conjoyners, became makers of Union (not between Jacob and Leah, but) between God and Man, between Chriſt and his Spouſe, between the ſpiritual Jacob and his deformed Leah. For, as truly as ever Leah ſpake, might the Church then, and may the Church now, affirm, when ſhe hath born theſe ſons unto her husband, Now I know, my heavenly husband, my Lord, my God, will be joyned to me; becauſe I have born him theſe בני לויה, theſe ſons of Union, theſe Miniſters of reconciliation. Plato could ſay, A Prieſt was φιλίας θεῶν καὶ ἀνθρώπων δημιυργὸς, A friend-maker between God and men: Nay, his whole Office is nothing but the Service of peace, and that not only between God and man, but between man and his brother; For how can he love God who loves not his brother? or how can he be at peace with God who is at variance with his brother? Needs muſt he therefore that is Miniſter of the one be Miniſter of the other alſo: and he that is ſo, nay he alone that is ſo, is a right Levite and a true ſon of Union. Deut. 33. 8. 1 John 4. 20.

How unworthy then of this holy Name, how unworthy to ſucceed in the holy Order of Levi, are thoſe who are Miniſters of diviſion; who by their lives, doctrine, example, or any other way divide God and his Church, and the Church within it ſelf; who neither have peace with God themſelves, nor will ſuffer others to have it; who neither agree themſelves with others, nor ſuffer others to agree among themſelves? Beati pacifici, Bleſſed are the Peace-makers, eſpecially in the ſons of Peace. This Chriſt prayed for in his Apoſtles, Joh. 17. 11. ſaying, Holy Father, keep them through thy name, that they may be one as we are one. Chriſt is ſo one, that he makes all one who are one in him; ſo ſhould every ſon of Levi be one. In ſumme, the Miniſters of God are called Angels, and therefore ſhould ſing a ſong like unto that ſong of Angels, Glory be to God on high, peace on earth, and good will amongſt men. That Church which hath ſuch a Levite, ſuch a Miniſter, ſuch a ſon of Union, may truly take up the words of Micah, Judg. 17. 13. and ſay, Now I know the Lord will doe me good, ſeeing I have a Levite to my Prieſt. Matt. 5. 9. Luke 2. 14.

AND thus much of the Name Levi: Now I come unto the Tribe it ſelf; concerning which there may be two things asked. Firſt, Why God did confine the Prieſthood to one Tribe alone, and not ſuffer it to be common to all, as it was before the Law, and is now ſince the Law. Secondly, Why Levi was choſen to this holy Function rather then any other Tribe.

To the firſt, Why God did limit this holy Function to one Tribe only, ſome of the Jews make this anſwer; That one of the ſons of Iſrael with his whole poſterity was due unto God by virtue of Jacob's Vow, Gen. 28. 20, &c. which was, that if God would be with him in his journey, and bring him back again unto his Father's houſe, Of all that thou ſhalt give me, ſaith he, I will give the tenth unto thee. Now becauſe God gave children, as well as beeves and ſheep, therefore they alſo muſt fall within compaſs of his Vow. And that there might be no difficulty about tithing the odde children, becauſe there were more then ten, they deviſe this way to make all even. For firſt, ſay they, the full number of Jacob's children was fourteen, becauſe that Joſeph's two ſons, Ephraim and Manaſſeh, go in the number of Jacob's ſons: for Jacob Gen. 48. 5, 6. ſaid unto Joſeph, Thy two ſons which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt before I came into Egypt, ſhall be mine, as Reuben and Simeon are mine; but thy lineage which thou begetteſt after them ſhall be thine. Now of theſe fourteen, four were the Lord's by his 1.

Deut. 33. 8. right unto the firſt-born; for ſo many there were which firſt opened the womb of their four Mothers, Rachel and Leah, Bilhah and Zilpah, Jacob's two Wives and his two Concubines. Now of the remainder, being ten, one falls to God's ſhare for Tithe, as being comprized within their Father's Vow.

This Reaſon, though it be as you ſee handſomely framed, yet hath no great likelihood, becauſe men uſe not to be tithed; and therefore this extent of the Vow is beyond the intent of the Vower. And whereas they urge the words, Of all that thou ſhalt give me; they ſeem to forget, that God gave unto Jacob, beſides his ſons, great ſtore of man-ſervants and maid-ſervants; and yet we reade not that any of theſe were dedicate unto God, or that he challenged any of their poſterity.

The only or chief Cauſe (if I am not deceived) why God reſtrained the Prieſtly Function to one Tribe, was for a ſigne and band of the reſtraint of his Church to one People: For as the Church cannot be without the ſacred Function of the Miniſtery; ſo likewiſe the condition thereof muſt follow the condition of the Miniſtery. As long therefore as none could be a Prieſt but of the Tribe of Levi, ſo long there could be no Church but of that people whereof Levi was a Tribe. A point of ſacred Policy ſo to order the choice of Miniſters as ſhall be moſt fit to uphold the preſent ſtate of an eſtabliſhed Church.

2. The other Queſtion we propounded was, Why God choſe Levi before any other Tribe. And of this many Reaſons may be given. As

1. For Moſes his ſake, whom God would honour by advancing the houſe of his Father to the higheſt pitch of dignity that mortal man could attain to. For what greater honour then to be Embaſſadour of the Lord of Hoſts, to be admitted unto the inſpection of his moſt ſecret Myſteries, to be God's κλῆρος, his proper and peculiar portion? Would God they either knew or believed this who think their houſe diſgraced, and their bloud ſtained, if any of their Kin become of the Clergy. It was not ſo in God's opinion, no nor Moſes his neither; for had it been, Levi of all the Tribes ſhould not have been God's Holy one.

2. The ſecond Reaſon was the Nobility of this Tribe: for Levi was ennobled both generally, as being the ſon of a lawfull Wife, and not the ſon of an Handmaid; and ſpecially, as being of kin to Moſes the Prince of the Congregation: In the firſt reſpect he was nobler then many of his brethren; in the ſecond, more noble then any of them. This example of God's own choice of men for his holy Service if we would look unto, we would not ſin the ſin of Jeroboam, to make Prieſts almoſt of no other but of the loweſt of the people. I ſpeak not only of the loweſt for externall condition, but of the loweſt for the gifts of their Minde. For I know it is true which the Virgin hath in her Magnificat, Luke 1. 52. That God often puts down the mighty from their ſeats, and exalteth them of low degree: I know it is true that he often filleth the hungry with good things, and the rich he ſends empty away, v. 53. But we ſhould know that whenſoever we offer unto him, he requireth the beſt thing in our hands; and therefore for this worthy Calling we are to give unto him, as far as may be, the worthieſt among the ſons of men.

Ῥεῖα δ' ἀρίζηλον μινύθει, καὶ ἄδηλον ἀέξει Ζεὺς ὑψιβρεμέτης.——

3. Another Reaſon why God choſe this Tribe afore other, may be the Smalneſs thereof, being not above the ſixtieth part of the people: A number which God in his wiſdome ſaw fit for that Church, as being both ſufficient for inſtructing the people, and diſcharge of the duties of their order, and not too great to live of God's ordinary, his Tithes and the other Offerings of the Altar; whereas the leaſt of the other Tribes were as big as three of it.

4. But

4. But the last Reason, and as it seems one of the chiefest, is that which Moses intimates in the very verse following my Text, speaking thus of Levi, That he said unto his Father and to his Mother, I have not seen them; neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor knew his own children; but observed God's word and kept his Covenant. In which words Moses alludes unto their forward zeal to avenge the Lord of the people which worshipped the golden Calf, Exod. 32. 26, &c. where it is said, that Moses stood in the gate of the camp and cried, Whosoever is on the Lord's side, let him come unto me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves unto him. Then said Moses, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the Camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour. And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses, &c. For Moses had said, (so it follows in the Text) Consecrate your selves unto the Lord this day, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother, that there may be given you a blessing this day. This Blessing here spoken of is our Urim and Thummim, the blessing of Sacred Order. So bountifully did God reward them who were so forward to be on his side when Moses called them, that himself vouchsafed to call them unto his side for ever. Deut. 33. 8.

Whence, first, we may learn whom we are chiefly to preferre unto this holy Function, namely, those who are zealous for the Lord of Hosts, who preferre the glory of God above all worldly respects whatsoever. This got Phinehas the son of Eleazar the High-Priesthood; this got all the sons of Levi the guerdon of Urim and Thummim, the blessing of Holy Orders.

Secondly, We may see by the advancement of this Tribe, how merciful our God is. We know that Levi's fury did once as much offend him as his sons zeal now pleased him; and yet for this one action he forgot the sin of their Father in the bloudy slaughter of the Sichemites: He remembred not the curse of Jacob, Into their secret let not my soul come: My glory be not thou joyned with their assembly. Cursed be their wrath, for it was fierce; and their rage, for it was cruell, Gen. 49. 6, 7. Nay he turned the very curse of Jacob into a blessing, by dividing them in Jacob, and scattering them in Israel. Here Mercy and Truth met both together, and Justice and Peace kissed each other.

Lastly, Here God verified his own description of himself, That though he be a jealous God, and visits the sins of the father upon the children unto the third and fourth generation; yet he is also a mercifull God, and shews mercy even unto the thousandth generation of them that love him and keep his Commandments. Exod. 20. 5, 6.

AND thus have you seen why of Levi Moses said this Blessing, And of Levi he said. Now I come to The description of this blessed Tribe, in these words, God's Holy one: Let thy Urim and thy Thummim be with thy holy one. How is Levi here called Holy? how is this Title given to him above the rest of his Brethren? Are not all the Lord's people holy? Certainly whatsoever is meant hereby, it is something more specially belonging to Levi then to any other Tribe. Which that we may the better finde, we must take notice of a Threefold Holiness; Essential, Habitual, Relative. Essential Holiness is the Holiness of God, all one with God himself, and this is a glorious Holiness: Who (saith Moses) is like unto thee, O Lord, among the Gods? who is like unto thee, glorious in holiness? Exod. 15. 11. Habitual I call an Inherent Holiness, such as is the holiness of righteous men, integrity of life, or righteous holiness, whereof Abraham, Job, David, and all the Patriarchs are called Saints and Holy men. This is that which the Greeks call ὁσιότης, the Latines Sanctimonia. Relative Holineſs I Deut. 33. 8. define a ſpecial relation, or relation of peculiarity which a thing hath unto God, either in regard of propriety of poſſeſſion, or ſpeciality of preſence. That which is holy after this manner the Greeks call ἱερόν, the Latines Sacrum. The firſt of theſe three is proper to God alone, for he onely is eſſentially holy. The ſecond is proper to reaſonable creatures; for they are onely habitually holy, or endued with holy qualities. But the laſt is common to all manner of things: For all things animate or inanimate are capable of relative holineſs or peculiarity towards God; Perſons, Things, Times, Places. Perſons: So the Nazarites of the Law are called holy: thus was Sampſon, thus was Samuel holy from their Mother's womb. Things: So the Offerings of the Law, yea and of the Goſpel too, are holy things: The Cenſers of Korah and his company were holy, becauſe

Num. 16. 38. (ſaith the Text) they offered them before the Lord. Times: So the Sabbath-day and other Feſtivall days are holy days. Places: So the Temple of the Lord is an holy Place; Mount Sion an holy Mount; yea the Exod. 3. 5. ground about the Buſh where God appeared to Moſes is called Holy ground. And of theſe four, Perſons, Things, and Times are holy, becauſe of God's peculiar propriety in them, in that they are his Perſons, his Things, and his Times: But Places are holy in another regard, becauſe of God's ſpecial manner of Preſence in them.

Now let us ſee in which of all theſe three ways Levi may be ſaid to be holy. Eſſentially holy he cannot be, for he was not God, but the holy one of God. Habitually holy the event ſhews he was not more then the reſt, though he ſhould have been. The Tribe of Levi was always Tribus ſacra, holy unto the Lord, but was not always righteous before the Lord. It was not always true of
Mal. 2. 6. Levi, that he walked before God in peace and equity, and turned many from Verſ. 8. iniquity; but often, yea too often, they were gone out of the way, and cauſed many to ſtumble at or in the Law. Phinehas the ſon of Eli was not like Phinehas the ſon of Aaron. Annas and Caiaphas high Prieſts, as holy as any for their order, as unholy as any in life and converſation.

It ſhould therefore ſeem that Levi ſhould be onely called Holy by a Re-
*Num. 8. 10, 11, 13. lative holineſs; namely, becauſe he was God's peculiar one, becauſe his *offered one, becauſe his peculiar of peculiars; that is, his peculiar Tribe of his peculiar People: for in this Levi had a priviledge above the reſt, in the other none. And this Ezra gives unto him chap. 8. 28. when he delivered unto the Levites the holy Veſſels, Ye are holy (ſaith he) unto the Lord, and theſe Veſſels are holy alſo; that is, Ye are holy as the Veſſels are: for he ſaith not, they were holy before the Lord, for ſo he had meant holy in life; but holy unto the Lord, קדש ליהוה, which always implies a Relative Holineſs.

But though this be true that Levi was Holy after this manner, yet the word which in my Text is turned Holy, ſeems ſcarce to admit of this conſtruction: for the word here uſed is not קדוש, but חסיד, which ſignifies favourable and gracious, and in Religion charitable and godly: All which leans to an Habitual, not to a Relative holineſs. But becauſe Levi was not in this ſort holy above other, as I ſaid before, it may ſeem therefore it ſhould be thus conſtrued; that חסיד is taken Actively or Paſsively: Actively it ſignifies favourable, benigne and gracious; Paſſively, he that is favoured or graced. And thus Junius expounds חסידך in this place, virum tuum quem beneficio proſequeris, Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy favoured one; not ἀνδρὶ ὁσίῳ σου, as the Septuagint, but κεχαριτωμένῳ σου. Which word and ſenſe the Angel uſeth in his ſalutation to the bleſſed
Luke 1. 28. Virgin, Χαῖρε κεχαριτωμένη, Hail thou highly-favoured one; Hail thou whom God hath eſpecially graced to be the Mother of his onely Son. So

Levi

Levi is here described to be one upon whom God bestowed a special favour or grace, a special חסד or χάρισμα, the grace of the holy Ministery: for so S. Paul calls this power of Order a grace or favour, χάρις & χάρισμα· as Eph. 3. 8. Unto me, who am less then the least of all Saints, is this grace given, to preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. And of Timothy the same Apostle speaketh, Neglect not that χάρισμα or grace in thee, which was given by prophecy with the imposition of hands. With this grace was Levi graced, with this favour was he highly favoured, and well might be called איש חסיד יהוה, God's highly-favoured one.

Deut. 33. 8.

1 Tim. 4. 14.

And thus the issue will be all one, חסיד in this sense will fall out to be God's holy one in the last sense: For to be specially favoured of God is to have a special relation to God-ward, to be God's more especially; and this is to be holy with a Relative holiness. Now which soever of these we take to be here meant, we see that that is in special given to Levi which otherwise was common to all the other Tribes. If you take it in the first sense, for Holiness in life, as it were to put Levi in minde how it behoved him above all to be holy; were not all the Tribes as holy as Levi? and yet Levi alone is called God's holy one. If you take it in the second sense, for a Relative holiness; were not all the Tribes of Israel thus holy unto God? were not all his own people, his peculiar people, and a chosen Nation? and yet Levi alone is called God's holy one. If you take it in the last sense, for God's favoured one; were not all Israel a Nation favoured of God above all Nations? and yet Levi alone is especially called God's favoured one.

1. We therefore whom God hath set apart to minister about holy things; we who are holy unto the Lord, and God's own in a peculiar manner; we who have a special relation unto God; we who have received a special favour from God; We must remember we owe a special thankfulness unto him. We who are God's peculiars, must demean our selves peculiarly both toward God and man: We are unto God as other men are not, and therefore may not always doe as other men doe: We cannot reason from others to our selves, no not in things of themselves lawful, Why should not we doe as every man may doe? For all that is lawful for others will not be seemly for us; for we are the household-servants of the most High, we are special men, of whom God requires a special demeanour in life and actions.

This was one cause why God enjoyned the Jews so many peculiar Rites and special Observations differing from the fashions of other people, because they were his peculiar people, an holy Nation; because they were toward him as no other was, though all the world were His; and therefore he would have their manners differ from the fashion of all other Nations, as a badge and acknowledgement of that special relation they had to him above others. Levit. 20. 24, 25, 26. I (saith God) am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other people: Ye shall therefore put difference between clean beasts and unclean, unclean fowls and clean, &c. And ye shall be holy unto me: For I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that you should be mine. This was also a cause why God restrained the Priests of the Law from that which was lawful for the rest of the people: They might drink no Wine; they might not mourn for their kin; they might not marry a divorced woman: the reason of all this is given, because they were holy unto the Lord; that is, with a Relative holiness, as being God's men in a special manner, and therefore he required they should specially demean themselves in their lives. These Observations indeed were Ceremonial, but there is something Moral in them. And therefore in the New Testament we hear of some special things required in a Minister; as that he should have a good report of those who were without: this was not required in every one who was to be a Christian. Again, S. Paul requires in a Bishop, that he should be the husband of one wife:* this was not in those times required of every one who was to be a Christian. I shall not need to tell you what special demeanour the ancient Church bound her Clergy unto: But it came to pass at last this Rule was over-practised by them; for hence it was that a Bishop might not marry at all, that Priests and Deacons might not marry being once in Orders, and at last Marriage was quite forbidden them all. Thus our Fathers erred on the right hand, but we go aside on the left: They restrained their Clergy from that which was lawful for and beseemed all men; we think almost that lawful for us which is lawful for no man; at least we think that which any man may doe, we may doe also. But there is a golden mean between these extremes; happy is he that finds it, for he alone shall demean himself like himself, like a Levite, like God's holy one.

2. From this special title given to Levi, we may note how causlesly some are offended to hear those who minister about holy Things distinguished from others by names of holiness and peculiarity; to hear them called Clerus, and Clerici, The Clergy, as it were the Heritage of God; for so saith S. Jerome, Clerus dicimur, quia sors Dei sumus, We are called Clerus, or the Clergy, because we are the lot and portion of God. But, say they, are not the

1 Ep. ch. 5. 3. People also God's Heritage? Doth not S. Peter call them κλῆρος, when he forbids Presbyters καταϰυριεύειν τῶν κλήρων to domineer over God's heritage? I confess he doth: But those who reason after this manner come too near the language of Dathan and Abiram, Num. 16. 3. Moses and Aaron, you take too much upon you; Is not all the Congregation holy, every one of them? and is not the Lord among them? why then lift ye your selves above the Congregation of the Lord? If this reasoning had been good, wherein had these Rebels offended? It could not be denied them, that all the People were an holy People; for they might have alledged the testimony of God himself, avouching them to be his peculiar People and an holy People unto the Lord their God: All the earth (saith he, Exod. 19. 5.) is mine; but you shall be my סְגֻלָּה my peculiar people, a Kingdome of Priests, and an holy Nation.

But it might be answered them, Though all the people were God's peculiar people, and therefore his holy ones, yet Levi was his peculiar Tribe of his peculiar people, and therefore comparatively his onely holy one. All the

Lev. 25. 23. Land of Canaan was the Lord's, The Land is mine, saith he, and therefore it could not be alienate beyond the year of Jubilee; and yet for all this there were some parts of the Land specially called Holy unto the Lord. All the increase of corn, all the increase of wine, all the fruit of the field was the Lord's, and yet the Offerings alone were called Holy unto the Lord. God himself calls them his κλῆρος, his inheritance, and therefore gave them unto that Tribe alone, which alone he had made his κλῆρος, the Tribe of his inheritance: So the offered Tribe lived of God's offerings, the holy Tribe on the holy things. Again, why may we not call our Clergy God's inheritance, when God himself calls the Levites his Levites? Thou shalt (saith he, Num. 8. 14.) separate the Levites from among the children of Israel, and the Levites shall be mine; that is, my κλῆρος, my Clergy. Why may not we call the Ministers of Christ his κλῆρος or inheritance, when he himself calls them the gift his Father gave him out of the world? for so he saith Joh. 17. 6. I have declared thy name unto the men thou gavest me out of the world; thine they were, and thou gavest them me: and again, vers. 11. Holy Father, keep them in thy name, even them whom thou hast given me. If you say he speaks here of all his Elect, the words following v. 12. prove the contrary; for those (saith he) whom thou hast given me, I have kept, and none of them is lost but the child of perdition. Here he plainly affirms, he

loſt one of thoſe his Father gave him; wherefore he ſpeaks not of his Elect ones, for thoſe no man can take out of his hands. Again, verſ. 18. As thou didſt ſend me into the world, ſaith he, ſo I ſent them into the world: but I hope all the Elect are not ſent as Chriſt was ſent by his Father. I conclude therefore, So long as God in the Law ſays ſpecially of the Levites, They are mine; ſo long as Chriſt in the Goſpel of his Apoſtles, They are mine, O Father, which thou haſt given me out of the world; it is neither arrogancy nor injury to ſtyle thoſe who miniſter about holy things by the name of κλῆρος θεοῦ, the inheritance of the Lord. Deut. 33. 8.

WHAT LEVI was, and what is meant by this Title God's Holy one, we have now ſhewed ſufficiently. It remains we ſhould come unto the words containing the Bleſſing it ſelf, which is called Urim and Thummim: the words themſelves ſignifie Light and Perfection, Illumination and Integrity: good endowments certainly, whoſoever ſhall enjoy them.

But becauſe they are not onely Appellative words, but alſo Proper names of certain things, we muſt enquire further what is meant by them; and that in a twofold conſideration. Firſt, ſpecially and properly, as they are names of certain things belonging in ſpecial unto the High Prieſt: Then generally, as they are applied by Moſes unto the whole Tribe of Levi. The firſt again ſhall be twofold, What they were in the High Prieſt perſonally; or what they ſignified in him typically, himſelf being alſo a Type.

For the firſt, What is meant by theſe things as they belong unto the High Prieſt perſonally, is a matter full of controverſie; and therefore that we may the better proceed, we will firſt ſee the Generals wherein all or the moſt agree; and after come unto the Particulars wherein they diſagree.

The firſt wherein all agree is, That this Urim and Thummim was ſomething put in the Breaſt-plate which was faſtned to the Ephod over againſt the Heart of the High Prieſt. And thus much the Scripture witneſſeth, Exod. 28. 30. where God ſaith to Moſes, And thou ſhalt put in the Breaſt-plate of Judgement the Urim and the Thummim; and they ſhall be on Aaron's heart when he goeth in before the Lord. And for this cauſe, as moſt think, was the Breaſt-plate made double, that the Urim and Thummim might be enveloped therein.

The ſecond thing wherein all agree is, That this Urim and Thummim was a kind of Oracle whereby God gave anſwer to thoſe that enquired of him: and from hence the Septuagint call the whole Breaſt-plate λογεῖον, which ſome turn Rationale, but might more truly be turned Orationale, for an Oracle is as it were λόγος προφορικός, the Voice of God, though this Voice or Revelation were of divers kinds; for at ſundry times and in divers manners (ſaith S. Paul) God ſpake in old time to our Fathers. The Jews therefore make four kinds of Divine Revelation. Firſt, נבואה or Prophecy, which was by Dreams and Viſions. The ſecond רוח הקדש, The Holy Ghoſt, as was in Job, David, and others. The third Urim and Thummim, which was the Oracle. The fourth, בת קול, a Voice from heaven; which was uſual in the ſecond Temple after the Oracle had ceaſed: as Matt. 3. 17. at Chriſt's Baptiſm there came a Voice from heaven, ſaying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed; and Joh. 12. 28. when Chriſt ſaid, *Father, glorifie thy name, There came a Voice from heaven (like * thunder) ſaying, I have both glorified it, and will glorifie it again.* Hebr. 1. 1. * Verſ. 29.

But to return again to our purpoſe; That Urim and Thummim was an Oracle of God, beſides the conſent of Jews and others, it is plain by Scripture. Num. 27. when God had commanded Moſes to put his hands upon Joſhua, and to ſet him over the congregation in his ſtead; he addes Verſ. 21. And he (that is, Joſhua) ſhall ſtand before Eleazar the Prieſt, who ſhall ask counſell for him by the judgement of Urim before the Lord. So 1 Sam. 23. when David was to ask counſell of the Lord, he called for the Ephod, wherein the Oracle was: and whereas before he had once or twice asked counſell of the Lord concerning Keilah, to prevent the objection how the Lord anſwered, it follows in the next by way of a Prolepſis, That Abiathar then Prieſt, when he fled to David to Keilah, brought the Ephod with him, verſ. 6. Laſtly, in the ſecond of Ezra, when certain of the Prieſts which returned from Captivity could not finde their names written in the Genealogies, it is ſaid verſe 63. that the Tirſhatha commanded they ſhould not eat of the moſt holy things, till there roſe up a Prieſt with Urim and Thummim; that is, till God ſhould by Oracle reveal whether they were Prieſts or no: whereby it alſo appears that this Oracle had then ceaſed.

How Teraphim anſwered to Urim and Thummim.

*Gen. 31. 19.

And for more light to that we have in hand, it will not be amiſs to obſerve, that Teraphim among the Idolaters was anſwerable to the Urim and Thummim of the holy Patriarchs. Both were ancient: For Rachel* is ſaid to have ſtollen away her Father's Teraphim: and Urim and Thummim ſeems to have been uſed among the Patriarchs before the Law was given,

Exod. 28. 6, &c. Verſ. 30.

becauſe the making of it is not ſpoken of among other things of the Ephod; and becauſe God ſpeaks of it to Moſes demonſtratively, הָאוּרִים וְהַתֻּמִּים the Urim and the Thummim.

Both alſo were Oracles: For the Jews and others agree, Teraphim were ſmall Images made under a certain conſtellation, which they uſed to conſult both in things doubtfull and things future, ſuppoſing they had a power to this effect received from heavenly influence; much like to Puppets made of wax and like matter, which our Wizzards ſtill uſe unto like purpoſe. And therefore Ezek. 21. 21. we reade that the King of Babylon among other divinations conſulted alſo of Teraphim: And the King of Babel (ſaith the Text) ſtood at the head of the two ways, to uſe divination; he conſulted with Teraphim, he looked in the liver. And Zech. 10. 2. Surely (ſaith the Text) הַתְּרָפִים דִּבְּרוּ אָוֶן, The Teraphims have ſpoken vanity, and the Soothſayers have ſeen a lie, and the Dreamers have told a vain thing.

Beſides, from this like uſe of Teraphim with the holy Urim and Thummim, we may reade Ephod and Teraphim joyned both together as things of like kind. As Hoſea 3. 4. The children of Iſrael (ſaith the Lord) ſhall remain many daies without a King, and without a Prince, and without an Offering, and without an Image, and without an Ephod and Teraphim. Yea of ſo near a nature was this Teraphim unto the Urim and Thummim, that Micah, he that had an houſe of Gods, when he had made an Ephod, becauſe he had no Urim and Thummim, he put Teraphims inſtead thereof; as we may gather Judg. 17. 5. And in ch. 18. we may ſee alſo that when the children of Dan enquired of the Lord concerning their journey, it pleaſed him to give anſwer by the Idoliſh Teraphim. So we may gather likewiſe that the Iſraelites after Jeroboam's ſchiſm, having no Urim and Thummim, uſed Teraphim in the Ephod; and therefore it is that Hoſea threatens that they ſhall be without Ephod and Teraphim.

HAVING hitherto ſhewn how far it is agreed about Urim and Thummim, in the next place the points of difference ought to be conſidered; which are either about the matter whereof it was made, or the manner how God anſwered by it.

For the Matter; Some will have it to be nothing elſe but the writing or carving of the great name Jehovah, which was put within the folding of the Breaſt-plate; and that it was called Urim and Thummim, becauſe by the knowledge of the myſtery of Jehovah in the Trinity our minds are enlightned and our underſtandings made perfect.

Some

Some other there are of the same opinion, but they will have it called Urim and Thummim, because by the virtue of that name written the High Priest was enabled to return clear and perfect answers. And moreover they say the Breast-plate was called חשן משפט *, the Breast-plate of judgement, because by it the Lord gave as it were sentence and judgement what was to be done in hard and doubtfull matters. And this is the opinion of Rabbi Salomon.

Deut. 33. 8. מאיר דבריו ומתמים את דבריו * Exod. 28. 15.

Some others will have it called the Breast-plate of judgement, because that by it the judgement of the Judges, if it were amiss, was hereby as it were pardoned; because the High Priest was to bear the sins of the People. The Authors of this opinion are mentioned by R. Salomon.

Aben Ezra saith it was so called, because by it the judgement and decrees of the Lord were known: And he thinks also that Urim and Thummim were something * made by the hand of the craftsman.

* מעשה אומן opus artificii. *מעשה שמים opus cœli, (i. Dei.)

But Nachmanides and R. Salomon say, it was * opus divinum, and given to Moses in the Mount; or at least that God shewed him how to make it.

Some think it was nothing but the Stones in the Breast-plate, by the shining whereof God did annuere, favourably answer and grant; by the not shining, abnuere, disallow and refuse. But Kimchi confutes this, because it is spoken of as a differing thing in the same place where the stones are described: But he himself says, it is not certainly known what the Urim and Thummim were.

Kimch. in Rad. לא נתברר אצלנו מה הם

* Nachmanides saith it was certain sacred names, by the virtue whereof the letters of the Breast-plate were enlightned and ordered so that the Priest might reade the answer of God: and that that which caused shining was called Urim; and that which made them legible, Thummim. * In Legem.

The summe of these Opinions laid together is, That this Oracle was either the Stones of the Breast-plate themselves, or something in the folding of the Breast-plate, which by a divine virtue did cause the Stones to shine, and by the letters of the Tribes names in them as it were to express the answer of God.

For concerning the Manner of this Oracle, the Talmudists report thus much: First, No private man might consult with Urim and Thummim, but either the King, or אב בית דין he that was chief of the Consistory, or בית דין the Consistory or Judges themselves; and that in matters difficult and of great importance.

Talmud Babylon. in Joma, c. 7. Vid. etiam Abarben. in Exod. 28.

Secondly, השואל, he that enquired must stand with his face looking full upon הנשאל the Priest whom he asked; and the Priest stood with his eyes fixed upon the Ark, or upon his breast (say some) where was the Urim and Thummim.

Vid. Tal. Hieros. Joma in Gemara; & Maimonid. in Hal. Cele hammikdash cap. 10.

Thirdly, The voice was to be a * soft still voice, and * not above one thing to be asked at one time: But if they asked two things at once, the answer was onely unto the first; but in case of extremity, unto both. And such was David's case, 1 Sam. 30. 8. when he asked concerning the Amalekites who had burnt Ziklag, Shall I follow this company, (saith he) and shall I overtake them? The Lord answers, Follow, for thou shalt surely overtake them, and recover all without fail.

* קול נמוך, * Maimon. * Vid. Talmud Babylon. Joma, c. 7.

Now if you ask how the Priest knew the answer of the Lord: First, you must remember there were twelve stones in the Breast-plate, and in those stones the twelve names of the sons of Israel, either set or carved; and that there might be a full Alphabet of letters, there was also, * say they, written upon the Breast-plate, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and these two words שבטי ישרון, the Tribes of Jeshurun or Israel. Now when the Lord

* Vid. Jalkut ex libro Siphre, & Talm. Babylon. Joma.

Deut. 33. 8. Lord anſwered, the letters expreſſing the anſwer, by the divine virtue of the Urim and Thummim became בולטות, i. prominentes; that is, they ſhewed forth themſelves with a ſplendor, that the Prieſt might reade the anſwer of God. As 2 Sam. 2. 1. when David asked the Lord הַאֶעֱלֶה, Shall I aſcend into any of the Cities of Judah? the letter י in Shimeon, ל in Levi, and ה in Jehudah, put themſelves forth, or ſhone forth with a ſplendor, that the Prieſt might reade עֲלֵה, Aſcend. Though ſome of the Jews ſay the letters became מצטרפות, that is, joyned themſelves together and made a word: which as I cannot conceive how it ſhould be, ſo I think it leſs probable.

And thus hitherto have you heard the diverſe Opinions of the matter and manner of this Oracle of Urim and Thummim. Here is variety enough; I leave to every one to make his own choice which he will believe: onely give me leave to adde thus much in way of cenſure of them, which is, That they all ſeem againſt reaſon and likelihood to confound Urim with Thummim, in making them one and the ſame thing called by diverſe names in regard of diverſe effects and uſes: which I can the leſs believe, becauſe I finde Urim alone uſed in matter of conſultation with God, whereby it ſeems Thummim had ſome other uſe. In the 27. of Numb. 21. Moſes commands Joſhua in all buſineſs to conſult the High Prieſt by the judgement of Urim before the Lord; but no ſpeech of Thummim. Again, 1 Sam. 28. 6. it is ſaid, that Saul asked counſell of the Lord, when he was to go againſt the Philiſtines; but the Lord anſwered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by the Prophets. Here alſo is Urim ſpoken of, but no word of Thummim.

If I may therefore ſpeak what I think, I would ſay, That Urim and Thummim were a twofold Oracle, and for a twofold uſe. And that Urim was the Oracle, or part of the Oracle, whereby God gave anſwer to thoſe who enquired of him in hard and doubtfull caſes; therefore called Urim, or Lights, becauſe as ignorance is called darkneſs, ſo is all knowledge a kinde of illumination or enlightening; and that which bringeth knowledge is fitly called a Light, becauſe it diſpells the darkneſs of our minds.

But Thummim was that Oracle or mean whereby the High Prieſt knew whether God did accept the Sacrifice or no; therefore called Thummim, that is, Integrity, becauſe thoſe whoſe Sacrifice God accepted, were accounted Thummim, that is, juſt and righteous in the eyes of God; becauſe their Sacrifice was a ſhadow of Chriſt's Sacrifice, by acceptation whereof we are juſtified and made righteous before God. For without doubt the Patriarchs and Legal Church had ſome ordinary mean to know when their Sacrifice was accepted; elſe had they been behinde the Gentiles, for they had a ſign to know when they did Litare, that is, when their falſe Gods accepted their falſe ſacrifice: and as the Devil was God's Ape in giving Oracles, ſo I verily believe he was in this alſo. Nay Joſephus* expreſly affirms it of the Jews, though for the particular I ſuppoſe he is miſtaken: For he ſaith, that whenſoever God did accept the Sacrifice, the Onyx-ſtone on the Prieſt's left ſhoulder ſhone with an admirable ſplendor; but this, ſaith he, ceaſed ἔτεσι διακοσίοις two hundred years before his time. And no wonder; for when the Sun of righteouſneſs drew near unto his riſing, thoſe dimmer Urim and ſmaller ſtars muſt needs loſe their light. Now that which Joſephus affirms of the Onyx-ſtone on the left ſhoulder, I ſuppoſe was miſtaken for the Thummim on the left part of the Breaſt-plate.

* Antiquit. Jud. lib. 3. cap. 9.

And laſtly, as I ſaid before of Urim, ſo I think of Thummim, That it was in uſe among the Patriarchs of old, and that by ſome ſuch means as this Abel knew that God accepted his Offering, and Cain that his was refuſed.

And

And thus much of Urim and Thummim conſidered Perſonally in the High Prieſt; now I come to conſider it Typically: For as the High Prieſt himſelf was a Type of Chriſt, ſo muſt theſe Adjuncts of his alſo be Types of ſomething in Chriſt. Which we ſhall not be long a finding out, if we remember again the ſignification of the words, and the uſe of the things themſelves: Urim is Light and Illumination; Thummim Integrity and Perfection. By Urim the Jews were aſcertained of the counſell and will of God; by Thummim of his favour and good will towards them. All this agrees to Chriſt both in himſelf, and in regard of us. Deut. 33. 8.

In himſelf. His Breaſt is full of Urim, full of Light and Underſtanding: In him are hid all the Treaſures of Wiſdom and Knowledge, as S. Paul ſaith; He is the Wiſdom of the Father * by which the world it ſelf was made. His Heart is alſo endowed with Thummim, with all kind of Perfections: He was conceived without Original ſin, lived without Actual ſin; fulfilled the whole Law of God, which is the Law of Thummim, the Law of all Perfection. Col. 2. 3. * Heb. 1. 2. John 1. 3.

Thus to Chriſt himſelf agrees both Urim and Thummim: and ſo it doth alſo in regard of us; for he is an Urim and Thummim both to us and for us. To us he is Urim, a Light which enlighteneth every one which cometh into the world: He is the Light which ſhone in darkneſs, but the darkneſs could not comprehend it: He was that Light by which the people (as it is ſaid in Matthew 4. 16.) which ſate in darkneß ſaw great light. And of this Light John came to bear witneß, that all might believe in him, John 1. 7. In ſumme, Chriſt is λόγος & λογεῖον Patris, the Word and Oracle of his Father, by whom we know and learn the Father's will: for ſo S. John ſaith, chap. 1. 18. No man hath ſeen God at any time; the onely-begotten Son who is in the boſome of the Father, he hath revealed him unto us. John 1. 9. Verſ. 5.

Neither is Chriſt onely an Urim, but alſo a Thummim to us. For as by Thummim the Jews were aſcertained of God's favour toward them in accepting their Sacrifice; ſo by Chriſt coming in the fleſh is revealed the unſpeakable Mercy of God to mankind, in that he would accept his Sacrifice once offered for the expiation of the ſins of the whole world. This is that Good-will toward men which the Angels ſung of as ſoon as he was born; Glory be to God on high, Peace on earth, and Good-will towards men: Yea, Glory be to God on high for this Peace on earth, and for this Good-will towards men. Luke 2. 14.

Thus we ſee Chriſt an Urim and Thummim to us: now let us ſee how he is the ſame for us; and that is when his Wiſdom and Righteouſneſs is made ours by imputation. So his Urim becomes our Urim, his Thummim our Thummim; that is, his wiſdome is made ours, his righteouſneſs and favour with God made ours; for, This is my well-beloved Son (ſaid a Voice from Heaven) in whom I am well pleaſed. In brief, S. Paul comprehends both theſe together, where he ſaith, Chriſt Jeſus is made unto us Wiſdom, Sanctification, and Redemption. And ſo, Lord, Let thy Urim and thy Thummim be with thy Holy one. Matt. 3. 7. 1 Cor. 1. 30.

AND thus much for the ſpecial conſideration of this Urim and Thummim, both Perſonally and Typically: Now I come unto the general meaning thereof, as it concerns not the High Prieſt onely, but the whole Tribe of Levi; for this is the Bleſſing of that whole Tribe. And in this large reſpect the meaning cannot be Proper, for ſo it belongs unto the High Prieſt to have Urim and Thummim; nor Typical, becauſe the Prieſts onely, and not the under-Levites, were Types of Chriſt: but the ſenſe muſt be Analogical, ſignifying ſome endowments common to all Levites which reſemble the Urim and Thummim upon the Breaſt of the High Prieſt.

Now

Deut. 33. 8. Now what theſe are the words themſelves import; namely, Light of underſtanding and knowledge, this is their Urim; and Integrity of life, this is their Thummim. The firſt makes them Doctores Teachers, the ſecond Ductores populi Guides and Leaders of the people. He that wants either of theſe two wants the true ornament of Prieſthood, the right character of a Levite.

For though theſe endowments may well beſeem all the Tribes of Iſrael; yet Moſes ſpecially prays for them in Levi, becauſe by him they were to come to all the reſt; and the want of them in him could not but redound to all the reſt: Ita populus, ſicut ſacerdos, Such as the Prieſt is, ſuch will the People be; the Prieſt cannot erre, but he cauſeth others to erre alſo; the Prieſt cannot ſin, but he cauſeth others to ſin alſo. And this is it that Mal. 2. 6,8. Malachi ſaith from the Lord unto the Prieſts of his time, Ye are gone out of the way, and have cauſed many to ſtumble at, or in, the Law. But the Levites of old, (ſaith the ſame Prophet) The Law of Truth was in their mouth, and iniquity was not found in their lips: they walked with God in peace and equity, and turned many from iniquity. Here you ſee when the Levites erre, the people erre alſo; when the Levites walk in equity, the people are turned from iniquity.

Matt. 5. 14. The Miniſters of Chriſt muſt be Lux mundi, the light of the world; Vos eſtis lux mundi, Ye are the light of the world, Ye are the world's Urim, ſaith Mal. 2. 7. Chriſt unto his Apoſtles: For the lips of the Prieſt ſhould preſerve knowledge, and they ſhould learn the Law at his mouth. This light of knowledge, this teaching knowledge is the Urim of every Levite; and therefore Chriſt when he inſpired his Apoſtles with knowledge of heavenly myſteries, he Acts 2. 3. ſent a new Urim from above, even fiery tongues, tongues of Urim from heaven: He ſent no fiery heads, but fiery tongues; for it is not ſufficient for a Levite to have his head full of Urim, unleſs his tongue be a candle to ſhew it unto others. There came indeed no Thummim from heaven, as there came an Urim; for though the Apoſtles were ſecured from errors, they were not freed from ſin: And yet we who are Levites muſt have ſuch a Thummim as may be gotten upon earth, for S. Paul bids Titus in all things Tit. 2. 7. to ſhew himſelf an example of good works: and this is a Thummim of Integrity.

But beſides this Thummim the Miniſters of the Goſpel have received from God more eſpecially another Thummim, like unto that which was proper to the High Prieſt; namely, the power of binding and looſing, which is as it were a power of Oracle to declare unto the people the remiſsion of their ſins by the acceptance of Chriſt's Sacrifice. And this directly anſwers to Thummim in the firſt ſenſe.

DIS-

DISCOURSE XXXVII.

Genesis 3. 13.

And the Lord God said unto the woman, What is this that thou hast done? And the woman said, The Serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.

THE Story whereof the words I have read are part is so well known to all, that it would be needless to spend time in any long Preface thereof. Who knows not the Story of Adam's Fall? who hath not heard of the sin of Eve our Mother? If there were no Scripture, yet the unsampled irregularity of our whole nature, which all the time of our life runs counter to all order and right reason; the wofull misery of our condition, being a Scene of sorrow without any rest or contentment; this might breed some general suspicion that ab initio non fuit ita, from the beginning it was not so; but that he who made us Lords of his creatures, made us not so worthless and vile as now we are; but that some common Father to us all had drunken some strange and deviliſh poison, wherewith the whole race is infected. This poison, saith the Scripture, was the breach of God's commandment in Paradise, by eating of the forbidden fruit: for which Adam being called to an account by the great Judge, and laying the fault upon the Woman which God had given him for an helper, God vouchsafes, as ye hear in my Text, to examine the Woman, saying, What is this that thou hast done? And she answers, The Serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.

These words contain in them two parts: First, God's inquisition accusing; Secondly, The Woman's Confession excusing her fact. The first in the first words, And the Lord said unto the woman, &c. The second in the last words, And the woman said, The Serpent beguiled me, &c. For the first words which God speaks, being considered absolutely, are an Indictment for some crime; as they are Interrogative, they are an Inquisition concerning the same; and therefore I call them an Inquisition accusing. So the second are a Confession, as the Woman saies, I have eaten; but with an excuse, when she saies, The Serpent beguiled me; and therefore I call them a Confession excusing.

In the Inquisition are two things to be considered. First, The Author and Person who makes it, which is the Lord God himself: so saith my Text, And the Lord God said unto the woman. Secondly, The Inquisition it self, What is this that thou hast done?

In the Person who comes and makes this Inquest, being the Lord God himself, we may observe and behold his φιλανθρωπία, his wonderfull Goodness and unspeakable Love to mankinde, which here reveals it self in four most remarkable Circumstances.

First, In his forbearance; And the Lord said: When said the Lord? namely, not till Adam had accused her; she who was first in the sin, was last questioned for the same; and that too because her husband had appealed her. God knew and observed well enough the first degree and every progress of her sin, he needed no information from another: yet as though he were loth 1.

Gen. 3. 13. to take notice thereof, as though he were loth to finde her guilty, yea as though he were loth to denounce the puniſhment which his juſtice required, he comes not againſt her until now; and that as though he were unwilling to come at all.

If we look back into the Story, we ſhall yet finde a further confirmation thereof. How long did God hold his hand before he ſtripped the woman eſpecially of that glorious beauty of her integrity, and made her with opened eyes to ſee her ſhamefull nakedneſs? She had at the firſt onſet of her Conference with the Serpent ſinned a ſin of Unbelief of God; and yet God ſpared her: In the progreſs ſhe ſinned more in her proud Ambition of being like to God himſelf, and to be wiſe above what was given her; and God yet ſpared her: She ſinned when ſhe coveted and longed once to eat of the forbidden fruit, when it began to ſeem more pleaſing and deſirable unto her then Obedience to God's Commandment; and God yet ſpared her: At laſt ſhe takes and eats thereof, and ſo came to the height and conſummation of her ſin; and yet behold and ſee the clemency and longanimity of our good God, he pauſed yet a while untill ſhe had given unto her husband alſo, and then, and not till then, he opened their eyes to ſee their wofull miſery.

A Leſſon firſt to us men, if ſo be we think the Example of God worthy our imitation, to bear long with our brother as God bears with us; to admoniſh him, as it is in the Goſpel, the firſt, ſecond and third time, before we uſe him like an Heathen or a Publican; to forgive him ſeven times, yea, (as Chriſt ſaies to Peter) if he repent and ask forgiveneſs, ſeventy times ſeven.

Secondly, This may be a cordial of ſpiritual comfort unto us ſinners; Though we make a ſhift to keep our ſelves from the execution of ſin, yet we finde our hearts full of ſinfull thoughts, ungodly deſires and unclean luſts, and ſuch like ſinfull motions from the infirmity of our fleſh: which notwithſtanding we cannot ever expell or be rid of; yet let us hope that God out of his mercy will bear with our weakneſs, and paſs by our infirmities, who bore with the ſin of our firſt Parents untill it came to execution.

2. The ſecond Circumſtance is The temper of his Juſtice; in that he vouchſafes firſt to enquire of the offence, and examine the fact, before he gives Sentence, or proceeds to execution. The like example we have Gen. 11. 5. where it is ſaid, The Lord came down to ſee the City and Tower which the children of men had builded, afore he would confound their language, or ſcatter them abroad from that ambitious Babel upon the face of the earth. Again, Gen. 18. 20, 21. the Lord ſaies, Becauſe the cry of Sodome and Gomorrah is great, and their ſin is very grievous; I will go down, and ſee whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it which is come unto me; and if not, I will know. He from whom no ſecrets are hid, he that formed the heart of man, and knows all the works we doe, he that trieth and ſearcheth the heart and reins, even he will firſt examine the fact, will firſt hear what miſerable man can ſay for himſelf, before his Sentence ſhall paſs upon him: not out of ignorance of what was done, for how ſhould the omniſcient God be ignorant? but out of his wonderfull clemency, and unſpeakable moderation towards Man: I ſay, towards Man; for to him alone he ſhews this favour; for as for the Serpent, we ſee he vouchſafes not to ask him one queſtion, nor to expect what he could ſay for himſelf, but preſently without examination proceeds to judgement againſt him.

Doth the great God, the Almighty Creator of heaven and earth, deal with ſo unſpeakable a temper with his creature; and is vile man, a baſe earthworm, ſo auſtere unto his brother? It was the height of Eve's whole ambition to be like unto God; but her off-ſpring's ambition is to be moſt unlike like unto him: He glories in mercy and clemency, we in rage and rash austerity; He hears his creature speak before he condemns him, we condemn our brother before we hear him speak. Be wise and learned, ye Judges of the earth, let this great Example of God be the pattern of your imitation: yea let no private man condemn another rashly, untill he hath heard what he may say for himself, as God himself here vouchsafed to go before us. Gen. 3. 13. Psal. 2. 10.

The third Circumstance is God's condescent unto man, in that he sends neither Angels nor Ministers to examine our first Parents and to make inquisition of their offence, but he comes himself in person to take notice thereof. When men are offended, especially great men, they will not deign to look upon or to admit into their presence those that have offended them: How great therefore is this indulgence of Almighty God, who deigns here his presence to our most wretched and most naked Parents, who had so grievously sinned against him? How happily graced would a poor offender think himself, if he might be admitted to the presence of his Prince, there to say what he could either for his defence or excuse, or else to sue for mercy and move compassion? By how much therefore God is greater then the greatest Monarchs of the world, even as much as they are greater then nothing; so much is this indulgence of God here expressed in my Text to Eve, as before to her husband, surpassing all the favour and condescent of men, who sent not for man, but came himself unto him; yea who vouchsafed then to seek them out when they ran away from him. 3.

Now all this is spoken ἀνθρωποπαθῶς, after the fashion of men, and therefore not so much to express what God himself did, as what men ought to doe. Let it be a Lesson therefore to those who are set over others, not to be too hard of access to such as are obnoxious unto them. If God himself vouchsafed so far unto his creature so wretched, much more should man unto his brother.

The fourth Circumstance is The manner of his speech to Eve, in that he that was the Lord God should so mildly speak unto her, What is this thou hast done? The Lord God said it, saith my Text; but who would not think it rather the speech of a familiar and condoling friend, then of so great a Judge so greatly offended? Here is no word of asperity, but of lenity; no menacing, no upbraiding terms, but only, What is this thou hast done? 4.

And should not we learn hence not to insult over such whose offences make them liable either to us or others? should we upbraid, rail, triumph, and vomit our impotency upon them? Certainly we seem not to remember what a gentle and commiserating Judge God is, or that our selves are men, and have to deal with humane frailty, and man's miserable condition, which we ought to behold with pity, and not handle with bitterness.

THE next thing is, The Inquisition it self; What is this thou hast done? Some reade, Why hast thou done this? expounding מַה־זֹּאת for לָמָּה־זֹאת. But Eve's answer following, where she saith, I have eaten, plainly argues the question was What she had done, and not Why she had done it: And therefore I take the words as our Translation hath them, and understand this manner of asking by God to be a Scheme of admiration, and to imply an exaggeration of the woman's sin; as if he had said, O what an horrible sin is this thou hast committed! How grievously hast thou transgressed! O what hast thou done! And therefore, God enquiring of her sin with exaggeration, she makes answer with diminution; Indeed she had offended, because she had eaten; but yet the offence was the less, for the Serpent had deceived her.

This then being the meaning of the words, let us behold in them the greatneſs of the ſin of our firſt Parents; which made the Lord God himſelf to

Gen. 3. 13. ſay, What is this thou haſt done? The greatneſs of this ſin I will firſt conſider as it concerns them both in general, and then as in particular. The greatneſs of the ſin in general appears in theſe four Conſiderations.

1. Firſt, It was a tranſgreſſion of ſuch a Law as was given onely to prove man whether he would be under God or no. For the Moral Law which was written and engraven in the hearts of our firſt Parents was for the doing of things ſimply good, and abſtaining from things ſimply evil; ſuch things as a good man would doe were there no commandment, and ſuch things as he would not doe were there no prohibition; ſo that in theſe there was no trial whether man would obey God or no, onely becauſe he commanded him, and merely for obedience ſake. And therefore had God ordained this Symbolical Law, prohibiting a thing in it ſelf neither good nor evil, neither pleaſing nor diſpleaſing unto God, but indifferent, that man's obſervance thereof might be a profeſſion and teſtimony that he was willing to ſubmit himſelf to God's pleaſure, only becauſe it was his pleaſure. And that it might yet the more appear, God made not choice of ſuch a thing as man cared not for, but of a pleaſant and deſirable thing; whereunto the more his inclination was carried, the more by his abſtaining might his willing ſubjection be approved. The violating therefore of this Law was an open profeſſion that he would not be under God, and renouncing of him to be his Lord. And this is the firſt reſpect wherein appears the greatneſs of Adam's ſin.

2. The ſecond Conſideration arguing the ſame is, That he on whom God had beſtowed ſo many glorious endowments, whom he had as it were ſtuffed with ſo many excellent abilities, and adorned with ſo many precious graces, that he ſhould ſin againſt him, and ſet ſo light by his commandment: for of thoſe to whom God had given ſo much, he might juſtly require and expect much. Therefore thoſe whom God hath furniſhed with the beſt gifts, either of knowledge or other abilities, they, if they ſin, ſin moſt grievouſly: ſo that in this reſpect the ſin of Adam and Eve exceeded the ſins of their poſterity, as much as their integrity did our corruption. The greater the perſon, the greater his ſin: The ſin of a Prince greater then the ſin of a vulgar perſon; and therefore in the Law there was a greater Sacrifice to be offered for the ſins of the Prince and Prieſt then of the people.

3. The third circumſtance aggravating his ſin was, The eaſineſs of the commandment, and the eaſineſs man had to keep the ſame; Both in regard of himſelf, whom no itching Concupiſcence urged, as being altogether free therefrom, and not as we his off-ſpring are continually vexed with the boiling thereof: Secondly, in regard of the thing it ſelf he was to abſtain from, being onely one fruit, in ſo great a liberty of all the garden beſides. How eaſily might he have abſtain'd from one, to whom God had given the uſe of all ſaving this one? He wanted not to feed him, he wanted no variety of food, he had even enough to ſurfeit on; only to approve his obedience to Him who had given all the reſt unto him, he was to abſtain from one, and yet he would not. Quanta fuit (ſaith S. Auguſtine) iniquitas in peccando, ubi tanta erat non peccandi facilitas? How great an iniquity was it there to ſin, where it was ſo eaſie a thing not to ſin?
De Civit. Dei, lib. 3. cap. 15.

4. The fourth circumſtance aggravating this ſin was The place, which was Paradiſe, as it were in God's own preſence, even afore his face: for as Heaven above other parts of the world is the place of God's ſpecial preſence; ſo was Paradiſe above other parts of the earth as it were an Heaven upon earth, the place wherein he ſingularly revealed himſelf, and therefore an Holy place and the Temple of God. Do not men, otherwiſe giving the looſe looſe rein to wickedneſs, yet abhorre to commit it in God's Temple? How impudently contumelious was this Sin therefore which was committed in God's very Preſence-chamber? Gen. 3. 13.

All theſe Aggravations are common to both our Parents, which all laid together make their Sin as great as ever any was, ſaving the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt; for ſo the beſt Divines do think. But Eve addes one Aggravation more to her weight, in that ſhe was not content to ſin her ſelf alone, but ſhe allured and drew her husband alſo into the like horrible tranſgreſſion with her; whereby ſhe was not only guilty of her own perſonal ſin, but of her husband's alſo. And this added ſo much unto her former ſumme, that S. Paul, 1 Tim. 2. 14. ſpeaks of her as if ſhe had been the only tranſgreſſour; Adam was not deceived; but the woman being deceived, was in the tranſgreſſion. So great and horrible a thing it is in the Eye of God to be cauſe or mover of another's ſin. Woe be unto them who by any means are the cauſe of another's fall. And juſtly might God ſay to Eve for this reſpect, though there had been no more, What is this that thou haſt done?

NOW I come to the Woman's excuſe, The Serpent beguiled me. In which words are three things conſiderable. The Author, The Serpent. The Action, Guile. The Object, Me.

Concerning the Author, The Serpent, two things are inquirable. Firſt, What the Serpent was indeed. Secondly, What Eve ſuppoſed him to be. For the firſt, I think none ſo unreaſonable as to believe it was the unreaſonable and brute Serpent: For whence ſhould he learn, or how ſhould he underſtand God's commandment to our firſt Parents? And how is it poſſible a Serpent ſhould ſpeak; and not only ſo, but ſpeak the language which Eve underſtood? For though ſome there be who think that Beaſts and Birds have ſome ſpeech-like utterings of themſelves; yet none, that a Beaſt ſhould ſpeak the language of Men. It remains therefore that according unto the Scriptures it was that old deceiver the Devil and Satan, who abuſed the brute Serpent, either by entring into him, or taking his ſhape upon him. The laſt of which I rather incline unto, ſuppoſing it (as you ſhall hear preſently) to be the Law of Spirits, when they have intercourſe and commerce with men, to take ſome viſible ſhape upon them, as the Devil here the Serpent's; whence he becomes ſtyled in Scripture, The old Serpent. Rev. 12. 9. & 20. 2.

Now for the Second queſtion, What Eve took him to be, whether the Serpent or Satan; If we ſay ſhe thought him to be the brute Serpent, how will this ſtand with the perfection of Man's knowledge in his integrity, to think a Serpent could ſpeak like a reaſonable creature? Who would not judge her a ſilly woman now that ſhould think ſo? and yet the wiſeſt of us all is far ſhort of Eve in regard of her knowledge then. Again, If we ſay ſhe knew him to be the Devil; I will not ask why ſhe would converſe at all with a wicked ſpirit, who ſhe knew had fallen from his Maker; but I would know how we ſhould conſtrue the meaning of the Holy Ghoſt in the beginning of this Chapter, where he ſaith, The Serpent was the ſubtilleſt of all the beaſts of the field which God had made, and ſo implies the woman's opinion of the Serpent's wiſdome was the occaſion why ſhe was ſo beguiled: otherwiſe to what end are thoſe words ſpoken, unleſs to ſhew that Satan choſe the Serpent's ſhape, that through the opinion and colour of his well-known wiſdom and ſagacity he might beguile the Woman?

For the aſſoiling of which difficulty I offer theſe Propoſitions following. Firſt, I will ſuppoſe there is a Law in the commerce of Spirits and men, that a Spirit muſt preſent himſelf under the ſhape of ſome viſible thing. For as in natural and bodily things there is no entercourſe of action and paſſion, unleſs the things have ſome proportion each to other, and unleſs they communicate in ſome Common Matter: ſo it ſeems God hath ordained a Law that inviſible things ſhould converſe with things viſible in a ſhape as they are viſible: which is ſo true, that the converſing preſence of a Spirit is called a Viſion or Apparition. And Experience with the Scriptures will ſhew us, that not only evil Angels, but good, yea God himſelf converſeth in this manner with men. And all this I ſuppoſe Eve knew.

Secondly, I ſuppoſe further, That as Spirits are to converſe with men under ſome viſible ſhape; ſo is there a Law given them, that it muſt be under the ſhape of ſome ſuch thing as may leſs or more reſemble their condition. For as in nature we ſee every ſeverall thing hath a ſeverall and ſutable Phyſiognomy or figure, as a badge of their inward nature, whereby it is known as by a habit of diſtinction: ſo it ſeems to be in the ſhapes and apparitions of Spirits. And as in a wel-governed Commonwealth every ſort and condition of men is known by ſome differing habit, agreeable to his quality: ſo it ſeems it ſhould be in God's great Commonwealth, concerning the ſhapes which Spirits take upon them. And he that gave the Law, that a man ſhould not wear the habit of a woman, nor a woman the habit of a man, becauſe that as he had made them diverſe, ſo would he have them ſo known by their habits: ſo it ſeems he will not ſuffer a good and a bad Spirit, a noble and ignoble one, to appear unto men after the ſame faſhion. And this alſo I ſuppoſe Eve knew.

Now from theſe grounds it will follow, That good Angels can take upon them no other ſhape but the ſhape of Man, becauſe their glorious excellency is reſembled only in the moſt excellent of all viſible creatures; the ſhape of an inferiour creature would be unſutable, no other ſhape becoming thoſe who are called the ſons of God, but his only who was created after God's own image. And yet not his neither according as now he is, but according as he was before his fall in that glorious beauty of his Integrity. Age and deformity are the fruits of Sin; and the Angel in the Goſpel appears like a young man, his countenance like lightning, and his raiment white as ſnow, as it were reſembling the beauty of glorified bodies in immutability, ſublimity and purity.

Mar. 16. 5. Matt. 28. 3.

Hence alſo it follows on the contrary, That the Devil could not appear in humane ſhape whileſt Man was in his integrity, becauſe he was a Spirit fallen from his firſt glorious perfection, and therefore muſt appear in ſuch ſhape which might argue his imperfection and abaſement, which was the ſhape of a Beaſt: otherwiſe no reaſon can be given, why he ſhould not rather have appeared unto Eve in the ſhape of a Woman then of a Serpent; for ſo he might have gained an opinion with her both of more excellency and knowledge. But ſince the fall of man the caſe is altered, now we know he can take upon him the ſhape of Man; and no wonder, ſince one falling ſtar may well reſemble another. And therefore he appears it ſeems in the ſhape of Man's imperfection, either for age or deformity, as like an old man, (for ſo the Witches ſay:) and perhaps it is not altogether falſe which is vulgarly affirmed, That the Devil appearing in Humane ſhape, hath always a deformity of ſome uncouth member or other; as though he could not yet take upon him Humane ſhape entirely, for that Man himſelf is not entirely and utterly fallen as he is.

By this time you ſee the difficulty of the Queſtion is eaſed. Now it appears why Eve wondred not to ſee a Spirit ſpeak unto her in the ſhape of a Serpent, becauſe ſhe knew the Law of Spirits apparitions better then we do. Again, when ſhe ſaw the Spirit who talked with her to have taken upon him the ſhape, though of a Beaſt, yet of the moſt ſagacious Beaſt of the field, ſhe concluded, according to our forelaid ſuppoſitions, That though he were one one of the abased spirits, yet the shape he had taken resembling his nature, he must needs be a most crafty and sagacious one, and so might pry farther into God's meaning then she was aware of. And thus you may see at last how the opinion of the Serpent's subtilty occasioned Eve's fall; as also why the Devil, of all other Beasts of the field, took the shape of a Serpent, namely, to gain this opinion of sagacity with the Woman, as one who knew the Principles aforesaid. Gen. 3. 13.

Here I observe that overmuch dotage upon a conceived excellency, whether of Wisdome or whatsoever else, without a special eye to God's commandment, hath ever been the Occasion of greatest errours in the world; and the Devil under this mask useth to blear our eyes, and with this bait to inveigle our hearts, that he may securely bring us to his lure. It was the mask of the Serpent's wisdom and sagacity, above the rest of the Beasts of the field, whereby he brought to pass our first Parents ruine. The admired wisdome of the long-living Fathers of the elder world, having been for so many ages as Oracles to their off-spring grown even to a People and Nation while they yet lived, was the ground of the ancient Idolatry of mankinde, whilest they supposed that those to whom for wisdome they had recourse being living, could not but help them when they were dead. This we may learn out of * Hesiod; The men, saith he, of the golden age being once dead, became Δαίμονες, * Ἔργ. καὶ Ἡμερ. lib. 1.

——φύλακες θνητῶν ἀνθρώπων, Οἵ ῥα φυλάσσουσι δίκας καὶ σχέτλια ἔργα·

they became Godlings and Patrons of mortal men, and Overseers of their good and evil works. So the opinion of the blessed Martyrs superlative glory in heaven was made the occasion of the new-found Idolatry of the Christian Churches, wherewith they are for the greater part yet overwhelmed. And the esteem which Peter had above the rest of the Apostles in regard of chiefdome, even in the Apostles times, was abused by the old Deceiver to install the man of sin. This made S. Paul to say, The mystery of iniquity was even then working; and therefore he laboured as far as he could to prevent it, by as much depressing Peter as others exalted him. Nay, he puts the Churches in minde of this story of the Serpent's beguiling Eve, that her mis-hap might be a warning to them. 2 Cor. 11. 2, 3. I am jealous over you (saith he) with a godly jealousie; for I have espoused you to one husband, that I might present you as a chaste Virgin to Christ. But I fear lest by any means, as the Serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. And to come a little nearer home; Have not our Adversaries, when they would get Disciples, learned this of the Devil, to possess them first with an opinion of superlative Learning in their Doctors surpassing any of ours? I will say no more in this point, but that we ought so to prize and admire the gifts and abilities of Learning which God hath bestowed upon men, that the Polestarre of his Sacred Word may ever be in our eye. 2 Thes. 2. 7.

THE next thing to be spoken of is The Action, Guile: And first, I shall shew what it is. To beguile is, through a false faith and persuasion wrought by some argument of seeming good, to bereave a man of some good he had or hoped for, or to bring upon him some evil he expected not. Practice hath made it so well known, that I should not need to have given any definition or description thereof, but only for a more distinct consideration. Whereas therefore I said, that Guile wrought by forelaying a false persuasion or belief; I would intimate, that it was nothing else but a Practicall Sophism, the Premisses whereof are counterfeit motives; the Conclusion an erroneous execution. Now as all Practice or Action consists in these two, The choice of our End, and The execution of Means to attain thereunto: So is this Practicall Sophism we call

Gen. 3. 13. Guile found in them both; either when an evil End is preſented unto us in the counterfeit of a good, and ſo we are made to embrace Nubem pro Junone, and find our ſelves deceiv'd in the event whatſoever the Means were we have uſed; or elſe we apply ſuch Means as are either unlawfull or unſufficient to attain our End, as being ſo mask'd that they appear unto us far otherwiſe then they are. With both theſe ſorts or parts of Guile the Devil wrought our firſt Parents ruine. Firſt, by making it ſeem a thing deſirable and by all means to be laboured for, To be like unto God: which was an ambition of that whereof man was not only not capable, but ſuch as little beſeemed him to aſpire unto, upon whom God had beſtowed ſo great a meaſure of glorious perfections, as he ſeem'd a God amongſt the reſt of the creatures. What unthankfulneſs was this, that he upon whom God beſtowed ſo much, as he was the glory of his workmanſhip, ſhould yet think that God ſhould envy him any degree of excellency fit for him? For this was the mask wherewith the Devil covered both the unfitneſs and impoſſibility of the End he inſinuated; but he beguiled them. Secondly, He put the ſame trick upon them in the choice of the Means to be uſed, which was to tranſgreſs the ſevere commandment of Almighty God. Had the Aim been allowable, yet could not the Means have been taken for good, but only of ſuch as were beguiled; in that the Devil made the Woman believe with his queſtioning the truth of God's commandment, that the danger was not great, nor ſo certain as it ſeemed; or that evil which might be in the action, would be countervailed with the excellency to be attained thereby; the gloriouſneſs of which End the Devil ſo ſtrongly ſounded, that it drowned in her imagination the leaſt conceit of evil in the Means. And as a man which always looks upward ſees not the danger in the path and way he walks in, untill he tumbles into a pit: ſo was it here with our firſt Mother, when thus the Devil beguiled her.

This firſt act of the Devil is that wherein we may behold as in a glaſs the * Eph. 6. 11. * art he ſtill uſeth to tempt us unto ſin, and bring us to utter deſtruction: All his method is nothing elſe but Guile; he preſents all things fair unto our face, and ſuffers not evil to appear before us in its own ugly ſhape; for ſo every man would fly from it. When he would tempt a man to Covetouſneſs, he calls it Thrift; when to Bribes, he calls them Gratuities; when to Intemperance, forſooth it is Good-fellowſhip; when to Cruelty, it muſt be called Juſtice; when to Prodigality, it muſt be taken for no other but Liberality, and 2 Cor. 11. 14. ſuch like. This is that which the Scripture ſaith, The Devil transforms himſelf into an Angel of light: when he draws to Vice, he would ſeem to mean nothing but Vertue; when he tempts to works of darkneſs, he preſents them as the works of light; when he plots our ruine and everlaſting undoing, he bears us in hand that all aims at our welfare and felicity.

This is that which is meant in the following verſe, where it is ſaid, The ſeed of the woman ſhould bruiſe the Serpent's head, but the Serpent ſhould bruiſe his heel: as though the Serpent ſhould love to aſſault at unawares, and ſo as he might not be ſeen to intend any ſuch matter before he had done the feat; and therefore his faſhion ſhould be to come behinde a man, and as it were to catch him by the heel. For that this was the Embleme of Guile and deceitfull dealing, it may be gathered from the ſtory of Jacob and Eſau, whenas Eſau being beguiled of the bleſſing by the craft of his brother Jacob, makes Gen. 27. 36. an alluſion to his name; Well, ſaith he, may he be called Jacob, for he hath beguiled me now theſe two times. Now Jacob had his name in the beginning, becauſe he caught his brother by the heel when he came out of the womb; for עָקֵב ſignifies the heel, and יַעֲקֹב is as much to ſay as an Heeler: whence the alluſion of Eſau hath this ſenſe, if we take it verbatim, My brother brother may well be called an Heeler, for he hath heeled me theſe two times. Now becauſe to come behinde a man and take him by the heel was foul play, Gen. 3. 13. therefore of עָקֵב an heel comes עֲקֵבָה (dolus, fallacia) guile, and עָקַב, a verb ſignifying to deceive or beguile; which is the ſecond ſenſe that Eſau would imply by his alluſion, That his brother might well be called a Beguiler, becauſe he had beguiled him now theſe two times. But of this I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak more hereafter.

Since therefore we have ſeen the Devil's practice, and learned that he works altogether by deceit; how wary ſhould the conſideration hereof make us to be in all the ways of our life? If we knew we had to deal with a man that uſed to beguile all that came into his fingers, in what continuall jealouſie and ſuſpicion would we be? how would we caſt about to find which way he might not circumvent us? how wary would we be to entertain any profer from him? there could be nothing made ſeem ſo fair, but we would ſuſpect ſome foul meaning to be in it. If we would be thus diſpoſed in matters of leſſer moment, how carefull ſhould we be in greater? if where the ability of deceiving is leſſer, what manner of men ſhould we be when we know the Arch-deceiver of the world is continually attending upon us, labouring to beguile us? Should we here adventure upon any action raſhly? No ſurely; but be firſt well adviſed. We ſhould not be too confident in our own perſuaſions, leſt they may prove the Devil's ſuggeſtions: And though the reaſons we apprehend be never ſo good, and the caſe ſeem never ſo clear, and the way we are to walk in never ſo ſecure; yet ought we to make ſome pauſe, and act a fit of jealouſie afore we adventure.

AND thus much of the Serpent's action, Guile: Now I come to The Object, Me. Me, that is, the weaker of the two. Me, ſo much endeared in the affection of my Lord, that he could not but doe any thing at my requeſt. Of theſe two reſpects I will ſpeak in order; and firſt of the firſt.

The Devil aſſaults us there where he finds us weakeſt; as here in this firſt ſin he attempts the Woman, the weaker veſſell; The Serpent beguiled me: for he knows this is the readieſt way to overcome. A skilfull Commander being to take a City, will not make his battery on that part of the wall which is ſtrongly fortified, (for ſo he might make his ſhot in vain;) but will aſſault it there where it is leaſt defenſible, where a breach will be eaſily made, and yet entring he becomes Maſter of the whole how well fortified ſoever: Even ſo the Devil will be ſure to force us there where we are leaſt able to reſiſt; if he finds any part not well bulwark'd with reſolution, there he plants the Cannon of his temptation, and with an eaſie breach becomes Maſter of the whole piece.

Hence we may learn what to eſteem of thoſe imperfect courſes concerning the Commandments of God, too frequent among the ſons of men: There are many who reſolve firmly againſt divers kinds of ſins, that they will never be drawn by any means to commit them; but they have always ſome one wherein they demurre whether they ſhould reſolve to yield to it or not, if occaſion ſhould be offered. Many will fortify themſelves very ſtrongly againſt the aſſaults of bribery, of covetouſneſs, of theft, of promiſe-breaking, of drunkenneſs; but as concerning their luſt they are unreſolved what to doe, if a temptation ſhould aſſault them: and ſo in others, there is ſome other inclination but ſlenderly guarded, when for the reſt they could glory how ſtrongly they are fortified. But we muſt know, that when the Devil comes to aſſault us, he will paſs by us where we are ſtrong, and attempt us only there where our weakneſs lies, and then we ſhall find all our labour loſt, and all our other ſtrength to have ſtood us in little ſtead: For what will it boot to guard the walls of our City never ſo ſtrongly, if but one

Gen. 3. 13. part be left unguarded for the enemies to enter? Is not all the enemie's? A Ship, though in other parts never ſo ſound, will ſink if but one leaking hole be left unſtopped. Let us therefore ſurvey our Hearts diligently, and finding where we lie expoſed to danger, there moſt ſtrengthen our ſelves with reſolution.

And thus I come to the ſecond reſpect why the Devil made choice of the Woman, namely, becauſe of the vehemency of her Husband's affection towards her; ſo that to have gained her was to have gotten him alſo. For he ſeemed to think that her ſtrength in her Husband's affection was more powerfull to prevail with him then his ſubtile motives were to overcome him: and indeed the Event prov'd he was not much deceiv'd. Hence we are to obſerve, That the Devil taketh advantage of the vehemency of our Paſſions to work our overthrow; if he once finde theſe to faſten his hold by, he then thinks he may lead us whither he liſt. To have gained our Affections is as it were to have gotten a party within, which is a dangerous advantage to further the invaſion of an enemy; eſpecially when moſt of our Paſſions are our Favorites, which we can deny nothing they ask; and if they Eph. 4. 27. be once bribed, will work us wholly to the diſpoſe of our Arch-enemy.

That we may not therefore afford the Devil this advantage, and as it were reach him a rope to hang us withall, it behoves us ſo to govern and temper our Paſſions and Affections that they tranſport us not into the Devil's juriſdiction: which that we may the better doe, it will not be unfit to ſet down ſome Rules for performance thereof.

1. Firſt therefore, It is beſt to reſiſt our Paſſions at the beginning, and to uſe the ſame policy which Pharaoh did with the Iſraelites, that they might not over-run his Country, in killing all their infants as ſoon as they were born. While the ſore is green, Chirurgeons ſeldom deſpair; but feſtered once, they hardly cure it: So it is with the Paſſions of our Mind; when they are firſt growing, they are ſoon curbed; but being a little entertained, they will hardly be ſubdued.

2. The ſecond means is, To inure our ſelves to croſs our Paſſions when there is no danger, and to bridle our ſelves ſometimes from ordinary and lawfull deſires, that we may doe it with more eaſe when we are in danger. For how can he hope to be able to maſter his Paſſions when dangerous temptations aſſault him, who never uſed them to it in the time of his ſecurity? We know that men who would fit themſelves for the Wars, will practiſe in the time of Peace when there is no enemy near, and will toil and labour when they might be at reſt, will lie hard when they may command a ſoft bed, will watch when they might ſleep, and all to make them able to indure the like when they ſhall have need: The like muſt we doe, that we may get an habit to croſs and ſubdue our Paſſions when we ſhall have need.

3. The third means is, To fly occaſions which may incenſe the Paſſions whereunto we are inclined. Occaſiones faciunt latrones, ſaith the Proverb, Occaſion makes him a thief which elſe might have been an honeſt man. Wherefore he that commits himſelf to Sea in a boiſterous tempeſt is worthy to ſuffer Shipwreck; and he that willingly puts himſelf in the company of infected perſons may blame himſelf if he fall into their diſeaſes.

4. Laſtly, but chiefly, When thy Paſſions are moſt vehement, then ſeek for ſuccour from Heaven: Fly under the wings of Chriſt as the Chickens under the Hen when the Kite ſeeks to devour them: Beat at the gates of mercy, and crave grace to overcome thy miſery. He is thy Father, and will not give thee a Serpent, if thou ask him Fiſh. Humble thy ſelf before him, open thy ſores and wounds unto him; and the good Samaritan will pour in both wine and oyle, and thy Paſſions ſhall melt and fall away as clouds are diſpelled and conſumed by the Sun.

DIS-

DISCOURSE XXXVIII.

GENESIS 3. 14.

And the Lord God ſaid unto the Serpent, Becauſe thou haſt done this, thou art curſed above all cattel and above every beaſt of the field: upon thy belly ſhalt thou goe, and duſt ſhalt thou eat all the days of thy life.

THESE words contain in them the Serpent's Doom and Deſtiny, pronounced upon him by the great Lord of Heaven and Earth. They contain in them two parts: Firſt, The Reaſon of this Sentence, in the words, Becauſe thou haſt done this: Secondly, The Sentence it ſelf, in the words following, Thou art curſed above all cattell, &c.

The Reaſon of this heavy doom is, Becauſe thou haſt done this: What This? namely, Becauſe he had beguiled the Man and Woman which God had made, and cauſed them to tranſgreſs his great commandment. He therefore that is the cauſe and occaſion of anothers ſin is as hatefull to God as the doer, and is liable to as great or rather a greater puniſhment then he: For the Serpent here for cauſing hath this doom, as well as the Man and Woman for doing. Nay, which is to be obſerved, his doom is the firſt read unto him, as if he were the Arch-offender, and not to the Man or Woman till he was done with. What ſhould this mean, but that his fault, being the mover, was more grievous in the eyes of God then theirs? which is the reaſon alſo why the Woman comes in the next place to have her Sentence, becauſe ſhe had been a ſin-maker, and was guilty, not only of her own perſonall ſin, but of her husband's alſo; whence the Man who had ſinn'd only himſelf, and not cauſed others to ſin, had his judgement laſt of all. I might alſo confirm the ſame from the quality of their ſeverall judgements, in that the Serpent alone is doom'd to be accurſed, and no ſuch word ſpoken either of the Man or the Woman.

But I ſhall not need to tarry here to prove How horrible and fearfull a thing it is to be the Author of another's ſin. We know they are the words of our Saviour, Matt. 18. 6, 7. Woe unto the world becauſe of ſcandals, and woe unto the man by whom a ſcandal cometh; it were better for him that a milſtone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the Sea. And S. Paul (1 Cor. 8. 13.) would eat no meat as long as the world laſteth, rather then make his brother to offend. Would they would conſider this who are not content alone to ſin themſelves, but play the Devil in corrupting others. It ſeems they long to be double damn'd. I would alſo they would think of this who make no conſcience at all by extremities and vexations, and other grievances, to drive a man to Perjury and other grievous ſins, and yet think themſelves free; when they ſhould know, that he that is the Author of another's ſin makes another's guilt his own, and ſhall ſhare in the puniſhment every whit as deep as he.

But this ſhall ſuffice to have obſerved in the firſt part, The Reaſon of the Serpent's doom. Now I come to the ſecond, The doom it ſelf: wherein the words, as you ſee, have all relation to the Serpent; For the Lord ſaid unto the Serpent, Thou art curſed, &c. Thou ſhalt goe upon thy breaſt, &c. But becauſe

Gen. 3. 14. cauſe this Serpent was more then a brute Serpent, the Devil himſelf being the chief Agent in this his Inſtrument; it is a thing much controverted, Upon which of theſe this Curſe is here pronounced. 1. Some would have it ſpoken onely of the brute Serpent, becauſe here is a compariſon made with cattell and beaſts of the field, thereby accounting the Serpent one of that number. Beſides, Satan (they ſay) was accurſed before this time, and ſome of the words in this Curſe cannot well be applied to any but the brute Serpent, as that he ſhould eat the duſt of the earth, &c. 2. Others would have this Curſe pronounced onely upon the Spiritual Serpent, the Devil; becauſe the brute Serpent was onely an Inſtrument abuſed by the Devil, and neither knew what was done, nor could doe withall; and why ſhould it therefore be puniſhed? 3. Others would divide the Controverſie, applying the firſt part of the Curſe (in the 14. verſe) to the brute Serpent, the latter (in the 15. verſe) to the Devil or Spiritual Serpent: becauſe as the latter words, Of the promiſed ſeed of the woman which ſhould deſtroy the Serpent and his ſeed, muſt needs be meant of Chriſt and Satan; ſo the former words are moſt fitly appliable to the brute Serpent onely. But againſt this may be ſaid, That the ſame Thou and Thee ſpoken of in the firſt part of the Curſe is all one with the Thou and Thee in the latter; and therefore of whatſoever the firſt is meant, of the ſame is alſo meant the latter. 4. There is therefore a fourth opinion, That this Curſe is throughout pronounced upon both, both upon the Serpent and the Devil. In which though there be ſome difference about the manner how, yet I embrace it as the trueſt, as not onely conceiving it may be ſo, by the fitneſs of all the parts ſo applied to both; but think moreover that this onely ought to be the meaning and no other, if it be conceived as I am now to ſhew.

For in the firſt place, The Devil when he beguiled man came not as a naked Spirit, but in the ſhape and figure of a Serpent, (as I have ſhew'd heretofore;) and therefore that his puniſhment in the manner might be ſutable and anſwerable to his offence, he was to receive his doom likewiſe under the figure of a Serpent, and the ſtyle thereof framed unto a Serpent's condition: for God uſeth in his wiſdom to brand the Puniſhment with the ſtamp of the Sin, that the offender thereby might not onely know what he felt, but alſo reade why he ſuffered. Why were Adonibezek's thumbs and great toes cut off, but that he might reade therein, as he did, his former cruelty? Judges 1. 7. Threeſcore and ten Kings, having their thumbs and toes cut off, gathered meat under my Table: As I have done, ſo God hath requited me. Why was Pharaoh with his Hoſt rather drowned in the Sea, then ſlain in the Field, but that all the world might reade it was for his cruel Edict to drown all the male children of the Hebrews? Why did Abſalom lie with David's Concubines, but to put David in mind that he had lien with Uriah's wife? And why was the Curſe of the Devil ſhaped here in and unto the condition of the Serpent, but becauſe he had beguiled man in a Serpent's ſhape?

Secondly, For the Serpent; The known excellency and ſubtilty of the Serpent above all the Beaſts which God had made the Devil had abuſed to gain credit with the woman, that he was an excellent and a moſt ſagacious Spirit, and therefore might be able to pry farther into God's meaning then ſhe could; which was the cauſe of her attention, and ſo of her ruine. For I have ſhewed heretofore that the Woman in the ſtate of Integrity knew well enough, That as it was the Law of Spirits in their commerce with men to preſent themſelves under the ſhape of ſome viſible thing; ſo it muſt be likewiſe under the ſhape of ſome ſuch thing as may more or leſs reſemble their condition: and that as the glorious Spirits might take no other ſhape but of Man, the glory of viſible creatures; ſo the fallen Spirits could could not then afore Man's fall take any other ſhape but of a Beaſt, thereby to bewray his abaſement: Yet becauſe the Devil here took upon him the ſhape of the moſt wiſe and moſt excellent of Beaſts, he ſo bleared the Woman's eyes with an opinion of his Excellency and Sagacity, that in a manner ſhe forgot, or regarded not, that he was one of the evil and abaſed Spirits; which was the ground of her miſerable ruine and overthrow. Gen. 3. 14.

Now becauſe the Excellency and Sagacity of the Serpent had thus been the occaſion of man's confuſion, by being made the lying counterfeit of the Devil's Excellency and Wiſdom, and the mask whereby he ſo covered his vileneſs, that the Woman took him not to be as he was indeed; therefore God in his wiſdom thought good to change the copy, and henceforth to blurre and deface that unhappy Phyſiognomical letter, and by abaſing the Serpent for the time to come, to make him an everlaſting embleme and monument, wherein man might hieroglyphically reade the malice, vileneſs and execrable baſeneſs of that wicked Spirit which had beguiled him; to hate him (as now we do the Serpent) with mortal hatred, and by his unlucky fortune to expect the Devil's deadly deſtiny: In a word, that which was once uſed for a mask to cover the Devil's knavery, ſhould for the future be a glaſs wherein to behold his villany.

Theſe being the Reaſons which have led me to underſtand this Curſe in an equal ſenſe, both of the brute Serpent and the Devil; and in the literal ſenſe applied unto the Serpent, yet therein ſhaping out the Malediction of the Devil, as truly as the Devil had taken upon him the Serpent's ſhape: Let us now come to a more particular handling of the words. And firſt we will conſider them, As they are the Curſe of the unreaſonable Serpent; Secondly, As they include the Devil's malediction.

But for the better underſtanding thereof, before we can proceed, two things are to be reſolv'd. Firſt, How it could be Juſt with God to puniſh the brute Serpent, who was Inſtrumentum ἀπροαίρετον, and had neither will to ſin, nor yet knowledge of what the Devil had done; eſpecially if we ſuppoſe, as I have done hitherto, that the Devil took onely the ſhape of a Serpent, which the Serpent could not doe withall. For this argument hath driven ſome to affirm, That the whole Curſe was to be underſtood onely of the Spiritual Serpent, and not at all of the Natural. But why ſhould this ſtumble them more as concerning the Juſtneſs of God, then that in Adam's cenſure in the 17. verſe, where the whole Earth is curſed for Adam's ſake? Curſed be the Earth for thy ſake, &c. But what had the Earth done? or how was it guilty of Adam's tranſgreſſion? Again, Chap. 6. v. 5, 7. it is expreſly ſaid, That becauſe God ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great in the earth, he ſaid, I will deſtroy both man and beaſt, and the creeping things, and the fowls of the air. But how were the beaſts, the creeping things, and the fowls of the air partakers of man's wickedneſs? what had they done more then been abuſed by him? which they could not avoid, he being their Lord and Maſter. And ſhould not we think that Law of God juſt, Levit. 20. 15. where if a man commit abomination with a beaſt, the beaſt is commanded to be ſlain as well as the man, who onely had ſinned? This proves that Objection to be wholly inſufficient. But yet the difficulty of the reſolution, How this may ſtand with God's juſtice, remains as before; which therefore comes now to be reſolved.

1. We know that all the Beaſts of the Field, and the Fowls of the Air, and the Fiſhes of the Sea were made for the uſe and ſervice of Man in one kinde or other, as he ſhould have occaſion to uſe them. 2. If Man had ſtood in his firſt creation, the ſervice of the Creatures ſhould have been ſutable to his excellency and integrity, and ſo far more noble then now it is, that even the creatures might be partakers of his happineſs then, in that ſenſe they yet look for the glorious liberty of the ſons of God* to come. 3ly. But when man was once fallen, the ſervice of the creature was altered, and became a bondage of corruption, as *S. Paul terms it, that is, ignoble, and ſutable to the corrupt condition of man under ſin: Thoſe which ſhould have been imployed excellently for the uſe of his integrity, are now to ſerve him ignominiouſly according to his ſin and miſery; namely, either to be the means to puniſh him for his ſin, or to relieve him in his miſery. To puniſh him, all the Creatures for his uſe are become baſe, corrupt and unworthy, and ſo nothing ſo uſefull for him as they had been: the Earth will not bring forth for him, but with his labour and toil; and then too when it ſhould bear him corn, it brings forth thorns and thiſtles: the Creatures which ſhould ſerve and honour him, do often ſeiſe upon him, and deſtroy him. And thus are the Creatures imployed for man's uſe indeed, but a woſull uſe, to afflict and puniſh him for his ſin all the daies of his life. Another way notwithſtanding they are uſefull and ſerviceable for his good, as helps to relieve and better him in this his condition of ſin; as to be made Documents of the wrath of God to move him to Repentance, and Emblems to know the condition of his moſt deadly enemy the Devil, and how he ought to abhorre and hate him, and the hope and expectation of conquering and triumphing over him in the Bleſſed ſeed of the woman. And for this uſe and ſervice was the Serpent abaſed and made vile, according to his Curſe in my Text; That as he was made excellent, to ſerve him in integrity; ſo he was now abaſed, to be made fit to doe him the beſt ſervice in his miſery. And what Injuſtice could this be in God? when he made him at firſt, he made him ſo as he made him for the ſervice of man; and now when he marr'd him, he marr'd him likewiſe for man's ſervice.

* Rom. 8. 21.

* Ibid.

The ſecond thing to be reſolved is, Whether this Curſe were pronounced onely upon one individual Serpent, or whether upon all Serpents in general, or upon ſome one onely kind which the Devil had thus abuſed. Of one individual Serpent it cannot be, becauſe there is mention here of the enmity of the ſeed of the Serpent and the ſeed of the woman; which implies a generation of many Serpents: and beſides, this Curſe was to be a Monument not onely to Adam, but to all his poſterity, as long as the world laſted; but one individual Serpent lived not ſo long. Neither is it credible to be ſpoken of all kinds of Serpents in general; Becauſe there is almoſt as great a variety of Serpents as of four-footed beaſts of ſeveral kinds and ſpecies; and why ſhould any kind ſuffer ſave that onely which had been abuſed to offend? Beſides, I make no doubt but divers kinds of Serpents went at the firſt Creation upon their breaſts as now they do, and were every whit as baſe as now they are, excepting the general decay of all Creatures ſince the Fall. It remains therefore that it was onely one kind of Serpent which bore this ſpecial Malediction; and that ſuch a kind as was not onely the nobleſt of all the kinds of Serpents, but as it ſeems far excelling all the Creation beſides (Man onely excepted) for beauty, wiſdom and ſagacity; but afterward by this Curſe became not onely baſer then the reſt of the beaſts of the field, but even as baſe and vile as the vileſt kind of Serpent. And therefore it could not be the Baſilisk, as ſome have held, though it be the moſt poiſonfull of all others, and as it were a King among Serpents, as the name imports: for if Plinie and Solinus, who report the former, ſay true, this Serpent here accurſed ſhould rather be any other kind then that, becauſe the Baſilisk (upon their report) goes with his breaſt and fore-part of his body advanced, (erectus à medio incedens, ſaith * Plinie; or, as * Solinus, mediâ corporis parte ſerpit, mediâ arduus eſt & excelſus;) but this Serpent here was

* Nat. hiſt. l. 8. c. 21.

* Cap. 27.

from the hour of his doom to go for ever upon his breaſt: which I wonder they conſidered not, who from the advanced poſture of the Baſilisk's body have conceived the clean contrary. For as by this example we may believe that the Serpent now accurſed did ſo before his curſe; ſo that he ſhould ſtill doe ſo, it is a moſt direct gainſaying of Scripture to imagine. Gen. 3. 14.

But to come to the words of the Doom; which, as you ſee, are firſt General, then Particular. General in theſe, Thou art curſed above all cattell, and above every beaſt of the field. What it is to be accurſed, we ſhall know, if we firſt underſtand what it is to be bleſſed. To be bleſſed or happy is nothing elſe but an all-fruition of good, or to have a ſufficient proviſion and furniture of good, both for being and well-being. So then that Creature is happy and bleſſed which hath a ſufficiency of all good for the being and preſervation of it ſelf; which wants neither endowments inward, nor means outward for the attaining of that End whereof it is by nature capable. To be accurſed is to have the contrary to this; to be deſpoiled either of endowments internal or inherent, without which it hath no dignity among the creatures; or external, without which it cannot live and preſerve it ſelf, but with much penury, difficulty, toil and danger. Whatſoever therefore among the Beaſts of the field (for with ſuch onely is the compariſon made) is for inherent perfections of all the moſt unworthy and baſe, or for the outward furniture of means for the preſervation of that ignoble Being, by unproviſion, of all others the moſt wretched and miſerable, this is that which is accurſed above all cattell and above every beaſt of the field. And ſuch was the Serpent's condition to be for the general.

And now for the particulars; let us goe on and ſee how they are expreſſed: and that is in three things. 1. To go upon the breaſt, or to have the poſture of the Body groveling on the earth; whereby (as I ſhall ſhew preſently) is implied the abaſement of the creature. 2. To have for meat the duſt of the earth; wherein is ſhewn its unproviſion of food for the maintenance of its life, being of all Beaſts of the field to have the baſeſt and courſeſt fare. 3. To be in continual, mortal and irreconcilable enmity with man, both his Lord and the Lord of the reſt of the creatures; from whom it ſhould be in continuall danger and fear of its life, and once eſpied be ſure to have its brains daſh'd out by him: And which makes the miſery ſo much the greater, to be no way able to be revenged of his enemy other then to come unawares behind him, and then alſo not able to reach above his heel; as being moſt unequally matched, he walking aloft with his head and whole body advanced, while the miſerable Serpent ſhall lie groveling on the ground, ready to be troden apieces under his feet.

Of theſe three Particulars let us ſpeak ſeverally; and firſt of the firſt, Upon thy breaſt ſhalt thou go. In the Hebrew it is עַל־גְּחֹנְךָ, which ſome turn, Upon thy belly: which interpretation hath been one great cauſe of the difficulty to underſtand the meaning of this Malediction. For if the ſhape of the Serpent were after the faſhion it is now, it is not poſſible to imagine how it could ever have gone otherwiſe then upon the belly; for to think that ever it went an-end, were a conceit more worthy to be derided then to be believed. By which means there appeared no other way to evade this difficulty, but to affirm that the Serpent indeed went upon his belly from the beginning; but either that it was not ſo toilſome to him, or not for a curſe unto him till now: which, for my part, it being ſo far from the letter of the Text, I could never yet believe. I had much rather in this follow the Vulgar or Jerome's Tranſlation, which reads, ſuper pectus tuum gradièris, upon thy breaſt ſhalt thou go; for upon the belly I believe the Serpent went from the firſt Creation, but not upon the breaſt until this preſent malediction. The breaſt of the Serpent I call the upper part of the

Gen. 3. 14. Serpent's body, from the navell up to the head; The belly, the other part or the other half downward, with which though at the first he walked prone to and upon the earth, yet was the other part, his breast and head, reared up and advanced, untill for having been abused to the ruine of mankind, he was now with his whole body to creep groveling upon the earth. And perhaps thus much the Septuagint meant to insinuate by their Translation, which is, ἐπὶ τῷ στήθει καὶ τῇ κοιλίᾳ σου, upon thy breast and thy belly; where it may seem that they rendred two words for one in the Text, for illustration, and for intimation of this, That whereas the Serpent before went onely upon his belly, ἐπὶ τῇ κοιλίᾳ, now he should from henceforth walk ἐπὶ τῷ στήθει καὶ τῇ κοιλίᾳ, upon his breast and belly too.

As for the Hebrew גָּחוֹן here used, there is no necessity at all to translate it the belly, but rather some probability of the contrary in the Etymology of the word. For though in the Hebrew the Theme be not used, yet in the Chaldee גָּחַן, which signifies incurvatus fuit, to bow downward, seems to mean the inclination of the head and breast, or upper part of the body, to the earth; as may be gathered from that of Elijah, 1 Kings 18. 42. where it is said, that Elijah went up to the top of Carmel, & pronum se abjecit in terram, and cast himself down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees: for here the Targum useth this word גחן, the Radix of גָּחוֹן. Again Mark 1. 7. in those words of John Baptist, There is one cometh after me, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose; here for the Greek word κύψας, stoop down, the Syriack hath גחן, of as near a kin to גחן as is the Syriack to the Chaldee. The word גָּחוֹן it self is of rare use in the Bible besides in this place, and therefore we can receive no great help from the comparing of places. It is read again Levit. 11. 42. and that with a singular mark, as the Masorites have observed; for the Vau cholem in the last syllable is ואו רבתי, a great Vau, and exactly the middlemost letter of all the Law of Moses, if their Arithmetick failed them not. But no particularity of signification can from that place be gathered, the speech being of creeping things, which goe as well upon the breast as the belly, and the belly as the breast.

Since therefore the word here used neither hindreth our opinion, nor much furthereth it, we will come to such other grounds as may prove our assertion, for the Serpent's going with breast advanced afore the Fall of man, and not groveling till his Malediction. And first let it be considered there is no impossibility of it in regard of the frame of the Serpent; which appears both by their advancing themselves when they assault a man, (which the Painters express in their Pictures) and also when they swim through the water, which is with their head and some part of their breast raised above water, even as a Swan holdeth up her neck; as I have heard affirmed by such as have been eye-witnesses: and lastly, Plinie and Solinus report of the Basilisk, that the Basilisk walks so still; as I shewed a little before. And it may be, as when the Giant-like stature of mankind was diminished after the Floud in a manner throughout the world, and for many ages, yet was there by God's disposition still a race of Giants left even till the time of David, for a monument and witness of the truth of a far bigger stature in former times, which else could not so easily have been believed or imagined; (Such were the Zanzummims* in Abraham's time, the sons of Anak in Moses's, and Goliah in the time of David; and it may be there are yet some in some part of the world to be found) as, I say, these seem to have been preserved by God, as a memorial unto men that they were not now as at the first; so it may be it was the will of God and is, amongst so many kinds of Serpents to preserve this one, that it should not

* Some think these to be the Zuzims in Gen. 14. 5.

H. Rob: Knox writ in Insula Ceilon apud Indos, dari Serpentem Noya dict, tam haben. suam Indolem ut India in parte erigat, et caput sic elatum per horium, vel horum continuum circumportet. Knox: Historical relat of the Island Ceilon.

not as the rest go groveling upon the earth, but might be as a monument of the truth of the malediction of the rest to all posterity. Thus much of the possibility, which would be far greater, if we should with S. Basil, Ephrem Syrus, Moses Bar-Cephas, and many others, affirm that the Serpent had feet, namely, some short ones beneath the navell: For feet are not essentiall to the nature of a thing, as appears by the lame, who can live without them, and by others sometimes by the defect of nature born without them. And those who can believe the wonderfull change of Man by his fall, of an immortal creature to become mortal, of one to have been born with all glorious endowments both of body and soul, now to be brought into the world the most unfurnished of all the creatures; those who believe the great alteration of the Earth it self when it was accursed for man's sin, the diminution of the time of man's life and of his stature even since the floud; can any who believe these things, think it so incredible for the Serpent once to have had some small feet, and afterward to have had none, being a creature wherein God intended to leave a monument for ever? But of this I will determine nothing, neither doth my assertion simply depend upon it, but may well enough consist without it. Gen. 3. 14.

But because possibility is not sufficient of it self alone to infer a probability, I have therefore one thing to adde more thereto, namely, the reason and cause even in nature (supposing still God's abasing of the Serpent's first creation) of this alteration of the posture of the Serpent's gate from that it was at the beginning.

First, We know the more excellent and sublime the nature of a creature is, the more it raiseth it self upward; the more ignoble and base, the more it falls downward. This we see in the Elements themselves: the Fire, the most excellent and operative of the four, raiseth it self above the rest; the Earth, the basest and most unactive of all, is also of all the most dejected.

Secondly, As there is this difference in the Elements, so there is in the Mixed bodies; some consisting of a more sublime and excellent temper, others of a more base and ignoble mixture; and that as in other, so amongst such creatures as live and move upon the earth.

Thirdly, This their nobleness within discovereth it self in the Body without, by advancing them naturally in their gate and gesture: whence Man, being of all creatures living upon the earth of the most excellent temper and sublimed condition of nature, is therefore of all other the most advanced in body;

Pronáque cum spectant animalia cætera terram,
Os homini sublime dedit, &c.

And whereas others see with down-cast eyes,
He with a lofty look did man indue,
And bad him Heav'n's transcendent glories view.

Yea experience will tell us, that even amongst men themselves, those who are of a more exalted nature, either by heroick temper or predominancy of heat, are also more advanced in the posture of their bodies. Among Beasts themselves the basest is the most creeping; the noble Lion advanceth his head and breast so far as the frame of his body is thereof capable, and so the rest: and of all creatures we may observe besides, that those creatures have the most sagacity who come most near to walk upright as Man doth.

If therefore the Serpent were of so sublime a nature at the first, as thereby it was more subtle then any beast of the field which God had made;

Gen. 3. 14. how could ſo excellent a temper, the ground of ſo much ſagacity, but advance the body thereof as far as the frame and ſhape thereof could admit? On the contrary, if afterward the Serpent became the moſt abaſed and accurſed of all the beaſts of the field, how ſhould not this alteration of his former temper and diſpoſition of nature make the geſture of his body alſo ſutable, by ſtooping and groveling upon the earth? Who knows not that the natural poſition of Man is erected agreeable to his excellency above other creatures having life and motion? and yet notwithſtanding ſo much hath the dejection of his primitive nature for ſin weakned in him this propenſion, that were it not for education, it is ſuppoſed, yea and by experience confirmed, that he would walk upon all four like a beaſt. And ſhall we wonder that the malediction of the Serpent, exceeding that of Man's, ſhould produce as much as this?

So then to conclude this firſt particular of the Serpent's curſe; I underſtand it, from the ground aforeſaid, as inſinuating the cauſe by the outward and ſenſible effect, according to the manner of the Scripture; namely, the abaſement and fall of the Serpent's whole nature from his primitive perfection, diſcovered by the fall of his once advanced body, thenceforth to go groveling upon the earth: even as the deſpoiling of the nature of Man of the inward endowments of perfection, is by the ſame ſacred Trope inſinuated by his outward nakedneſs; that is, the obſcuration of that glorious and celeſtiall beauty which he had before his ſin: The difference whereof was ſo great, that he could not endure afterward to behold himſelf any more, but ſought for a covering, even to hide himſelf from himſelf.

And now I come to the ſecond particular, Duſt ſhalt thou eat all the days of thy life. The courſeſt diet that any living creature hath allowed him. None of the Beaſts of the field with whom he is compared are thus poorly provided for; nay not any other, unleſs the baſe Earthworm, not worthy to be named among the creatures. Even with this vileſt of creatures is now ranked that once ſo noble a creature, the Serpent. Which yet is not ſo to be underſtood, as though the Serpent did not ſometime eat ſomething elſe, for they ſometime devour birds, frogs, and ſuch like; but that this is the ordinary fare which God hath provided him, and if at any time he getteth any other, he goeth beyond his limits. Whence Eſay 65. 25. among the bleſſings of the new Jeruſalem this is reckoned for one, that the Serpent ſhould eat duſt; that is, be made to be contented with the diet God had appointed him, and not to encroach upon the food appointed for others.

But why did God appoint him this Food? I anſwer, Even to continue him in that accurſed and vile condition to which he had dejected him: For Food is for the repairing and preſervation of nature, and the goodneſs or badneſs thereof doth make the temper of the body better or worſe. Hence according to the degrees of excellency in the creatures, their Food is finer or courſer: Plants ſuck the moiſture of the earth; Beaſts live moſt upon plants; but Man of the fleſh of cattell, fowl, and fiſhes. Since therefore the Serpent was to have no better fare then the duſt of the earth; as it argues the baſeneſs of his nature, which can with ſuch food be nouriſhed, ſo doth it neceſſarily imply his continuance in that his dejection and vileneſs: whereas otherwiſe it were not impoſſible, becauſe his nature for the eſſence is ſtill the ſame it was, if his diet were as it had been, for him to improve himſelf more near to his primitive temper then now he is. But God, who had decreed he ſhould ever remain under this malediction, appointed alſo the means to retain him therein.

DISCOURSE XXXIX.

GENESIS 3. 15.

And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy ſeed and her ſeed: it ſhall bruiſe thy head, and thou ſhalt bruiſe his heel.

THE third and laſt particular remains to be treated of; I will put enmity between thee and the woman, &c. This no doubt intendeth in ſome things more directly the ſpiritual Serpent then the brute; yet for the general it may and ought, as well as the reſt, to be expounded of the brute Serpent, as a Glaſs wherein to behold the malice and deſtiny of the other, the Devil. It containeth two parts; The Enmity, and the Event and Managing thereof. For the Enmity, how it is verified concerning the brute Serpent experience telleth. It is ſome part of the happineſs of the creature to be the Favourite of Man who is the Lord thereof; what honour could betide it greater then this? But between the Serpent and Man is the moſt deadly enmity, and the ſtrongeſt antipathy that is amongſt the Beaſts of the field; ſuch an one as diſcovereth it ſelf both in the natural and ſenſitive faculties of them both. For the firſt, Their humours are poiſon each to other: the gall of a Serpent is Man's deadly poiſon; and ſo is the ſpittle of a Man affirmed to poiſon the Serpent. For the ſenſitive antipathy, it appears in that the one doth ſo much abhorre the ſight and preſence of the other. Man's nature is at nothing ſo much aſtoniſhed as at the ſight of a Serpent; and like enough the Serpent is in like manner affected at the ſight of Man; and that more eſpecially, as the Naturaliſts affirm, of a naked man, then otherwiſe. As though his inſtinct even remembred the time of his malediction, when he and naked man ſtood before God to receive this ſentence of everlaſting enmity.

And whereas the words of the Text do in ſpecial point out the Woman in this ſentence of enmity; the Naturaliſts do obſerve, that is greater and more vehement with that ſex then with the male of mankinde: Inſomuch that Rupertus affirmeth, That if but the naked foot of a Woman doth never ſo little preſs the head of a Serpent before he can ſting her, both the head and body preſently dieth; which no cudgell or other weapon will cauſe, but that ſome life and motion will ſtill remain behinde. Hoc (ſaith he) ita eſſe, ipſorum qui per induſtriam exploraverunt fidâ relatione comperimus. Lib. 3. de Trin. c. 20. You know my Author, who affirms that he had this from the faithfull report of ſuch as had purpoſely beſtow'd their pains to find out the truth thereof.

The remaining words of my Text do expreſs the Managing and Event of this enmity, which is far more dangerous and unlucky on the Serpent's part then on Man's: for Man is able to reach the Serpent's head, where his life chiefly reſideth, and where a blow is deadly; but as for the Serpent, he ſhall not be able to prevail againſt Man otherwiſe then privily and unawares, and that but in the loweſt part, namely, when he ſhall paſs him unſeen, to ſting him by the heel. And that this is the nature of a Serpent it appeareth in the words of Dan's bleſſing, Gen. 49. 17. Dan ſhall be a Serpent by the

Gen. 3. 15. way, an Adder in the path; that biteth the horſe heels, ſo that his rider ſhall fall backward. And to make an end of this diſcourſe alſo, it is a thing to be obſerved in the nature of a Serpent, that aſſoon as he perceiveth man ready to throw or ſtrike at him, he will preſently roul his body for a buckler to ſave his head; even as though he had ſome impreſſion of that doctrine which God here read him in my Text, Ipſe conteret tibi caput, He ſhall bruiſe thy Head; Beware thy head.

AND thus hitherto I have conſidered theſe words as they are the curſe of the brute Serpent: Now I am to go over with them again, to ſhew how they are propounded unto us by God as a Glaſs wherein to behold the Devil's malediction; the Serpent being made now the diſcovery of his vileneſs, which once he abuſed for a mask to hide it from the woman. As therefore the Serpent is the moſt accurſed of all the cattell and beaſts of the field; ſo is the Devil the moſt accurſed Spirit amongſt all orders and degrees of Spirits: namely, of the higheſt of Angels become the abjecteſt of Spirits; more baſe and accurſed then the moſt curſed damned Soul; having little or nothing left him of that good which was ſutable to a ſpiritual condition: and this is the ſtate of the Devil for the general, anſwerable to that of the Serpent.

Now for the particulars. The firſt is, Upon thy breaſt ſhalt thou go. How doth this befit the Devil? The Devil hath no bodily breaſt to go upon: But as I ſhewed in the Serpent, that this groveling ſignified the abaſement of his whole nature from its primitive excellency; ſo in the Devil it ſignifies his ſtooping down and falling from his moſt ſublime and glorious condition. A wonderfull ſtoop this was, when that which had been advanced as high as heaven, was made to fall down as low, yea lower then the earth it ſelf. This is the Devil's going upon his breaſt, this the groveling of that once ſo highly reared poſture: according to that deſcription of Jude ver. 6. who calls them the Angels that kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their own habitation; agreeable to that of S. Peter 2 Ep. 2. 4. God ſpared not the Angels that ſinned, but caſt them down to hell.

The ſecond particular is, The duſt of the earth ſhalt thou eat all the days of thy life. The food wherewith Spirits are fed is analogicall, ſpiritual and not corporal; we muſt therefore here ſeek out that which in them hath the fitteſt reſemblance with corporal food. The life of Angels conſiſts in the continuall contemplation of the excellent Greatneſs, wonderfull Goodneſs, and glorious Beauty of the Eſſence of God, both as it is in it ſelf, and as it is communicated unto his creatures. This is that which our Saviour intimates, Matt. 18. 10. Their Angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven. The food of Angels, whereby this their Intellectuall life and vegetation is ſtrengthened and continued, is that unſpeakable joy and delight which accompanies their contemplation of God, and which they finde in the beholding of whatſoever elſe hath any conformity and ſutableneſs with him, his Power, his Wiſdome, his Glory, his Goodneſs: Luke 15. 7, 10. according to that in the Goſpel, There is joy in heaven, and in the preſence of the Angels of God, for one ſinner that repenteth. This is that Manna which feeds the bleſſed Angels, and which makes them unweariable and unſatiable in their contemplation and imitation of God, as corporal food enableth the body for the continuance of corporal actions and works.

And ſuch as this had been the Devil's fare, had he not fallen from his firſt eſtate by ſin: whereas now in ſtead of that Manna, he is fain with the Serpent to feed on a food as courſe and as baſe as the duſt of the earth. For as of a glorious Angel he is fallen to be a damned Spirit; ſo is his diet anſwerable to continue him in that damnable eſtate; namely, a food clean contrary contrary to that of the bleſſed Angels, and a very earth to their heaven; a moſt execrable joy and a malicious delight in whatſoever is oppoſite to the Power, the Wiſdome, the Goodneſs, the Glory of God his Creator: this is that he hungreth and hunteth after, and nothing but this. If there were no ſin, no confuſion, no miſery of creatures in the world, the Devil would be ſoon ſtarved; for this is that he preys after, this is that carrion he ſeeks for, when he goeth about, as S. Peter ſaith, like a roaring Lion ſeeking whom he may devour. I have read of a people of America that will eat no fleſh before it be ſtinking rotten, and then it ſeems to them moſt tender and delicate: Theſe are of a diet like unto the Devil, for nothing but garbage and carrion are his dainties; the more rotten with ſin, the more pleaſing to his palate; that which ſtinks moſt in God's noſtrils, that ſmells the ſweeteſt in his. Thus much of the ſecond part of this Curſe. Gen. 3. 15. 1 Pet. 5. 8.

The laſt part remains, I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy ſeed, &c. In which we will firſt conſider The parties who are to be at this deadly feud: Secondly, The event and ſucceſs they have one againſt the other.

For the firſt, The parties are on one ſide ſaid to be the Serpent and his ſeed; on the other ſide, The woman and her ſeed. By the Serpent we are to underſtand Satan the Prince of darkneſs and Father of Devils. The Serpent's ſeed in the firſt place are the whole crue of Devils and damned ſpirits, who are fallen from their firſt eſtate and condition. Theſe are the Serpent's firſt-born, begotten by him not by corporal generation, nor as they are Spirits, but by ſpiritual deformation, as they are Devils. For it is the opinion of Divines, That Satan fell firſt himſelf, and afterward propagated his Apoſtaſie by drawing others after him, over whom therefore he worthily deſerveth to have the principality and chiefdome; in which reſpect alſo, were there no other, yet he might be called their Father, and they his ſons or ſeed, as we know the uſe of the Scripture is to call Princes Fathers, and Subjects Sons. The latter off-ſpring of the Devil, being a ſecond brood, are the whole company of wicked and reprobate worldlings: for that ſuch as theſe are the ſpawn of that foul Fiend, it appears clearly by the words of our Saviour to the Phariſees, Joh. 8. 44. Ye are of your Father the Devil, and the luſts of your Father ye will doe. And again, 1 Joh. 3. 10. The children of God are oppoſed to the children of the Devil. Therefore Chriſt calls Judas a Devil, Joh. 6. 70. And Paul Act. 13. 10. calls Elymas the Sorcerer a child of the Devil. The caſe is plain: And as the Vanguard conſiſted of the firſt crue, ſo theſe latter are the Rere of Satan's Army.

Now on the other ſide, againſt this Army of Hel-hounds ſtand The Woman and the Woman's ſeed. The Woman though only named, excludes not the Man, who was to be at enmity with the Devil as well as the Woman: But the reaſon of this unuſuall Trope, which calls the Kind by the name of the weaker and inferiour Sex, is becauſe of the words following, of the ſeed, wherein is contained the great Myſtery of Chriſt's Incarnation, under whoſe colours and in whoſe power alone this Army is both to march and overcome. For this great Captain was to be, as you know, the ſeed of the Woman only, and not of the Man; A Virgin ſhould conceive a Son, whoſe name is called Emmanuel. Whence it comes to paſs, that ſome by ſeed will have no other ſeed to be underſtood but the perſon of Chriſt only: both becauſe he is alone that ſeed of the woman, which is not the ſeed of man; and becauſe S. Paul, Gal. 3. 16. on thoſe words (v. 8.) In thy ſeed ſhall all the Nations of the earth be bleſſed, expoundeth ſeed ſingularly and individually of Chriſt himſelf alone. But if it be well obſerved, the caſe here is not the like; for the ſeed of the Woman is oppoſed to the ſeed of the Serpent, Eſay 7. 14.

Gen. 3. 15. pent, which ſeed cannot chuſe but be taken collectively for Satan and all his regiments of Devils and Hell-hounds. And why ſhould not alſo the ſeed of the Woman be underſtood of Chriſt myſticall, that is, of Chriſt the Head with all his members, who are incorporate into him by Faith into one myſticall body? For although they are naturally the ſeed of Man as well as of the Woman, yet ſpiritually by this incorporation they are the ſeed of the Woman only, as is their Head with whom they are one. And this it is which makes them of the party againſt the Serpent; for till they once became the ſeed of the woman only, there was no enmity betwixt them.

The ſeed therefore of the Woman I expound to be Chriſt and his Members: He κατὰ φύσιν, the ſeed of the woman by nature; they κατ' ἐφαρμογὴν, by their ſpiritual engrafment into him. Hence appears the difference of theſe two Armies. Firſt, In Satan's Army all march under their Father who begot them; but Chriſt's Army fighteth under the Colours of their elder brother, the firſt-begotten ſeed of the woman. Secondly, In their ranging, Chriſt and his Army are as one body informed by one Spirit; the Devil's is far more diſunited. Thirdly, In their fighting: for in Satan's Army every Souldier uſeth his own ſtrength, and fights with his own weapons; but in Chriſt's Army the whole ſtrength lies in Chriſt their General: all our armour is on his back, and our weapons guided by the power of his hand. So we may learn out of S. Paul, Epheſ. 6. 11, 12. Put on (ſaith he) the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to ſtand againſt the wiles of the Devil. For we wraſtle not againſt fleſh and bloud, but againſt principalities, againſt powers, againſt the rulers of the darkneſs of this world, againſt ſpiritual wickedneſs in high places.

Thus then having ſeen the marſhalling of theſe two Armies which are at ſo deadly an enmity, let us at laſt ſee The ſucceſs of their skirmiſhes and of the ſtratagems which they practiſe one againſt the other. Theſe are deſcribed on the Devil's part very terrible, that his head ſhould be mauled; but on Chriſt's ſide the loſs ſhould be very ſmall, the Devil prevailing but to the wounding or bruiſing of his heel.

But what is this Head of the Serpent? and what the Heel of the Woman's ſeed? Thoſe who underſtand The ſeed of the woman ſingularly, of the perſon of Chriſt only, make his Head to be the Godhead, againſt which the Serpent could prevail nothing; but his heel to be the Manhood, which the Serpent ſo bruiſed at his Paſſion, that the grave became his bed for three days together. This indeed is true, and no marvell, for the Head is as it were the whole Bodie's Epitome. But we who have expounded The ſeed of the woman collectively, of Chriſt and his Members, muſt alſo in this myſticall Body find a myſticall Head and a myſticall Heel; and ſo in like manner for the Serpent and his ſeed.

The Head therefore, or, if you had rather, Headſhip, is nothing elſe but Soveraignty: The Serpent's head is the Devil's Soveraignty, which is called Principatus mortis, the Soveraignty of death, namely, both objectivè and effectivè; that is, ſuch a Soveraignty as under which are only ſuch as are liable to Death both temporal and eternal; and ſuch a Soveraignty whoſe power conſiſts not in ſaving and giving of life, but in deſtroying, and bringeth unto Death both of body and ſoul. Under the name alſo of Death underſtand, as the Scripture doth, all other miſeries of mankind, which are the companions of this double Death I ſpeak of. This is that damnable Head of the Serpent, the Deviliſh Soveraignty of Satan. Now the Sword whereby this Soveraignty was obtained, the Sceptre whereby it is 1 Cor. 15. 56. maintained, or, as S. Paul ſpeaks, the Sting of this Serpent's head, is Sin:

This

This is that which got him this Kingdome at the first, and this is still the right whereby he holds the greatest part thereof. Imperium iisdem artibus conservatur quibus acquiritur, By the same arts and methods is an Empire conserved by the which it was at first obtained. Gen. 3. 15.

This Soveraignty of the Devil, which once overwhelmed nigh all the world, the Woman's seed should break in pieces and destroy; which (according to this Prophecy) we see already performed in a great measure, and the grounds laid long ago for the destruction of all that remaineth. As saith S. John Ep. 1. c. 3. v. 8. The Son of God was manifested for this purpose, that he might destroy the works of the Devil. And Christ himself said, that the time was come that the Prince of this world should be cast out; John 12. 31. and bade his Disciples be of good chear, for he had overcome the world. If Chap. 16. 33. you would see what a wonderfull victory he hath long ago gotten of the Serpent, when after a terrible battell he overcame and destroyed the Soveraignty of the Serpent in the Roman Empire, see it described in the 12. of the Revelation, v. 7, 8. where Michael (that is, Christ) and his Angels fought against the great Dragon and his Angels, till the Dragon with all his Army was discomfited, and their place found no more in heaven, that is, he utterly lost his Soveraignty in that state; whence there was a voice in heaven, v. 10. Now is come salvation, strength, and the Kingdome of our God, and the power of his Christ. And what he will at the length doe with the remainder yet of the Devil's Soveraignty, you may finde in the 19. and 20. chapters of the Revelation: For he must reign, as S. Paul saith, untill he hath put all his enemies under his feet, untill he hath destroyed all power, rule, and authority adverse unto him: And then last of all destroying Death by giving immortality to our raised bodies, shall furrender up his Kingdome unto his Father, as it is 1 Cor. 15. 25, &c.

But Satan, saith my Text, shall prevail something against him, for the Serpent shall bruise his heel. What is this Heel? Those who understood the seed of the woman singularly, as I told you, made it Christ's Manhood: But now we expound the seed Christ's Mysticall Body, what shall we make the Heel thereof? I could say that by it were only meant a light wound, or the Devil's assaulting the Body of Christ ex insidiis, at unawares; for that is his fashion since the great overthrow which our Michael gave him, to work his feats underhand, and to undermine our Lord in his members. But this, though true, is not full enough. It may seem therefore the fittest to make hypocriticall Christians, who profess Christ outwardly, but inwardly are not his, to make these the heel of his Mysticall Body: for against such the Devil we know prevaileth somewhat, and by them annoyeth the rest of the Body with his venome, though he be far enough yet from impeaching our Lord's Headship and Soveraignty. But will you give me leave to utter another conceit? If the Blessed souls in heaven be the upper part of Christ's mysticall Body, the Saints on earth the lower part of the same; may not the bodies of the Saints deceased which lye in the earth be accounted for the heel? For I cannot believe but they have relation to this mysticall Body, though their souls be severed from them, and yet must that relation be as of the lowest and most postick members of all. If you will admit this, then it will appear presently what was this hurt upon the heel, when Christ had once mauled the Devil's head; for the Text seems to intimate that the Devil should give this wound after his head was broken.

I will hold you in suspence no longer. Reade the 13. of the Revelation, and see what follows upon Michael's Victory over the Dragon, what the Devil did when he was down: He forms a new Instrument of the wounded

Roman

Gen. 3. 15. Roman Empire, by whoſe means, under a pretence of the Honour given to the precious Reliques of the Saints and Martyrs, he conveyed the poiſon of Saint-worſhip and Saint-invocation into the Kingdome of Chriſt; with which wound of the heel, the Devil coming on the blind ſide, the true Church had been long annoyed, and limpeth ſtill.

DISCOURSE XL.

S. MATTHEW 7. 21.

Not every one that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the Kingdome of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

THERE are three ſorts of men in the world: Some which call not Chriſt their Lord, as Turks, Jews and Infidels: Some which call him Lord, as all Chriſtians, but not all in like manner; For there are two ſorts of them; ſome which call him Lord, and that is all; others which both call him Lord, and doe the will of his Father, the adminiſtration whereof is committed to him. The firſt of theſe three ſorts, Thoſe who do not ſo much as call Chriſt their Lord, it is plain they cannot be ſaved; for there is no other name under heaven to be ſaved by but the name of Chriſt only. For the ſecond ſort, Thoſe who call Chriſt their Lord, that is, are Chriſtians, and profeſs to believe in Chriſt, and hope to be ſaved by him, and yet doe no works of obedience unto God; though ſuch as theſe may think themſelves in a good eſtate, yet our Saviour here expreſly excludes them from entring into the Kingdome of heaven. But the third ſort, which do not only call Chriſt their Lord, but doe the will of his Father, theſe are the only true Chriſtians; for theſe there is hope, but for none other: Not every one (ſaith our Saviour) that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord, &c.

Acts 4. 12.

Our Saviour foreſaw there would be among thoſe who believed on his Name ſuch as ſhould think their Faith ſufficient, and that as for Works they might be excuſed, having him for their Lord and Captain of their ſalvation, who himſelf had both undergone the puniſhment due for their ſins, and fulfilled that obedience which they ſhould have done: ſo that now there remained nothing on their part for to obtain Salvation, but to truſt and rely upon him, without any endeavour at all to pleaſe God by Works, as being now become unuſefull to Salvation. If ever there were a time when Chriſtians thus deceived themſelves, that time is now, as both our practice ſheweth plainly, by a general neglect of ſuch duties of Piety and Charity which amongſt our Fore-fathers were frequent; as alſo our open profeſſion, when being exhorted to theſe works of Piety to God and of Charity towards our brethren, we ſtick not to alledge, we are not bound unto them, becauſe we look not to be ſaved by the merit of works, as they, but by Faith in Chriſt

Christ alone: As though Faith in Christ excluded Works, and did not rather include them, as being that whereby they became acceptable unto God, which of themselves they are not; Or as if Works could no way conduce unto the attaining of Salvation but by way of merit and desert, and not by way of the grace and favour of God in Christ, as we shall see in the handling of this Text. We greatly now-a-days, and that most dangerously, mistake the errour of our Forefathers, which was not in that they did good works; I would we did so; but because they knew not rightly the End why they did them, nor where the Value of them lay: They thought the End of doing them was to obtain eternal life, as a reward of Justice due unto them; whereas it is onely of Grace and Promise in Christ Jesus: They took their Works to have such perfectness in them as would endure the Touchstone of the Law of God, yea such Worth and Value as to merit the Reward they looked for; whereas all the Value and acceptableness of our works issues from the Merits of Christ, and lies onely in his righteousness communicated unto us and them by Faith, and no otherwise. But setting aside these errours of the End and of the Value of works, we must know as well as they, That not every one that saith unto Christ, Lord, Lord, &c. but he that doeth the will of his Father, &c. Matt. 7. 21.

Now for the Explication of the Words. To call Christ Lord, is to believe in him, to acknowledge him, to look for Salvation by him, or, as the Scripture expresseth it, Luke 6. 47. to come unto him; Every one, (saith our Saviour there, explaining this very Text we have in hand) that cometh unto me, and heareth my words, and doeth them, I will shew you who he is like: where to come unto Christ is put in stead of that which in the former was, to say unto him, Lord. The doing of his Father's will, is the doing of those works of obedience which his Father hath commanded in his Law, and now committed to his Son, whom he hath made the Head and King of his Church, to see executed and performed by those he bringeth to Salvation. But how, and in what manner, we shall see by and by.

The Text consists of two parts: The one negative; Not every one that saith unto Christ, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of heaven; The other affirmative; But those who doe the will of his Father shall onely enter thither. But these are so nearly linked together, that they cannot be handled asunder. And the Observations which I shall draw thence depend on the whole Text. The first and chiefest whereof is this, That Faith in Christ without works of obedience and amendment of life is not sufficient for Salvation, and consequently not that Faith whereby a Christian is justified. For if it were, it would save us: If it be not sufficient to save us, it cannot justifie us. This floweth directly from the Text, and cannot be denied; if ye remember what I said before, That to call Christ Lord, is to believe in him. Observ. 1.

For the better understanding of this, you must take notice that there is a threefold Faith whereby men believe in Christ. There is a false faith: there is a true faith, but not saving: and thirdly, there is a saving faith. A false Faith is, To believe to attain Salvation through Christ any other way then he hath ordained; as namely, to believe to attain Salvation through him without works of obedience to be accepted of God in him: which is a Faith whereof there is no Gospel. A true Faith is, To believe Salvation is to be attained through obedience to God in Jesus Christ, who by his merits and righteousness makes our selves and our works acceptable to his Father. A saving and justifying Faith is, To believe this so as to embrace and lay hold upon Christ for that end: To believe to attain Salvation through obedience to God in Christ, so as to apply our selves and rely upon

Matt. 7. 21. Chriſt for that end; namely, to perform thoſe works of obedience which God hath promiſed to reward with eternal life. For a juſtifying Faith ſtayeth not onely in the Brain, but ſtirs up the Will to receive and enjoy the good believed, according as it is promiſed. This motion or election of the Will is that which maketh the difference between a ſaving Faith which joyneth us unto Chriſt, and that which is true indeed, but not ſaving, but dogmatical and opinionative onely. And this motion or applying of the Will to Chriſt, this embracing of Chriſt and the promiſes of the Goſpel through him, is that which the Scripture (when it ſpeaks of this faith) calleth coming unto Chriſt, or the receiving of him. Joh. 1. 12. As many as received him, to them he gave power (or priviledge) to be the ſons of God, even to them that believe on his Name: where receiving and believing one expound another. So for coming; Come unto me (ſaith our Saviour Matt. 11. 28.) all ye that are heavy laden, and I will eaſe you. The laſt is very frequent. John 5. 40. Ye will not come to me (ſaith our Saviour) that ye might have life. And Chap. 6. 37. All that the Father giveth me, ſhall come unto me. ver. 44. No man can come unto me, unleſs the Father draw him. 45. Every man that hath heard, and learned of the Father, cometh unto me; and ſuch like. All which expreſs the ſpecification of a ſaving Faith, which conſiſts in the embracing, receiving and applying of the Will to the thing believed.

What this embracing, receiving or applying unto Chriſt is, I will farther make plain thus. He that believeth that Chriſt is an atonement to God for the ſins of all repentant ſinners, (and ſurely he is an atonement for none elſe) muſt repent and turn from all his ſins, that ſo Chriſt may be an atonement for him; elſe he embraceth not what he believeth. He that believes that God in Chriſt will accept and reward our obedience and works of Piety, though ſhort of perfection and of no worth in themſelves, muſt apply himſelf accordingly to doe works of Religion and Charity, that God in Chriſt may accept and reward them. For our Belief is not that ſaving Belief, untill we apply our ſelves to what we believe. To believe to attain Salvation through Chriſt without works of obedience to be accepted in him, is (as I have already ſaid) a falſe Faith, whereof there is no Goſpel, no Promiſe: To believe the contrary, That Chriſt is given of God to ſuch onely as ſhall receive him, to perform acceptable obedience to God through him, and yet not to apply and buckle our ſelves thereto, were indeed to believe what is true; but yet no ſaving faith, becauſe we embraced not the thing we believed as we believed it.

Thou ſayeſt then thou haſt Faith, and believeſt that Chriſt is the atonement to God for the ſins of all ſuch as leave and forſake their ſins by Repentance: why then, repent thee of thy ſins, that Chriſt may be an atonement for thee. Thou ſayeſt thou haſt this Faith, That God in Jeſus Chriſt will accept thy undeſerving works and ſervices unto eternal life: why then, embrace thou Chriſt, and rely upon him for this end, that thou mayeſt doe works of Piety towards God and Charity towards men, that ſo God in Chriſt may accept thee and them unto eternal life.

Obſerv. 1. Now if this be the Faith which is ſaving and unites us unto Chriſt, and no other; then it is plain That a ſaving Faith cannot be ſevered from good works, becauſe no man can embrace Chriſt as he is promiſed, but he muſt apply himſelf to doe them. For out of that which hath been ſpoken three Reaſons may be gathered for the neceſſity of them.

1. Firſt, it is the end of our Faith and Juſtification by Chriſt, yea the end why he ſhed his bloud for us, that we being reconciled to God in him, might bring forth fruits of righteouſneſs, which elſe we could never have done. This is no Speculation, but plain Scripture. S. Peter 1 Ep. 2. 24. telleth us, that Chriſt his own ſelf bare our ſins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to ſin, ſhould live unto righteouſneſs. S. Paul, Tit. 2. 11, 12, 13, 14. The grace of God (ſaith he) that bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared unto all men; (wherefore?) Teaching us, that denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, and righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world; Looking for that bleſſed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, Who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purifie unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Theſe words contain the Summe of all I have hitherto told you; That Chriſt is therefore given us to be a propitiation for our ſins, and to juſtifie us, that in him we might walk before God in newneſs of life; ſo to obtain a Crown of righteouſneſs in the world to come. Matt. 7. 21.

Anſwerable is that place Epheſ. 2. 10. where the Apoſtle having told us, v. 8, 9. we are ſaved by grace, through faith, and not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt: he addes preſently, (leſt his meaning might be miſtaken, as it is of too many) That we are God's workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works, which God hath before ordained (προητοίμασεν) that we ſhould walk in them: as if he ſhould ſay, Thoſe works of obedience ordained by God aforetime in his Law for us to walk in, which we could not perform of our ſelves, now God hath as it were new moulded us in Jeſus Chriſt, that we might perform them in him; namely, by way of acceptation, though they come ſhort of that exactneſs the Law requireth. And thus to be ſaved is to be ſaved by Grace and Favour, and not by the Merit of works; becauſe the Foundation whereby our ſelves and our ſervices are approved in the eyes of God, and acquitted of guilt, (which the Scripture calleth to be juſtified,) is the mere Favour of God in Jeſus Chriſt, and not any thing in us. And this way of Salvation excludes all boaſting: for what have we to boaſt of, when all the righteouſneſs of our works is none of ours, but Chriſt's imputed to us; whereby onely, and not for any merit in themſelves, they become acceptable and have promiſe of Reward? But that men ſhould be ſaved by Chriſt, though they be idle and doe nothing, I know no ſuch Grace of God revealed in Scripture.

Now that in Chriſt we may perform works of righteouſneſs which God will accept and crown, is plain by the tenour of Scripture. S. Paul, Phil. 1. 11. deſires that the Philippians might be filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs, which are by Jeſus Chriſt unto the glory and praiſe of God. And the ſame Apoſtle tells the Romans, Rom. 6. 22. That being made free from ſin, and become ſervants to God, they have their fruit unto holineſs, and the end everlaſting life; that is, as the Syriack turns it, אית להון פארא קדישא, they have holy fruits, whoſe end is life eternal.

How the Doctrine of Faith in Chriſt includes the greateſt Enforcement and Engagement to Good works.

And if we would ſeriouſly conſider it, we ſhould finde, That the more we believe this righteouſneſs of Faith in Chriſt, the more reaſon we have to perform works of ſervice and obedience unto God, then if we believed it not. For if our works would not be acceptable with God unleſs they were compleat in every point as the Law required; if there were no reward to be looked for at the hands of God unleſs we could merit it by the worthineſs of our deeds; who that conſiders his own weakneſs and inſufficiency would not ſooner deſpair, then goe about to pleaſe God by works? He would think it better to doe nothing at all, then to endeavour what he could never hope to attain, and ſo loſe his labour. But we, who believe that thoſe who ſerve God in Chriſt have their failings and wants covered with his righteouſneſs, and ſo their works accepted as if they were in every point as they ſhould be; why ſhould not we of all men fall to work, being ſure by Chriſt's means and merit we ſhall not loſe our labour?

Matt. 7. 21.

A ſecond Motive why we ſhould doe good works is, Becauſe they are the Way and Means ordained by God to obtain the Reward of eternal life, without which we ſhall never attain it. Without holineſs no man ſhall ſee God, Heb. 12. 14. Look to your ſelves (ſaith S. John Ep. 2. ver. 8.) that ye loſe not thoſe things ye have wrought, but that ye may receive a full reward. The Angel's meſſage from heaven to devout Cornelius was, Thy prayers and thine alms are had in remembrance in the ſight of God: whereupon S. Peter inferred, That in every Nation, he that feareth God and worketh righteouſneſs is accepted with him, Acts 10. 4, 35.

Matt. 25. 34, &c.

Hence it is that we ſhall be judged and receive ſentence at the laſt day according to our works. Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For I was hungry, and ye gave me meat; I was thirſty, and ye gave me drink; I was a ſtranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was ſick, and ye viſited me; I was in priſon, and ye came unto me. For inaſmuch as ye have done it unto one of the leaſt of my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Lord, how do thoſe look to be ſaved at that day, who think good works not required to Salvation, and accordingly doe them not! Can our Saviour paſs this bleſſed Sentence on them? think they he can? If he ſhould, they might truly ſay indeed, Lord, we have done no ſuch matter, nor did we think our ſelves bound unto it; we relied wholly upon our Faith in thy merits, and thought we had been freed from ſuch ſervices. What? do they think Chriſt will change the form of his Sentence at that great day? No certainly: If the Sentence for Bliſs will not fit them, and be truly ſaid of them; the other will, and muſt, for there is no more; Depart from me, ye curſed, into everlaſting fire prepared for the Devil and his Angels: For when I was hungry, ye gave me no meat, &c. This muſt be their doom, unleſs they ſuppoſe the righteous Judge will lie for them.

Verſ. 41.

And it is here further to be obſerved, That the Works named in this ſentence of Judgement are works of the ſecond Table, and Works of Mercy and Charity; feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, viſiting the ſick; all Almſdeeds, which men are now-a-days ſo much afraid of, as if they looked toward Popery, and had a tang of meriting; for now-a-days theſe coſtly works of all others are moſt ſuſpicious: But will it be ſo at the day of Judgement? True it is, they merit not the reward which ſhall be given them: but what then? are we ſo proud we will doe no works unleſs we may merit? Is it not ſufficient that God will reward them for Chriſt's ſake, though they have no worth in themſelves? And thus much of the ſecond Motive why we ſhould doe good works, Becauſe howſoever they merit nothing, yet are they the means and way ordained by God to attain the Reward of eternal life.

3.

The third and laſt Motive to works of righteouſneſs is, Becauſe they are the only Sign and Note whereby we know our Faith is true and ſaving, and not counterfeit. For 1 John 1. 6. If we ſay we have fellowſhip with Chriſt, and walk in darkneſs, we lie, and doe not the truth. Chap. 2. ver. 3. Hereby we know that we know him (viz. to be our Advocate with his Father, and the Propitiation for our ſins,) if we keep his Commandments. And Chap. 3. 7. Little children, let no man deceive you: He that doeth righteouſneſs is righteous, even as Chriſt is righteous. The ſame almoſt you may find again, Chap. 2. 29. For if every one that believeth in Chriſt truly and ſavingly believes that ſalvation is to be attained by obedience to God in him, and not otherwiſe, and therefore embraceth and layeth hold upon him for that end; how can ſuch an ones Faith be fruitleſs? How can he be without works, who therefore lays hold on Chriſt that his works and obedience obedience may be accepted as righteous before God for his ſake, and ſo be rewardable? It is as poſſible for the Sun to be without his light or the Fire to want heat, as ſuch a Faith to be without works. Matt. 7. 21.

Our Saviour therefore himſelf makes this a moſt ſure and never-failing Note to build our aſſurance of Salvation upon, Luke 6. 46. where the mention of the words of my Text gives the occaſion, Why call ye me Lord, Lord, (ſaith he) and doe not the things which I ſay? 47. Whoſoever cometh to me, and heareth my ſayings, and doeth them; I will ſhew you to whom he is like. 48. He is like a man which built an houſe, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: And when the floud aroſe, the ſtream beat vehemently upon that houſe, and could not ſhake it; for it was founded upon a rock. 49. But he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that without a foundation built an houſe upon the earth; againſt which the ſtream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell, and the ruine of that houſe was great. Whom theſe three Motives or Reaſons will not perſwade to good works, let not my Soul, O Lord, be joyned with theirs, nor my doom be as theirs muſt be.

A SECOND Obſervation out of theſe words, and near a-kin to the former, is, That it is not enough for a Chriſtian to live harmleſly and abſtain from ill, but he muſt doe that which is good. For our Saviour excludes not here thoſe onely who doe againſt the will of his Father, but thoſe who doe not his Father's will. It is doing good which he requireth, and not the not doing evil only. This is an error which taketh hold of a great part of men, even of thoſe who would ſeem to be religious. He is a reformed man and acquits himſelf well who abſtains from fornication, adultery, who is no thief, no couzener or defrauder of other men, who will not lie, or ſwear, or ſuch like: But as for doing any works of Piety or Charity, they think they are not required of them. Obſerv. 2.

But they are much deceived: For God requires ſome duties at our hands, which he may reward not out of any merit, but out of his merciful promiſe in Chriſt. But not doing ill is no ſervice rewardable. A ſervant who expects wages muſt not onely doe his Maſter no harm, but ſome work that is good and profitable: otherwiſe the beſt Chriſtian would be he that ſhould live altogether idlely; for none doth leſs harm then he that doth nothing at all. But Matth. 25. 30. He that encreaſed not his Maſter's Talent, though he had not miſ-ſpent it, is adjudged an unprofitable ſervant, and caſt into outer darkneſs, where is weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. So alſo Matt. 3. 10. The tree that beareth no good fruit is hewn down, though it bore none that was evil: The axe is laid to the root of the tree; Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and caſt into the fire. Matt. 21. 19. The fig-tree was curſed for having no fruit, not for having evil fruit. And the Sentence of condemnation, as you heard before, is to paſs at that great day for not having done good works, not for doing ill ones: Goe ye curſed, for when I was hungry, ye fed me not, &c. Matt. 25. 41, &c.

THUS having let you ſee how neceſſary it is for a Chriſtian to joyn good works with his Faith in Chriſt; I will now come to ſhew you How you muſt doe them, hoping I have already perſwaded you that they muſt needs be done.

Firſt therefore, We muſt doe them out of Faith in Chriſt, that is, relying upon him onely for the acceptance and rewarding of them: for in him alone God is well pleaſed with us and with what we doe, and therefore without faith and reliance upon him it is impoſſible to pleaſe God. We muſt not think there is any worth in our works, for which any ſuch reward as God hath promiſed is due: for, alas! our beſt works are full of imperfections, 1. Heb. 11. 6.

Matt. 7. 21. Eph. 2. 8, 9. and far ſhort of what the Law requires. Our reward therefore is not of merit, but out of the merciful promiſe of God in Chriſt: which the Apoſtle means, when he ſays, We are ſaved by grace, and not by works; that is, It is the grace and favour of God in Chriſt which makes our ſelves acceptable and our works rewardable, and not any deſert in them or us.

2. Having laid this foundation; The next thing required is ſincerity of heart in doing them: We muſt doe them out of the fear of God, and conſcience of his Commandments, not out of reſpect of profit, or fear, or praiſe of men; for ſuch as doe ſo are Hypocrites. Not every one, ſaith our Saviour, that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord; but he that doeth the will of my Father: Now it is the will of our heavenly Father that we ſerve him in truth and uprightneſs of heart: I know (ſaith David, 1 Chr. 29. 17.) that thou my God trieſt the heart, and haſt pleaſure in uprightneſs. And ſo he ſaid to Abraham, Gen. 17. 1. I am the Almighty God, walk before me, and be thou * upright, or, be thou ſincere*. This manner of ſerving God Joſhua commended to the Iſraelites, Joſh. 24. 14. Fear the Lord, (ſaith he) and ſerve him in ſincerity and truth: and the Prophet Samuel, 1 Sam. 12. 24. Onely fear the Lord, and ſerve him in truth with all your heart. This ſincerity, uprightneſs and truth in God's ſervice is, when we doe religious and pious duties, and abſtain from the contrary, out of conſcience to Godward, out of an heart poſſeſſed with the love and fear of God. It is otherwiſe called in Scripture perfectneſs, or perfectneſs of heart: For it is a lame and unperfect ſervice where the better half is wanting, as the Heart is, in every work of duty both to God and men. And therefore it is called perfectneſs, when both go together, when conſcience as the ſoul enlivens the outward work as a body. And indeed this is all the perfection we can attain unto in this life, To ſerve God in truth of heart, though otherwiſe we come ſhort of what we ſhould: and therefore God eſteems our actions and works, not according to the greatneſs or exactneſs of the performance, but according to the ſincerity and truth of our hearts in doing them: as appears by the places I have already quoted, and by that 1 King. 15. 14. where it is ſaid, that though Aſa failed in his reformation, and the high places were not taken down; nevertheleſs his heart was perfect with the Lord his God all his days.

Matt. 7. 21. תמים

How to know Sincerity. A note to know ſuch a ſincerity and truth of heart by is, If in our privacy, when there is no witneſs but God and our ſelves, we are careful then to abſtain from ſin, as well as in the ſight of men: If when no body but God ſhall ſee and know it, we are willing to doe a good work, as well as if all the world ſhould know it. He that findeth himſelf thus affected, his heart is true, at leaſt in ſome meaſure; but ſo much the leſs by how much he findeth himſelf the leſs affected in this manner. When we are in the preſence and view of men, we may ſoon be deceived in our ſelves, and think we doe that out of conſcience and fear of God, which indeed is but for the fear or praiſe of men, either leſt we ſhould be damnified, or impair our credit, or the like: But when there is none but God and us, then to be afraid of ſin and carefull of good duties, is a ſign we fear God in truth and ſincerity, and not in hypocriſy.

How to attain Sincerity. The ſpecial and principal means to attain this ſincerity and truth of heart is, To poſſeſs our ſelves always with the apprehenſion of God's preſence, and to walk before him as in his eye. Whereſoever thou art, there is an Eye that ſees thee, an Eare that hears thee, and a Hand that regiſtreth thy moſt ſecret thoughts: For the waies of man (ſaith Solomon Prov. 5. 21.) are before the eyes of the Lord, and he pondereth all his goings. How much aſhamed would we be, that men ſhould know how much our hearts and our words and actions diſagreed? How would we bluſh that men ſhould ſee us commit this or that sin, or neglect this or that duty? What horrible Atheism then doth this argue, that the presence of man, yea sometimes of a little child, should hinder us from that wickedness which God's presence cannot? This having of God before our eyes, and the continual meditation of his All-seeing presence, would, together with devout Prayer for the assistance of God's grace, be in time the bane of hypocrisie and falshood of heart, and beget in stead thereof that truth and sincerity which God loveth. Matt. 7. 21.

Another property of such obedience as God requires is Universality: we must not serve God by halfs, by doing some duties and omitting others, but we must, with David, Psal. 119. 6, 20. have respect to all God's Commandments; to those of the second Table as well as to those of the first, and to those of the first as well as those of the second. The want of which Universality of obedience to both Tables is so frequent, as the greatest part of Christians are plunged therein, to the undoubted ruine of their souls and shipwreck of everlasting life, if they so continue. 3.

For there are two sorts of men which think themselves in a good estate, and are not. The one are those who make conscience of the duties of the first Table, but have little or no care of the duties of the second. And this is a most dangerous evil, by reason it is more hard to be discovered; those which are guilty thereof being such as seem religious, but their Religion is in vain. Such were those in the Church of Israel against whom the Prophet Esay declaimeth Chap. 1. from the 10. verse to the 17. To what purpose are your sacrifices and burnt-offerings? saith the Lord: your oblations and incense are an abomination. Your New Moons, Sabbaths, calling of Assemblies, even the solemn meeting, I cannot away with; it is iniquity. Would you know what was the matter? see the words following, Learn to doe well, seek judgement, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow. Lo here a want of the duties of the second Table. Such is that also of Hosea 6. 6. I desired mercy, and not sacrifice; which is twice alledged by our Saviour in the Gospel against the Pharisees hypocritical scrupulosity in the same duties of the first Table, with a neglect of the second. But here perhaps some may finde a scruple, because that if Sacrifice in this or the like places be opposed to the duties of obedience required in the second Table, it should hereby seem that the duties of the second Table which concern our neighbour should be preferred before the duties of the first which concern the Lord himself; forasmuch as it is said, I desire mercy, and not sacrifice, that is, rather Mercy, which is a duty of the second Table, then Sacrifice, which is of the first. I answer, The holy Ghost's meaning is not to preferre the second Table before the first, taking them singly, but to preferre the duties of both together before the service of the first alone: Be more ready to joyn mercy or works of mercy with your sacrificing, then to offer sacrifice alone. Matt. 9. 13. & 12. 7.

To goe on. The duties of the first Table are by a special name called duties of Religion; those of the second Table come under the name of Honesty and Probity. Now as a man can never be truly Honest unless he be Religious; so cannot that man (what shew soever he makes) be truly religious in God's esteem who is not honest in his conversation toward his neighbour: Religion and Honesty must be married together, or else neither of them will be in truth what it seems to be. We know that all our duty both to God and our neighbour is comprehended under the name of Love, as in that Summe of the Law, Love God above all things, and thy neighbour as thy self. This is the Summe of the whole Law contained in both Tables. But S. John tells us 1 Ep. 4. 20. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; which is as much as if he should say, He that seems Matt. 22. 37, 39.

religious towards God, and is without honesty towards his neighbour, he is a liar, there is no true religion in him.

Matt. 7. 21.

If you would then know whether a man professing Religion, by diligent frequenting God's service and exercises of devotion, keeping sacred times and hearing Sermons, be a sound Christian or not, or a seeming one onely; this is a sure and infallible note to discover him, and for him to discover himself by: For, if notwithstanding his care of the duties of the first Table, he makes no conscience to walk honestly towards his neighbour; if he be disobedient to Parents and lawful Authority; if he be cruel and uncharitable; if he be unjust in his dealings, fraudulent, an oppressor, a falsifier of Covenants and Promises, a backbiter, a slanderer, or the like; his Religion is no better then an Hypocrite's: For such was the Religion of many of the Pharisees, whom therefore our Saviour termeth Hypocrites, Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites. They were scrupulous in the duties of the first Table, they paid tithe even of mint and anise, they fasted twice a week, they were exact observers of the Sabbath, and other ceremonies of Religion; but judgement, mercy, and faith in their conversation towards men, our Saviour tells them, they regarded not.

Matt. 23. 13, &c. Vers. 23.

Besides our Saviour's woe denounced against such, there are Two dangerous Effects which accompany this evil disease, which should make us beware thereof. 1. Those who are addicted to Religion without any conscience of Honesty, are easily drawn by the Devil to many intolerable acts under colour and in behalf thereof, as they imagine. We see it in the Papists and Jesuits, whose preposterous zeal to their Religion makes them think Treasons, Murthers, Rebellions, or any other such wicked acts, are lawful and excusable, so they be done for the good of the Catholick cause, as they call it. And if we search narrowly amongst our selves, we shall light upon some examples of indirect and unlawful courses undertaken otherwhile on the behalf of Religion; and all through want of this conscionable care of maintaining Honesty towards our neighbour, together with our zeal for Religion towards God. Even as we see an Horse in some narrow and dangerous passage, whilest he is wholly taken up with some bugbear on the one side of the way, which he would eschew, and in the mean time mindeth not the other side, where there is the like danger, he suddenly slips into a pit or ditch, with no small danger to himself and rider: So is it here with such as look onely to the first Table, and mind not the second; whilest they go about, as they think, to advance the duties of the one, they fall most foully in the other.

2. The second evil is a most dangerous Scandal which follows profession of Religion without honest conversation towards men: It is a grievous stumbling-block and stone of offence, making men out of love with Religion, when they see such evil Effects from it and those who seem to profess it. Those who are not yet come on, are scared from coming, resolving they will never be of their Religion, which they see no better fruits of: Those who are entred are ashamed and discouraged, forsaking the duties of Religion, that they might shun the suspicion of hypocrisie and dishonesty. But woe be unto them by whom scandal cometh. Let us all therefore take heed to adorn and approve our profession by bringing forth fruits, not onely of Piety and Devotion towards God, but of works of Righteousness and Charity to our neighbour.

DISCOURSE XLI.

Joel 2. 17.

Let the Prieſts, the Miniſters of the Lord, weep between the Porch and the Altar, and ſay, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach.

THESE words are part of a Deſcription of a Faſt, as the Context before and after will tell you; and they contain a Rite or Cuſtome wont to be uſed in ſuch ſolemn Deprecations: namely, for the Prieſts of the Lord (who are to be the Interceſſors and Mouth of the Congregation) not then, but at other times, to enter into the Temple, to offer and ſanctify with incenſe the Prayers of the people at the golden Altar before the veil; but to proſtrate themſelves without the door, between the Porch and the Altar of Burnt-offering, as unworthy to approach the Throne of the Divine Majeſty, or come over his Threſhold, and therefore keeping a diſtance; as it is ſaid alſo of the Publican in the Goſpel, that when he came into the Temple or Courts thereof to pray, he ſtood μακρόθεν afarr off—ſaying, God be merciful to me a ſinner. For ye are to know, that the great or brazen Altar, called the Altar of Burnt-offering, whereon the Sacrifices were offered, ſtood not within or under the roof of the Temple, but ſub dio in the open air, over againſt the door or Porch thereof in the middle of the Prieſt's Court. For at the entrance into the Temple or Houſe of God Solomon built a large Veſtibulum or Porch, on each ſide whereof ſtood thoſe two famous Pillars of braſs, the one called Jachin, and the other Boaz. Between this Porch and the great brazen Altar (which ſtood without it) the Prieſts, the Miniſters of the Lord, are here commanded to weep, and ſay, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach.

Luke 18. 13.

2 Chr. 15. 8. Ezek. 8. 16.

1 King. 7. 21.

This Rite of Humiliation we finde mentioned in two other places of the Book of Scripture. As firſt, in that Humiliation of Ezra for the people's marrying of ſtrange wives, Ezra 9. 5, 6. and Chap. 10. 1. where having rent his garment and mantle, he caſt himſelf down (ſaith the Text) before the Houſe of the Lord, (viz. before the door or Porch thereof) weeping, and confeſſing, and ſaid, O my God, I am aſhamed to lift up my face to thee, my God; for our iniquities are encreaſed over our head, and our treſpaſs is grown up unto the heavens. Another mention we have thereof in 1 Mac. 7. 36. when Nicanor proudly threatned, that unleſs Judas Maccabæus and his hoſt were delivered into his hand, (v. 35.) if ever he returned in ſafety, he would burn up the Houſe of God: Then the Prieſts, ſaith the Text, entred in (namely, into the Courts of God's Houſe) and ſtood between the Altar and the Temple, weeping and praying. Which paſſage the Greek Interpreter of that Book did not well underſtand, when he rendred it, πρὸ προσώπου τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου καὶ τοῦ ναοῦ, before the Altar and the Temple. For * Joſeph Ben Gorion hath expreſly in the Hebrew, בין האולם ולמזבח, the very words of Joel in my Text, between the Porch and the Altar.

* l. b. 3. cap. 21.

A like cuſtome whereunto, and, as is probable, taken up in imitation hereof,

Joel 2. 17. thereof, is that of ours, To reade the Litany (or our Parce, Domine, parce populo tuo, Spare, Lord, spare thy people,) kneeling at a low desk in the body of the Church before the Chancell door, (as was ordered by the first Injunctions of our Reformation when Procession was taken away;) or at the bottome of the steps or ascent unto the Altar, as is used in the Cathedral and Collegiate Churches.

AND this may suffice for explication of the Rite which the Prophet here describeth. Now the Lesson we are to learn from hence is, That the nature of a right and religious Fast consists in an humble demission and abjection of our selves before Almighty God, out of the apprehension of the greatness of his Majesty, and our unworthiness to finde any favour at his hands, whom we have so much provoked by our sins. For this to have been the meaning of that Ceremony, besides the natural signification of the deportment it self, appeareth by the Exordium I but now quoted of Ezra's confession, when he thus cast himself down before the Porch of the House of the Lord, weeping; O my God, I am ashamed (saith he) and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespass is grown up to the heavens. Besides, thus to humble and bring us down, is the end why God sendeth his Judgements of Plague, Famine, or the like; for the aversion whereof these solemn supplications and assemblies are ordained. Are they not some of the first words we uttered this day? O come let us humble our selves, and fall down before the Lord with reverence and fear. Hence Fasting and Humbling a man's self go in Scripture for equipollent terms. My cloathing was sackcloth, (saith David, Psal. 35. 13.) I humbled my self with fasting. So Ahab humbled himself, and thereby deferred his judgement, 1 King. 21. 29. Hezekiah humbled himself both he and the Inhabitants of Jerusalem, 2 Chron. 32. 26. Manasseh is said likewise to have besought the Lord and humbled himself greatly before the God of his Fathers, 2 Chr. 33. 12.

No disposition so fit and apt for devotion as Humility; no more powerfull means to prevail with God and appease his wrath then this abjection of our selves; Satis est prostrasse Leoni: Let me with reverence apply it unto the Majesty of God.

For all Eminency is worshipped with Humility, Reverence and Submission, that is, as we are wont and rightly to speak, By keeping a distance. Therefore the Soveraign or Supreme Excellency of God must be adored with the lowest demission and greatest stoop the Soul can make. We finde by experience that that disposition of the eye which fits us to behold the visible Sun, makes a man blinde when he looketh down upon himself: So here, the apprehension of the transcendent excellency of God, ten thousand times brighter then the Sun, if truly admitted into our hearts, will darken all overweening conceit of any worthiness in our selves. The greater we would apprehend his Power, the more sensible must we be of our own weakness: The greater we acknowledge his Goodness, the less goodness must we see in our selves: The more we would apprehend his Wisdom, the less we are to be puffed up with our own knowledge. As in a pair of skales, the higher we would raise one skale, the lower we pull down the other; so the higher we raise God in our hearts, the lower we must depress our selves.

Hence we finde the humblest natures and the most humbled condition to be the fittest for devotion; I say, the humblest natures are the most pliable and aptest to Religion: whereas those which the world is wont to commend for brave spirits, of all others buckle the worst thereto. But let the world fancy what it will, * God seeth not as man seeth: It is not the tallest Eliab,

* 1 Sam. 16. 7.

but the humblest David, who is the man after God's own heart. He that humbleth himself as a little childe, the same is the tallest and goodliest Soul for the Kingdome of God. The Stars in the Firmament, howsoever they here seem small to us, yet are bigger then the Earth: So he that is despicable and small here in the eyes of men, is there a great one in the eyes of God. Let those therefore that think all worth resides in a lofty and brave spirit, remember that the Devil was a braver fellow then any of them all, and that his high and lofty spirit was the cause of his downfall and Apostasie from his Creator, and so of that damnation to everlasting fire prepared for him and his Angels. Joel 2. 17.

And as the humblest nature, so the humblest or most humbled state and condition, is the fittest also for the exercise of devotion, as the poor and mean rather then the rich and full. Wherefore Agur desired of God, not to give him more then food convenient for him, lest being full he should deny him, and say, Who is the Lord? Such likewise is the state of adversity and affliction: whence it is that God useth this discipline of his corrections and judgements, to make us crouch and bow down unto him, when he seeth us ready to forget him. Whence David, Psal. 94. 12. pronounceth the man blessed whom the Lord chastiseth; and Psal. 119. ver. 67, 71. Before I was afflicted, saith he, I went astray; but now I have kept thy word. It is good for me that I have been afflicted. For Diseases, say the Physicians, must be cured by contraries. It was Pride that caused the disloyalty and rebellion both of men and Angels against their God and Maker: Whence is that of Syracides Ecclus. 10. 12. The beginning of Pride is, when one departeth from God, and his heart is turned away from his Maker. 13. For Pride is the beginning of sin; and he that hath it shall pour out abomination. If pride be the beginning of our rebellion against God, then must Lowlinesse be the proper disposition of those who fear and worship him: and so Tanto quisque est vilior Deo, quanto est pretiosior sibi; The higher any one is in his own esteem, the lower is he in God's. Prov. 30. 8, 9.

NOW then to return to our Argument of Fasting; we may observe, beside the Ceremony specified in my Text, that all other Rites or Ceremonies used by the Ancients in this solemn devotion, or yet continued by us, imply nothing else but Lowlinesse and Humility, partly to work and beget it, partly to express and signifie it. They are reducible to three heads: 1. of Habit, 2. of Gesture, 3. of Diet. For Habit, it was anciently sackcloth and ashes: by the coursenesse of the sackcloth they ranked themselves, as it were, amongst the meanest and lowest condition of men; by ashes, and sometimes earth, upon their heads, they made themselves lower then the lowest of the creatures of God; for the lowest of the Elements is the Earth, then which we use to say a man cannot fall lower,

Qui jacet in terra, non habet unde cadat.

For Gesture, they sate or lay upon the ground, which in the Primitive Church was called χαμευνία, humicubatio; a natural ceremony both to express and ingenerate or encrease this disposition of Lowlinesse and abjection of our selves; and as frequently practised by our devout Fore-fathers as it is seldome or never used amongst us. It were a thing most comely, and undoubtedly most profitable, if either these Ceremonies, or some other answerable to them, were revived amongst us at such times as these. If we were all of us this day attired, if not in sackcloth, (which perhaps sutes not so well with the custome of our Nation, yet) in the dolefullest habit of mourners, if we lay all groveling upon the ground; would not such a rusull spectacle, would not the very sight of so uncouth an assembly much affect and move us? The mournfull hue of Funeral solemnities, nities, we know by experience, will often make them to weep who otherwiſe have no particular cauſe of ſorrow; how much more when they have?

Joel 2. 17.

But the principal Ceremony, and which we ſtill retain, is Abſtinence from meat and drink; whence this kinde of Supplication hath the name of Faſting: the end thereof being as to bring down our Bodies, thereby the better to humble our Souls, ſo to expreſs and teſtifie the ſame. Mores animi ſequuntur temperamentum corporis: If the Body be full and luſty, the Minde will be lofty and refractary, and moſt unfit and uncompoſed to approch the Divine Majeſty with reverence and fear. How uncompoſed is that heart to ſue to God for mercy and averſion of his judgements, which is fraught with rebellious, unclean and luſtfull thoughts, like ſo many dogs barking within it? But theſe are all ingendred and cheriſhed by full feeding, and cannot be eaſily quelled unleſs they be ſtarved. When I fed Iſrael to the full, (ſaith the Lord, Jer. 5. 7, 8.) then they committed adultery, and aſſembled by troups in harlots houſes, &c. Jeſhurun (ſaith Moſes in his Prophetical ſong, Deut. 32. 15.) waxed fat and kicked, and forſook the Lord that made him, and lightly eſteemed of the Rock of his ſalvation.

Wherefore S. Paul was fain to pinch his body, and bring it down with Faſting: I keep under my body (ſaith he 1 Cor. 9. 27.) and bring it into ſubjection; leſt that by any means when I have preached unto others, I my ſelf ſhould be a caſt-away. Hilarion, a religious young man, when after much abſtinence and courſe diet he felt his fleſh ſtill unruly and rebellious, Ego, inquit, Aſelle, faciam ut non calcitres; nec te hordeo alam, ſed paleis, fame & ſiti te conficiam: thus threatning his Beaſt, (that is, his Body) that he would take an order with it, that it ſhould not kick; and that he would no longer feed his Aſſe with corn, but give it a little chaffe or ſtraw, nay puniſh it with hunger and thirſt. Such is the danger of a pampered body, and ſuch the neceſſity of keeping it under.

But as Faſting is a Phyſicall means (if it be uſed to purpoſe) to take down the loftineſs of our minds and affections, by ſubtracting the fuell and foment of our luſts, which is full feeding; ſo is it a Ceremony choſen for that natural effect it hath to ſignifie and teſtifie, that by reflection upon our vileneſs and unworthineſs we ſtrike the ſail of our high-flying affections, and humble our ſelves before the Majeſty of Almighty God upon ſuch occaſions as theſe. For as we uſe Feaſting not only to beget, but alſo to expreſs and teſtifie our erection and chearfulneſs of heart in times of joyfulneſs, (whence in the Old Teſtament, to rejoyce before the Lord is put for to feaſt before him:) So is Faſting, when we would intend our devotions, uſed not only as a means to further, but alſo as a ceremony whereby we teſtifie our ſorrowfull dejection and humiliation of minde before God.

Well then, you ſee what is the chief end we are to aim at in this our ſolemn Abſtinence, namely, to take down our proud hearts, and bring them to a ſtate of Lowlineſs and Humility, a diſpoſition ſo acceptable and prevailing with God; to check our high-mounting paſſions, and allay the ſmoaking flames of our unruly luſts: Which as it is at all times requiſite in ſome meaſure, whenſoever we approch the Majeſty of God to ſue for mercy and forgiveneſs; ſo then eſpecially, and in a more then uſual manner, when God ſhakes the rod of his judgements over our heads, and bids us down and proſtrate both ſoul and body before him, leſt his wrath break us in pieces if we will not bow.

He that attaineth this, hath faſted well; he that hath not, may hereby know he hath not done enough, or not as he ſhould doe. If the boiling of our luſts be cooled and calmed; if the ſwelling conceits of worth in our ſelves selves be taken down with a true and feeling apprehension of our vileness and wretchedness through sin, which makes us the most unworthy creatures in the world; if those ramping weeds of contempt and despising of others be cropped and withered (and these, I can tell you, will quite spoil a garden where many good flowers grow;) if after this manner we be affected, then are we humbled: if not, we are not yet sufficiently taken down. All our service is Hypocrisy, nor will our Devotions be accepted of that All-seeing Majesty who resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble. Joel 2. 17.

DISCOURSE XLII.

2 Peter 2. 1.

But there were false Prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false Teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable Heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction.

MANY are the Prophesies in Scripture wherein the Holy Ghost forewarns us of a great and solemn Defection and Corruption of Faith, which should one day overspread the visible Face of the Catholick Church of Christ, and eclipse the light of Christian Verity and Belief. S. Paul, 2 Thes. 2. 3. foretells us, that there should be an Apostasie or Falling away of Christians, and the Man of sin be revealed, before the coming of the day of the Lord. The same Apostle, 1 Tim. 4. 1. tells us, that though the great Mystery of Godliness (spoken of chap 3. 16.) were then preached among the Gentiles, and believed in the world; yet the Spirit spake expresly, that in the latter times some should depart from the Faith, giving heed to seducing Spirits and doctrines of Devils (or Damons.) S. John tells us, Rev. 17. 5. that the Christian Rome, of the Spouse of Christ should become a Babylonish strumpet, and the Mother of the fornications and abominations of the Earth. At the same mark aimeth this Prophecy of my Text, though perhaps less taken notice of then the rest: The evidence whereof I hope you will confess with me, when I have unfolded the same.

Understand therefore that the Words I have read are A prediction of a Corruption of Faith which should one day surprise and overcloud the visible Church, or that company of men upon whom the name of Christ was called, and who outwardly professed him to be their Lord and Redeemer. This Corruption is here set, First, generally, both for the matter and the manner: For the matter, There shall be false Teachers among you, who shall bring in damnable Heresies; For the manner, it should be done privily, Who privily shall bring in damnable Heresies. Secondly, The Apostle also specially informs us of what kind and sort these damnable Heresies should be, that so we might not only know that Heresies should be, but be forewarned also what

2 Pet. 2. 1. they should be; and that by a double mark and description. For first, They should be like unto those which we reade have befallen the people and Church of Israel: There were false Prophets also among the people, (i. e. the Jews,) even as there shall be false Teachers among you. The second mark is, That these Heresies should be of such a kind, as men who openly professed themselves Christians and servants of Christ should yet deny Christ to be their Lord and Master: for, saith our Apostle, They shall deny the Lord that bought them; that is, professing themselves to be of that number of men whom Christ had purchased with his bloud, or the bought servants of Christ, they should nevertheless deny their Lord who bought them. The last thing he tells us is, the Doom which should befall such as had interest in these Heresies; They should bring upon themselves swift destruction.

To begin with the general description of the matter, There shall be false Teachers among you, which shall bring in damnable Heresies. The time should be when the Doctors of the Church should teach falsly, and the people with them believe damnably. For we must understand that these false Teachers should not be a few, only here and there one, nor these Heresies scattered only in some few places; but that this Corruption was to be such a one as should cover and overwhelm the face of the visible Church. For the Great Defection was to be a general and solemn one, such a one as should stain the whole body with the foul name of Whore of Babylon, Rev. 17. 5. Such a one as whereby the Court of the Temple of God should not only be prophaned, but even troden down by Gentilisme, Rev. 11. 2. Such a one as the World is said to wonder after the Beast, and worship him, Rev. 13. 3, 4. Such a one as should not only make Warre with the true Saints, but overcome them, Rev. 13. 7. Otherwise if S. John and S. Paul should mean no more but the errours of particular men, and their trouble from the Church; they should make no Prophecy at all, or a needless one. For who knows not that in S. Paul's, S. John's and the Apostles own times were divers Heresies and Hereticks, here and there dispersed and grown up as Weeds in the wheat-field of Christ? but the wheat yet overtopped them, and the known body of the visible Church disclaimed them. Of such as these therefore they could not mean, when they foretell of a corruption to come in after-times, or, as S. Paul speaks, 1 Tim. 4. 1. in the latter times; for no man uses to foretell of things which are already, as if they were to come. Nor would the Apostles foretell of Heresies as it were special to the after and latter times, if they were but such and in such manner as was but usuall, and no novelty in their own time. The corruption and defection therefore so much prophesied of was another manner of one, such a kind of one as before neither had been in the Church nor was to be; namely, such a one as should not be disclaimed by the body of the Church, but should surprise, eclipse and overwhelm, and as it were overcloud the visible Church it self; which should be as when the Heavens are overcast, so as the bright Firmament with the starres and lights therein can no more be seen.

If this be so; then may we hence observe how vain and idle that challenge of our Adversaries is, when they bid us shew our Church to have been alwaies visible, and to give them the names of those who have been of our Belief in all Ages since Christ and his Apostles times. What? may they not have been, although we cannot name them? This is as unreasonable a demand, as to require a man to shew him and point him where the Sun is, when the whole face of Heaven is overcast with Clouds: would you not believe the Sun were in the Firmament and risen in a cloudy day, though no man could point and shew you with his finger where she is? yes,

I am

I am sure you would, and say too, that there may be other signs thereof, though a man cannot see her; as namely Day-light, which never is without the Sun; yea and now and then we may have a glimpse of her through a thinner cloud, which assures us thereof. Even so when the great Defection as a Cloud overspred the face of the Christian Firmament, the visible Church of Christ, for divers Ages together, though the Cloud be for a great part so thick as it will not suffer us to discern the company of those who still kept intire the true and unstained Faith of the Gospel, yet we rest assured that it was under the Cloud, because some Day-light of Christianity still appeared; which argued the Sun was in the Firmament, though the great Cloud overshadowed her; yea and now and then we can shew and spy some glimpse of her, as often as any breach happened in the Cloud which overcast her. 2 Pet. 2. 1.

I might also make use of that Parable of our Saviour, where the Church or Kingdome of God (for both is one) is compared to a Field, where the Master sowed good seed, but while men slept, the Enemy, that wicked one, came and sowed tares among the Wheat. If the tares once grow so many and so high that they quite overshadow the wheat, whereof there is but little left, can a man who stands a good way off shew the wheat from the tares with his finger? I think not; though, if the wheat overmasters the tares, he easily might. This is the very case of the true Church so long as the Apostasie prevailed: And we who live now are something farre off; if we had been nearer, as those were who lived then, we might have discerned the wheat a great deal better. Matt 13. 24, 25.

But if you would yet be more fully informed how the true company of Believers could live under this wofull state of the visible body, and not be extinguished, and by what Signs and Arguments we may fully conclude it was there all that time; though I have given some tast of this last already, yet you shall hear more of them both anon, as my Text will give me occasion.

In the mean time I must tell you, That there needed not all this stir about Visibility, if our Adversaries were ingenuous: For the difference between them and us is not so much about the point of Visibility, as about the point of Time. They hold the glorious Visibility of the true Church to have continued from the beginning untill this present; and the over-shadowing of the light, and eclipsing of the glory thereof under Antichrist, to be a thing yet to come; and when it comes, they and the Fathers too say as much of the eclipsing of the Church as we do for our hearts. For then they say the use of the Sacraments should cease, no Eucharist, no Mass, no publick Assemblies, yea all Ecclesiasticall jurisdiction should be extinguished. Is not here enough? Now on the contrary, we hold the Clouding of the Churche's Visibility to have been already, and a great part of the Glory thereof to be yet to come. Both agreeing in this, that in that fatal Apostasie the Churche's Visibility and Glory should cease: But we say, that time hath been already; they say, it is yet to come: we say, that that time was to last many Ages; they say, when it comes, it shall be but three single years and a half.

Why then are they not ashamed to offer to choak us with this Argument of Visibility and Glory, when themselves confess there is a time to come when the same Argument would be as well used against their supposed Catholick Church as it is now alledged against ours? This is too great partiality. Seeing therefore the whole Controversie lies in this, Whether the Churche's fatal Apostasie be already past or yet to come, it is a great deal the quicker course for them and us not to wrangle about Visibility, but to examine the condition and quality of both Religions by the Scripture; where we have 2 Pet. 2. 1. (as S. Peter ſpeaks in the foregoing Chapter) a moſt ſure word of prophecy,

1 Pet. 1. 19. whereunto we ſhall doe well if we take heed, as to a light ſhining in a dark place. And this ſhall ſuffice to have obſerved concerning the matter in general, A General Defection or Corruption of the Church by falſe Teachers and damnable Hereſies.

NOW I come to the Circumſtance of this general deſcription of the Churche's Apoſtaſie, namely, The manner how theſe falſe Doctors ſhould bring in theſe damnable Hereſies; which is not Openly, but Privily. For ſo
* παρεισάξουσιν the * word here uſed for bringing in ſignifies, who privily ſhall bring in damnable Hereſies: Not ſo that it ſhould be obſerved and eſpied at the firſt; but ſo by degrees, and with ſuch a mask of plauſible pretences and good meaning, that the Church was overwhelmed before it knew what it ailed: Even as ſome diſeaſes ſteal ſo upon a man, that he never knew he was ſick untill he ſee himſelf paſt recovery; and then perhaps he will begin to call to mind, though too late, at what time and by what means this ſickneſs grew upon him.

This Obſervation therefore will furniſh us with an Anſwer to another Objection of our Adverſaries. For if (ſay they) the Catholick viſible Church altered ſo much from the Primitive ſincerity of Faith and Chriſtian worſhip as we ſay it did; how comes it then to paſs that it was no more obſerved and oppoſed by thoſe who then lived? For it is ſtrange ſo great an alteration ſhould find admittance with the general conſent of all. I anſwer out of my Text, That it came in privily, and ſo was not obſerved nor oppoſed till it was too late, and that the Apoſtate Faction was grown too ſtrong for the ſound. A fire, we know, if it be eſpied at the firſt, may be eaſily ſmothered and quenched; but if the cry riſe not till all be on a flame, no man then dare come near to help it: So was the caſe here.

And yet in ſome Corruptions ſomewhat ſooner eſpied then the reſt; as Worſhipping of Images, Tranſubſtantiation, the Pope's Godlike Supremacy, the eſtabliſhing of theſe was not without great oppoſition, even to the changing of States and Kingdomes. But here alſo the oppoſers came too late; for theſe Hereſies alſo were at the firſt brought in ſo privily, that the Faction was not eſpied till it was grown too ſtrong to be over-maſtered by oppoſition.

THUS having ſeen the General part of this deſcription, both for the matter, falſe Teachers and damnable Hereſies, and alſo for the manner, they ſhould be privily brought into the viſible Church; I come now to the Special part of the Prophecy, which tells us in particular What kind of Hereſies theſe ſhould be, of what ſort, which ſhould ſo generally over-cloud the Church of Chriſt. And this our Apoſtle here ſets forth by a twofold mark. Firſt, They ſhould be ſuch as we reade to have been amongſt the Jewiſh people under the Old Teſtament: There were (ſaith he) falſe Prophets among the people, even as there ſhall be falſe Teachers among you. This is a good ear-mark, having ſo infallible hiſtory as is the ſtory of the Bible to know it by: For if this of Chriſtendome were of the ſame ſtamp with that of Iſrael, it cannot lie long hid from us; which that it may not, let us confine our diſcovery to theſe two heads. Firſt, Let us learn what Hereſies were thoſe which the falſe Prophets of Iſrael brought in amongſt them, as we find it recorded in the Scripture, for thither our Apoſtle ſends
* Ἐγένοντο δὲ, &c. us*. In the ſecond place, We will examine whether the Hereſies of Chriſtendome, brought in by the falſe Doctors of Babylon, be not exactly like them.

To begin with the firſt, I cannot find in the Old Teſtament any other other Hereſies there recorded as brought in by falſe Prophets, but only Idolatry and the worſhipping of other Gods beſides the true and living God: I doubt not but the Jews had other Errours, but this is that which ſo great a part of the Bible is taken up in forewarning of, in relating of, and in declaiming againſt it. This is that we are ſure the falſe Prophets had a hand in; of the reſt nothing that way is recorded. This is that Moſes forewarned the people of Iſrael of, Deut. 13. 1. If there ariſe among you a Prophet or a dreamer of dreams, and give thee a ſigne or a wonder, 2. And the ſigne or the wonder come to paſs, whereof he ſpake unto thee, ſaying, Let us go after other gods, (which thou haſt not known) and let us ſerve them; 3. Thou ſhalt not hearken to the words of that Prophet, &c. Here you hear of the falſe Prophets, and what ſhould be their Doctrine, viz. Let us go ſerve other gods and worſhip them. 2 Pet. 2. 1.

But if you ask whether there were any ſuch in that people, Elijah ſhall tell you, 1 King. 18. 22. I only (ſaith Elijah) remain a Prophet of the Lord, but Baal's Prophets are four hundred and fifty men. And, 2 King. 10. 19. Jehu made a foul fray amongſt them when he ſaid, Call unto me all the Prophets of Baal, and all his ſervants, and all his Prieſts, let none be wanting; for I have a great ſacrifice to doe unto Baal: but he ſerved them in their kind. And of this kind of Prophets were thoſe of which Eliſha bade Jehoram the King ask counſel, 2 King. 3. 13. when being in diſtreſs in his march againſt Moab, he had ſent to him for advice what to doe, Get thee (ſaith he) to the Prophets of thy Father, and the Prophets of thy Mother, that is, the Prophets of Ahab and Jezabel.

And you may know theſe Prophets taught the people the ſame Religion of Idols which themſelves followed. Hear what the Lord ſaith, Jer. 2. 8. The Prieſts ſaid not, Where is the Lord? and they that handle the Law, knew me not; the Paſtors alſo tranſgreſſed againſt me, and the Prophets propheſied by Baal, (or, for Baal) and walked after things that profit not. And after, verſ. 26, 27. As the Thief is aſhamed when he is found; ſo is the houſe of Iſrael aſhamed; they, their Kings, their Princes, their Prieſts, and their Prophets; Saying to a ſtock, Thou art my Father; and to a ſtone, Thou haſt brought me forth, &c. And chap. 8. 1. At that time (ſaith the Lord) (i. e. when the Jews ſhall be carried captive) they ſhall bring out the bones of the Kings of Judah, and the bones of his Princes, and the bones of the Prieſts, and the bones of the Prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem out of their graves: verſ. 2. And they ſhall ſpread them before the Sun and the Moon and all the Hoſt of Heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have ſerved, and whom they have worſhipped. Chap. 23. 13. I have ſeen folly in the Prophets of Samaria, they propheſied in Baal, and cauſed my people Iſrael to erre.——verſ. 15. For from the Prophets of Jeruſalem is profaneneſs gone forth into all the land. verſ. 26, 27. How long ſhall it be in the hearts of the Prophets that propheſie lies?——which think to cauſe my people to forget my Name by their dreams they tell every man to his neighbour, as their Fathers have forgotten my Name, for Baal.

You know by this time what kind of falſe Prophets were among the people; where I would deſire you to take notice of one thing more, That for all this, theſe Prophets propheſied theſe things in Jehovah's name: For ſo it is ſaid of thoſe I laſt quoted in the verſe immediately before the words I quoted——the Prophets that propheſy lies in my name. So alſo ſhall you reade, 1 King. 22. of Ahab's Prophets, who being Prophets of Baal, yet propheſie in the name of Jehovah the true God, Thus ſaith Jehovah: which being foreſeen by the Lord himſelf before it came to paſs, ſeems to be the ground of the Law, Deut. 18. 20. But the Prophet which ſhall False Prophets pretended the name of God.

2 Pet. 2. 1. preſume to ſpeak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to ſpeak, and which ſhall ſpeak in the name of other gods, even that Prophet ſhall die.

Seeing therefore we finde theſe to have been the falſe Prophets among the people of the Church of Iſrael, and their Hereſies to have been the Doctrines of Idols, of worſhipping the Hoſt of Heaven, of Baalim, of Gods of wood and ſtone; of theſe undoubtedly S. Peter means, when he ſaith, As there were falſe Prophets among the people, ſo ſhall there be falſe Teachers among you, which ſhall bring in the like damnable Hereſies.

HAVING therefore brought the matter thus farre, let us now ſee whether S. Peter's Prophecy be faln out true or not; whether the Apoſtaſie whereunto falſe Teachers have brought the Chriſtian Churches be not like that almoſt in every reſpect whereunto the falſe Prophets once brought the Church of Iſrael. But firſt I muſt inſtruct you a little in the old Idolaters and the Heathens Divinity, both concerning the ſorting of their Gods; and ſecondly, for the way and manner to worſhip them.

See this more clearly and fully diſcourſed of in The Apoſtaſy of the latter times.

For their Gods, the Heathen and thoſe who followed their faſhions had two ſorts of them: Firſt, Soveraign and Supreme Gods, which the Scripture calls The Hoſt of Heaven; Secondly, Under-gods, or, if you will, Godlings, which the Greeks call Dæmon-gods, the Scripture calls them Baalim, that is, Lords.

Now the Soveraign Gods, or the Hoſt of Heaven, were ſuch as they ſuppoſed to remain alwayes in the Heavens, yea to dwell in the Heavenly lights, in the Sun, Moon and Stars, as it were Souls in bodies, and there to keep their ſtations immovably without change of place or preſence. Which Celeſtiall and Heavenly Gods as they were Eternall, without beginning or ending; ſo they ſuppoſed them ſo ſublime and pure, as they might not be prophaned with the approch of earthly things, or with the care and managing of mortal mens buſineſſes.

* An inferior Order of Gods.

And therefore they bring in that * ſecond Order of Gods, called Dæmons, or Baalims, as a middle ſort of Divine Powers between the Soveraign Gods and mortal men, whoſe office is to be as Mediators and Agents between them, and, as Plato ſpeaks, reporters and comers from men to the Gods and from the Gods to men; without whom there could be no commerce and intercourſe between the Gods and men: For they ſay, it beſeems not the Majeſty of the Soveraign Gods to manage theſe things of themſelves. And therefore though all things come by their Will, Power and Authority, yet is it by the mediation and miniſtry of theſe Dæmons, in Scripture called Baalim. I could prove you this at large out of the Heathen Philoſophers, but I ſhall not need.

Only I will tell you, that to this diſtinction of Soveraign or Heavenly Gods and the Baalim or Baal-gods, I ſuppoſe the Apoſtle S. Paul alludes 1 Cor. 8. 5, 6. where he ſaith, Though there be many that are called Gods, whether in heaven or earth; as there be (ſaith he) Gods many, (that is, many Celeſtiall and Soveraign Deities) and Lords many, (that is, many Baalims, Lord-agents and Preſidents of earthly things:) Yet to us Chriſtians there is but one Soveraign God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we to him; (that is, to whom as Supreme we are to direct all our ſervices;) and but one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, one Lord-agent (in ſtead of their many Baalims and Dæmon-mediators) by whom are all things which come from the Father to us, and through whom alone we find acceſs unto him. The alluſion methinks is paſſing elegant, and ſuch as cannot, I think, be well underſtood without this diſtinction of Superior and Inferior Deities in the Divinity of the Gentiles; they having a plurality in both ſorts, and we but one in each, as our Apoſtle affirmeth.

I hope

I hope by this time you underſtand what kind of Gods the Baalim or Baal-gods were, and what their office was. Shall I now tell what was their deſcent? for theſe Gods you muſt know had a beginning, though the Superior Gods had none. 2 Pet. 2. 1.

Know therefore that theſe Baals or Baalim were nothing but the Souls of great men worſhipped for Gods after death. For the Canonizing of the Souls of deceaſed Worthies is not now firſt deviſed among Chriſtians, but was an Idolatrous trick even from the dayes of the elder World: So that the Devil, when he brought in this Apoſtaticall Doctrine amongſt Chriſtians, ſwerved but little from his ancient method of ſeducing mankind. For Baal or Bel, whoſe worſhip Jezabel the daughter of Ithobaal King of Tyre brought into Iſrael, was a Deified Phœnician King of that name, as Virgil will tell us in that verſe concerning the Phœnician Queen Dido, 1 King. 16. 31.

Implevitque mero pateram, quam Belus & omnes
A Belo ſoliti——

Nay Baal, or in the Chaldee Dialect Bel, (for all is one) was the firſt King of Babel, and the firſt (as is written) that ever was Deified and reputed a God after death: Whence afterward they called all Souls of men Canonized after death Baalim, of the firſt Deified King in the world, Baal or Belus; Even as becauſe the firſt Roman Emperour was called Cæſar, thence were all the Emperours after him ſtyled Cæſars. So likewiſe becauſe the firſt Queen who was worſhipped as a Goddeſs after death was called Aſhtaroth or Aſtarte, thence were all ſuch She-goddeſſes in the Eaſtern parts called Aſhtaroth. For Phœnicia and thoſe parts of the world bordering near it ſpake the Hebrew tongue, or ſome Dialect thereof, and were all under the Kingdome of Babel, and when Baal or Belus reigned in Babel; whence it came to paſs that all thoſe were ſtored with Baals, Baal-Peor, Baal-zebub, Baal-berith, Baal-Chemoſh, Baal-Moloch. And here note a wonderfull myſtery, That old Babel, the firſt pattern in the world of ambitious dominion, was alſo the foundreſs of Idols and the Mother of Spirituall Fornications of the earth.

Now becauſe theſe Baalims were the Deified Souls of men deceaſed; hence it came that they uſed to cut and launce themſelves in worſhipping them, 1 Kings 18. 28. for theſe were Funeral Ceremonies, and therefore retained in the worſhip of ſuch Gods, in token they were men deceaſed. For this is the Note which the Gentile Philoſophers give to know ſuch Gods as had been men from thoſe which they ſuppoſed to be Eternall. And who knows whether this were not one end why God forbad the Jewes this Ceremonie; as elſewhere, ſo Deut. 14. 1. Ye are the children (ſaith he) of Jehovah your God, ye ſhall not cut your ſelves, nor make any baldneſs between your eyes for the dead? The Prieſts beſides are forbidden to prophane themſelves ſo much as by coming near the dead. Was not all this to accuſtome them, if it had been poſſible, from worſhipping Baalim? Again, is it not againſt the worſhippers of Baalim whereof the Lord complains Eſa. 65. 3, 4. ſaying, A people that provoketh me to anger continually to my face, that ſacrificeth in Gardens, (or Groves) and burneth incenſe upon Altars of brick; Which remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments? Lev. 19. 28. Lev. 21. 11.

But will you have an expreſs place, that worſhipping of Baal is worſhipping of the dead? compare Numb. 25. with Pſal. 106. In Numb. 25. 2, 3. it is ſaid, The Midianites called the people to the Sacrifices of their Gods, and the people did eat,——And Iſrael joyned himſelf to Baal-peor. But Pſal. 106. 28. it is thus related; They joyned themſelves alſo unto Baal-peor, and ate the Sacrifices of the * dead. Here that which Moſes calls the Sacrifices of their gods, (viz. Baal-gods.) David calls the Sacrifices of the dead.

* Whence Apollinarius expreſſeth it by Νεϱϱείαν ἐκαλόμβων.

2 Pet. 2. 1.

To conclude this point, This is that which Moſes meant in his Propheticall ſong of Iſrael's Apoſtaſie, Deut. 32. 17. They ſacrificed unto Dæmons, not to God; to Gods whom they knew not, to new Gods, to new Gods that came newly up, whom their Fathers feared not.

I have been the longer in this, becauſe perhaps it is not marked of every body.

THUS therefore having ſeen the Heathen Doctors conceit of their Gods, now let us ſee briefly the other point I promiſed to ſpeak of, viz. The manner how to worſhip them, and as it were to bring them to the lure of men, when they had occaſion of devotion with them; and this was done by ſacring of Images. You ſhall hear it from an ancient Author, and paſſing skilfull in theſe myſteries, even Hermes Triſmegiſtus, who in his Aſclepius ſpeaketh in Engliſh thus; It is a wonder (ſaith he) beyond all wonders, (and he ſaith truly) that man ſhould find out a way to make Gods. Yet becauſe (ſaith he) our Forefathers erred much through unbelief of Deities, and had ſmall regard of Religion and Divine worſhip; therefore they deviſed an art to make Gods, (he meaneth Images:) And becauſe they could not make Souls, (he means to thoſe ſenſleſs bodies) therefore they called the Souls of Dæmons (that is Baalim) and Angels, and put them into their Images and holy Myſteries; by which means alone thoſe Images have power of helping and hurting: which thus incorporated, he ſaith, are called by the Egyptians Animalia Sancta. And in another place, That kind of Gods (ſaith he) which men make is compoſed of two natures; of a Divine, which is firſt and moſt Sacred, and of that which is among men, namely, the Matter whereof they are made. The ſumme of all this Myſtery is, That Images were made as Bodies, to be informed with Ghoſts as with Souls: For an Image was a trap to catch Dæmons, and a device to tie them to a place and keep them from flitting.

Another way to worſhip them was in Religious graves and ſepulchres, for there they hoped to find their Ghoſt-gods eſpecially; as we yet ſuppoſe that Spirits frequent Church-yards and places of the dead.

Theſe were the Myſteries and conceits of the Ancient Idolaters, which the falſe Prophets of Iſrael brought in amongſt the people of God, and made them alſo (as the Scripture ſpeaks) to provoke the living God to jealouſie with the abominations of the Heathen round about them. Now then judge impartially, whether this Propheſie in my Text be not long agoe fulfilled amongſt us Chriſtians, the new people of God. There were falſe Prophets among the people of Iſrael, even ſo (ſaith my Text) were there to be falſe Teachers among Chriſtians, who ſhould bring in damnable Hereſies.

Which that you may the better doe, Know firſt, that the Iſraelites did at no time altogether renounce the true and living God, not in their worſt times; but in their conceit and profeſſion they acknowledged him ſtill, and were called his people, and he their God, though they worſhipped others beſides him. So Chriſtians in their Apoſtaſie neither did nor were to make an abſolute Apoſtaſie from God the Father and Chriſt their Redemer; but in outward profeſſion ſtill to acknowledge him, and to be called Chriſtians.

Secondly, There are two main Apoſtaſies of Iſrael recorded in Scripture. The Firſt is ſtyled The ſin of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, as a principal eſtabliſher thereof: And this was to worſhip the true God himſelf under an Image; For he ſet up Calves at Dan and Bethel, and conſecrated them in this manner, Behold, Iſrael, the Gods which brought thee out of the land of Egypt. For thoſe are Calves indeed, which here think he took the Calves themſelves themſelves to be Gods. The truth was, Becauſe he would not have the people goe to the Temple of Jeruſalem, where the Ark, the pledge of God's preſence, was; therefore he made theſe Calves in ſtead thereof, ſuppoſing, as the Gentiles did of their Gods, that the true God would have yielded his preſence to an Image made in honour of him: And therefore they uſed, when they came to make vows or oaths at the Calf, to ſwear Jehovah liveth, as Hoſea 4. 15. When therefore our Papiſts worſhip God the Creator under an Image, and Chriſt their Redeemer in a Croſs, Crucifix, or in a piece of Bread; this is the very ſame Apoſtaſie with that of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat who made Iſrael to ſin: And as falſe Prophets taught Iſrael that, ſo have falſe Teachers brought into Chriſtendom the very ſame as you ſee was propheſied. 2 Pet. 2. 1.

1 King. 15. 30, 34. and elſewhere.

1 King. 12. 28.

The Second main Apoſtaſie of Iſrael is called The way of Ahab, not becauſe he was the firſt bringer in, but the chief eſtabliſher thereof. And this was not onely to worſhip the true God idolatrouſly in an Image, as Jeroboam did, but to worſhip other Gods beſides him, namely Baal-gods or Baalim; ſuppoſing either by theſe to have eaſier acceſs unto the Lord of Hoſts the Soveraign God, or that theſe he might reſort unto at all times, and for all matters, as being nearer at hand, and not of ſo high a Dignity; whereas the Soveraign God, Jehovah the God of Iſrael, either managed not ſmaller and ordinary matters, or might not be troubled with them: for ſuch, as I told you, was the conceit of the Heathen, as that the ſouls of ſome great ones after death had the honour to be as Agents betwixt the Soveraign and Superiour Gods and men, as being of a middle nature between them; which in Greek are called Damons, in the Scriptures Baalim. When therefore thoſe who are called Chriſtians, and have given their faith to Chriſt Jeſus, to be their onely Mediator and royall Agent between them and his Father; when theſe do worſhip and invocate Saints or Angels, whether with Images or without, to be as under-Mediators with God for them, or of themſelves to beſtow ſome favour upon them; thoſe who doe this (as you know who doe) are fallen into the Apoſtaſie of Ahab, and are worſhippers of Baalim: For the Idolatry of Saints is altogether the ſame with that of Baalim. 2 Chr. 22 3.

HAVING therefore thus ſeen the verity of S. Peter's Prophecy for the firſt mark to know of what kind of Hereſie ſhould be the Chriſtian Apoſtaſie, even like unto that of Iſrael; now let me tell you what uſe to make of S. Peter's compariſon and thuscoupling the one by the other.

Firſt, that whereſoever you reade in Scripture of the Idolatry of Jeroboam's Calves and of Ahab's Baalim, you think of what I have told you; and know that whatſoever God ſpeaks againſt thoſe things there, the ſame he ſpeaks of the Apoſtate Chriſtians under Rome, whoſe caſe is in all reſpects the ſame. If therefore other points be hard and ſuch as you cannot underſtand, yet this of Idolatry is an eaſie mark for you to know the true Church from the falſe by; and almoſt every leaf in the Scripture will help you. Bleſs the Lord therefore, and never ceaſe to bleſs him, who hath delivered us from thoſe woful abominations and Idolatries wherewith the Church was ſo long overwhelmed, and reſtored unto us the ſinceritie of his Goſpel.

Secondly, Seeing the Holy Ghoſt hath taught us here to compare the Chriſtian's Apoſtaſie with that of Iſrael, we may hereby learn alſo what was the ſtate and condition of true Chriſtian Believers under the Apoſtaſie of Antichriſt, namely, the ſame with the true Iſraelites under the Apoſtaſie of Iſrael.

Where was the true Church in Ahab's time? was it not covered ſo under the

2 Pet. 2. 1.

*Verſ. 18.

the Apoſtate Iſraelites, that Elias himſelf, who was one of it, could ſcarce find it? They have ſlain thy Prophets (ſaith he) and overthrown thine Altars, and I alone am left, and they ſeek my life. Yet God tells him, * I have yet ſeven thouſand in Iſrael which have not bowed their knees to Baal. Where was the company of true worſhippers in Manaſſes time, the worſt time of all, when the ten Tribes were carried captive, and but two left, and they, as far as the eye of man can ſee, wholly fallen off to Idolatry; the Temple it ſelf, the onely place where the true God was to be worſhipped, filled with the Idols of Baal, the Sun and Moon and the whole Hoſt of Heaven, which never had been done before? Not a man to be named almoſt for fifty years together who was a true ſervant and worſhipper of the living God; and impoſſible any Sacrifice could be offered without Idolatry, whenas the Altar of the Lord it ſelf was polluted with Idols ſtanding thereon. Where was the true Church of Iſrael now, or had the Lord no Church at all? Yes he had a Church even then, even hidden in the body of that Idolatrous Nation, yea a ſtrong party, though not ſeen; as appeared preſently upon Manaſſes death, when Joſiah came to reign, who at eight years of age, a very child, yet was able to reform all again. Could a child have done this ſo ſoon, ſo ſpeedily, unleſs he had a ſtrong party which now, having a King for them, began to ſhew themſelves, though before hardly to be ſeen? When therefore the Papiſts ſhall ask us where our Church was before Luther, let us anſwer, She was, as the true Iſraelites were then, buried under the Apoſtate body of Chriſtendom; ſhe was even there whence God in his good time called her out, viz. ſhe was in the Spiritual Babylon: For ſo ſaith God when he calls her, Goe out of Babylon, my people. Could they come out thence who were never there?

2 King. 22.

Rev. 18. 4.

If Rome now be Babylon, and your Mother-Church that ancient Spouſe of Chriſt, which hath been ſo long an abominable Strumpet, committing Fornication with ſtrange Gods, as we are ſure ſhe is; we cannot chuſe but know where ours was in the mean time, untill it pleaſed God to call her thence; even amongſt you ſhe was then, and where ſhe is now you know, and ſhall one day feel, untill you bite your tongues for pain.

But how could the faithfull company of Chriſt live in the midſt of Idolaters, and have means of Salvation? I anſwer, Even as the true Iſraelites lived in the midſt of the Apoſtaſie of Iſrael; not as a diſtinct external ſociety from the reſt under whom they lived: But though in the inward and inviſible communion of their ſincerer faith they were a ſeveral company from them; yet for ſo much of this their faith as was ſtill acknowledged by thoſe erring ones, in groſs accounted Chriſtians, they had communion with them; and for the moſt part of that time of darkneſs continued a part of the ſame external body with them, as being begotten by the ſame Sacrament of Baptiſme, (as the Iſraelites in the like caſe of Circumciſion,) taught in ſome part by the ſame Word and Paſtors ſtill continued amongſt them, and ſubmitting to the ſame juriſdiction and government, ſo far as theſe, or any part of theſe, had yet ſome ſoundneſs remaining in them: But for the reſt, not compatible with their ſincerer faith, either wiſely avoiding all communion with it; or if they could not, then patiently ſuffering for their conſcience ſake under the hands of Tyrants, till it pleaſed God to call them thence to a greater liberty, as we ſee this day.

When Gold is mixed with much quantity of counterfeit metall, ſo that of both is made but one maſs or lump, though each metall in the lump ſtill retains his nature diverſe from the other, yet though both be ſeen together, yet outwardly they cannot be diſcerned t'one from t'other. And though the Gold be viſible with, and as one with the reſt; yet is it not viſible as it is diverſe from the reſt: But when the Refiner comes and ſevers them, then will each metall appear in his own colours, and put on his own outſide, and ſo become viſible apart from the reſt. Such was the ſtate and condition of the Church in the prevailing Apoſtaſie; the purer metall of the Chriſtian body outwardly not diſcernible from the baſe and counterfeit, whileſt one outſide covered them: But when the time of refining came, then was our Church not firſt founded in the true Faith, (God forbid) but a part of the Chriſtian body newly refined from ſuch corruptions as time had gathered: As Gold refined begins not then firſt to be Gold, though it began but then to be refined Gold. 2 Pet. 2. 1.

But you may ask further; When the face of the Church and the whole viſible worſhip therein was ſo univerſally ſtained with abominable Idolatries, how and whereby ſhould a man gather that there were any ſuch ſincerer company amongſt them who had not defiled their garments? I might tell you that Hiſtories, though written by our enemies, do mention many ſuch diſcovered at ſeverall times: But I will give you another ſign to know it, namely, the light of God's word, and ſome other Divine Truths ſtill remaining: For it was not ſo much for the Apoſtate Faction, as for the ſake of ſome choſen ones, that this bleſſing was continued. Had there been nothing but Egyptians there, darkneſs ſhould wholly have ſurpriſed them; but for Goſhen's ſake, for a few righteous in Sodom, God would not take this bleſſing from them. He that eſpies any day-light, will conclude the Sun is in our Heaven, though for the clouds he ſee her not: If we ſhould ſee a candle hang up in a room, and ſee it full of blind men, yet would we ſay, ſurely there is ſome amongſt them can ſee, why elſe hangs the candle there? So muſt we reaſon from the day-light and candle-light of Divine Truths ſtill appearing and hung up in the Church. For, as S. Paul ſaid, What if ſome did not believe? ſhall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect? Rom. 3.3. And Rom. 9.4, &c. when the body of the Jewiſh Nation refuſed Chriſt, yet he reckons their priviledges as many as Rome could ever challenge; Whoſe is (ſaith he) the Adoption, Glory, Covenants, and the giving of the Law, the ſervice of God, and the promiſes, whoſe are the Fathers, &c. Not as though (ſaith he) the word of God had taken none effect: For they are not all Iſrael, which are of Iſrael, &c.

NOW I come to the ſecond mark here laid down in my Text, to know what manner of Hereſies ſhould be in the great Apoſtaſie of the Chriſtian faith; Even denying the Lord that bought them. They ſhould give up their names as Chriſt's ſervants, as his purchace; and yet deny their Lord and Maſter: For Servants in times paſt uſed to be bought with a price, and ſo were as their Maſters proper poſſeſſion; Chriſt buyes his ſervants with his bloud. The meaning therefore is, they ſhould profeſs themſelves his ſervants, and yet deny him to be their Maſter. What Hereſies ſhould theſe be? Even the very ſame the firſt mark told us of, Chriſtian Idolatry. For as a Wife who hath given her faith to one Husband, if ſhe commit adultery with others, denies him to be that ſhe calls him, though ſhe call him Husband never ſo much: So the Church, the Spouſe of Chriſt, having given her faith to him alone, to be her only Lord and Mediator, in whom and through whom alone ſhe would approch the Throne of Majeſty in Heaven; if ſhe bowes down her ſelf to other Mediators, whether Saints or Angels, if ſhe invocates and worſhips the Father in any other thing ſave Chriſt alone, the only Image we muſt worſhip, (the Image of the Father) and the only Agent we muſt imploy to God before the Throne in Heaven; ſhe commits Spiritual Adultery, that is, Idolatry, and denies the Lord which bought her. That this ſhould be the meaning here, let this one reaſon ſerve the turn, That that is always the meaning of the like Phraſe in the Old Teſtament, where in ſtead of the Lord that bought, we have the Lord that brought them out of the land of Egypt. Let us compare them;* I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, Thou ſhalt have none other Gods but me: In the New Teſtament thus ſaith Chriſt, I am Chriſt the Lord which bought thee, Thou ſhalt have no other Chriſts but me. Are not theſe alike? So when the Iſraelites fell to Idolatry, and to worſhip Idols and ſtrange Gods, hear how the Lord ſpeaks then, Deut. 32. 15, 16. Jeſhurun waxed fat, forſook God which made him, and lightly eſteemed the Rock of his Salvation; they provoked him to jealouſie with ſtrange gods. So may we ſay, the Chriſtian Mother waxed fat, forſook God which redeemed her, &c. Judges 2. 12, 13. They forſook the Lord God of their Fathers, which brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed other gods, and ſerved Baal and Aſhtaroth. And this expreſſion is frequent, Pſal. 81. 10, 11. 1 King. 9. 9. 2 King. 17. 7. Juſt ſo might the Lord ſpeak of Chriſtians; They forſook the Lord which brought them out of the Spiritual Egypt, and worſhipped Saints and Angels.

2 King. 17. 35.

I meant to have ſpoken much more of this, but the time will not ſuffer me. I deſire we may obſerve from this twofold mark of the Chriſtian Apoſtaſie, What that is, among ſo many Corruptions both now and heretofore overwhelming the Church of Chriſt, wherein the Holy Ghoſt placeth the eſſence and which he accounteth as the ſoul of the great Apoſtaſie under the man of ſin, and would have us to make the Pole-ſtarre of our diſcovery thereof: Not every Errour, not every Hereſie how groſs ſoever, but Idolatry and Spiritual Fornication. As for other Hereſies, though accompanying this, yet are they but accidental, and not of the eſſence of the great Apoſtaſie which was to come. Even as Whores are ſeldome without other foul faults, which yet are no parts of Whoredome: ſo hath the Spiritual Whore many other Hereſies, but her Whoredome is Idolatry.* Idolatry is the only Character and Note whereby the great Apoſtaſie of the viſible Church is diſcovered and diſtinguiſhed from all other Blaſphemies, Seditions and Hereſies of what age or time ſoever. Which is the reaſon why Babylon is intituled in the Rev. of S. John, not the Liar of Babylon, nor the Tyrant of Babylon, nor the Heretick of Babylon, nor the Murthereſs of Babylon, (though ſhe be all theſe) but the Whore of Babylon; yea the Great Whore, and the Mother of the Fornications and Abominations of the Earth.

* 1 Theſ. 1. 9. Converſion to Chriſtianity is called a turning from Idols to ſerve the true God, and to wait for his Son Jeſus Chriſt: Therefore Apoſtaſy is a return to Idols from the true God and his Son Jeſus Chriſt.

DIS-

DISCOURSE XLIII.

1 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

And they did all eat the ſame Spiritual meat; And did all drink the ſame Spiritual drink: (for they drank of that Spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Chriſt.)

THE firſt part of this Chapter is a Compariſon of ſome Sacramental Types in the old Law with the two Sacraments of the new, and that in two reſpects; namely, 1. for the ſame nature or ſubſtance of the Myſteries in both, and 2. for the ſame condition of the Receivers, if either they abuſe them or walk unworthy of them. The words which I have now choſen are in ſpecial an agreement of ſome of the foreſaid Types of the Law with the Euchariſt or Lord's Supper: Firſt, in ſubſtance of the Myſtery; And they (that is, the Fathers in the Wilderneſs) all ate the ſame Spiritual meat, and all drank the ſame Spiritual drink: Secondly, in the dangerous condition of unworthy Receivers either of this or the other Sacrament, in theſe words; But with many of them God was not well pleaſed: for they were overthrown in the Wilderneſs.

And firſt I will ſpeak of the firſt of theſe, which you may ſee is alſo double; firſt, concerning our Spiritual meat, and ſecondly, concerning our Spiritual drink; in both which the Apoſtle affirms thoſe of the old Fathers to have been the ſame with ours. For the underſtanding whereof, we will firſt ſpeak of the Spiritual meat, (as the words lie) and then of the Spiritual drink; and in both, firſt what is required to be known for Explication, either of the words, or of what is contained in them; and after come to ſuch Obſervations as will follow and be gathered therefrom. For Explication therefore, three things are to be enquired of. 1. Of what Meat and of what Rock the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. 2. Wherein both the one and the other were Spiritual or Sacramental. 3. In what ſenſe thoſe Sacraments are ſaid to be the ſame with ours.

For the firſt, The Meat here ſpoken of moſt certainly was Manna, for it appears in the fifth verſe, as alſo in the beginning, that he means of the time they were in the Wilderneſs, where the onely Food was Manna, ſent from Heaven. The word Manna either ſignifies a portion, it was their dimenſum or daily allowance given by God; or Food made ready, becauſe God prepared it, without any labour or induſtry of theirs: and this is thought to be the trueſt reaſon of the name. For as for that of S. Ferom, who thinks it had the name Man from the queſtion asked upon the firſt ſight thereof, מה הוא what is it, and ſo they called it מן in Chaldee, being the ſame with מה in Hebrew; this opinion, though the * Seventy have tranſlated ſo, yet is found unlikely by ſome learned in thoſe Languages. 1. Becauſe no reaſon can be given why the Iſraelites ſhould then ſpeak Chaldee. 2. Becauſe in Chaldee the word מן is a queſtion of perſons, not of things; and ſignifies Quis Who, not Quid What; being the ſame with מי in Hebrew, which alwayes asketh of perſons, but never of things.

* Exod. 16. 15. הוא מן הוא ;

But to leave the name, and ſpeak ſomething of the nature: we muſt know that this Manna was not that which Dioscorides and Galen so call, namely, certain fragments of Frankincense: nor was it that which the Arabians call Manna, though it somewhat resembleth it; for they call by this name a certain ἀερομέλι or hony-dew falling on some mountains of Syria; and it seems they gave this name unto it by allusion unto the Sacred story. But this Manna wherewith God fed the Israelites was a miraculous thing, the Corn of Heaven and Bread of Angels, as * David calls it; it fell onely in the Wilderness of Sinai, it rained all times and dayes of the year saving the Sabbath; it was so hard that it might be ground in a Mill, beaten in a Mortar, or baked in an Oven; it melted in the Sun, and putrefied with one night's keeping; lastly, it was Food, and not Physick: not one of all these properties agreeing to the Apothecarie's Manna or Manna of the Arabians.

1 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

* Psal. 78. 24, 25.

Come we now to the Rock, whereof the Apostle saith our Fathers drank: which speech any man may see is not proper, and therefore some say it is a Metonymie, Rock, for the water which came out of the Rock: perhaps it will be more easie to say here is an Ellipsis of the word πόμα or drink, to be supplied out of the words next before, and so to be construed thus, ἔπινον τὸ πόμα ἐκ πνευματικῆς, &c. For they drank the drink of that Spiritual Rock. Now for the Rock, there are two Rocks mentioned in Scripture out of which the Lord gave water unto the Israelites; one at Rephidim, two years after their coming out of Egypt, Exod. 17. another at Kadesh, almost thirty eight years after, Numb. 20. It is doubtful which of these our Apostle meaneth. We may safely say he meaneth them both, the story of both being so like, as the places of both had one name * Meribah, of the murmuring and contending of the people. But if he meaneth onely the one, I would say it is the former; the miracle whereof was presently upon the raining of Manna.

Two Rocks out of which Israel drank.

* Exod. 17. 7. Numb. 20. 13.

But here is one word yet needs to be explained; for our Apostle addes unto Rock ἀκολουθούσης, the Rock following, or, which followed them: which some would have spoken of Christ, being the Rock which accompanied the Israelites, (for so ἀκολουθέω signifies) or the Rock which was to come and follow in after-times: others more truly expound it literally of the Rock in the wilderness, thinking it reasonable that the Apostle who spake literally of Manna which was truly eaten, should also in the same sense speak of the water of that Rock which was as truly drunken. And therefore they say the Apostle addes the word [ἀκολουθούσης following,] to intimate that when the Rock was smitten, a stream gushed therefrom, which followed the Israelites many years as they journeyed in the wilderness: and therefore our Translation with others for explication sake addes the word [them] which is not in the Greek; and so the Syriack likewise translates the words, ܗܘ ܕܒܬܪܐ ܕܐܬܐ ܥܡܗܘܢ that Spiritual Rock which went with them.

But against this some object two things. 1. That it is not like the Apostle would affirm any thing as History which is no where mentioned in the Old Testament, where it is like so miraculous a thing would not have been concealed. 2. That the thing it self is otherwise unlikely, even by reasons out of Moses story. For they say, If it be meant of the first Rock at Rephidim, how came they to want water at Kadesh, if a river from the first Rock had followed them? And if we say it is spoken of the second Rock at Kadesh, how comes it to pass that they offered to buy water at a price of the Edomites, if water followed them at the heels?

But unto the first it may be answered, That it may be elsewhere shewn in the New Testament, something to be alledged for Story which is not expressed in the Old Testament, especially when there is some ground whence some such thing may be drawn by good consequence; and then I think we ought ought to believe the Illation of the Holy Ghost. And that this thing we now speak of may be inferred from the Story of Moses, it will appear thus: For seeing it was about two years after their coming out of Egypt, when the first Rock was smitten to give them water, and that in all their change of Stations for almost thirty eight years after we never find the least mention of any want thereof, though they travelled further in a dry and unwatered Wilderness: It will follow from hence, That either they stored themselves with water for so many years, which is impossible; or else the water of the Rock ran after them; and it may be their journeys were so ordered by the lower grounds, that it might naturally doe so, so long as the miraculous Fountain lasted.

1 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

Vide Psal. 78. 16. Psal. 105. 41.

As for the other Objection, How they came again to want water at Kadesh, it is easily answered: For God might, for a new triall of his people, make the first Miracle cease when it pleased him; and seeing at that Station they had taken a clean contrary way unto the former, it may be the position of the Earth hindered it, God so ordering their journeys of purpose. And as for their buying water of the Edomites presently upon the smiting of the second Rock at Kadesh; it may be said that this Rock was not like the former, and so our Apostle by the word [ἀκολουθούσης] did imply he spake of the first onely: or howsoever, those words of buying water of the Edomites are spoken in case they passed through the Edomites land, where it was not like the Miracle should have followed them, it being a watred Country.

Thus much I thought good to speak in defence of that Exposition which our Translation seems to approve by adding the word [them,] unto which (you see) we may without difficulty yield our assent: Otherwise it were easie yet to adde, among such a variety, a fourth Exposition diverse from all the former, namely, That by leaving out the word [them] the word [Following] should be expounded not of following in regard of place, but of time and story, and that with relation unto Manna, because in order of time the smiting of the Rock followed presently upon the raining of Manna; and so the Apostle's sense, saying, ἐκ τῆς πνευματικῆς ἀκολουθούσης πέτρας, of the Spiritual Rock following, should be understood as following upon the raining of Manna, the mysterie of drink following the Miracle of heavenly bread, as the giving of the Cup is to follow the breaking of Bread in the Lord's Supper. But this you may esteem as you please.

NOW I come to the second thing I propounded, Wherein this Manna and this Rock were Spiritual, that is, Sacramental; and this was in regard they were Signs signifying Christ, and Pledges assuring the faithful Receivers of their enjoying him with all his Benefits. For a Sacrament is not a naked or a single Sign, but a Sign assuring, that is, a Seal, or a Pledge of the thing signified, a signifying Pledge, or an assuring Sign. Now these Seals do always suppose, and are in some sort grounded upon, a resemblance which the Sign hath with the thing signified. For as Plato in Cratylus sayes, That the wisdom of the first imposers and inventers of the names of things was such in their choise, that they made the letters and syllables to agree with and to express the qualities of the things called by them, expressing soft things with soft sounds, harsh with harsh, &c. and so forth: So God in the Sacraments, which are as visible words, hath chosen such Signs as carry in them the Character and very Image of the things they are pledges of. For a warrant therefore that this Manna and this Rock were such Sacraments and such Spiritual things as our Apostle speaketh of, let us consider a while how they carried in them the marks of Christ whom they signified.

*Wisd. 16. 20. Thou didst send them from heaven ἕτοιμον ἄρτον ἀκοπιάτως bread prepared without their labour.

1. Then, to begin with Manna. As Manna was a meat *provided of God without the labour and industry of the Israelites: So is Christ given

1 Cor. 10. 3, 4. unto men, not out of any work or merits of theirs, but of the free gift and goodneſs of God. 2. As Manna came from Heaven beſides the ordinary courſe of nature: So Chriſt's birth was wonderful, and not as the birth of other men: For his Divine nature he fetcht from above, and his Humane body was not begotten of mortal ſeed, but by the influence of the Holy Ghoſt from Heaven. 3. Manna was diſtributed unto all alike; one had not more and another leſs, but all an equal ſhare: Even ſo Chriſt communicates himſelf unto all alike without acception of perſons; For in him is neither male nor female, bond nor free; the Begger hath as great a part in Chriſt as he who ſits upon the Throne. 4. Manna when it came firſt was an unknown thing, for the Iſraelites (ſaith the Text) knew not what it was; no, they knew not whence it came, nor that it was the Food the Lord had ſent them: So Chriſt when he came into the world was unknown; For if they had known, (ſaith S. Paul) they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory. 5. Manna was Food, and a plentiful Food, there was enough for every body: So is Chriſt the Food and Bread of our Souls, and ſufficient to feed many, yea even the whole World. 6. Manna was of a moſt ſweet and pleaſing taſt: And ſo is Chriſt unto that Soul which can truly reliſh him; My yoke (ſaith he) is moſt ſweet and eaſie, and my burthen light; And moſt true of him is that which the Pſalmiſt writes, O taſt and ſee, for the Lord is ſweet. 7. Manna was of a white colour; even as our Saviour alſo was white and pure, as being free from all ſtain of ſin: for, as it is 1 Pet. 2. 22. He did no ſin, neither was there any guile found in his mouth. 8. Alſo Manna, before it was eaten, was brayed in a Mortar or broken in a Mill: So was Chriſt our heavenly Manna broken upon the Croſs, that he might become the Spiritual Food wherewith our Souls are fed unto everlaſting life. 9. As Manna was given onely in the Wilderneſs, and ceaſed as ſoon as they came into the land of Promiſe: So is Chriſt our Spiritual Food in the Euchariſt, ſo long as we travell in the Wilderneſs of this world; but when we ſhall arrive in the heavenly Canaan, we ſhall have no more need of Sacraments; for there we ſhall have Chriſt preſent with us, and ſhall no longer underſtand in part as now we do, but we ſhall ſee God as he is.

Exod. 16. 15.

1 Cor. 2. 8.

Matt. 11. 30.

Guſtate & videte, quoniam ſuavis eſt Dominus, Pſal. 34. 8.

Thus much ſhall ſuffice to have ſpoken of Manna: and ſo we come unto the Rock, which our Apoſtle affirms to have been Chriſt, that is, a Sign of him. Neither is this the onely place where he is ſo called, but it was a name given him in the days of old. In the 32. of Deut. he is four ſeveral times called by that name. Ver. 15. Jeſhurun forſook the God which made him, and lightly eſteemed the Rock of his Salvation: and v. 18. Of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and haſt forgotten God that formed thee: and v. 30, 31. Again, in Dan. 2. 34, 35. he is expreſſed by a Stone cut out without hands, which became a great Mountain and filled the whole earth. Let us therefore ſee what reſemblance of Chriſt is in a Rock; firſt generally, and then ſpecially in This Rock whereof our Apoſtle treateth.

Firſt then, As a Rock is the ſureſt Foundation to build upon; ſo is Chriſt the immovable Foundation whereupon his Church is reared: whatſoever is built upon him, no ſtorms, no flouds, no winds can ſhake or move. And that in this very reſpect Chriſt is called a Rock, it appears out of Eſay 28. 16. quoted in part by S. Paul, Rom. 9. 33. & S. Pet. 1 Ep. 2. 6. Behold, I lay in Sion a foundation, a ſtone, a tried ſtone, a precious corner-ſtone, a ſure foundation; he that believeth on him ſhall not be confounded nor aſhamed. 2. A Rock is a ſtrong Fortreſs againſt the aſſaults of an Enemy; and ſo is our Saviour an impregnable Bulwark unto his Elect againſt the hoteſt aſſaults of Sin, Satan and Death; all the Cannons of Hell can never hurt him who hath gotten this Rock to ſhield him. 3. A Rock is a place of ſtumbling unto thoſe who look not well to their feet; and ſo was this Spiritual Rock of our ſalvation unto the proud high-looking Jew, a ſtumbling-block, a Rock of offence, according unto the Prophecy in the 8. of Eſay, 14, 15. quoted alſo by our Apoſtle Rom. 9. and S. Peter 1 Ep. 2. A ſtone of ſtumbling, and for a Rock of offence unto both the houſes of Iſrael: And many among them ſhall ſtumble and fall, &c. 1 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

But more eſpecially, This Rock which our Apoſtle ſpeaks of reſembles Chriſt in three things.

1. As that Rock gave no water before it was ſmitten with the Rod of Moſes; ſo was Chriſt ſmitten upon the Croſs, that out of him might flow that ſoveraign ſtream, which he who drinketh of ſhall never thirſt any more. 2. As the Rock was ſmitten with the Rod of Moſes, ſo was Chriſt our Redeemer with the Rod of the Law, all the curſes and penalties due by the ſame being laid upon him for our ſakes. For he was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was bruiſed for our iniquities; the chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him, and with his ſtripes we are healed. All we like ſheep have gone aſtray; and the Lord laid on him the iniquity of us all. Eſa. 53. 5, 6. 3. Laſtly, As this Rock is ſaid to have yielded water not onely to thoſe who were then preſent at the place where the Rock ſtood, but followed them in all their Stations in the Wilderneſs, unto the utmoſt ends thereof; ſo that water which guſhed out from our ſmitten Saviour, neither ſerved nor ſtayed with thoſe alone who were preſent at the time and place of his ſuffering, but it ran and ſpred into all places of the world where the ſons of men had any abiding, and followeth them all the days of their Pilgrimage in this Wilderneſs, even from the day of his Paſſion unto this very hour. Ho (ſaith the Evangelical Prophet Eſay) every one that thirſteth, come ye unto the waters, (yea even) he that hath no mony; come ye——yea come buy Wine and Milk without mony and without price. Chap. 55. 1. In what part of the earth ſoever thou art, in what time of the world ſoever thou liveſt, Chriſt our Rock is ever with thee, and his water ſtreameth after thee; which whoſoever drinketh, it ſhall be in him a Well of water ſpringing up into everlaſting life. John 4. 14.

Adde, Who knoweth whether the cleaving of the Rocks when he yielded up the Ghoſt, were not for a Sign of the accompliſhment of the myſtery?

AND thus much for the ſecond point. Now we come unto the third, In what ſenſe thoſe Sacraments are ſaid to be the ſame with ours. For the underſtanding whereof, we muſt chiefly conſider two things in every Sacrament, the viſible ſigne, and the inviſible thing thereby ſignified and confirmed: which inviſible thing is always double, firſt, the Root or Fountain; ſecondly, the gracious bleſſings and promiſes which ſpring and flow from it. The Root and Fountain is he through whom and by whom we receive all the bleſſings and benefits we enjoy from God our Father, and without whom he vouchſafes us nothing. And therefore as God confers no manner of bleſſing upon us but through Chriſt: ſo the manner and nature of a Sacrament is to aſſure and confirm unto us whatſoever it aſſures us onely through him. For all Sacramental ſigns both old and new carry in them the Image and marks of Chriſt; hereby ſhewing, that by ſignifying him they ſeal and convey the Promiſes in and through him. For example ſake: In the Paſſeover the favour and benefit which God would therein ſeal and aſſure was, that he would ſpare and paſs by the Iſraelites when he ſmote the Egyptians: and yet the Sign ordained expreſſed nothing either of paſſing by or ſparing, but of him onely in whom and through whom God paſſed and ſpared them, namely, that immaculate Lamb ſlain before the foundation of the world; whoſe bloud when God beholds upon the poſts of their houſes, he will ſpare and not deſtroy them. Exod. 12. Rev. 13. 8. The like we ſhall finde in 1 Cor. 10. 3, 4. all their Sacraments and Sacrifices; that is their manner, by signing the Root and Fountain, to assure and convey the Promises which come through it.

Out of this therefore which hath been spoken we may easily assoil the Question of the agreement or sameness of the Jews Sacraments with ours. For it is apparent that the Signs differed, and in most they were of a clean differing kind from ours; I mean divers kinds of things, the bloudy signs of slaughtered beasts: and where the Signs of both had more affinity, yet was there some apparent difference, as appears in the examples our Apostle bringeth here. For howsoever a cloud hath some affinity with water, yet is it not the same with water we use in Baptism; neither was Manna the same thing with bread, though in stead thereof; nor the water of the Rock the same with wine in the Eucharist. It is plain therefore out of our Apostle's own words, that he means not they were the same in Signs. It follows then, they should be the same in the Spiritual thing signified, which is as the Soul and Spirit of a Sacrament. And this is plain, in that he saith not simply, they are the same Meat and same Drink, but, the same Spiritual Meat, and the same Spiritual Drink: and it is past all doubt, when he saith the Rock was Christ, that is, a Sacrament of him, which τὸ πνευμ. is to be understood of all the rest, the Cloud, the Sea, the Manna; all were Sacraments of Christ as well as ours, and Seals of the same Spiritual promises whereof ours are; all aimed at the same twofold invisible gift, the same Fountain through whom, Christ Jesus, and the same Rivers of Spiritual graces, Reconciliation with God, Remission of sins, and Life eternal, through him alone.

And yet for all this agreement we must know there was some difference even here also: For howsoever the things (as ye have heard) were the same signified in both, yet was the manner and fashion of them different; they beheld not their Signs the same that ours do. For as for the Root of blessings, Christ, he was signified as future and yet to come; which in their ordinary Sacraments was stamped upon the very Sign; I mean, the Signs had some badge in them, whereby might be known that what they signified was future.

As for example; In Circumcision was signified the taking away of the superfluity of sin in and through him who was yet in the loins of his Ancestors, as the place circumcised sufficiently implies. And this is the reason why S. Paul saith, if you are circumcised, Christ profits you nothing: Because, namely, he that received Circumcision did as much as affirm that Christ was not yet come, but still hoped for. Gal. 5. 2.

The like we may see in their Sacrifices, some whereof, as the Eucharisticall, were justly answerable to our Eucharist, as I shall have occasion to shew hereafter. In the mean time I speak generally of them, and say, They carried a badge in them that Christ was not yet come and offered for sin. A ground whereof I have from the story of Abraham going about to sacrifice his son; for there Abraham being ready at God's Commandment to sacrifice the promised son, his dear and onely son Isaac, the Angel of God stayed his hand, and shewed him a Ram in a bush to sacrifice in stead of his son; thereby implying, That while God deferred the offering of that Blessed one which should be a Son of Abraham, he would accept as in stead thereof the offerings of Bulls and Rams for the expiation of sin; and therefore he that offered this offering in stead, did therein acknowledge that the offering of the Blessed seed of Abraham was yet deferred. A second mark of this may be also in the slaying of the Sacrifice offered: For in that they were as often as they offered, to slay their Sacrifice, it appeared that the Son of Abraham was not yet slain for sin.

And thus have we seen how Christ the ground of all Spiritual blessings was was otherwise signified under the Sacraments of the Law then now in those of the Gospel. Now we must also shew a differing manner and fashion in the Spiritual Promises themselves, which were given through him. For these were not open as now they are, but involved and wrapped up in Temporal benefits: For all the Promises under the Law in a manner were for the outside Temporal; their Redemption was their deliverance from the Egyptian thraldome, their forgiveness and remission was the escaping of temporal plagues and bodily death, their favour with God was worldly Prosperity, their place of blessed rest was the earthly Canaan, and immortality, long life and fulness of dayes in the land which the Lord had given them. This is so apparent, that there was a Sect amongst them about Christ's time which maintained there were no other Promises to be looked for; and some Christians even of note have almost affirmed that the Jews had no Spiritual Promises, but only Temporal. But we must know that under these Outward things were veiled the Spiritual and Eternal Promises. Not that these Temporal were only Shadows of the Eternal, and were not literally to be understood; but that the enjoying of these outward things, unto the Jew was a pledge of the Spiritual as it were inwrapped in them: For it pleased God, according to the œconomy of that time, to convey his Spiritual benefits under and with the Temporal; as he also ordained the loss of the one to be as an evident mark of losing the other, unless God were extraordinarily mercifull unto them. The knowledge of this made the Jew so highly to esteem of worldly prosperities, and of those who enjoyed them, as of God's special Favourites; and on the contrary, to be so cast down with earthly adversities, as if those who fell into them were quite deprived of the favour of God. This made them so loth to forgoe the Earthly Canaan, as though with it also they had forgone all interest in the Heavenly.

1 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

And was it not strange that the Roman Empire, which carried no other Nation captive, yet should cast the Jew out of his own country? unless God, according to his wonted rule with this people, would have it a wofull evidence that he had quite cast them off from having any longer right or claim unto the Kingdom of Heaven. But since Christ was revealed, these Spiritual and Eternal Promises are no longer veiled and covered in this sort, but are laid out to open view, and they are no longer so link'd with Temporal, but severed one from the other; for the veil upon Moses face is done away, and we all with an open face behold as in a glass the glory of the Lord, 2 Cor. 3. 14, 18.

Thus you see how the Sacraments of the Law, howsoever they sealed the same Promises with ours, yet not so immediately as ours do, but in the covers of outward blessings. Now I will answer some Objections concerning this discourse.

And first, Some will say that this is unlikely, in that the Jews seemed to apprehend no such thing as we speak of, specially in these extraordinary Sacraments which our Apostle treats of. I answer, that without doubt the Patriarchs and Prophets had a more clear sight of these things; as for the rest, they were in general taught this Principle, That in such things God did convey some unseen blessings unto them, especially if they were so extraordinary as this of Manna and the Rock; and howsoever they knew not expressly what these secret things should be, yet they believed they were far more glorious then what they saw. Those who require more then this forget how Moses was veiled, and that the Mysteries of the Kingdome of God were exceedingly obscure in the times of the Law. And that the Jew could not but conceive more in them then the outside, it appears in that they had a great expectation of the Messiah, at whom all these aimed;

2 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

* Joh. 1. 45.

as we know the speech of Nathanael, * We have found the Messias, of whom Moses and the Prophets wrote. Besides, the Prophets often reprehension of those who thought God was pleased with the outward offering of Bulls and Rams, must needs make them apprehend there was a faith of some unseen thing required.

But S. Paul (will some say) calls them Gal. 4. 9. weak and beggerly elements, whereby it should seem they were empty of all Spiritual meaning. I answer, such they were become indeed when Christ was once come, of which time S. Paul speaketh; when the grace signified in them was brought out in the light, when the inwrapped Promises were unfolded and revealed, they were then as empty shells, whose kernels were taken out, and like carkasses whose Soul is gone. So long as a shell contains a kernel unseen, so long it is full; when the kernel comes forth to outward view, then the shell is empty: even so is it with the elements of the Law. Again, as long as the Soul is buried in the body and covered with flesh, the body lives; but when the Soul separates from flesh and subsists by it self, then the body proves a stinking carkas: So is it with the Elements of the Law, whose Soul was these Spiritual things, now severed from such fleshly Elements, and offered unto us without such covers as heretofore they were.

HAVING spoken at large of the Three things which I enquired of for Explication of these words, viz. 1. Of what Meat and of what Drink the Apostle speaketh, namely, of the food of Manna, and the water of the Rock, wherewith God sustained the Israelites in the Wilderness; 2. Wherein both the one and the other were Spiritual or Sacramental, namely, in being Signs resembling and assuring Christ with the Spiritual Blessings through him; 3. In what sense these Sacraments are said to be the same with ours, to wit, not in the Signs, but in the Spiritual thing signified, which is the Soul and Essence of a Sacrament: We come now to such Observations as those Words and Explications will afford us.

Observ. 1. The first whereof is, That if the Seals and Sacraments under the Law were the same with ours, then must they also have the same Covenant of Grace with us; for the Sacraments are Seals of the Covenant: If the Seals then were the same, as our Apostle affirmeth, how should not the Covenant also be the same? and seeing their Sacraments were differing in the Signs from ours, how could they be any way the same with ours, but only in what they sealed and signified? The Fathers therefore were saved by Grace and through Christ as well as we; so true is that the Apostle sayes Acts 4. 12. There is no other name under Heaven given amongst men whereby we must be saved. For Jesus Christ (as it is Heb. 13. 8.) is the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever; that is, He was a Saviour of old, is still, and shall be for ever hereafter. This is that which S. Peter yet more expresly affirmeth Acts 3. 25. saying, Ye are the children of the Prophets, and of the Covenant which God made with our Fathers, saying to Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the Nations of the earth be blessed. Yea not only from Abraham, but even from that time when God said, The seed of the woman shall break the Serpent's head, was this Covenant made with men, and at length diversly shadowed in the Types and Sacrifices of the Law, untill Christ himself was revealed in the flesh.

Gen. 3. 15.

For the better understanding of this, we must know what a Covenant is, and what are the kinds thereof. A Covenant is as it were a Bargain between God and man, wherein God promises some Spiritual good to us, so we perform some duty unto him; if not, then to incurre everlasting punishment. This Covenant is of two sorts; the one is called The Covenant of Works, the other The Covenant of Grace. The Covenant of Works is, wherein God on on his part makes us a promiſe of Eternal life, if we on our part ſhall perform exact obedience unto his Law; otherwiſe to be everlaſtingly condemned, if we fail. The Covenant of Grace or of the Goſpel is, wherein God on his part promiſes us ſinners Chriſt to be our Saviour and Redeemer, if we on our part ſhall believe on him with a lively and obedient faith; otherwiſe to be condemned. The Covenant of Works God made with man at his Creation, when he was able to have kept the conditions he required; but he through his diſobedience broke it, and ſo became liable to death, both Corporal and Spiritual. And though the Covenant of Grace then took place, (as we have ſaid) yet was the former Covenant of Works ſtill in force, until Chriſt who was promiſed ſhould come in the fleſh. And therefore was this Covenant renewed under Moſes with the Iſraelites, when the Law was given in Horeb; as Moſes ſayes, Deut. 5. 2. The Lord God made a Covenant with us in Horeb. For all the time under the Law the open and apparent Covenant was the Covenant of Works; to make them the more to ſee their own miſery and condemnation, and ſo to long after Chriſt who was yet to come, and at whoſe coming this obligation ſhould be quite cancelled: Yet nevertheleſs, together with this open Covenant there was a ſecret and hidden Covenant, which was the Covenant of Grace; that they might not be altogether without the means of Salvation whilſt Chriſt yet tarried.

1 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

The 2 Covenants deſcribed, of { Works. Grace.

The open and the ſecret or hidden Covenant under the Law.

This truth is plain, Gal. 3. 17, &c. where the Apoſtle affirms, That the Covenant of Grace in Chriſt was four hundred and thirty years afore the Law was given, and that therefore the Law could not diſannull it or make it of none effect; but that the Law (ſo he calls the Covenant of Works) was only added to it becauſe of tranſgreſſions, untill the bleſſed Seed ſhould come, v. 19. and that it might be a Schoolmaſter to bring us unto Chriſt, v. 24. For in the Moral Law of God, under whoſe curſe they ſtood bound, they might as in a Glaſs ſee their ſin, their guilt, their want of Righteouſneſs, and in their Ceremonies and Sacrifices they might again, as in Shadows of Heavenly things, behold the means of their Reconciliation, through his blood who was to be ſlain and offered to God for them.

Now though this Covenant of Grace afore Chriſt be the ſame for ſubſtance with that under which we are now ſince his coming; yet the circumſtances and outward faſhion thereof are ſo varied, that the Scripture for this regard makes of this one Covenant two Covenants, calling one the Old Covenant for the old manner thereof under the Law, and the other a New Covenant for the new manner thereof now the Goſpel is revealed. Having therefore already ſeen the agreement and oneneſs of them for the inward part, let us now behold their differences for the outward faſhion: and ſo we ſhall ſee that as the Fathers ate the ſame Spiritual meat and drank the ſame Spiritual drink, and yet there was ſome difference in them; ſo the Fathers were under the ſame Covenant of Grace with us, and yet after a different faſhion.

This difference S. Paul Gal. 4. 1, &c. ſetteth forth thus by a ſimilitude; The difference (ſaith he) of the condition of thoſe afore Chriſt and ſince, is but as the condition of Heirs when they are under age, and when they come to full years. They are Heirs and Lords of all in both conditions, as well in one as the other; onely the difference is, that in the one condition they are in the ſtate of Servants under Tutors and Governours, in the other they enjoy the freedome of Sons: So the faithfull in the Law enjoyed the ſame Covenant of Grace with us, but under the bondage of worldly Elements; but we now have the ſame in a ſtate of freedome, as not held under ſuch burthenſome Elements and Pedagogies as they were.

But elſewhere he ſhews this difference more expreſly both on God's part and our part. Firſt, On our part, Heb. 8. and elſewhere, thus, The Old Covenant, nant, which required ſo many external ſervices, is called a carnal Covenant; the New, wherein no ſuch are required, but works of the Spirit onely, is a Spiritual Covenant, whereof God means when he ſaith, v. 10. I will put my Laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and ſo he will be their God, and they ſhall be his people. For in the Old Covenant he wrote a Law as it were upon their hands and fleſhly members, in that he required ſo many fleſhly waſhings and ſprinklings and ſacrifices for expiation and cleanſing of ſin: whereas in the New he writes his Law onely upon the Soul and Spirit; in that he now ſtipulates onely the ſervice of Faith, which is an action of the inward man, and not of the outward; not of the hand or bodily members, but of the Soul within. For by Law here I ſuppoſe is meant the condition which God ſtipulates in the Covenant, and through which he makes good his promiſe unto us. Not as though this ſpiritual condition was not alſo required under the Law in the Covenant of Grace then; but becauſe it was not onely, nor ſo openly, therefore is it made as a formal difference of the New Covenant and the Old.

1 Cor. 10. 3. 4.

Jer. 31. 33.

Secondly, On God's part the Scripture ſhews the difference of the Covenants thus: The Old Covenant was a Covenant of worſer promiſes, the New a Covenant of better Promiſes, and ſo a better Covenant, Heb. 8. 6. Indeed they in the Old Covenant had the ſame Spiritual Promiſes we have, and ſo it was one and the ſame Covenant; but they had them not open and uncovered as we have, and ſo our Covenant is not the ſame, but a better Covenant. So S. Paul makes his compariſon in the ſame argument, 2. Cor. 3. 11. If that (ſaith he) which is done away was ſo glorious, much more that which remaineth. As if he had ſaid, If the Cover ſeemed ſo glorious, much more ſhall the Jewell within ſo ſeem, when the cover is taken from it, as now it is. For all the open Promiſes in the Old Covenant ſeem to be no other then Temporal bleſſings; as for Spiritual, they had them onely as enwrapped in them; ſo that they could look for them no otherwiſe but in and through the Temporal, which they had as Pledges of the Spiritual veiled under them: But in the New theſe are all revealed and no longer hid from us by ſuch curtains, the veil is taken from the face of Moſes, and we behold with open face the glory of the Lord, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh 2 Cor. 3. 14, 18. Remiſſion of ſins, Reconciliation with God, Everlaſting life, theſe are our Promiſes; not deliverance from Temporal enemies, worldly proſperity, nor the land of Canaan, or long life in the land the Lord hath given us. So the caſe here is quite altered: For then Earthly bleſſings were as Pledges of Spiritual; but now unto us, Spiritual are Pledges of Temporal, ſo far as God ſees

Matt. 6. 33. good for us; for the tenour of the Goſpel now is, Seek firſt the Kingdome of God, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you.

And it is now time we ſhould ſay with S. Paul, Rom. 11. 33. O the depth of the riches both of the Wiſdome and Knowledge of God! and with David, Pſal. 40. 5. Many, O Lord my God, are thy wonderfull works which thou haſt done, and thy thoughts which are to us-ward: and Pſal. 92. 5. O Lord, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep.

Obſerv. 2. Thus I come to a ſecond Obſervation which theſe words afford us; namely, If the Fathers ate the ſame Spiritual Meat and drank the ſame Spiritual Drink which we do, then eat we not the real Body, nor drink the real Bloud of Chriſt: For the Manna they ate was the ſame Manna ſtill, though a Sacrament of Chriſt; the Water of the Rock was verily Water ſtill, though a Sacrament of his Bloud: If then we eat the ſame Spiritual Bread, we eat Bread ſtill, though Spiritual Bread; if we drink the ſame Spiritual Drink, our Drink is Wine ſtill, though Spiritual Wine. Yea S. Paul himſelf calls them as they are, 1 Cor. 10. 16. The Bread we break is the communion of the Body of Christ; Ergo, That which is the communion of the Body of Christ is Bread still. And unless it should be so, how could there be a Sacrament, which must consist of a Sign and a thing signified, of an Earthly thing and a Heavenly thing? For if the Sign once becomes the thing signified, it is no more a Sign, and so then is no more a Sacrament. 1 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

If it be urged, That Christ himself saies plainly of the Bread, Hoc est corpus meum, This is my Body; of the Wine, Hic est sanguis meus, This is my Blood: I answer, He saies also * I am the Door; and in my Text is as expresly said, The Rock was Christ. If therefore it be absurd from hence to infer the Rock left being a Rock, and was made the real Person of Christ; so will it be of our Spiritual Bread and Wine. For the manner of these speeches is nothing but a figure of certainty or assurance: He that receiveth the Bread, as assuredly receiveth Christ's Body as if the Bread were his Body; He that receiveth the Wine, as assuredly enjoyeth the Blood of Christ as if this Wine were his very Blood indeed. A predication in casu recto is a predication of sameness, and therefore is used properly in things which are in a manner the same, as Genus and Species, Homo est animal; but in things which are disparate and of several natures we speak usually in concreto or obliquo: and from hence arises a Scheme or Figure of speech, when we would express a most near union of things even different, yet to speak them in casu recto, which is the predication of sameness, as it were to express they were as nearly link'd together as if they were the very same. So we are wont to say, a man is Vertue or Piety it self, meaning, they are throughly link'd unto him. And because of all other things the things in the Sacraments are so assuredly and throughly link'd together, the Holy Ghost used this Scheme for a Sacramentall speech, Hoc est corpus meum, and Hic est sanguis meus, that is, a Sign so sure as if it were the very same. Matt. 26. 26, 28. * John 10. 7.

And so I will come to a third Observation; The Fathers (saith my Text) ate the same Spiritual Meat and drank the same Spiritual Drink, therefore is our Sacrament also to be eaten and drunk of us, and not onely offered for us: Except we eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, we have no life in us. And very fitly: For as our Bodies are nourished by eating of corporal meats, so our Souls are nourished by the Spiritual feeding upon Christ. Observ. 3. John 6. 53.

This condemns that lurching Sacrifice of the Mass, where the Bread and Wine are offered as a Sacrifice for the people, but they receive no one jot thereof; they are invited to a Banquet, but eat never a bit: Even like the unbelieving Ruler spoken of 2 Kings 7. 19. who saw all the plenty foretold by Elisha, but ate no whit thereof. And what is it but, as Christ said, to light a Candle and put it under a Bushell: Matt. 5. 15.

They think it is enough if the Priest eats all himself, though he gives no body else any with him: But it is no less absurd to affirm that another should receive good by the Priest's receiving, then to hold one may be fed by the meat another man eats, or be saved by another man's Faith: Which were most ridiculous; for a man is nourished by his own meat, and the just must live by his own Faith. Hab. 2. 4.

Many strong Reasons might be alledged against this so foul a corruption, but I will comprise all in three. 1. It is against the expres commandment of Christ, whose words are, Eat ye all of this, and, Drink ye all of this. Had the Church of Rome been the true Spouse of Christ, she would never have presumed to abolish what he hath ordained, and to establish what her self hath devised, not only in this, but in many other actions; which is no less then to advance her self in Wisdome and Authority above the Son of God. Matt. 26. 26, 27.

2. It

1 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

2. It is against the nature of a Sacrament, which consists in receiving: For the main difference between a Sacrifice and a Sacrament is, that in the one we give to God, in the other God gives to us, and we receive of him.

3. It abolishes the Mystery of our consolation, and that whereby our Faith is strengthened in the use of these Holy Signs, that mankind might have an interest in Christ and what he should doe on our behalf. We know it was required he should be incarnate and take our nature upon him, which now he hath done. Every one of us can believe that what he hath done is for the behoof of mankind; and so some men shall be the better for it, since our whole kind by reason of his Incarnation is capable of the Benefits of his Passion and the whole work of Redemption. But in that though Christ became man, yet he took not upon him the nature of every several man, hence no man from his Incarnation could apply these Benefits unto himself in special: For he might say, indeed Christ was made man, and so man may be the better for him, and have some interest in him; but since he was not incarnate into me, how should I apply this unto my self? Why therefore the All-wise God, who knew our weakness, hath so ordained in the Mystery of this Holy Sacrament, that it is a Mysticall Incarnation of Christ into every one who receives it. Whence Gregory Nazianzen defines the Eucharist, κοινωνία ἐνσαρκώσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ, a Communion of the Incarnation of God. For in that he affirms the Bread to be his Body, and the Wine to be his Bloud; by receiving this Body and Bloud of Christ, and so changing it into the substance of our Body and into our Bloud by way of nourishment, the Body of Christ becomes our Body, and his Bloud is made our Bloud, and we become in a Mysticall manner flesh of his flesh and bone of his bone. And as in his conception of the Holy Virgin, he took upon him the nature of Man, that he might save Man; so in his Holy Sacrament he takes upon him the nature of every man in singular, that he might save every man who becomes him in the Divine Sacrament of his Body and Bloud. His real Incarnation was only in one, but his Mystical Incarnation in many: and hence comes this Sacrament to be an Instrument whereby Christ is conveyed unto us, his Benefits applied, and so our Faith confirmed.

How then do they abolish this Holy Mystery, this comfortable Analogy, where Christ is offered, but those for whom he is offered receive him not, but stand as gazing Spectatours, whilst the Priest alone is the Actor? But let us, who are so happy above them, who come hither as Receivers, and not as Gazers, let us, I say, consider how great a Gift it is which God gives us. Zaccheus gave a great Gift, half his Goods unto the Poor: Herod promised a greater unto the dancing Damsell: but the greatest of all is that which the * Prodigall giver offered our Saviour, even all the Kingdomes of the World. But all these Gifts are faln short, and of infinite less value then this transcendent Gift which God gives unto us; which makes S. John, when he speaks of it, to expresse it with an Emphasis, So God loved the World, that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believed in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Loe here the greatest Gift that Heaven can yield, or the Earth can receive. Let us therefore stirre up Hearts and Hands to give thanks and praise unto him of whom we receive so wonderfull a Gift, saying, with the Prophet, (Psal. 116. 12.) What shall we render unto the Lord for this admirable benefit?

Luk. 19. 8. Matt. 14. 7. * Chap. 4. 9. Ch. 3. 16.

Observ. 4. And thus I come to a fourth Observation which these words will lend us; namely, That the Apostle warrants here by his Example the Illustration of things in the Gospel by the Types of the Law. For if the Apostle uses an Example where one would scarce suspect there was a Type, much more doth he approve an application where a Type is plain and evident; and besides, seems ſeems to inſinuate thus much unto us, That all the extraordinary actions of God toward his ancient People had in them ſome Myſtery of ſome things to come, as this of Manna in the Wilderneſs. And I make no queſtion but the ſearching and ſuting of Allegories in theſe two kinds were allowable and profitable: But this is the errour of Allegorizers, They ſeek Allegories where they are not, but where they are they ſeldom look for them. For although the body and verity be of it ſelf more clear and evident then the ſhadow; yet always a Compariſon affords more light then a ſingle contemplation. 1 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

Now becauſe the Apoſtle hath led the way of this practice in the matter of the Euchariſt, let me have leave to ſecond him in another Inſtance of the ſame Argument, almoſt out of himſelf in the Chapter, not in ſo ſublime a kind, but in a plain and vulgar Type. Amongſt all the Sacrifices of the Law, there is none either for name or nature comes ſo near the Sacrament of the Supper as the Euchariſticall. The Paſſeover was a ſpecial kind hereof, where it is ſo well known that the Fathers ate the ſame Spiritual Meat we do, that I ſhall not need ſay any thing of it; only it ſhall ſuffice to ſhew the ſame in the whole kind of Euchariſticall Offerings, which is not ſo much obſerved.

An Euchariſticall Sacrifice or a Peace-offering was a Sacrifice of fire, or expiatory: a part whereof was burnt upon the Altar, as in other Sacrifices; but the remainder and greater part was eaten by the faithfull people who brought it; that ſo their Sacrifice being turned into their bodie's nouriſhment might be a Sign of their incorporation into Chriſt to come, who was the true Sacrifice for Sin. So, whereas other Sacrifices were only Sacrifices, this was alſo a Sacrament; the reſt were only for expiation, but this alſo for application, being a communion of that Sacrifice which was offered. Rightly therefore was it added to all other Sacrifices: for what profit was there of expiation of Sin, unleſs it were applied? Well might it then be called a Sacrifice of Peace, as containing in it a Communion of Peace, and Communion with Jeſus Chriſt, and through him with God the Father. The Greeks call it ſometimes Σωτήριον or a ſaving Sacrifice, but commonly Εὐχαριστικὸν, for the ſame reaſon we call our Sacrament of Peace Εὐχαριστία, both being to be celebrated with thankſgiving to God, both oral and real: For with this Sacrifice they uſed to offer their Heave-offering; and of this was the Commandment, That none ſhould appear before the Lord empty, when they came to ſolemnize their peace-making and reconciliation with God.

For in place of this Euchariſticall Sacrifice, whereof the Paſſeover was a ſpecial kind, hath Chriſt ordained our Εὐχαριστία, wherein, as they in theirs had a communion with him who was to come, ſo have we a Communion with him who is already come. And of this kind were the ordinary Sacrifices of the Gentiles, of which the Chriſtians were forbidden to eat, becauſe they might have no peace and Communion with Devils. And therefore our Apoſtle in the reſt of this Chapter compares theſe Three together; 1. the Peace-offering of the Jews, wherein they were partakers with the Altar or Sacrifice which figured Chriſt to come; 2. the Sacrifice of the Greeks, wherein they had Communion with Devils; and 3. the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which is the Communion of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt; and ſo concludes, Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of Devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's Table, and of the Table of Devils, verſe 21.

DISCOURSE XLIV.

1 Cor. 10. 5.

But with many of them God was not well pleaſed: for they were overthrown in the Wilderneſs.

THIS verſe conſiſts of two parts. 1. The condition under which the unworthy eaters of Manna and drinkers of the Rock Spiritual were; and conſequently of the unworthy receivers of the Sacrament of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt: foraſmuch as they ate the ſame Spiritual meat, and drank the ſame Spiritual drink which we do. This their condition is ſaid to be Of thoſe with whom God is not well pleaſed: For with many of them (ſaith my Text) God was not well pleaſed. 2. The ſecond thing here is, The danger of thoſe unworthy receivers in regard of the puniſhment which followeth them; For they were overthrown (ſaith our Apoſtle) in the Wilderneſs.

To ſpeak of the firſt; I will conſider the words firſt in general, and after in ſpecial, as they ſpecially concern the receivers of the holy Seals of God. In general therefore it is to be obſerved, That it is the greateſt degree and meaſure of unhappineſs and miſery in the world to be out of the favour of God, or to be one of thoſe with whom God is not well pleaſed: For our Apoſtle here intending no other thing but to expreſs a wretched and unhappy condition, utters it in this Phraſe, of being ſuch with whom God is not well pleaſed. This comprehends in it ſo much miſery, that the very naming of it he thought was ſufficient to make the Corinthians fear and tremble, when they ſhould conſider of that Spiritual Table, of that tremendum Myſterium, as the Fathers call it; and not to handle it with raſh and unholy hands at the firſt, or to diet themſelves afterward, upon ſo heavenly a receipt, with luſting after evil things.

How vain therefore is the opinion and practice of worldlings, who eſteem the favour of men and worldly reputation the higheſt pitch of Bleſſedneſs; who are ambitious of no other Happineſs but this; and laſtly, who ſpend their time, their care, their means, nay loſe (at leaſt hazard) the favour of God it ſelf, to compaſs the favour and eſteem of men; who admire none but thoſe who have gotten this! But alas! there is no Happineſs at all, but to be of thoſe Ἐν οἷς ὁ Θεὸς εὐδόκησε, in whom God is well pleaſed, to be in eſteem and reputation with God through Jeſus Chriſt, in whom alone he is well pleaſed. All Happineſs without this is no better then extreme miſery: Nay this ſuppoſed and ſo much deſired happineſs of being in reputation with the world, is ſo farre from making the owner happy, that the earneſt ſeeking and deſire thereof is incompatible with the ſtate of true Happineſs indeed. For ſo I think our Apoſtle would be underſtood, Gal. 1. 10. If I pleaſed men (ſaith he,) I ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt. Hence ἀνθρωπάρεσκοι, men-pleaſers, in our Apoſtle's ſtyle, are oppoſed elſewhere unto δοῦλοι τοῦ Χριστοῦ the ſervants of Chriſt, (Epheſ. 6. 6. Not as men-pleaſers, but as the ſervants of Chriſt;) and to φοβούμενοι τὸν Θεὸν thoſe that fear God, Col. 3. 22. as though ἀνθρωπάρεσκοι & ἀπάρεσκοι, ρεσκοι, men-pleasers and God-pleasers, could not stand together, according to that our Saviour also saith John 5. 44. How can ye believe (saith our Saviour) which receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour which cometh from God only? 1 Cor. 10. 31.

All this notwithstanding, I suppose, is to be understood of high prising of the favour of men, with a neglect of the favour of God in regard thereof: which though it may seem at the first sight a most unreasonable sin, and such as no man should be guilty of; yet is it so common and so usual, that it hath gotten to be enthroned in Wisdome's chair; and many Aarons there be which worship this Calf, many who would seem wise, which are over head and ears in this folly: For it is no unusuall thing to hear men excuse their neglect of pleasing God, by alledging that otherwise they must have fallen into the displeasure and disesteem of men.

Otherwise, who knows not that there are things wherein men may be lawfully pleased, such as are things indifferent, especially if it may work a further good? And therefore in these S. Paul will confess that himself had studied to please all men; and willeth others to doe the like, Rom. 15. 2. Let every one of us please his Neighbour for his good to edification; and in this Chapter, Give no offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the Church of God. Vers. 32. But we are not so much sick of this as of a worse disease; we deal as is reported of him in the Fable, who offered his God the shells, and kept the kernels unto himself: in trifles and things of small moment we vouchsafe God our service and obedience; but as for main matters, because they concern us so deeply and nearly, here God must be content to want our duty; whilst we apply our selves in all our words and actions as may most likely gain us the favour and good opinion of men, though hereby we earnestly run into this incomparable misery, to be one of those with whom God is not well pleased.

AND thus much for the general consideration of these words. The special (which now I come to) is, That the unworthy Receivers of the Sacraments are in the number of those men with whom God is not well pleased. Of unworthy Receiving and Receivers I make two; the one à parte antè, by undue preparation, the other à parte pòst, by unholy demeanour and conversation afterward. The former is unworthy to approch this Table at all, the other to have approched it. And of both these were the Fathers in the Wilderness guilty: For Manna being both their ordinary and sacred Food, their unholy and lustfull demeanour upon the former eating made them continually unprepared Receivers for the future. And so it is with us, An unholy life upon the first receiving is a great part of our unworthiness for the second; yea more unworthy are we then made then we had been upon the like conversation at the beginning: For to have broken so solemn a Promise to God as we bound our selves in at the first time, doubles our sin; and to have already abused so precious and gracious a gift which God then gave us, makes us doubly unworthy ever to find the like favour any more. As in Physick for the body a Preparative is required before, and a good and carefull diet to be observed after; so is it here: As also a distempered diet after Physick received will doe more hurt then it would before; so is it here.

Now because it is Sin which makes us lose the favour of God, and it alone which makes him not well pleased with us; that we may behold how justly God's displeasure is kindled by this unworthy Receiving, let us a while consider wherein the Sin thereof consisteth: which will appear

1. In the correspondence of the Receiver and the thing received. It is written Deut. 22. 9, 10. Thou * shalt not sow thy Vineyard with diverse kinds of seeds; Thou shalt not plough with an Ox and an Asse together: Whereby it appears, That God Almighty loves not to have things unsutable and incompatible joyned together; it is an unpleasing spectacle unto him. But * what fellowship hath light with darkness? what agreement between the holy Sacrament and a prophane heart? who will put precious water into filthy vessels, or wholesome wine into foul casks? It is the ground of Joshua's speech, Josh. 24. 19. to the children of Israel, You cannot serve the Lord, (saith he) for he is a holy God; that is, whilst you are wicked, the Righteous Lord who loveth Righteousness will not accept of your services.

* So in Levit. 19. 19. Thou shalt not sow thy field with mingled seed.

* 2 Cor. 6. 14.

Again, Almighty God hath ever required a correspondence between his holy Ordinances and those who were to be partakers of them. Thus the Shew-bread was appointed only for Aaron and his Sons, because they were holy; the Trespass and Sin-offering must be eaten in the holy Place, because it was most holy. The same thing is implied by our Saviour's proverbial precept, That pearls should not be cast among Swine. And which of us all would not be offended at a Dog, if we should see him devour the meat appointed for our Childrens Diet? Even such in God's account, and no better, are wicked persons. Beware of Dogs, beware of Evil-workers, saith S. Paul, Phil. 3. 2. and Apocal. 22. 15. Without the City of God are Dogs, Sorcerers, Whoremongers, &c. Now we know, Exod. 19. 13. that no Beast might touch the Mountain when the Lord appeared on Mount Sinai: So none of those whom God accounts in the number of Beasts (as all who have beastly affections) may approch into Christ's presence, or come unto his Table.

Matt. 7. 6.

Wherefore, as God saith, Be you holy, because I am holy; so may it be said unto all communicants, Be you holy, because the Sacrament is holy. Whence it was as worthy custome in the ancient Churches, for the Bishop or Deacon to proclaim at the holy Communion τὰ ἅγια τοῖς ἁγίοις, Holy things for them that are holy, holding in his hand the holy Sacrament. And good reason why; For where this holiness is not, there, in stead of comfort, the Heart is more and more corrupted. Even as the Spider gets strength of poison from the sweetest herbs and flowers; so the prophane Heart is strengthened in wickedness by receiving this holy and heavenly Food.

Lev. 11. 44, &c.

2. The hainousness of this sin is aggravated in respect of the thing received: for our Apostle elsewhere saith, The unworthy receiver becomes guilty of the Body and Bloud of Christ; that is, he is guilty of offering contumely, injury and indignity unto him. S. Paul, when he disswades Husbands from misusing their Wives, gives this for a reason, No man ever yet hated his own flesh. And may not I reason thus, Let no man offer injury unto Christ, because he is flesh of our flesh? yea he is our Head, and a wound or maim given to the Head is more odious and dangerous then to another part. To offer violence to a common person, is a fault; to strike a Magistrate, a greater; but to wound a King, who is the Lord's Anointed, is a sin in the highest degree. O what a hainous sin is it then to offer violence to, and as much as in us lies to strike and wound the Son of God, the King of Kings and the Lord of Glory!

1 Cor. 11. 27.

Eph. 5. 29.

To be guilty of death and shedding of the bloud of any innocent man, is a fearfull sin; and this made David cry out, Deliver me, O Lord, from bloud-guiltiness. How fearfull is it then to be guilty of the Body and Bloud of Christ! Whose heart is not moved against the Jews, when he hears or reads their villanies and violence offered to our Blessed Saviour? But Chrysostome gives us a good Take-heed, Take heed (saith he) lest thou be guilty guilty in the like kind, by unworthy receiving of the blessed Sacrament: He that defiles the King's body, and he that tears it, offend both alike; the Jews tore it, thou defilest it. Here are (saith the same Father) diversa peccata, sed par contumelia; some difference of the sin, but none of the contumely therein offered. 1 Cor. 10. 5.

Psal. 51. 14.

Joseph and Nicodemus their Pious devotion in begging and embalming the Body of Christ is worthily recorded and commended to all generations; Mary Magdalene in bestowing that box of precious oyntment upon his holy head hath gained to her self endless honour, in stead of her former infamy: So if we receive and handle worthily this Mystical Body of Christ, our portion shall be with honourable Joseph and pious Mary Magdalene; our memories shall be as theirs, blessed, and our souls as theirs, to receive unspeakable comfort: but if we come unworthily, we joyn with Judas and the Jews, and are guilty, as they were, of the Body and Bloud of Christ.

AND thus much of the first thing I propounded, The state of unworthy Receivers of these holy Mysteries, that they are men in whom God hath no pleasure, and therefore wofull and lamentable. The second thing now to be spoken of is, The danger of such unworthy Receivers in regard of the Punishment which followeth them: which as concerning the Fathers, my Text saith, was, That they fell, or were overthrown, in the Wilderness. In the back or outside of which words appeareth onely a Temporal punishment, which kind seemeth not so appliable in the times of the Gospel as it was in the time of the Law. Howsoever we see in the general, That it is true that the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his Name in vain; judgement shall seise either here, or at least hereafter, upon all prophaners and misreceivers of those sacred pledges, upon which is called the Name of Christ our Saviour and Redeemer.

But for the kinds of these punishments, whether Temporal onely, or Eternal, or both; I answer, The Fathers under the Law had Temporal as well as Eternal; we in the Gospel chiefly Eternal, and yet sometimes Temporal.

That ours are chiefly Eternal or of the life to come, the words of our Apostle elsewhere shew evidently, Whosoever eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation. This is certain, and this is more then all the torments, pains and miseries that this world hath, though Phalaris and his Craftsmaster were alive again to invent new ones. No tongue is able to express, no heart is able to conceive the woe and miseries which the damned soul in Hell is subject unto, which are as endless as they are easeless. And though this be great enough, yet hath not (nor is) the unworthy Receiver always been freed from suffering something even in this life. We know the Apostle would have the Corinthians take notice of the Wrath of God upon divers of them, for receiving the Sacrament unworthily. For this cause (saith he) are many sick and weak amongst you, and many are fallen asleep. Indeed Fathers correct not their children at riper years after the same fashion they did when they were young and little: So hath God not the same Discipline under the Gospel which he had under the Pedagogie of the Law, as Chrysostome saith; he doth not so often scourge offenders with the rods of Temporal chastisements, but rather reserves for them Eternal torments; yet who doubts but the hand of God is upon many unworthy Communicants, even by sorrow, sickness, death, and sundry other chastisements of this life? 1 Cor. 11. 29. 1 Cor. 11. 30.

But for the times under the Law, the words of my Text speaking of being overthrown in the Wilderness, would seem to imply there was no further thing which befell the unworthy eaters of Manna in the Wilderneſs, 2 Cor. 10, 5. and ſo our Apoſtle's argument from hence ſhould inferre no more to us in the times of the Goſpel.

For anſwer hereunto, I muſt call to mind ſomething which I have ſpoken heretofore, namely, That under the Law ſpiritual bleſſings were enwrapped in corporal, and conveyed under and with them as it were in pledges; which made the Few ſo highly to eſteem of worldly proſperities, and of thoſe who enjoyed them, as accounting them God's ſpecial Favorites. So alſo were Spiritual and Everlaſting plagues hidden under the curtains of Temporal judgements; which were to thoſe upon whom they fell as wofull pledges of them, and therefore made the Few account them accurſed who were overwhelmed with worldly adverſities. To come therefore to the words of my Text: Canaan was a Type and Pledge of the Heavenly habitation; The Wilderneſs ſignified our Pilgrimage in this wilde, ragged, rocky and barren world; To fall in the Wilderneſs was a wofull ſign of falling ſhort of the Heavenly Canaan, and deprival of Eternal life; thoſe who fell there, eſpecially upon occaſion of ſin, being ſuch as to whom God ſware in his wrath, that they ſhould not enter into his reſt; as it is in the Pſalm we ſay every morning. Thus we ſee how the unworthy eaters of the holy Myſteries in the Wilderneſs were not onely liable to plagues in this life, but that thoſe plagues ſerved them as Seals of their condemnation in the world to come; and therefore if we alſo eat the ſame Spiritual meat, and drink the ſame Spiritual drink unworthily, we ſhall eat and drink our own condemnation. Pſal. 95. 11.

Having thus ſeen the wretched condition and wofull danger of thoſe who come unworthily to this Spiritual Table; the ſerious conſideration hereof may ſtand up like the Angel with the flaming ſword, to keep every Adam from eating of the tree of Life. It ſhould make every one tremble who approcheth the Lord's Table with unwaſhed hands, I mean, a foul conſcience: whoſe hearts are full of wickedneſs, whoſe heads full of ungodly imaginations, and their hands defiled with wicked actions, how unworthy are they to come at this holy Banquet! As Jehu ſaid to Jehoram, Quid tibi cum pace, What haſt thou to doe with peace? So may I ſay here, What have thoſe to doe with the Sacrament, the Myſtery of peace? Indeed the Sacrament is a Robe to cover the repenting ſinner, but no cloak to a prophane Receiver of it: ſuch a one ſhall finde it like the forbidden fruit of Paradiſe, the bane of the Eater; and like a fair bait ſwallowed with a deadly hook, the death of the Receiver. 2 King. 9. 22.

Who being guilty, would drink of that curſed water, Numb. 5. 22. which made the thigh to rot and the belly to ſwell? and who being guilty of groſs ſin, will dare without Repentance to take that Sacrament which ſhall make him guilty of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt, and become an occaſion of his condemnation?

It is a pitifull thing when the Pſalmiſt's curſe befalls any, Let their Table be a ſnare: But that this holy Table ſhould become a ſnare to a Chriſtian ſoul, is more then lamentable. Our Saviour ſaid of Judas, It had been good for him if he had never been born; and ſo may we ſay of ſuch, It had been better they had never been Receivers of this holy Sacrament, for, alas! they have eaten and drank their own damnation: they had better have eaten ſome venemous thing, or drank ſome deadly poiſon, for it would onely have killed the body; but by eating and drinking the Sacrament unworthily, they have damned and deſtroyed both ſoul and body for ever. Pſal. 69. 22. Matt. 26. 24.

Laſtly, this danger may admoniſh every one of us to come worthily unto this Sacrament: For as Manna was unto every man's taſt according to his will, will, (as *S. Auſtine will have it;) ſo is the Sacrament to every one according to his worthineſs. As therefore the Chamber was trimmed wherein our Saviour kept his Paſſeover, and ordained his holy Manna; ſo ſhould the Chamber of every Chriſtian ſoul be cleanſed from wickedneſs and adorned with Grace that comes to receive Chriſt in this Sacrament. The waſhing of the Diſciples feet afore Supper, what doth it elſe call for but a cleanſing of our hearts before we communicate? We are unwilling that men ſhould ſee us come to this Table with foul hands; and ſhould we not be more carefull leſt God ſhould ſee us come with foul hearts.

2 Cor. 10. 5.

* In Ep. 118. In primo populo unicuiq; Manna ſecundum propriam voluntatem in ore ſapiebat. See this emphatically expreſſed in Wiſedom 16. 20, 21.

It will not be enough to ſay to our Saviour with them in the Goſpel, We have eaten and drank in thy company*, we have been at thy Table: We muſt come thither as we ſhould. For as corporal food doth rather hurt then nouriſh a body abounding with evil humours: So the Soul being fraught with vices, this heavenly food rather killeth then comforts it. As Adam in the ſtate of his Integrity might freely take and taſte of all the Trees in the Garden, (one onely excepted,) but after his tranſgreſſion he was juſtly reſtrained: So doth the Lord admit us unto his Table, if we come worthily; otherwiſe we are no welcome gueſts unto him. Therefore as it was ſaid to Moſes when he came near the preſence of God, Pluck off thy ſhoes, for the place whereon thou ſtandeſt is holy ground: So let all of us put off the ſhoes of our corruptions, and then we may approch with comfort to the holy Table of the Lord.

* Luke 13. 26.

Exod. 3. 5.

DISCOURSE XLV.

DEUTERONOMY 16. 16, 17.

Three times in a year ſhall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God, in the place which he ſhall chuſe: in the Feaſt of Unleavened bread, and in the Feaſt of Weeks, and in the Feaſt of Tabernacles: and they ſhall not appear before the Lord empty. Every man ſhall give as he is able, according to the bleſſing of the Lord thy God which he hath given thee.

THESE words are a commandment for the obſervation of the great and chiefeſt Feſtival times of the Law; not onely here mentioned, but elſewhere injoyned in the Books of the Law; as I think in three ſeveral places, Exod. 23. 14. and again 34. 23. and alſo Levit. 23. The words I read conſiſt of two parts: First, The Obſervation it ſelf; 2. A ſpecial duty required thereat. The Obſervation it ſelf comprehends four things. 1. The Work or Action commanded, which is, To appear before the Lord: 2. The Perſons who, every Male; all thy Males: 3. The Place where; in a ſelect place, in the place which the Lord ſhall chuſe: 4. The Time when; Three times in the year; In the Feaſt of Unleavened bread, bread, in the Feaſt of Weeks, and in the Feaſt of Tabernacles. The ſecond part, of a ſpecial duty required at this ſolemn ſervice, is a duty of real thankſgiving, viz. a holy preſent or oblation to be given unto God, and that expreſſed Firſt, in the kind, They ſhall not appear before the Lord empty; Secondly, in the meaſure, Every one ſhall give as he is able, &c. Of theſe I am to ſpeak in order, and firſt of the firſt, The Action enjoyned, To appear before the Lord.

1. To appear before the Lord, is in an Holy Aſſembly to perform a Religious ſervice unto him. For in every ſuch Aſſembly and Service he is preſent after a ſpecial and peculiar manner, according to that of our Saviour in the Goſpel, Where two or three are gathered in my Name, there am I in the midſt of them. And as when one man ſpeaks unto another, or hears another ſpeaking unto him, either is ſaid to be in others preſence: So he that comes to ſpeak unto God in Confeſſion, Prayer and Thankſgiving, and hath God likewiſe ſpeaking unto him either in the publiſhing of the Law, in the promiſes of his Goſpel, in the receiving of his Sacraments, and Miniſterial bediction, is truly ſaid to appear or come into the preſence of the Lord. To appear therefore in God's preſence is to be aſſembled in his publick Worſhip, where there is, as it were, a mutual entercourſe between him and us; and in this it is differing from private Devotion, where the one part onely is acted, and not the other. Every day is a day of private Devotion, yea every hour, if occaſion ſerveth; but a Holyday's work is the publick ſervice of God in a Holy Convocation.

Matt. 18. 20.

Seeing therefore as often as we come together for the Worſhip of God in the Holy Aſſembly of the Church, we appear in the preſence of the Majeſty of God himſelf, it may admoniſh us of the reverence we are to uſe in ſuch Aſſemblies. If when we come into the preſence of a Prince, we think an awful fear and a more then ordinary reverence doth beſt beſeem us in whatſoever we ſpeak or doe: much more is this required of us when we approch the preſence of the King of Kings and Lord of Hoſts. No geſture we uſe, no word we ſpeak, no action we doe, but ſhould be framed to expreſs the awe and regard we owe unto ſo great and high a preſence. If Order be any where required, it is here. If idle and vain words be in a far leſs preſence taken as contemptuous; in this they cannot be leſs then merely blaſphemous. If any unſeemly or unſutable geſture, if any neglectfull or regardleſs demeanour be elſewhere culpable; here it is abominable, when we are in his preſence who is the God of Order and Beauty, and gives us an expreſs command to perform all points of his Service

1 Cor. 14. 40. τάξιν καὶ εὐσχημόνως, according to order and comelineſs.

Exod. 3. 5. This makes him ſay to Moſes when he appeared in the Buſh, Pluck off thy ſhoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou ſtandeſt is Holy ground. Whence Solomon borrows his ſpeech, Eccles. 5. 1. Keep thy foot (or, look unto thy feet) when thou entereſt into the Houſe of God. This being as much as if he had ſaid, Behave thy ſelf in God's preſence reverently: Which in the words following he enlarges, ſaying, Be more ready to hear, then to give the ſacrifice of Fools—v. 2. Be not raſh with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be haſty to utter any thing before God; for God is in Heaven, and thou upon Earth, &c. And hither belongs that of S. Paul 1 Cor. 11. 4, 5, &c. requiring a ſeemly habit and geſture of men and women in the Holy Aſſemblies: the woman to pray covered, in token of her ſubjection; the man uncovered, as a ſign of his head-ſhip and ſuperiority over the woman, according to the uſe of thoſe times and places. And it is ſpecially to be obſerved which he ſpeaketh in the 10. Verſe, For this cauſe ought the woman to have power on her head, (that is, the enſigne of power to which ſhe is ſubject) ſubject) becauſe of the Angels; i. e. becauſe of the preſence of God attended with multitudes of Angels. For theſe are the Train of the Almighty, and as it were the Guard attending and miniſtring unto his preſence; whereſoever he keeps his ſtation, they pitch round about him. When Daniel ſaw him in the Viſion, thouſand thouſands miniſtred unto him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtood before him. Revel. 5, 11. I beheld, ſaith S. John, and I heard the voice of many Angels round about the Throne, and the number of them was ten thouſand times ten thouſand, and thouſands of thouſands. So when God appeared to Jacob going to Padan-Aram, he ſaw the Angels of God deſcending and aſcending upon a Ladder. Whence it appears that whereſoever God keeps his Court his Train is with him; and perhaps it were no errour to affirm, That the peculiarity of God's preſence in one place more then another did conſiſt in no other thing but in the miniſterial retinue of his Angels. Which if true, where ſhould his Angels encamp rather then in the Aſſemblies of his Saints, in midſt of whom he hath promiſed he would be? So will the ſpeech of S. Paul have an evident meaning, That we ought to attire and demean our ſelves with comelineſs, becauſe of the Angels, becauſe of the preſence of God in the miniſtry of his holy Angels.

Deut. 16. 16, 17.

Chap. 7. 10.

Gen. 28. 12.

Matt. 18. 20.

Who can conſider of this ſo great a preſence, with ſo glorious a retinue, and not be ſtrucken with a religious fear, with an holy reverence, as often as he is to appear before it? Let us then learn to ſay with Jacob, Gen. 28. 16. Surely the Lord is in this place, and be afraid as he was, and ſay, (v. 17.) מַה נּוֹרָא הַמָּקוֹם הַזֶּה How dreadfull is this place! this is no other but the houſe of God, and the gate (or Court) of Heaven.

AND now I come to the ſecond thing, The perſons who were to appear at theſe ſolemn Feaſts, Every Male; All thy Males ſhall appear. And here we are to enquire the reaſons, Why the Females or Women had an exemption from this ſolemn duty: which (to omit that of a Type of the Meſſiah, which ſome bring) I take to be theſe three. 1. The weakneſs and infirmity of that ſex, not able without much danger and trouble to endure ſo long a journey. 2. The danger of their chaſtity in ſuch a concourſe of people as was an Aſſembly of the whole Nation in one place. 3. The care of their tender infants and young children, and other houſe-affairs, which would have been wholly abandoned, if they as well as the Males ſhould have been at the ſame time ſo far away and ſo long abſent: neither can it otherwiſe be imagined how their houſes could be looked unto, unleſs the one were to ſtay at home in the abſence of the other. Again, it may be queſtioned whether all Males without reſpect were to appear; for it is not likely that young children ſhould, or decrepit old men could appear. I anſwer therefore, That it is to be underſtood of all Males who were within the age and years of ſervice, namely, between twenty and fifty; for at fifty it is apparent that all were emeriti, diſcharged from that duty, even the Prieſts and Levites ſerved not after that age; but at what years they came to be capable of ſervice, there is difference. The Prieſts might not ſerve in the Prieſts office afore thirty, Numb. 4. 3. nor the Levites in their office afore twenty five, Numb. 8. 24. but the Laity were capable of imployment and ſerviceable at twenty; as appeareth out of the 1 of Numb. 2, 3. where God commands Moſes to take the ſumme of all the children of Iſrael, from twenty years old and upward, all that are able to go forth to Warre; ſo implying that from twenty years of age they were able for that ſervice.

Theſe things thus explained and ſuppoſed, we may obſerve, That the indulgence of God admits the caſe of infirmity, unavoidable inconvenience, and requiſite imployment, as allowable reaſons of abſence from holy Aſſemblies:

For

Deut. 16. 16, 17. For theſe we have ſeen to be the reaſons of the exemption of Women from the annual and ſolemn Feaſts. And no queſtion but if the like caſes might happen even for their ordinary and Sabbath-Aſſemblies, God would in like manner diſpenſe. For weakneſs of body we have no reaſon to doubt; and for the other caſes mention'd, the equity being the ſame with that which here diſpenſed with Women for the ſolemn Aſſemblies, it is not to be doubted but the indulgence of God ſhould be the ſame, as well for other times as thoſe, and as well for the other ſex as for Women. And if in the time of that Law God was thus indulgent, when all theſe things were ſo ſeverely and ſtrictly exacted; much more in the liberty of the Goſpel, Chriſt himſelf here looſing the ſtrictneſs even of the Sabbath's reſt, alledging that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath: For of the two duties required in the obſervation of an Holy day, the calling of an holy Aſſembly, and bodily reſt from corporal labour, the Law ſeemed to exact this latter of reſt more ſeverely then the other, in regard it was a figure of things to come, which the other was not. If then that which was moſt ſtrict be releaſed; much more is the other, which was leſs, as free now as in former time. I ſpeak not this againſt a Religious diligence, for that is required of all who have no juſt impediment and ſuch a one as God himſelf ſhall allow; and therefore let no man deceive himſelf, for God (as the Apoſtle ſaith) is not mocked: But I ſpeak againſt that more then Judaical ſcrupuloſity of ſome, who think it not lawfull upon the Lord's day to leave any at home to keep houſe, or be imployed in ſuch buſineſſes as conveniency cannot diſpenſe with.

Mar. 2. 27.

Gal. 6. 7.

The ſecond thing I obſerve here is, That to obey God in what he commandeth is as it were a protection (or a warrant of ſecurity) from thoſe dangers which humane reaſon would otherwiſe think unavoidable: or, Obedience unto God in what he commandeth is a greater ſecurity then all the cautions and preventions that humane wiſdom can procure us. For who would think when all the able and ſerviceable men of the whole land of Iſrael ſhould thrice every year be gathered together at Jeruſalem, but the whole land ſhould be in great danger of invaſion from their enemies, whom ſuch an advantage could not but allure; and all their borders thus unfurniſhed, could not well prevent ſuch a miſchief? Nevertheleſs, we find not in the whole Scripture that ever any ſuch evil befell them upon this occaſion: So good a protection was Obedience: But we find an expreſs Promiſe to the contrary made by God himſelf, leſt you might think this was but a ſurmiſed danger; for Exod. 34. 24. where this commandment is alſo mentioned, God ſaith, I will caſt out the nations before thee, and enlarge thy borders; neither ſhall any man deſire thy land, when thou ſhalt go up to appear before the Lord thy God thrice in the year. But for all this we know their laſt wofull deſtruction by the Romans was at the time of the Paſſover, one of theſe ſolemn times: and no marvel; for when God meant to caſt them off from being any more his people, he ordered even this (perhaps) to be a token that they were no longer under his wonted protection.

When God commanded Abraham to ſacrifice his ſon Iſaac, though he knew not in reaſon how God could then make his Promiſe good unto him, To make his Seed by Iſaac in number as the ſand on the ſea ſhore; yet he was obedient to the word of God, and beyond all hope ſecure of God's Promiſe, as placing his greateſt ſecurity in his Obedience; as for the reſt, יהוה יראה, ſaith he, Deus providebit, God will provide, Gen. 22. 8. and ſo he did indeed.

I ſhall need gather no more Examples. Let no man therefore be diſcouraged for fear of danger to doe his duty in that calling and vocation wherein God

God hath ſet him. If God hath bid thee, hope thou likewiſe he will protect thee: But if thou neglect his commandment, ſo to avoid what thou feareſt, be ſure then that thou feareſt or a worſe will come upon thee; take heed thou goeſt not out of God's bleſſing into the warm Sun. Let Saul's example be our warning, who to prevent (as he thought) the ſcattering of the people from him, and the evil which longer delay might occaſion, if he ſhould ſtay for Samuel, preſumed to offer Sacrifice himſelf; but he was called a fool for his labour, and made to know at length that Obedience was better then Sacrifice. And ſo ſhall every one that makes ſo ungodly an experience, find his policy in the end plain foolery, and Obedience to God's Commandment better then all the Policy in the world.

Deut. 16. 16, 17.

1 Sam. 13. 8, &c.

Verſ. 13.

AND thus I come to the third thing conſiderable, viz. The place where every Male was to appear, In the place the Lord ſhall chuſe, namely, in the place where the Ark and Tabernacle of God ſhould be; which at the firſt was at Shiloh in the Country of Samaria and Tribe of Ephraim, afterwards at Jeruſalem in the Tribe of Juda, where David firſt pitched a new Tabernacle for the Ark of the Covenant, after it had been taken by the Philiſtins, and returned home again; and in the ſame place his ſon Solomon built that glorious Temple which was the Beauty of the whole earth. Of theſe two places ſpake the Samaritan woman in the Goſpel to our Saviour, John 4. 20. Our Fathers (ſaid ſhe) worſhipped in this Mountain, and ye ſay that Jeruſalem is the place where men ought to worſhip. By Our Fathers ſhe means the old Ephraimites, from whom the Samaritans falſly vaunted they were deſcended; upon which ground ſhe likewiſe calls Jacob Our father Jacob, v. 12. for they were indeed the off-ſpring of thoſe ſtrange Nations which Shalmaneſer tranſplanted into the Cities of Samaria, when he had carried Ephraim and the reſt of Iſrael captives into Aſſyria; as we reade 2 Kings 17. 24. By this Mountain ſhe means Mount Ephraim where Shiloh was, and the Ark and Tabernacle of God in ancient time had been.

3.

For when Manaſſes the brother of Jaddus the High Prieſt was excommunicated and driven from the Prieſthood becauſe he had married the daughter of Sanballat the Horonite, (as it is in the laſt of Nehemiah v. 28.) he with his faction, to vex his own Nation, procured a Temple to be built in Gerizim on Mount Ephraim, whereof himſelf was the High Prieſt; and to draw a company of Tranſgreſſors like himſelf from the Temple at Jeruſalem unto this, it was coloured as if this were the only place which the Lord had choſen, becauſe the Tabernacle was firſt pitched at Shiloh in Mount Ephraim, and not at Sion on Mount Moriah: and this was the bone of everlaſting diviſion and capital hatred between the Jews and Samaritans.

Thus we have ſeen where This place was firſt and laſt which the Lord had choſen. Now let us further conſider why it is thus called. The place which the Lord ſhall chuſe.

Firſt therefore, theſe words imply That the place for holy Aſſemblies was a ſelect place; For they were not to aſſemble in every place as occaſion and opportunity ſerved, but to have a choice and ſelect place for that purpoſe.

Secondly, This place for Legal worſhip was to be one only place, and no more; and therefore here the ſingular number is uſed. I ſay, there was but one only place for Legal worſhip, meaning Sacrifices and the ſervice accompanying them; for otherwiſe they had many Synagogues for hearing the Law read and expounded. Jeruſalem it ſelf had four hundred, and in thoſe the Scribes bore rule, as the Prieſts did in the Temple. But the reaſon why there was but one Temple, and place of Sacrifice and Prayer, was, for a Type of that one one only Mediatour Jeſus Chriſt, in whom alone our ſins are expiated, and our prayers and thankſgivings accepted before God: So that in the time of the Law to build an holy Altar or offer Sacrifices any where but here, though it were unto the true God, was a typical idolatry, becauſe it implied a multiplicity of Mediatours, of whoſe Oneneſs the one only place of worſhip and the one Altar was a ſigne; which was the reaſon why it was ſo unlawfull to ſacrifice in the high places, though it were unto the Lord their God: and yet becauſe it was but a ceremonial ſin, God did in the confuſed times of that Church ſometimes paſs by it, as it were, becauſe of the hardneſs of their hearts, as our Saviour ſaith in another kind. But he that did diſpenſe with an irregularity in figure becauſe of the ſtate of the times, will never allow idolatry in deed, ſuch as is that of the Church of Rome, who fulfill the very ſubſtance of that whereof the Jewiſh ſin was but a Type, whoſe Mediators are ſo many that they are not eaſily numbred: and though they for excuſe ſubordinate them all to Chriſt as the chief, and derive their Mediatorſhip from the virtue of his merits; yet is this but like unto that of the erring Church of the Law, which, notwithſtanding God's commandment to the contrary, had a conceit that they might ſacrifice in any high place, ſo it were unto the Lord their God only.

The third and laſt thing which theſe words imply is, That this ſelect and only place ſhould be of the Lord's own chuſing; The place he ſhall chuſe. But how ſhould the Lord chuſe it? it ſeems, by giving ſome extraordinary ſign of his allowance in accepting their Sacrifice; or it may be they did conſult him in this caſe by the Oracle of Urim and Thummim. For of the firſt place, in Shiloh, we have nothing expreſſed, but only reade Joſhua 18. 1. That the whole Congregation of Iſrael aſſembled together at Shiloh, and ſet up the Tabernacle of the Congregation there. But of the ſecond place, in Mount Sion, we reade, That * the Angel of God commanded Gad to ſay to David, that he ſhould ſet up an Altar in the threſhing-floor of Ornan; and that when David offered thereon burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, * the Lord anſwered him from heaven by fire upon the Altar of burnt-offering; and that David hereupon deſigned that place for the Tabernacle, and future Temple, ſaying, This is the houſe of the Lord God, and this is the Altar of the burnt-offering for Iſrael, 1 Chron. 22. 1.

* 1 Chron. 21. 18.

* Verſ. 26.

Now to make ſome application of this to the times of the Goſpel. The two laſt circumſtances of this place concern us not: For that of one place was a Type, and ſo is gone: the ſecond, of God's immediate choice, ſeems to be ſo alſo, and to be a figure of that which the Angel Gabriel ſaid to the bleſſed Virgin, Hail thou highly favoured, the Lord is with thee; bleſſed art thou amongſt Women: where God chuſes the womb of Mary wherein to erect that pure Altar and Temple whereof the Legal were but ſhadows. Thus theſe two circumſtances ſeem no waies to bind us. But the firſt, That there ſhould be ſelect places for holy Aſſemblies and the publick worſhip of God, this is that which was before the Law was given, and yet remains in force now the Law is ended. As long as it is required of the Church to appear before the Lord in publick Aſſemblies, ſo long is it alſo required to have choſen and ſelect places for that purpoſe. Adam and his Sons had places whither to bring their Sacrifices; the Patriarchs uſed Altars, Mountains and Groves to the ſelf-ſame purpoſe; from the very beginning of Chriſtianity Chriſtians have had their ſelect Oratories. 1 Cor. 11. 22. S. Paul ſpeaking of the Aſſemblies of the Church and ſome abuſes therein, as eating and drinking, Have ye not (ſaith he) Houſes to eat and drink in? or deſpiſe ye the Church of God? Here it appears that the place of holy Aſſemblies was not an ordinary place where men eate and drink, but a place ſelect select and set apart for holier purposes; which he yet more confirms when he addeth, v. 34. If any man hunger, let him eate at home: it follows hence, That the place of Holy Assemblies was no man's home, but a place hallowed unto God for the common use of the Church, howsoever these in the times of persecution so secret as not to be discovered by the Gentiles. What hath been the practice since in all Ages, he hath no eyes that sees not; and if there be any who cannot behold them without a desire to have them levelled, it were better their eyes were plucked out then so many monuments of our Forefathers piety should be thrown down and ruined, and God so unseemly and disorderly served, as he should be if, as Beggers doe for lodging, so his Assemblies were every week or month to seek a place of entertainment. Deut. 16. 16, 17.

We are therefore as well as the Israelites to appear before the Lord in a chosen place. But here is the difference, that they were to have but one, we have liberty to have many; there God chose a place for himself, but we in the Gospel have liberty to chuse a place for God where we will. Nevertheless it is to be observed, that the Leaders of the Primitive Church, howsoever they acknowledged this liberty, yet they used to select for their Assemblies such Places as God had any way dignified or honoured either by some work of mercy, or the glorious sufferings of his Martyrs; whereupon the most ancient Monuments of the Christian Churches do mention the Assemblies of Christians In Cœmeteriis Martyrum, at the Cœmeteries and Monuments of their Martyrs. For howsoever God did not immediately select the place of his worship then, as he did in the time of the Law; yet they thought he had made these places of a choicer fitness then other; though none of necessary obligation: which I for my part would be loth to condemn as an errour; seeing to follow the order of the Church of Israel by way of direction and not obligation, is no abridgement to Christian liberty, so it be only so farre and in those things only whereof Christianity is capable, as I think this we speak of was; though I know it was afterward an occasion of damnable Idolatry, use of erecting Temples unto Saints and Angels. But what is there which the corrupt nature of man will not make an occasion of sin? Even as an unclean body of the best nourishment will breed evil humours: So out of the most wholesome ordinances our wicked hearts will contrive superstition.

IN THESE words being a commandment for the observation of the three solemn and principal Feasts of the Law, were Four things considerable. 1. The Work or action; To appear before the Lord: 2. The Persons who; All Males: 3. The Place where; In the place the Lord shall chuse: 4. The Time when; Thrice in the Yeare: In the Feast of unleavened bread, In the Feast of Weeks, and in the Feast of Tabernacles. Of the three first, the Action, the Persons, and Place, I have spoken. Now therefore I come to 4. speak of the Time, The Feast of unleavened bread, &c.

The Feast of vnleavened Bread is that which is otherwise called The Feast of the Passeover, consisting of seven daies, from the fifteenth of March untill the twenty first. On the Even before this solemn Feast, the fourteenth day of the first month, was killed and eaten the Paschal Lambe; on the seven daies following were offered the Paschal Sacrifices, and no other Bread but unleavened eaten; the first and last daies being daies of holy Assemblies or Convocations. The Feast of Weeks was a Feast kept at the end of seven Weeks, or a Week of Weeks, after the second day of the Passeover, or fifty daies after the first day of the Feast of unleavened bread; and therefore called The Feast of Weeks, that is, a Feast to be kept a Week of Weeks after the Passeover; and Pentecost, because the first day thereof was the fiftieth day after the first of the Passeover, as now our Whitsuntide is ἡ μεγάλη πεντηκοστὴ, the fiftieth day after Easter. This Feast was likewise of seven daies continuance, all spent in multitude of Sacrifices, but the first and last specially in keeping of holy Assemblies. The Feast of Tabernacles, Scenopegia, was a Feast of eight daies continuance in the seventh month, or September, from the fifteenth day thereof to the two and twentieth, all whereof had their proper Sacrifices; and the first seven daies they dwelt in Booths or Tabernacles made of Willow, Palme, Myrtle and Citron boughs, whence it hath the name of the Feast of Tabernacles. The first, and the last or eighth day, were here also daies of an holy Convocation, wherein no servile work might be done.

Thus having in brief described the Time, Continuance and Service of these Three solemn Feasts, now let us also see what was the End of their institution. The End of these Feasts was partly for Remembrance of things past, and partly for Types and Figures of things to come; which I will shew in them severally.

The Feast of the Passeover was for a thankfull Remembrance of their great deliverance out of Egypt, when for haste they were forced to carry their dough unleavened upon their shoulders; and the evening before, the Lord having slain all the first-born of Egypt, yet passed by them, because of the bloud of the Paschal Lamb which he saw upon the door-posts of their houses. For this cause they were, whensoever that happy time of the year should come, to rejoyce before the Lord their God, and to hallow it after the manner afore mentioned. And thus you have the first End, The memorial and remembrance of benefits past.

The second End was for a Type and Figure of things to come, namely, of our deliverance from the bondage of Sin and Satan by that immaculate Lamb, Christ Jesus, who in the same month and day was foreordained of God to be slain upon the Cross for the sins of the whole world; whose Bloud upon whatsoever Soul God shall espie applied by a lively Faith, he would spare, and not destroy it.

Thus much of the first Feast. The second, The Feast of Weeks, or Pentecost, was for a Remembrance of the Law at that time given upon Mount Sinai, with thundring and lightning, and the sound of a Trumpet from Heaven. And secondly, for a Type of the Doctrine of the Gospel, which was published at the self-same time, when with a sound from Heaven, cloven tongues of fire fell upon the Apostles, and they all were filled with the Holy Ghost, as we reade Acts 2. 2, 3, 4.

Now for The Feast of Tabernacles; the first End is plain, that it was a memoriall, namely, of their long dwelling in Tabernacles in the Wilderness. Lev. 23. 42, 43. Ye shall dwell in booths seven daies (saith the Lord,) all that are Israelites born shall dwell in booths; That your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths when I brought them out of the Land of Egypt.

But of what thing concerning Christ to come it was a Type, it is not so expresse as in the former. But by that which S. John saith, Chap. 1. 14. Καὶ ὁ λόγος σὰρξ ἐγένετο, καὶ ἐσκήνωσεν ἐν ἡμῖν, The Word was made flesh, and Tabernacled in us; for so signifies ἐσκήνωσεν: by this, I say, S. John should seem to intimate, That as the Passeover was a Type of his Passion, Pentecost a Figure of the sending the Holy Ghost; so should the Feast of Tabernacles be for a Type of his Incarnation, when the Divine Nature tabernacled in our flesh, and the Word of God became Emmanuel, God with us. For it is incredible that this principal Feast should not be for a Type of some principal thing concerning Christ as well as the rest; it being as solemn as any of the former former two, nay rather the chiefest of the three, as having a more extraordinary course of Sacrifices then either of the other, yea of one day's more continuance, this having eight festival daies, the other two but seven. And there is nothing but his Incarnation and Nativitie which can be applied thereunto; and it may be therefore was the eighth day added thereunto, as figuring the time of his Circumcision. Deut. 16. 16, 17.

Another custome used at this Feast may confirm this: For while they gathered and carried the Boughs whereof they made their Tabernacles, there used a kind of Litanie to be sung, in which the people continually cried Hosanna, Hosanna, that is, Save now; which was so usual, that in time the Feast, and Boughs, and all came to be called Hosanna's: Whence came the cry of the people in the Gospel, when they cut down boughs to honour our Saviour's riding upon an Asse, Hosanna to the Son of David, Hosanna in the Highest. For though it were at another time of year then the Feast of Tabernacles, yet the carrying of Boughs put them in minde of the accustomed acclamation at that Feast. All which seems of purpose so to be ordered by the providence of the Almighty, to shew, First, what this ceremony of Tabernacles aimed at, namely, the mysterie of our Redemption by God in the Tabernacle of our flesh; or the Incarnation of Christ, which is that which made him Jesus, a Saviour, and us to cry unto him by Faith, Hosanna, Save now. And Secondly, that it might be known who this Tabernacle was, the people by a secret providence cried unto our Saviour, even at another time, Hosanna to the Son of David; ascribing, in their so speaking, the whole ceremony of Boughs and Tabernacles unto him.

But it will be objected, That the Birth of Christ was in December, but the Feast of Tabernacles was kept the fifteenth day of the seventh month, which answered in a manner to our September; and therefore had the Feast of Tabernacles been a sign of his Incarnation, the time should as well have agreed here as it did in the Passeover and his Passion, the giving of the Law and the sending of the Holy Ghost: But between the Feast of Tabernacles and the Birth of our Saviour is three months difference.

For this Objection, give me leave to relate, not mine own, nor as my own, but the opinion of the most learned Chronologers; the summe and conclusion whereof is, That the Birth of our Saviour was in September, at the time of the Feast of Tabernacles, and not in December, as the memory thereof is now celebrated. For first, it is apparent that in the primitive Church there was neither certainty nor agreement about the time of the Nativitie, as * Clemens Alexandrinus witnesseth; and himself saith, That those who enquire more exactly of the time, do assign the five and twentieth of the month Pachon, which is our twentieth of May.

* Strom. l. 1.

Others assigned other and diverse times, as Epiphanius witnesseth four hundred years almost after Christ: so long therefore there was no certainty agreed upon. And it was after the time of Constantine that the day we now observe was chosen, and first in the Latine Church; but not in the Greek till the daies of Chrysostome, who made an * Oration, yet extant, upon the first observing of this day, which he says they now received from the Roman Church.

If any would know how, after so much uncertainty of opinions, they came at last to resolve upon this day; they will tell you, that it was upon a false suppositall and a mistaken ground: For finding in the Law, that the High Priest was once every year to enter the most Holy place, and there to offer incense, (at the Feast of Expiation) and reading in S. Luke's Gospel, that the Angel Gabriel appeared to Zachary as he went to offer incense in the Temple, they supposed that he was the High Priest, and reasoned

Deut. 16. 16, 17. thus; The time of the High Priest's offering incense in the most Holy was about the middle of September, namely the tenth day of the seventh month: Now as soon as Zachary had fulfilled the Week of his Ministration John Baptist was conceived, which must therefore be about the end of September: Now when the Angel saluted Mary, he told her, That her Cousin Elizabeth had been with Child six months: If John Baptist then were conceived about the end of September, our Saviour must be conceived six months after, which falls about the end of March; which if true, his Birth will fall at the end of December, nine months after his conception. This was the ground whereupon the Feast of Christ's Nativitie was fixed upon the five and twentieth of December.

Luke 1. 36.

To which they answer who think otherwise, First, That neither the Angel appeared to Zachary in the most Holy place, for the Altar of incense was without the Veil, at which the Text saith the Angel appeared: neither could Zachary be the High Priest, for the Text saies, he was of the course of Abia, and that it came to his lot to offer incense; but the High Priest was of no course, neither did the incensing of the most Holy fall to him by lot, but it was his onely and proper office: the ground therefore was altogether mistaken.

Luke 1. 11.

Vers. 5.

Secondly, At the Birth of Christ every man, woman and child was to goe to be taxed at the City whereto they belonged, whither some had long journeys: But the middle of Winter was not fitting for such a business, especially for women with child and children to travell in: Therefore Christ could not be born in the depth of Winter.

Again, At the time of Christ's Birth the Shepherds lay abroad watching with their flocks in the night-time; but this was not likely to be in the middle of Winter. And if any shall think the Winter-wind was not so extreme in those parts, let him remember the words of Christ in the Gospel, Pray that your flight be not in the Winter. If the Winter was so bad a time to flee in, it seems no fit time for Shepherds to lye in the Fields in, and Women and Children to travel in.

They conclude therefore, That the Birth of Christ was in September.

First, Because otherwise this third Feast of Tabernacles should have nothing answering, as the other had: which they think the more unlikely, because there was no month in the year had more legal Feasts then this; as the Feast of Trumpets the first day, the Feast of Expiation on the tenth, and that of Tabernacles on the fifteenth unto the two and twentieth.

Secondly, Joseph Scaliger proveth it by the four and twenty courses of the Priests; and shews, that Abia's course or week, wherein Zachary served, began the one and twentieth of July, and ended the eight and twentieth that year. Our Saviour's conception therefore, being six months after, must fall at the end of December, and so his Birth nine months after, about the end of September, the four and twentieth day whereof that year began the Feast of Tabernacles; and so his Birth falls in the Feast time.

Lastly, The Primitive Church of Alexandria, where were the best Calculators of times, kept the Feast of John Baptist's Nativity the eight and twentieth of the month Pharmuth, which is the three and twentieth of our April, as Cyril witnesseth in an Homily upon that occasion. Now if John Baptist were born the three and twentieth of April, the Birth of Christ, which was six months after, must fall in the latter end of September, as aforesaid. All which if true, the day we observe is not the day of his Birth, but onely the day wherein we solemnly remember it: and though the time it self, if known, were the most fit for such a solemnity, yet no time can be unlawfully chosen for such a day. And thus I have shewed you the Time, the Manner, and and the Signification of these three Feasts. Now let us see what profitable Observations this Discourse thereof will afford us. Deut. 16. 16, 17.

First therefore, By these Feasts it appears, that the hallowing unto God of more daies in the Week then one is not against the meaning of the fourth Commandment. Some there are who will have the words [Six daies shalt thou labour] to be as much a Commandment as [Keep holy the Seventh;] and hence argue, that it is no more lawful for humane Authority to forbid working any of the Six daies, then to forbid the holy observation of the Seventh; and then all our Holy-daies besides Sunday are unlawful. But by these Three solemn Feasts, which were each of them of a Week's durance at the least, it is manifest, that Six daies shalt thou labour are no Commandment, but expres onely an ordinary permission of working: For it could not be but some daies of these holy Feasts must be of the Six; and to think that God would gain-say his own Commandment by a contrary Ordinance, is unimaginable. As therefore when he commanded that men should give him the Tenth of their increase, he forbade not Free-will-offerings, nor that men might not give half their goods to sacred uses: So when he commanded one day of Seven to be universally and necessarily kept holy, this hindreth not but the Church may hallow other daies to God even of the Six.

But they will say, God indeed appointed some other days to be observed besides one of Seven; but the Church had no leave so to doe. I answer, The contrary appears by the Feast of Purim, which Mordecai caused to be ordained, and is no where reproved therefore, nor the Jews who observed it as long as their Church stood. The contrary also appears by the Feast of Dedication, which Judas Maccabæus, when he had cleansed the Temple from the prophanation of Antiochus, ordained yearly to be kept in November; which was so farre from reproof, that our Saviour himself while he was upon earth honoured it with his presence, as we reade John 10. 22. And it was at Jerusalem the Feast of Dedication, and it was Winter; where the word [Winter] is of purpose put to specifie this Feast of Judas Maccabæus, in the Month of November, on the fourteenth day.

Secondly, we may observe from these Feasts, That the fittest time to hallow unto God is that which he hath as it were honoured and made remarkable by some special work and mercy of his. For you heard that the Feast of Unleavened bread and the Feast of Weeks were ordained to be kept at those daies and times of the year, wherein those works of God remembred in them were performed. So God himself appointed of all the days of the Week the Seventh to be kept holy, because he finished then the great work of the Creation of the World. So in the Gospel, of all the days in the Week the First was chosen, because on it Christ rose from the dead. In like manner when the Church would hallow unto God more days then one of seven; it being the Times of his Passion, Ascension, and sending of the Holy Ghost, as also the days of their Births or Deaths whom God had made as Pillars to support his Church, and in whose sufferings it was confirmed, and himself glorified.

The third and last Observation is this, The practice and fact of man is no sound argument to prove what is and what is not jure Divino. For we see in this and three other places how expresly this Feast of Tabernacles was commanded yearly to be observed. Nevertheless, which is past all belief, it was never kept, at least in this main circumstance of dwelling in booths, from the time of Joshua until after their return from Captivity in the daies of Nehemiah, which was the space of a thousand years at the least, and the most flourishing time of their Church and Commonwealth. Who would have thought but some David, Salomon, Hezekiah, Josiah, or good Jehoiada, would in so long a time as a thousand years have reformed so great a neglect of God's commandment? But hear what the holy Ghost saies, Nehem. 8. 17. Since the daies of Jeshua the Son of Nun unto that day had not the Children of Israel done so. A horrible thing to hear; but whatsoever was written in former time is written for our learning. And who knows whether there be not in this sinfull omission of this Feast alone above the rest some special Mystery; namely, that the Jew should not acknowledge Christ, whom this signified to be Emmanuel? For that Jesus of Nazareth suffered upon the Cross they acknowledge, whereof the Passeover was a sign; and therefore they blasphemously call him, Talui, The hanged God. They will not deny also that this doctrine was published at the Feast of Pentecost; though they believe not the mysterie and fruit of either the one or the other. But, That he is God in our flesh, they could never endure to hear: we know this was the cause why their Synod condemned him, because he said, He was the Son of God. Above a thousand years they omitted the observation of the Feast of Tabernacles, and now it is sixteen hundred wherein they have not believed that the Divine nature tabernacled in our flesh. When they returned from Captivity, they began to observe this so-long-neglected Ceremony; and when they shall return again from their now-long and wofull Captivity, we hope they will then with us acknowledge this great Mystery.

Rom. 15. 4.

John 19. 7.

HAVING hitherto spoken of the observation of these Feasts; now I am, according to my first Division, to come unto a second part of my Text, wherein is contained a special duty required of all when they came to worship God at these Feasts, namely, to bring a present with them: not a Sacrifice of fire, for these were of another nature, and for another end; but a Heave-offering, which kind was a Tribute of Thankfulness unto God, and withall of acknowledgement of his Supreme Lordship and Dominion over all: For without a Sacrifice or a fiery-offering the Feast could not at all have been kept, but without a Heave-offering or religious present it might, though nothing dutifully: and therefore is this specially added, That no man should appear before the Lord empty; for the Lord our God is a soveraign King, and will be acknowledged so of all who come before him: He is not Lord over our Persons onely, and therefore requires the service both of our Souls and Bodies; but he is Lord of our Goods too, and so is to have a Tribute of them offer'd unto him in token thereof.

But for the better handling of this point without confusion, we will consider, first, What was the Jewish practice in this duty; secondly, What ought to be our imitation. For the former, The Jewish practice was, as farre as I can gather, besides some special presents at Easter and Pentecost, to perform all their Heave-offerings, First-fruits, Firstlings of Cattel, Tithes of all things, and their Free-will-offerings at some one of these three Feasts, according as the season of the year served for the things they were to offer. For the better understanding of which, we must premise something of the manner of the Husbandry of Palestine, Egypt, and those neighbour Southern Countries, because it was much different from ours.

In Ægypto hordeum sexto à satu mense, frumenta septimo metuntur. Plin. lib. 18. cap. 7.

Plinie affirms, that in Egypt (and therefore in Palæstine) Barley was ripe in the sixth month after it was sown, and Wheat in the seventh. The same Author affirms, that their seed-time for both began in the month of November; whence it follows, that Barley was ripe almost a month before the Wheat, the seed-time being the same, and the Wheat not ripening a month so soon as Barley. Barley then ripening in the sixth month, the Harvest thereof fell about the beginning of April, Wheat-harvest nigh a month after;

after; their whole Harvest by this means beginning at Easter, and ending at Whitsuntide. Which is the reason why Pentecost, Exod. 23. 16. is called, חג הקציר The Harvest-Feast, or, The Feast upon the end of Harvest. This shews a reason also, why upon the Plague of Hail we reade, Exod. 9. 31, 32. that the Flax and Barley was smitten, because the Barley was eared, and the Flax bolled: But the Wheat and Rye were not smitten, for they were not grown up: The eare yet appeared not, for this was about the beginning of the month of March, as we may suppose a fortnight or three weeks before their coming out of Egypt, which was the fourteenth day of the first month. This was a reason also why we reade, 2 Sam. 21. 9. that seven of Saul's Sons were hanged for the Gibeonites in the first daies of Harvest, in the beginning of Barley-Harvest. All which suppose Barley to begin, and Wheat to end their Harvest. Which with us is contrary, because Barley is sown so long after Wheat, viz. when Winter is past, because it is a tender grain, and will not endure the sharp and piercing cold of these Northern climates. Deut. 16. 16, 17.

As for their Vintage or Harvest of Oyle and Wine, it was in the seventh month; or beginning of Autumn, as in other Countries.

For their Cattel, they had two breeding times, the beginning of the Spring, and the beginning of September: but the Spring-breed was the strongest, and are called Becorim, that is, not the first opening the wombe onely, as most take it, but the firstlings of the year; for the latter breed was much the worse and weaker. Which Jacob knew, Gen. 30. 41, 42. when he laid his Rods before the Cattel when they were * strong, in the Spring-time; but he put them not in when they were * feeble, in the Autumn; So (saith the Text) the feebler were Laban's, and the stronger were Jacob's.

* בימי ניסן In Nisan or March.

* בימי תשרי In Tisri or September. So Aben Ezra upon the place.

This thus explained, let us now see what the Practice of the Jews was at these solemn times, that they might not appear in the Lord's presence empty-handed. At the Feast of unleavened bread, or Easter, upon the second day thereof, being the beginning of Harvest, they were to bring a Sheaf of the first-fruits of their Harvest unto the Priest, and he was to wave it before the Lord; and untill this were done, they might eat no Corn, whether parched or otherwise in the green eare, as appeareth Levit. 23. 10.—14. And hence this second day of the Feast was called, This was that day whereon (Luke 6. 1.) Christ's Disciples plucked eares of Corn, and ate them, for S. Luke saies it was ὃν Σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, which is the second day of the first Sabbath, or the day after the first Sabbath; for I told you, that the first and last daies of this Feast were daies of holy Assemblies, wherein no servile work might be done, and are therefore in Leviticus called Sabbaths; the day after the first of which Sabbath, S. Luke calls Σαββατων δευτεροπρωτων. Whereby it may seem that the Pharisees reproved the Disciples, not so much for breaking any Sabbath's rest, as for eating the eares afore it was lawful; for if it were lawfull upon a Sabbath-day to reach meat from a Table, why should it not be as lawfull to pluck eares of Corn to eat them without breach of the Sabbath? But I leave this.

Secondly, At this Feast also I suppose they paid their Firstlings and Tithes of Cattel; for God was to have of the best, which was (as I told you) the Breed of the Spring at this time ready. And this is the reason, that where this Feast is commanded, there follow presently some Precepts of the Firstlings of the Cattel, because namely it concerned the same time.

Now at the Feast of Pentecost, when Harvest was ended, they are commanded to bring two wave-loaves* of their new Corn for a second First-fruits of their Harvest: At which time also they paid Tithes of Corn, so much as was threshed; and a Tribute also of a Free-will-offering of their hand, as

* Levit. 23. 17.

Deut. 16. 16, 17. it is called in the 10. of this Chapter. And this Feast ending their Harvest, is a reason why at the mentioning thereof you shall find precepts of not gathering their Lands clean, but that they should leave something for the poor to glean: which also was a secondary Offering unto God himself.

Lastly, At the Feast of Tabernacles they offered First-fruits and Tithes of Wine and Oyle, which was the Offering of that season; and besides the remainders of their Tithes of the floor or of threshed corn: which is the reason why this Feast is called, Exod. 34. The Feast of gathering in at the years end; and in this Chapter afore my Text, The Feast of gathering in of the Floor and the Winepress: For at this time all their Corn was threshed, and the Vintage done, and other Fruits were gathered, and so an Offering of them given unto God seasonably: therefore in the commandment of this Feast you shall find a precept of not gathering their Grapes and Fruits clean, in behalf of the Poor also.

Thus you see, the Offering of Cattel was at Easter, of Bread and Bread-corn in part at Pentecost, of Wine and Oyle and the remainder of Corn at the Feast of Tabernacles; whereupon we reade, 2 Chron. 31. 7. that the people which paid their Tithes there at Hezekiah's command, began to lay the foundation of the heaps in the third month, that is, at Pentecost; and finished them in the seventh month, namely, at the Feast of Tabernacles.

NOW having shewed what was the Jews practice, let us also see our duty in imitation of them, which I will only at this time shew briefly and generally. Certainly, we are bound also not to appear before the Lord with empty hand. It is not enough to give at other times, but it is a piece of the Worship required at that time. For we must know that the actions of Men in holy Assemblies are not like their private actions at other times; for all the actions here are not the actions of several men, but to be accounted as one action of the whole body: which makes S. Paul use the phrase, 1 Cor. 11. 20. when ye come together ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό, to be as it were one and the same: every prayer here is not many prayers, if many, but one prayer of all as one: whether we say I in the singular, or We in the plural, all is one; for [I] here expresses one made of many, and [We] many made into one. Whatsoever worship God requires therefore of any one alone, the same he requires also of all met together as one; for he is God as well of the body of the Church as a body, as of any one in the Church as a Christian; and therefore requires some of them in both kinds, that is, Confession, Prayer, Thanksgiving, and an Offering of the hand too of the body of the Church assembled, as well as of any one at any other time.

S. Paul ordained so in the Churches on the Lord's day, the day of holy 1 Cor. 16. 2. Assembly, the day when many came together as one. Every first day of the Week, let every one lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him.

The Primitive Christians practised the same in all their Assemblies, alledging these words of my Text for the same, as we may see in Justin Martyr, Irenaus, and others. Nay, they used to offer at the Lord's Table some handfull of those Offerings and Tithes to which they would entitle the Lord; whence the ancient Liturgies run, Μνήσθητι, Κύριε, τῶν καρποφορούντων ἐν ταῖς ἁγίαις ἐκκλησίαις σου, Remember, O Lord, those who offer of their fruits and encrease in thy holy Churches.

We have also in our Liturgy a Service for the Offertory, and many places of Scripture at the same read to move our devotion every Sunday, and a Prayer to God at the end thereof, That he would accept our Alms and Prayers, when we seldome bring him any.

Our Blessed Saviour, though he had nothing in this world but the contribution of good People in a Bagge; yet that he might in this also fulfill the the Law of God, he uſed at theſe ſolemn times to give unto the Poor: which we may gather from the ſtory of his laſt Supper; for the Text ſaith, when he bade Judas doe quickly what he had to doe, his Diſciples thought he had bid him give ſomething unto the Poor, becauſe he carried the Bagge; which they would not have thought, unleſs he had wont to doe ſo at ſuch times. Deut. 16. 16, 17. John 13. 29.

DISCOURSE XLVI.

S. MATTHEW 5. 23, 24.

If thou bring thy Gift [τὸ δῶρόν σου] to the Altar, and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee [ἔχει τι κατὰ σοῦ·] Leave thy Gift, and go thy way, firſt be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy Gift.

THE Fathers and Doctors of the Church next after the Apoſtles conceived this Ordinance of our Saviour to be meant, by way of anticipation, of the Holy Euchariſt, which he here intimates ſhould be the Evangelical Oblation; the peculiar Rite and requiſite whereof ſhould be this duty of Reconciliation and Charity with our brother. Whence in all the Liturgies of the Chriſtian Churches throughout the world it was accordingly ordained (and that, as may juſtly be preſumed, in the Apoſtles own times) That when the Offertory was to begin, (for know, that every one who was to receive or be partaker of the Holy Communion, firſt offered his Gift of Bread and Wine,) the Deacon ſhould proclaim, Μή τις κατά τινος, Let no man have ought againſt his brother, (or ſome other Form to the ſame effect) and then every one to reconcile himſelf to his brother.

You ſhall hear ſome of theſe Primitive Doctors ſpeaking in their own words. Clem. Romanus Conſt. lib. 2. c. 53. Ἐὰν προσφέρῃς τὸ δῶρόν σου, &c. If thou bring (or, When thou bringeſt) thy Gift to the Altar, and there remembreſt thy brother hath ought againſt thee; Leave thy Gift there, and go thy way firſt, and be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy Gift: δῶρον δέ ἐστι νῦν ἡ ἐκάστου προσευχὴ καὶ εὐχαριστία, Now the Gift that is offered to God is every one's Prayer and Thankſgiving. And in c. 54. μετὰ τὴν ἀνάγνωσιν καὶ τὴν ψαλμῳδίαν καὶ τὴν ἐκ τῶν γραφῶν διδασκαλίαν, &c. After the Leſſon and ſinging of Pſalms and Inſtruction out of the Scriptures, (mark here the Order of the Liturgy) when ye come to Prayer, let the Deacon ſtanding near you proclaim with a loud voice, Let no man have ought againſt his brother.

Yea Irenæus, Scholar to Polycarp S. John's diſciple, ſeems to place that Purity of the Evangelical oblation propheſied of by * Malachi, In every place Incenſe ſhall be offered unto my Name, and a pure Offering, (which all Antiquity underſtood of the Euchariſt) in this premiſed Reconciliation, when they came thereto. Eccleſia oblatio (ſaith he upon thoſe words) * l. 4. c. 34. * ch. 1. 11.

quam Dominus docuit offerri in universo mundo, purum Sacrificium reputatum est apud Deum —— quod in omni simplicitate & innocentia Dominus volens nos offerre, prædicavit, dicens, Cùm igitur offers munus tuum, &c. The Oblation of the Church which our Lord taught should be offered through all the world, is accounted a pure Sacrifice with God —— And that our Lord would have us to offer our Gift with all simplicity and innocency, appears by that saying of his, When thou bringest thy Gift to the Altar, &c. Afterwards follows, Quoniam igitur cum simplicitate Ecclesia offert, justè munus ejus purum Sacrificium apud Deum deputatum est; And because the Church doth offer with all simplicity and purity, (viz. with such a disposition of mind as is purified and cleansed from all hypocrisie, hatred and malice,) her gift and oblation is rightly therefore accounted by God a pure Sacrifice. Thus Irenæus.

Vid. Tertullian. de Oratione, cap. 10.

Eusebius likewise in his of the life of Constantine, l. 4. c. 41. speaking of a great Synod that Emperor caused to be assembled at Tyre for the extinguishing of some dissensions risen in the Church; He considered well (said he) that it is altogether unlawfull for those that are at enmity ὅτι οὐ τοῖς Θεοῦ προσιέναι λατρείαν, to come to the Holy Service, (that is, of the Eucharist) for that the Law of Christ doth expresly forbid any such to offer their Gifts, until they are reconciled and at perfect peace with one another.

Lastly, Cyrill of Jerusalem, in the fifth Chapter of his Catecheses Mystagogicæ, describing and giving the reason of the Rites of the Eucharist, At the beginning (saith he) the Deacon cries, Ἀλλήλοις ἀσπάζεσθε, Embrace and salute one another; and then we salute one another with an holy kiss: and this kiss was a sign and profession of their mutual love, their being at unity and peace among themselves, their forgetting and forgiving all former injuries: διὰ τοῦτο ὁ Χριστὸς ἔλεγεν, Ἐὰν προσφέρῃς τὸ δῶρόν σου, &c. And hence it is that Christ the Son of God saith, When thou bringest thy Gift, &c. first be reconciled to thy brother, &c.

These Testimonies are sufficient to inform us how this Precept in the morning of Christianity was understood, and whereabout they conceived our Saviour gave and intended it. And from hence in all likelihood was derived (next to the analogy of the Old Testament) that Universal custome, received and practised in those first times in all the Churches of the World,

* Of this see his Treatise Of the Christian Sacrifices.

* To begin the Eucharist with an Oblation of the Bread and Wine made by those who should partake of the Holy Communion; supposing that our Saviour in this passage of Scripture intimated he would leave some Rite to be used by his Church after the analogy of the Old Sacrifices and in stead of them, which should semblably begin with an Oblation as they did. Wherefore in their Liturgies they called the Bread and Wine, in respect of this Offering, Ἅγια δῶρα, The Holy Gifts; according as our Saviour here spake, Ἐὰν προσφέρῃς τὸ δῶρόν σου ὅτι τὸ θυσιαστήριον, When thou bringest thy GIFT to the Altar; and again, Ἄφες ἐκεῖ τὸ δῶρόν σου, Leave there thy GIFT; and lastly, τότε ἐλθὼν πρόσφερε τὸ δῶρόν σου, And then come and offer thy GIFT. Hence in their Form of Consecration they desire God, ὅπως ἐπιβλέψῃ ὅτι τὰ προκείμενα δῶρα, that he would look upon the Holy Gifts presented there before him, and send down his Holy Spirit upon them, to make them the Body and Bloud of his Son. Hence also came that in the Canon of the Latine Mass, though the custome be long since laid down; Te igitur, Clementissime Pater, per Jesum Christum Dominum nostrum supplices rogamus & petimus, ut accepta habeas & benedicas hæc Dona, hæc Munera: We therefore humbly beseech and entreat thee, most mercifull Father, to accept and bless these Gifts, these Presents. Lastly, Hence they may also seem in those first times to have learned to apply the name of Θυθυσιαστήριον or Altar unto the Holy Table. For why should we not think they might as well derive these two latter from this passage of our Saviour's, as we are assured by good testimony they did the former of Reconcilement when they came to celebrate this Mystery; since all three in the Text depend one upon another, and no place else is to be found in the New Testament whereon they could be expresly grounded? Thus therefore you may perceive how both the Original and Universal practice of the Church, together with the Testimony and Judgment of her primitive Doctors and Pastors, concurre to make this Passage of our Saviour an Evangelical Constitution concerning that Sacred Rite of his Body and Bloud, which he was to substitute in his Church in place of the Legal Sacrifices. Matth. 5. 23, 24.

NOW this being premised concerning the matter of Fact, my scope at this time is, 1. To enquire whether this Scripture were rightly construed and applied or not by these Ancients, as you have heard. 2. To commend to your consideration and practice the duty here enjoyned.

For the First; That this Scripture is an Evangelical Ordinance, and intended by our Saviour for a Precept of the New Testament, may appear for these Reasons.

1. Because there was no such thing commanded in the Law concerning those who came to offer Sacrifice, nor among the Traditions of the Elders any Deuteroſis that way. Now it is altogether improbable that our Saviour, would then annex a new Rite to the Legal Sacrifices, when he was so soon after to abolish them by his Sacrifice upon the Cross; yea, if the Harmonists of the Gospel are not deceived, within less then two years after; for this Sermon is said to have been made between his second and third Passeover. Therefore he intended it for an Ordinance of the Kingdom of God, (as the Scripture calls it) that is, for the Church of his Gospel.

2. Because the Sermon whereof this is part is that famous Sermon of our Saviour upon the Mount, which he read as a Lecture to his Disciples to instruct them in the Mysteries of the Kingdome of God, a little before he sent them forth to preach, beginning with this fifth Chapter and reaching to the end of the seventh, and therefore no doubt contained the summe of what they were to preach; and so the whole doctrine thereof Evangelical. In other parts we finde it so, and why should we not esteem it so in this?

3. Because it is brought in (and that in the first place) as an Exemplification of that righteousnes wherein the Citizens of the Kingdom of Christ were to outgoe the righteousnes of the Scribes and Pharisees: I say unto you (saith our Saviour) Except your righteousneß shall exceed the righteousneß of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of heaven: Then follows this, shewing how farre they must outstrip the Scribes and Pharisees in obedience to the Precept, Thou shalt not kill.

4. A fourth Reason why this passage should be Evangelical is, Because it seems, together with the rest which follow it, to be part of that πλήρωσις or complementum Legis whereof our Saviour spake a little before, saying, Think not that I am come to dissolve the Law and the Prophets, (that is, to abolish or abrogate the observation of them in my Kingdom) ἀλλὰ πληρῶσαι, but to accomplish, supply or perfect them. For this to be the meaning of that πληρῶσαι, the whole Discourse following seemeth to evince, wherein our Saviour puts in practice and makes good de facto in several particulars what he formerly said he came to doe.

It is true, the Opinions are differing concerning our Saviour's scope in these passages; but that which seems to give the least, if it be rightly taken, will not be derogatory to our Conclusion. Some would have our Saviour's scope to be as another Law-giver to give new Laws unto his Church, which were were not given before. Others to make some new Additaments, or Enlargements at least, to the Law already given. Our Divines for the most part will have our Saviour to correct the insufficient and imperfect Glosses and Interpretations of the Jewish Doctors, or Scribes and Pharisees, by giving the Divine Law a more full and ample Interpretation then was usually apprehended: Unto which construction the Hebrew notion of the word πληρῶσαι will not be unpliable, who in like manner call their Glosses and Explications in their Talmud Gemara, which is as much to say as Πλήρωσις or Πλήρωμα, i. e. Complementum, Supplementum, Perfectio; for גמר is perfecit, complevit, absolvit. And that this construction of our Saviour's scope is true in part, I doubt not; yet not so exclusively, but that the second opinion may in part be true also, namely, That our Saviour came, not only to perfect the Law, by giving it a more full and ample Interpretation then it was usually taken to have; but also, by adding or altering some Circumstances thereof, by way of specification to his Gospel; as in this instance of my Text, where a new Circumstance is added to the Evangelical Offering which had not been commanded explicitly in the Legal. For it cannot be denied but the Law, at Christ's coming, received a new modification from the Gospel, being thenceforth to be kept, according to the New Covenant, through Faith in his Name; and therefore could not but receive also some Correction and Addition answerable thereto.

AND this shall suffice for the First Point I propounded, That this Precept of my Text is Evangelical, and so belongs to the Church of the New Testament. Now I come to the Second, To commend to your consideration and practice the Duty here prescribed, of Reconciliation and Charity towards our brother, when we come to present our selves for grace and favour before the Divine Majesty. If thou bringest thy Gift to the Altar, (or when thou bringest it) and remembrest that thy brother hath ought against thee; go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, &c. Τὸν ἀδικηθέντα ἄγει πρὸς τὸν ἀδικήσαντα, He sends (saith S. * Chrysostome) the party who hath done the wrong to him whom he hath wronged; (for it is fit the motion of reconcilement should begin from the wrong-doer;) but withall he implies he should receive no denial; and therefore (as the same Father observes) the words are not, καταλλαξον σαυτὸν τῷ ἀδελφῷ σε, ἀλλὰ, καταλλάγηθι, Reconcile thy self to thy brother, but, Goe and be reconciled; as taking it for granted that he to whom his brother thus comes must not deny him forgiveness, according to that in the Gospel of S. Luke, ch. 17. 3,4. Take heed to your selves, (or Look to it) If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him: yea if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again unto thee, saying, I repent, thou shalt forgive him. So that our Saviour's expression in my Text is to be construed as a compendious speech or figure, wherein together with the Duty of Forgiveness of injuries he teacheth us from whom the Reconcilement or overture thereto is to begin; namely, from him who hath done the wrong. And if the wrong be mutual, as often it useth so be, then he that beginneth first is the most pleasing unto God. For without Forgiveness, and that mutual, if the injuries be mutual, there can be no Reconcilement made.

* Hom. 16. in Matth. 5.

Why Forgiveness of injuries is a most proper and peculiar Precept of the Gospel.

This is that grand Fundamental, and most proper and peculiar Commandment of the Gospel and Kingdom of Christ, Forgiveness of injuries: the reason whereof is this; The New Covenant, or Gospel, is the Covenant of forgiveness of sin to those who repent and turn unto God. Him hath God exalted (saith S. Peter in his Sermon Acts 5.31. meaning Christ) to be a Prince and Saviour, to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins.

sins. Accordingly he gave commission to his Apostles, when he was now ready to part from them, That Repentance and Forgiveness of sins should be preached in his Name, among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, Luke 24. 47. In a word, The Gospel is nothing else but the joyfull tidings That God will be reconciled and at peace with men through Christ, by remission of their sin, if they amend and repent of the same. Now in such a Covenant as this, it seemed not congruous to the Divine Wisdome, that any should be partaker of the favour promised therein who should not vouchsafe the like unto his brother. Almighty God, against whom we have so often and infinitely trespassed, sought first to be reconciled unto us: should not we then much more, when we have wronged our brother, go first to be reconciled unto him? God, he hath promised to forgive us, whensoever we repent of our misdeeds, and sue unto him for forgiveness: may he not then justly expect from us that we should be as kind unto our brother as he is gracious unto us? Nay, I dare boldly say, There is no Remission of sins to be looked for at God's hand without it. Matt. 5. 23. 24.

For proof whereof I shall not need goe out of this our Saviour's Sermon in the Mount, wherein, besides my Text, in the Prayer he taught his Disciples (for both are in the same Sermon) he hath put in a barre against asking it but upon this condition; Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us. If we ask not with this affection, there is no Promise that any such Prayer should be heard. And lest we might think so, our Saviour is not content to give us the Form only, but to comment upon it when he hath done; which he doth upon no other Petition. For if ye forgive men their trespasses, (saith he) your heavenly Father will also forgive you: But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive your trespasses. Is not this plain enough? Now because (* as I have heretofore proved at large) the Eucharist is a kind of Prayer, wherein namely by commemorating or representing the Death and Passion of Christ unto his Father we obtain remission of sin; therefore the like disposition (you see) is required towards it which is in our Petition for forgiveness of sin. If therefore we present not our selves before God with this preparation; as there is no Promise in the Gospel that any such Prayer shall be heard, so the Evangelical Law admits us not to be partakers of the pledges thereof. You see how well these things hang together. A further confirmation yet whereof we have in that Parable of the wicked servant Matt. 18. 24, &c. to whom his Lord, being moved with compassion when he besought him, forgave a debt of ten thousand Talents; but he finding one of his fellow-servants which ought him an hundred pence, notwithstanding he fell at his feet and besought him, yet he would not hear him, but presently cast him into prison. Then (saith the Text) his Lord was wroth, and said, O thou wicked servant, shouldst not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, as I had pity on thee? And he delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him. The application is terrible; So likewise (saith our Saviour v. 35.) shall my heavenly Father doe also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses. We are this wicked servant, if when our heavenly Father forgives us thousands of Talents, we stand with our brethren for an hundred pence. For there is no proportion between the offences wherewith we offend God and the offences wherewith our brother offends us. And therefore we have no excuse, hath our brother wronged us never so much, never so hainously: For whatsoever it be, how undeserved soever, our sin, our ingratitude to Almighty God hath been infinitely greater,

Matt. 6. 12.

Vers. 14, 15.

* See the Treatise of the Christian Sacrifice.

Matt. 5. 23, 24. more then ten thouſand Talents to an hundred pence. Thus therefore as this wicked Servant's Maſter dealt with him, ſo ſhall our heavenly Father doe unto us, unleſs we from our hearts forgive every one his brother their treſpaſſes.

DISCOURSE XLVII.

By theſe the Iſles of the Gentiles [אִיֵּי הַגּוֹיִם] were divided [נִפְרְדוּ] in their lands; every one after his tongue, after their families, [לְמִשְׁפְּחֹתָם] in their nations.

Gen. 11. 2. WHENAS after the great deluge of waters the ſons of Noah began to multiply upon the earth, it is ſaid, That they came from the Eaſt into the land of Shinar, the pleaſant plain of Shinar, where God at the beginning had placed the firſt Father of mankind, our Father Adam. But when they ſaw that their numbers were like to be great, and that ſo ſmall a plot of ground would not contain them all; yet that they might continue within the Body of one Society, and have as it were a common right in this place of Paradiſe, they agreed to build them a Citie which ſhould have been the Metropolis of an Univerſall Monarchy, and an exceeding high Tower, that they might be famous and renowned among poſterity. But this vain purpoſe of man's imagination ſeemed evil in the eyes of God, and therefore Gen. 11. 5. it is ſaid, That he came down from heaven to overthrow the counſell of the ſons of men. And becauſe they were ſo loth to break Society, it pleaſed God to cut from them the common Bond of one Society, and to make them ſpeak with many languages. For as Speech is termed the Bond of Society, Oratio (ſaith the Philoſopher) eſt Societatis vinculum; and as the Unity of one common Language had knit all mankind into one Community: ſo God in his wiſdome ſaw that Plurality of Languages was the beſt means to force mankind unto a Plurality of Societies. Thus therefore and by this means did Almighty God caſt man the ſecond time out of Paradiſe, and diſperſed him over the face of the whole earth by this memorable Confuſion of Languages.

Now concerning the Order of this Diſperſion and the Manner of this Confuſion, he that is but a little converſant in the writings either of Hiſtoricall or Theologicall Antiquaries, ſhall find not only one but varieties of Confuſions, not of Tongues only, but of Opinions alſo; one ſaying this thing, another thinking that thing: ſo that ſome having eſſayed this Labyrinth, and finding neither ſafe getting in nor likelihood of getting out, have quite diſclaim'd any further ſearch: And as Alexander, when he could not unlooſe the Gordian knot, drew his ſword and cut it a-pieces; ſo they, meaning ing to make an eaſy diſpatch of all difficulties, affirm, That Curioſity in this Argument is either frivolous or altogether needleſs. Gen. 10. 5.

But I would that theſe had remembred, That that knowledge ought not to be accounted needleſs, without which the Events and Complements of the Propheticall Bleſſings of the Patriarchs and the particular Predictions of the after-Prophets can never be underſtood.

For how ſhall we know How and When God was the Bleſſed God of Sem, and How and When God perſuaded Japhet to dwell in the tents of Sem, if we know not Where were the tents of Sem, and Which were the Habitations of the ſons of Japhet? How ſhall we tremble enough at the horrible Curſe of impious Cham, and know that he was indeed a Servant of Servants and a ſlave to all his brethren, unleſs we know Where was the land of his abiding? Or how ſhould we know What were thoſe Ships of Chittim, whereof Balaam and Daniel propheſied, if we know not Where was the Inheritance of the poſterity of Chittim? Laſtly, How ſhould we know who is that Tyrant Gog, of whom Ezekiel ſpeaks, who comes out of the land of Magog, and is deſcribed to be the Prince of Meſhech and Tubal, if we know not Where is the land of Magog, and Which is the off-ſpring of Meſhech and Tubal? Gen. 9. 26, 27. Gen. 9. 25. Num. 24. 24. Dan. 11. 30. Ezek. 39. 1.

As therefore S. Paul ſaid in another caſe, ſo I think I may ſay in this, That God hath not left us without a witneſs, but hath given us certain Notes and Marks, if we were ſo diligent as to mark them, whereby we may eaſily point out the Original habitations of the firſt Colonies of Mankind.

And to omit other diſperſed places in the Bible, I think that this Chapter contains the principal, and the grounds of the reſt. Where becauſe Moſes begins firſt with the line of Japhet, (and The firſt in every kind is a Rule to that which cometh after) and becauſe alſo that we the inhabitants of the Weſtern parts of the world have greateſt intereſt in the ſtock of Japhet; I have made ſpecial choice of this Verſe which I now read, which contains A deſcription both of the Place and Manner of the habitations of the Sons of Japhet. Of theſe (that is, Of the ſeven ſons of Japhet before named) were divided the Iſles of the Gentiles, &c.

Now therefore I will conſider the words of this Text, Firſt, Generally, as they contain A circumſcription of the Place, and a deſcription of the Manner and Order of the dwellings of Japhet; Secondly, Specially, from Grounds drawn out of this Scripture, and by the Remainders of ancient names, I will aſſigne to every one of his ſons the particular lot of their inheritance.

The Territories of the ſons of Japhet are here termed The Iſles of the Gentiles; Of theſe were divided the Iſles of the Gentiles in their lands, that is, the Iſles of the Gentiles throughout their lands, or, the lands of the Iſles of the Gentiles.

Thus we have the Name; but What part of the World was called by this Name, that we have not. The Hebrew is אִיֵּי הַגּוֹיִם, which the Septuagint and Joſephus turn νήσοι τῶν ἐθνῶν· the Chaldee and other Interpreters, Iſlands of the Gentiles.

We uſually call Iſlands Regions or Countries encircled by the Sea: But becauſe there were not ſuch Iſlands enough near the place of Diviſion to contain the Families of the houſe of Japhet, there being but only Crete and Cyprus untill we come unto the Ægean Sea; and becauſe it is not likely that they would overpaſs the main land, to ſeat themſelves in little Iſlands; or if they would ſo have done, yet was there not then ſuch plenty of ſhipping to tranſport ſo great multitudes; and laſtly, becauſe we know aſſuredly that ſome of Japhet's poſterity were originally ſeated upon the main Continent; It followeth hence that by Iſlands here cannot be meant thoſe which we call Iſlands.

Gen. 10. 5. Perhaps then there may be some Trope in these words, and that by Isles of the Gentiles are not meant indeed properly Islands, but Countries having many Islands lying about them; so that אִי הַגּוֹיִם may be expounded Terra insulosa Gentium, that is, Gentildome full of Islands. And this indeed fits very well those Countries where Japhet's sons are said to dwell; witness the many Islands in the Mediterranean, Ægean and Ionian seas. But because it is manifest out of Scripture, that there are some Countries called by this name, which are neither encompassed by the Sea, nor have any Islands lying near them; this Interpretation also must be rejected.

Now there remaineth only one Exposition more; That the Hebrews called אִיִּים or Islands all Countries divided from them by Sea, or such as they could not come unto, or used not to goe unto, but by Sea. So that their word אִי is larger then our Island: for we call an Island that which can no way be come unto but by Sea, and is every where divided from the Main; but they called also those אִיִּים which were but secundum quid Islands, which were at least by Sea divided from their main, or were in regard of themselves only not accessible but by Sea. In brief, They called Islands all beyond-sea countries, and all people Islanders which came to them and to the Egyptians by Sea. Neither did the Grecians use their word νῆσος only for a place encompassed by the Sea; as we see by Peloponnesus Πέλοπος νῆσος, which joyned unto the main land of Epirus; and so likewise were their Chersonesi.

And that this last Interpretation is undoubtedly true, we need no other Argument but this, That the Hebrews called all Countries which were divided from them by Sea, Islands, and è converso they called no other Islands but such as were divided from them by Sea; that is, All countries which lye above the Mediterranean Sea, from the mountain of Amanus and the Hyrcane Sea westward, were called by this name of Islands of the Gentiles, and no other were called by this name but these.

The truth of this may be seen in many places of the Bible, whereof I will quote the most pregnant. Esay 11. 10, 11. The Prophet shewing the Calling of the Gentiles by an allusion of the restoring of the Jews from the places where they were dispersed, maketh an Induction of those places and countries wherein they were scattered, saying, The Lord shall recover the remnant of his people from Assyria, Egypt, Pathros, Cush, Elam, Shinar, Hamath, and from the Islands of the * Gentiles. Here by the Islands of the Gentiles are meant distinct places from those before named; and places too where the Jews were scattered: but these can be no other but the countries of Armenia the less, which together with the rest that he names were under the Empire of the Assyrians, Medes and Persians. And because this Prophecy is to be understood of the Calling of the Gentiles, the Prophet in his Induction would not omit those places where he only laboured who was surnamed The Apostle of the Gentiles, and which were from the beginning and are at this day the principal seat of Christian Churches. So that at this day there is no part of the world called by the name of Christendome but that which was divided from the Jews by Sea, even the blessed Japhet and the happy Islands of the Gentiles. And this was foreshewed by the Prophets, in that they never spake of the Calling of the Gentiles, but they harped upon the Islands of the Gentiles. The same Prophet Esay (chap. 40. 15.) to shew God's Omnipotency and great power, speaketh after this manner, Behold, the Nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance; behold, he taketh up the Isles as a very little thing. Where if by Isles we mean those which we call Islands, the comparison of disparity diſparity will not hang together; becauſe thoſe which we call Iſlands are indeed very little things. It remains therefore that by Iſlands here are meant thoſe huge Countries which were beyond the Sea in regard of Egypt and Palæſtine. Again in chap. 42. he ſaith, * The Iſles ſhall wait for the Law of God. What is here meant by Iſles, you may eaſily gueſs by that I ſaid before; and that which followeth in the ſame Chapter will help you, * Sing unto the Lord a new ſong,— ye that goe down to the Sea, that is, ye which dwell low to the Sea-ward: and if ye ask who theſe are, the very next words will tell you, namely, the Iſles and the inhabitants thereof. Where is plainly expounded who are meant by the inhabitants of the Iſles, namely thoſe that dwell downward to the Sea-ward. Moreover Jeremy 2. 10. we find, Paſſe over to the Iſles of Chittim; but the Iſland of Chittim was no Iſland or place encircled by the Sea, unleſs Macedonia be an Iſland; for Alexander is ſaid in 1 Maccab. 1. 1. to have come forth of the land of Chettiim; and in Chap. 8. 5. Perſeus King of Macedonia is called King of the Citims. In Ezek. 27. 3. Tyrus is called a merchant of people for many Iſlands, becauſe unto Tyrus came many people from beyond the Sea for merchandiſe. And laſtly in 1 Maccab. 14. 5. (which I hope will be a ſufficient teſtimony to ſhew what the Jews called by the name of Iſles of the Gentiles) among the Commendations of Simon, one of the worthy Maccabees, it is ſaid, That he took Joppa for an haven and for an entrance to the Iſles of the Sea: where it is more then manifeſt that by the Iſles of the Sea the Jews meant thoſe Nations which came to them by Sea.

* In the Hebrew it is אִיֵּי הַיָּם the Isles of the Sea. But that the Isles of the Sea and the Isles of the Gentiles are of a like importance, the Author shews afterwards.

Gen. 10. 5.

* Verſ. 4.

* Verſ. 10.

Now if this be ſo, That the Jews called thoſe Countries the Iſles of the Gentiles which were divided from them by Sea, we may ſee how true that opinion is (though commonly received) which affirmeth that the poſterity of Madai, one of the Sons of Japhet, are thoſe Medes who were compartners with the Perſians in the Second Monarchy. For he that hath any skill in Geography knows that this Media is not divided from the Jews by Sea, and therefore cannot be one of the Iſlands of the Gentiles, unleſs Meſopotamia and Aſſyria be alſo Iſlands of the Gentiles. And yet my Text ſays, That Of theſe (namely of the ſeven Sons of Japhet, whereof Madai is one) were divided the Iſlands of the Gentiles. The occaſion of this Errour (for ſo I take it to be) was the miſtaking of Joſephus, who ſays that of Madai came thoſe people which the Greeks call Μαδαῖοι. But firſt, I doubt whether the Greeks called thoſe Medes ſo famous in the Scripture Μαδαῖοι, or not rather Μῆδοι. Again, if by Μαδαῖοι Joſephus means thoſe Medes which had title in the Second Monarchy, he can no wayes agree with himſelf; for a little before he ſaid that the poſterity of Japhet had their ſeat from the mountain Amanus Weſtward; but theſe Medes lie above the Perſians from the mountain Amanus Eaſtward. But if any man ask where then was the original ſeat of the Sons of Madai, I will deferr mine anſwer till I come to aſſign to the ſeveral Sons of Japhet their ſeveral habitations.

HAVING found out that part of the Earth which was divided among the poſterity of our Father Japhet; I come now to the Second part of my General conſideration, to make another ſearch Concerning the manner of this Diviſion, and the Order of their dwelling and neighbourhood one with another. And here my Text anſwers, That they were ſorted every one according to his Language, according to his Family, and according to his Nation.

Whence (before we come to particular examination of every word) we may obſerve, That this great Diviſion of the Earth was performed orderly, and that they are much deceived who dream of a confuſed and irregular Diſperſion, wherein every one went whither he liſted, and ſeated himſelf where he liked beſt.

Gen. 10. 5. For beſides that theſe latter words of my Text imply the clean contrary, the word נִפְרְדוּ alſo, which we tranſlate divided, will bear the force of an Argument to this purpoſe; in that it ſignifies not a ſcattering or a confuſion, but a moſt diſtinct partition.

Or if there were no ſuch inſinuation in my Text, yet there may be many Reaſons drawn from the Circumſtances of this Diviſion which will enforce the ſame Verity.

1. As firſt, The Cuſtome, and as it were the property, of Almighty God in all thoſe Actions wherein he hath a ſpecial hand and directs by a ſpecial providence; according to that ſaying, God is not the author of Confuſion, but of Order. And if in any other, ſurely in this God's Providence was ſeen moſt eſpecially, it being ſo principal an action, and as it were the ground and foundation of the Second propagation of Mankind.

2. Another Argument lieth in the End why God multiplied the Languages of theſe builders, which was (as it ſeems) leſt dwelling all together they ſhould confound their families, and mingle together their generations, which God in his Wiſdom would have ſevered and kept diſtinct for divers purpoſes. And that this ſhould be the End or one of the Ends, it followeth naturally out of the proper Effect of Pluralities of Tongues, which is to ſort men into Pluralities of Societies, as the Unity of one common language before had knit them into one Community. Now if this were the purpoſe of Almighty God, then it needs muſt be that for the proſecution of this End each Family ſhould dwell by it ſelf, and each Nation by it ſelf, that ſo there might be an orderly Diviſion.

3. Another Reaſon may be drawn from the Wiſdom of the Patriarchs, who were all alive at this Diviſion, and were as Kings in their generations. Seeing therefore that there is great difference in the parts of the Earth, for the goodneſs of the ſoil and temperateneſs of the Air; it was their parts to prevent the danger of contention among their Sons, who ſhould have the better parts of the Earth: which could be done no otherwiſe but by inſtituting an orderly Diviſion; and that either by caſting of lots, or chuſing according to the order of their birthright, after ſome ſurvey taken, of a ſufficient portion of the Earth, and portions border'd out according to the number of their Nations, then of their Families, &c. For otherwiſe Magog would not have gone ſo farre into the North, nor Arphaxad have been ſuffered to enjoy the pleaſant land of Shinar.

But I leave theſe Generalities, and come to the Parts of this Order. Where for conveniency ſake I will begin with that firſt which is laſt in the order of the words, to wit their ſorting after their Families and after their Nations, or (as the words are in my Text) after their Families in their Nations.

Where firſt we muſt know what is meant by theſe two words in their proper uſe; for though elſewhere they may be promiſcuouſly uſed, yet here being compared and conjoyned, they muſt needs have a diſtinct ſignification. Now what that is, the particle [in] doth inſinuate. For in theſe words [after their Families, in their Nations,] Families are plainly ſubordined to Nations, as Parts to a Whole, or Specials to a more General. Families therefore are Parts of a Nation, and a Nation is an Off-ſpring that containeth many Families. As therefore the Logicians ſay of their Genus, that it is either Generaliſſimum or Subalternum: ſo we alſo may ſay of our Gens or Nation, that it is ſometime Abſolute, when there is no greater Off-ſpring in regard whereof it may be called a Family; or Reſpective, when though it be Gens in regard of thoſe Families it comprehends, yet it ſelf alſo is a Family in a greater generation. Now theſe Gentes or Nations are called ſometimes by a more ſpecial name Tribes. For thoſe which the Scripture in the Off-spring of Jacob calls Tribes, in the generations of Ishmael are called Nations, as we may learn, Gen. 25. 16. These (that is, these twelve which he named) are the Sons of Ishmael, and these are their names by their Towns, and by their Castles; twelve Princes according to their Nations. Now these Tribes of Israel or Nations of Ishmael, though being compared with their own Families they were Gentes; yet in regard to the generations of Arphaxad they were but Families of the eighth or ninth order. But as for Nations and their differing ranks, the Scripture hath found two words, גוי and שֵׁבֶט Gens and Tribus; so the parts of these, which be of many Orders, are not always called משפחות or Families, but sometimes בתים Households. So for the deprehending of Achan and election of Saul by lot, Israel first came out by their Tribes, then by their Families; where we must understand also their Sub-families; as it is easily gathered in the story of Achan, where these Sub-families are called sometimes Families, and sometimes Households. Gen. 10. 5.

And thus we know what are Nations and what are Families, and what are the Kinds of both. Now let us see what Nations and what Families Moses here meaneth. I answer, That Moses here meaneth those which are absolutely Nations, not secundùm quid Gentes or Sub-Nations; and absolute Families, not Households or Sub-families. My reason is, Because Moses here speaketh of that division which was made when Peleg was born, which was within an hundred years after the floud: But by this time there were no Families so much encreased that they could be called Tribes or Nations; for the name of Family in Genealogies remains until the third Generation, that is, so long as the Founder of a Family may truly say, Καὶ παίδων παῖδες, καὶ παίδων ἅμ' ἔση παῖδες.

And therefore when God in the second Commandment says, That he will visit the sins of Fathers upon their children to the third and fourth generation, the meaning is, that he will afflict the whole Family for the sins of the Head of their Family. And when we say, De malè quæsitis non gaudet tertius hæres, we might as well say, That goods ill gotten, the same Family shall lose them which got them. Now that this Division was made before the third generation, it is sufficiently proved in that Eber, who was the Father of Peleg, and not then the Head of any house, was but the Second from Arphaxad, one of the founders of those Nations which were of the Off-spring of Sem.

The words and sense of the words being thus cleared, we see a Twofold order in this Division. First, They were ranged according to their Nations; and then secondly, Every Nation was ranked by his Families: So that every Nation dwelt and had his lot by himself, and in every Nation the Families also dwelt and had their lots by themselves. And thus much the words of Moses do imply: For in that the words stand thus [after their Families in their Nations,] it is as much as if it were said, That every Family was ranked and had his dwelling in his own Nation; which could not be unless the Division were also made to every one according to his Nation.

The number of Nations which were of the Off-spring of Japhet we may easily find, to wit seven, according to the number of his Sons, who were all several Founders of several Nations. But the number of Families in these seven Nations we cannot so easily learn; for Moses nameth the Families onely of two, Gomer and Javan, three of Gomer and four of Javan; and that because that these Nations were those that the Jews should have greatest knowledge of and most dealing with, because of their neighbourhood with the land of Canaan: and for the same end in the generations of Cham are named onely the families of Canaan, Cush and Mizraim; and in Sem the families onely of Aram and Joktan.

Gen. 10. 5.

Now out of this which hath been spoken we may pick Five Rules to guide us in the finding out the original habitations of the Off-spring of Japhet.

1. First, We must seek for them in the Islands of the Gentiles and in Countries divided from the Jews by Sea; because by them were divided the Islands of the Gentiles.

2. Secondly, We must seek them within a reasonable Compass of the Earth, and not all the world over. For when this Division was made in the days of Peleg, the number of mankind was small; for besides women and children, their number in all could not be above seven thousand, as may be gathered out of this Chapter; so that it is not like they took the whole world before them.

3. Thirdly, Those Nations whose Families are named by Moses are to be sought for in places neighbouring to the Jews: for therefore did Moses name their Families, because they dwelt near unto the Jews, or dwelt so that the Jews might readily come at them.

4. Fourthly, Where we find the Nation, there also we must look for the Families of that Nation; because the Families were ranged in their Nations.

5. Fifthly, And therefore for the same reason, where we find any one of the Families, there we must look for the rest and for the whole Nation. But the practice of these Rules I must deferr till hereafter.

Now I come to that which yet remains in my Text, viz. Languages: for Moses saith they were divided also [according to their languages.] Wherein we may see the very finger of God, who so caused them to speak with diverse tongues, that their tongues also were ordered after their Families and after their Nations. Which leaves no place at all for their opinion who suppose this Confusion of tongues to have been a privation of all language, and that they were fain to gather together by companies, and to impose new names upon things by common consent: Nor yet for their opinion who think that this Confusion was a kind of depravation of the Original tongue; so that when the builders called for brick, they brought them mortar; and when they called for mortar, they brought them brick or something else. For this last the Event confutes, in that the Confusion of tongues does not consist in using the same words diversly, but in using diverse words. And the former cannot be true, for then should God have [made*] mankind mute; the contrary whereto may be gathered out of God's own words where he saith, Let us goe down, and confound their language, that they may not understand one anothers speech:* he does not say, that they might not speak at all. It must needs be then that God himself inspired them with diverse tongues, else how could their tongues have been ordered according to their families and according to their nations? So that the tongues of the same generation, though diverse, yet have a greater cognation amongst themselves then with the tongues of another off-spring: As for Example, The languages of Sem in the East agree more one with another then with the tongues of Japhet in the West.

* [This or the like word was wanting in the Manuscript.]
* Gen. 7. 11.

But because that some out of this Chapter would pick out the certain number of Languages, let us a little also consider of this. The number of Languages cannot be fewer then there were Nations, nor more then there were Families. If there were no more then there were Nations or Heads of Nations, then the number is easily counted; seven in Japhet, four in Cham, and five in Sem. But if they were as many as were Families at the Confusion, their number cannot be known, because Moses does not make a recension of all the Families or Heads of families.

The common Opinion hath been, That their number was according to the the number of Families; and this Moſes ſeems to inſinuate, becauſe he joyns throughout this Chapter Families and Tongues together. But this is denied by Junius, becauſe the Families of Canaan the firſt-born of Cham ſpake all one language at that time when the Jews caſt them out. But this Reaſon compells not, becauſe the Canaanites at that time ſpake a perfect Hebrew, as Joſeph Scaliger affirms. Nay * Plautus brings in a Carthaginian ſpeaking almoſt pure Hebrew: but the Carthaginians were of Tyre, and of the off-ſpring of Canaan. But without doubt the Canaanites ſpake not Hebrew from the beginning, this language being left only to Arphaxad the eldeſt ſon of Sem, of whom came Eber, Abram and the Jews. It muſt needs then be brought in by ſome Nimrodian conqueſt; for the off-ſpring of Cham ſeemed to envy God's favour to Arphaxad, even as Cain envied Abel, and therefore Nimrod of the houſe of Cuſh made himſelf Lord of Meſopotamia, which was the lot of Arphaxad, and (as ſhould ſeem) endeavoured to make this language common to others through a ſpight he had to the Houſe of Arphaxad. And hence it came to paſs that all thoſe nations where Nimrod ruled ſpake Hebrew, or a dialect of the Hebrew, as the Aſſyrians, the Syrians or Aramites, the Canaanites, the Arabians and the Æthiopians. But I doubt I have waded too far in this Argument, and therefore here I'le end.

Gen. 10. 5.

* in his Pœnulus, Act. 5. Sc. 1.

DISCOURSE XLVIII.

Genesis 10. 5.

By theſe were the Iſles of the Gentiles divided in their lands, &c.

WHAT was the ſumme and ſenſe of theſe words we ſhewed heretofore, namely, That they contain a Chorographical Deſcription of the dwellings of the Sons of Japhet after that great diſperſion from the Tower of Babel, together with the manner according to which they were ſeated in their ſeveral habitations. From whence we picked Five Rules to be as Guides and Lights unto us in finding out their ſeveral Countries.

1. That we muſt ſeek them in the Iſlands of the Gentiles, that is, in Countries divided by Sea from Egypt and Paleſtine.

2. We muſt ſeek them all within ſome reaſonable compaſs of the Earth, and not all the world over: Becauſe that when this Diviſion was made, the number of Mankind was very ſmall; as we proved by weighing Sem's generations unto the days of Peleg, at whoſe birth it is ſaid that the Earth was divided.

3. Thoſe Nations whoſe Families are named by Moſes are to be ſought for in places moſt acceſſible and neighbouring to the Jews. For this I proved to be the reaſon why Moſes did name their Families or Heads of Families, becauſe the Jews were to have moſt dealing and commerce with them, by reaſon of their nearneſs and eaſineſs of coming at them.

4. Where

Gen. 10. 5. 4. Where we find the Nation, there alſo we muſt look for the Families of that Nation.

5. Where we find any of the Families, there we muſt alſo look for the reſt and for the whole Nation. This is very expreſsly contained in my Text; By theſe were divided the Iſles of the Gentiles in their lands, every one after his tongue, after their families, in their nations. That other, which is the Third in order, I confirmed by the like in the Genealogies of Sem and Cham, in both which the Fathers of Nations neighbouring upon the Jews are reckoned up particularly, the other but generally.

Theſe Rules then I will take for ſure Grounds, and uſe them as a Land-compaſs in the diſcovery I now intend. But before I begin, I will adde Five more, of leſs weight then the former, yet ſuch as I hope will afford the like uſe that Cyphers have among Numbers, I mean, being joyned with the former will help us to a greater certainty.

1. The Firſt then of theſe weaker Helps is from the uſe of the Prophets in naming two or more of theſe Nations together; which is a likely argument that they were ſeated both together, and were neighbouring one to the other. As we ſee of Meſhech and Tubal, which commonly goe together clean through the Prophets. And this Help Junius ſeems to have uſed.

2. The Second Help is the fulfilling of Prophecies by Nations foretold under the Names of their Founders, the Sons of Japhet. And

3. Thirdly, Becauſe it is likely that in this Diviſion there was a regard had by the wiſe Fathers for their future Colonies, we are to think that they ordered their partition ſo, that when they were to vent their Numbers and ſend forth new Colonies, they ſhould not be forced to encroach on one anothers inheritance, or one to paſs through the lot of another, but that they had either the Sea or empty land every one upon ſome of his borders. And this he that will mark ſhall ſee obſerved in the Original dwellings of the Sons of Sem, which are better known and more agreed upon then thoſe of Japhet.

4. The Fourth Help ſhall be the Teſtimony of the Ancients, eſpecially of the Jews themſelves.

5. The Fifth and laſt are the Remainders of ancient Names, which is the ordinary Help that every one follows. And thus we have encreaſed our Criteria to the number of Ten. Now that which ſhall be found agreeable to all or the greater part of theſe, if it will not be approved for Truth, I am ſure there is no other means left to warrant a more likely conjecture or a greater certainty.

Let us come then to the Practice of our Rules: and Firſt let us ſeek them in the Iſles of the Gentiles, that is, (as I proved heretofore) in Countries divided by Sea from Paleſtine and Egypt; eſpecially from Egypt, becauſe when Moſes wrote this Book he was not yet come into Paleſtine, and therefore uſed only ſuch Names as the Jews were acquainted with in the land of Goſhen. The Iſles then of the Gentiles are all regions from the mountain Amanus and the Hircane Sea Weſtward.

Secondly, We muſt lay out ſome reaſonable portion of the Earth to ſeek them in; and that we will define after this manner. 1. Our Eaſtern border ſhall be the land of Aram, that is Syria and Armenia the great, which was ſo called of Aram the Son of Sem: or, to ſpeak more plainly, our Eaſtern border ſhall be from the mountain Amanus by the ſprings of Euphrates up to the Weſt part of the Hircane Sea. 2. Our Southern border is without all doubt the Mediterranean Sea. 3. The Weſtern border compaſſeth by the Ionian Sea and back of Macedonia up unto the confines of Illyricum. 4. The North border is the river Danubius, the North part of Pontus Euxinus to the Caſpian Sea.

Our

Our Eastern border is confirmed by Moses in this Chapter, where he saith, That the posterity of Sem dwelled from Mesha Eastward. This Mesha is the mountain Masius which is part of the mountain Amanus; and this was the Western limit of Sem's posterity, and therefore must needs be the East border of Japhet. Again in the 2 of Judith, 25. we reade that Olofernes took the borders of the upper Cilicia, and came even to the borders of Japhet which are toward the South over against Arabia, that is, he came to the South-East borders of Japhet in the lower Cilicia where is this mountain Amanus we speak of. Thirdly, Josephus and the rest of the Ancients do all affirm thus much. And lastly, if we should goe any further toward the East, it could no longer be called the Isles of the Gentiles in regard either of Egypt or Palastine. Gen. 10. 5.

Our Southern border needs no proof at all.

Our Western border stands upon two Reasons. 1. It is not like that they went beyond them, because there is a great Sea between them and the next land. Now 2. that they went so farre, we prove from the Seat of Tiras, whom all agree to be the Father of the Thracians, which are in the North-west part of this our plot, and so point out both how far they went toward the West and up into the North.

The rest of our Northern border, as also our whole plot, may be confirmed by comparison with the Original portion of the Sons of Sem, to which it hath almost a just and equal scantling. For the fartheſt of the Semites toward the East is Elam the father of the Persians; now Persia lies as far from Amanus and Masius into the East as Macedonia and the Confines of Illyricum lie into the West. The breadth between North and South is from the Caspian Sea unto Phœnicia or to the Persian gulf, which is also proportionable to ours. So that within this compass we hope to find the ancient and first Seats of all the Sons of Japhet, who are seven in number, named in the second Verse of this Chapter, Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Tubal, Meshech and Tiras. And to these we must divide our plot into seven portions as equal as we can gueſs; for it is not like there was any great difference of quantity.

Aud here we must observe our Third Rule, To place those whose Sons are named by Moses in places accessible and neighbouring to the Jews. Now Moses names the Sons only of two of these seven, viz. of Gomer and Javan. The Sons of Gomer are Askenaz, Riphath and Togarmah: And the Sons of Javan are four, Elishah, Tarshish, Cittim and Dodanim. The places accessible and fit for the Jews commerce are those that lie upon the Mediterranean and the Ægean Seas, or the coasts of Asia.

Now in which of these we should seek for the Seats of the Sons of JAVAN, is a matter of no great difficulty; because there is nothing more certain then that Javan was the Father of the * Grecians, whose Countries lie along upon the Mediterranean Sea. And because we must there seek the whole Nation where we find any of the Families, and we know that the house of Tarshish dwelt in Cilicia; we may be assured that all the Countries lying upon this Sea belong unto the lot of Japhet, even from the Issicus sinus unto the end of Epirus, which is part of our * Western border. This portion then we must divide into four parts, much of a scantling, for the four Sons of Javan.

* A Javan (LXX. legunt Ἰαυάν) Iones dicti, qui Homero Iaones, Iliad. ν'. Ἔνθα δὲ καὶ Βοιωτοὶ καὶ Ἰάονες ——— Suidas, Ἰαυονας τοὺς Ἕλληνας καλοῦσι.

* Mare Ionium.

The Seat and portion of Tarshish.

The First part contains all Cilicia, and this was the dwelling of Tarshish; witness the City Tarsus, where S. Paul was born, which in Hebrew is called Tarshish, and it is that which Jonas was bound for when he fled from the face of the Lord: witness likewise the often naming of Tarshish in all Prophecies concerning Tyre, to whom it was a near neighbour: witness also the whole

Gen. 10. 5.

whole Sea upon that coast called Tarshish, because the Sons of Tarshish were Lords of that Sea. For Lucan and others report the Cilicians were great pirats, and domineer'd in all the Sea near them, whom afterwards Pompey subdued and brought to better order; so that of that Victory * he saith,

* lib. 3. Pharsal.

Itque Cilix justâ jam non pirata carinâ.

* Antiq. l. 1. c. 7.

Lastly, for thus placing of Tarshish we have the consent of * Josephus and other ancients. As for the Septuagint, who often translate Tarshish the * Carthaginians, they keep never a one of our Ten Rules, and therefore we must needs reject them; especially if they mean of the original Seat of Tarshish. But as for their Colonies, we will see afterwards.

* Pass ye over to Tarshish, Esay 23. 6. where the LXX, εἰς Καρχηδόνα, to Carthage. Ezech. 27. 12. for Tarshish the LXX. have Καρχηδόνιοι the Carthaginians.

* The Seat and portion of Cittim.

* The Second portion contains Caria, Lycia and part of Pamphylia; and this fell to Cittim or to the Cittæans; for it is a name of the plural number, and so a name of a People; the singular would be Ceth or Citti, who is like to have been their founder. Reasons for placing the Cittæans here are, 1. from Cetis a country in this tract spoken of by Ptolemy: 2. a people called Cetii by Homer in Odyss. ε'. who thinks they were so called of a river Cetius in the same quarter: 3. because there can be no other place assigned them in all the portion of Javan, as we shall see: and lastly, because their often naming in the Scripture argues they were not far from Palæstine.

The Seat and portion of Elishah.

The Third part of this division contains Achaia and part of Peloponnesus; and this was the lot of Elishah. Witness a great part of this tract called Ellas, the river Elissus or Ilissus, the Elysii campi, Eleusis a city near to Attica, wherein was worshipped the Goddess Ceres, and hereof named Ceres Eleusina; witness likewise Elissus a city of Arcadia, Elis a city in Peloponnesus, and Æoles a colony of Achaia; all of them so named of Elishah: and to this in summe agrees Josephus and the other ancients, though some of them restrain our Elishah to the Æoles, who it is certain were but a colony from Achaia.

The Seat and portion of Dodanim.

There remains the Fourth portion for the Fourth son of Javan, which contains all Epirus and part of Peloponnesus; and here we must place the Dodanim or the Dodanites, for this also is a name of the plural number. Now to place this people here, we have two special Reasons. 1. Because they are never spoken of after in any place of the Bible; whereby it seems they dwelt far off from Palæstine and out of the Jews walk and knowledge: now the other Three are all spoken of, Tarshish and Cittim very often, because they were very near; Elishah but once in * Ezekiel, because he was farther off; but Dodanim never, because he was little known and farthest off. So that the common [* opinion] which places him in Rhodes, incurres many unlikelihoods. For Rhodes is an Island, whereas it is certain the Main was inhabited before the Islands. Again, Rhodes is a very small Isle, nothing answerable to the portions of the rest. And lastly, Rhodes is near and obvious to Judæa, and yet this people we never hear once named among the Prophets. But the occasion of this Errour grew from the changing of Daleth for Resh in the first Book of Chronicles, where is read Rodanim, ch. 1. 7. as also for our Riphath there is read Diphath in ver. 6. which out of doubt was the Scribe's fault at the first, and never after amended. The other Reason for placing this people here is the Remainder of the very name in a City called Dodona, and the famous Oracle of Jupiter Dodonæus, who was no other but this Fourth son of Javan who was the Saturn of the Grecians, and all his sons the Joves of their several families.

* Ch. 27. 7.

[* This or the like word was wanting in the MS.]

This was the Inheritance of Javan, whom his sons the Grecians for his wisdom and providence called Prometheus, who (as * Hesiod saies) was —ἐὺς παῖς Ἰαπετοῖο, Iapetus his good Son.

THE

THE other whoſe ſons are named by Moſes, is Gomer; and to him therefore we muſt allot the next Regions, moſt acceſſible and fit to have commerce and traffick with Palæſtine. And theſe will be thoſe parts of Aſia which lie upon the Ægean Sea and Helleſpont Northward. And this agrees well with Ezekiel, who terms Gomer and Togarmah inhabitants of the ſides of the North יַרְכְּתֵי צָפוֹן. And it is manifeſt that the Jews called the leſſer Aſia the North, and the Kings thereof in * Daniel the Kings of the North. We may therefore aſſign to theſe Gomerians all the North-Eaſt part of this Aſia, containing Phrygia, Pontus, Bithynia, and a great part of Galatia; and this will be a portion anſwerable to that of Javan. And this Joſephus will not deny us, who affirms the Galatians to have been called Gomeræi; and Herodotus will tell us that a people called Cimmerii dwelt in this tract, who ſent a Colony to Palus Mæotis, and gave name to Cimmerius Boſphorus. And * Pliny ſpeaks of a town in Troas, a part of Phrygia, called Cimmeris. Which all have their name from this Gomer.

Gen. 10. 3.

Ch. 38. 6.

* Chap. 11.

Lib. 4.

* Lib 5. c. 30.

This tract then we muſt divide into Three parts between the Three ſons of Gomer, viz. Askenaz, Riphath and Togarmah.

The Seat and portion of Togarmah.

The Firſt ſhall be Phrygia major and ſome part of Galatia; which, following the opinion of Joſephus and others, we aſſign to Togarmah, of whom the Phrygians (ſaith Joſephus) were called Tygrammenes. As for the opinion of Junius, who places Togarmah in Armenia minor, becauſe of their Kings called Tygranes, and their Cities Tygranokartæ; this cannot ſtand, becauſe Armenia minor is too far out of our tract, and therefore he breaks our Fourth Rule, in placing the Son of Gomer out of the lot of Gomer, and rending him from the houſe of his father. And that Togarmah ſhould be the author of the Turks, is a Jewiſh toy lately deviſed. But it pleaſeth Jonathan the Chaldee Paraphraſt by likeneſs of the name to turn Thogarmah גרמניא Germania; and ſome go farther, and would have Thogarmah to be quaſi Thegarmens or The germans. But this opinion breaks the moſt and chiefeſt of our Rules, and therefore cannot be approved, unleſs they mean of after-Colonies; of which we will ſee afterward.

The Second ſhall be Troas or Phrygia minor, wherein was the renowned City of Troy; and this we allot to Askenaz, becauſe of the river Aſcanius, and part of the tract called Aſcania, and the name Aſcanius uſed in thoſe parts: witneſs Homer in his 2. Iliad,

The Seat and portion of Aſkenaz.

Φόρκυς αὖ Φρύγας ἦγε, καὶ Ἀσκάνιος θεοειδὴς
Τῆλ' ἐξ Ἀσκανίης——————,

that is, Phorcys led the Phrygians, and divine Aſcanius who came from Aſcania. And it is as like the Greeks ſhould turn Askenaz to Ἀσκάνιος, as Coreſh to Κύρος and Darjaveſh to Δαρεῖος: ſo that for the termination [os,] no man need doubt. Joſephus would have Askenaz to be father to a people called Ῥηγῖνες or Rheginenſes, who were inhabitants of a City called Rhegium on the Sea-coaſts of Italy over againſt Sicilia: but this is too far out of our walk, and breaks our Fourth Rule amain, by rending Askenaz quite from the houſe of his father, and placing him ſo far from his brethren: and it is againſt Joſephus his own teſtimony, who ſaith that the Gomeræi were inhabitants of Aſia, and I am ſure Gomer could be founder of no Nations but thoſe his Sons were fathers of. But if I might be bold with Joſephus, I would for Ῥηγῖνες reade Ῥηνῖνες, and underſtand the Rhætii or Rhætians a German people; and ſo he ſhould agree with the opinion of the modern Jews, who call the * Germans Askenazim from Askenaz: but this muſt be underſtood of ſome enſuing Colonies, not of this original Seat.

* Vid. Eliam in Tiſhbi in fine literæ ר, & Aben Ezr. in Obad.

The Third and laſt portion is Pontus and Bithynia, which remains for the Third Son, Riphath: witneſs Joſephus, who affirms that the Paphlagones gones who dwelt in these parts were called Riphathæi; and the Histories of * Heathen men place here their Riphæi and Arimphæi; and Junius thinks that the Amazones who were called Æorpatæ were a Colony from these quarters; and besides there is a river in these parts called Parthenius, corruptly as it should seem for Riphathenius. And this portion lies only open to the Euxine Sea, in ancient time called Pontus Ἄξενος, because it was unfrequented by the Greek Nations: which opportunely shews the reason why of those Three only Riphath is never spoken of afterward, because it lay out of the walk either of Jews, Tyrians, or Egyptians. And thus much for Gomer.

* Plin. l. 6. c. 7. Solin. c. 27.

THAT which remains of Asia we must divide between Meshech, Tubal and Magog: For it is certain out of * Ezekiel that Magog was seated in the North, because it is said that Gog of the land of Magog shall come out of his Northern quarters: and out of the same Chapter we gather that Tubal and Meshech were his neighbours, in that he is called chief prince of Meshech and Tubal; and these two Meshech and Tubal are both here and elsewhere alwaies joyned together.

* Chap. 38. Ver. 15.

Ver. 2, 3.

The Seat and portion of Meshech or Mosoch, so the LXX.

To Meshech therefore, following the received opinion, we allot Cappadocia, the inhabitants whereof were once called Meschini, Moschi, Mossyni and Mossynœci; witness [a] Josephus, [b] Epiphanius, [c] Pliny and [d] Carmen Argonauticum. Also the chief City of Cappadocia was called Mazaca even to Tiberius his time, who called it Cæsarea, and it was afterward the Episcopal See of the learned Basilius Magnus.

[a] Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. [b] Contra Scthianos, hær. 39. [c] Nat. Hist. lib. 6. cap. 4. [d] Lib. 2. Vide etiam Clavem & Comment. Apocalypt. cap. 9. vers. 16.

*Now for Thubal, because he is neighbour to Meshech, we must allot that which lies on the South-East of the Euxine Sea, which contained the people Albani, Chalybes, and Iberi, who (Josephus saith) were anciently called Thobeli; and Ptolemy places here a City called Thabilaca. And some think that Chalybes is a name corrupted from Thabyles, by losing the first letter, and after supplying χ in stead thereof: for in Homer's time they were called Ἀλυβες, when he saith that the Halizones came

* The Seat and portion of Thubal. Il. C'.

* Τηλόθεν ἐξ Ἀλύβης, ὅθεν ἀργύρου ἐστὶ γενέθλη, from Alybe, where are mines of silver: and from this Alybe I suppose came the name Albania. And all this is agreeable to the opinion of most Writers, but that some having mistaken the name Iberi in Josephus, will have the Spaniards to be of Thubal: but we can yield them no more then this, that perhaps the Spanish Iberi were a Colony of the Iberians of Asia. And so we come to Magog;

The Seat and portion of Magog.

Whom with the consent of all men we place North of Thubal, and make him the father of those Scythians that dwelt on the East and North-East of the Euxine Sea: and besides we have this argument from the report of * Pliny, in that Scythopolis and Hierapolis, which these Scythians took when they overcame Syria, were ever after by the Syrians called Magog. And hence we may soon learn who is that tyrant Gog whereof Ezekiel prophesied, namely the Scythian Ottoman of the East, who at this day usurps a great part of Israel, of our Israel of the Gentiles. This is that Gog of the land of Magog, chief Prince of Meshech and Thubal. As for the name Gog, it signifies the very same with Magog, for Mem is but an Hemantick letter; and it pleased the Spirit of God to take away this first syllable, to distinguish between the people and the land of the people, calling the people Gog, and the land the land of Magog. And it is to be marked that he doth not call this Gog Prince of Magog, but rather Gog of the land of Magog (for so גוג אֶרֶץ הַמָּגוֹג may be turned) and chief Prince of Meshech and Thubal. For those who have done us all this evil were no Princes in the land of Magog, but mere Vagabonds and mercenaries, whom their Country spewed out because they could not live at home. And yet these Savages at the first coming out made themselves Lords of Meshech and Thubal, of Cappadocia and Iberia:

Gen. 10. 5.

Ch. 39. 3, 4, 6, 7.

There remain yet of the ſons of Japhet, Madai and Tiras, and of the plot we firſt laid out, Thracia and Macedonia. If then the Thracians be of Tiras (as it is * agreed they are, both becauſe the name Thrax is little changed, and becauſe they worſhipped one * Odryſus, who was no other then this Tiras) then it muſt needs follow that Macedonia is left for Madai, or elſe we muſt leave it empty, becauſe we can aſſign it to none of the reſt without great inequality of portions, nor yet find any other place for Madai.

The Seat and portion of Tiras.

*Vide Epiphan. adverſ. Hæreſ. l. 1. Hieronym. in Trad. Hebr. Thiras Thraces, quorum non ſatis immutatum eſt vocabulum.

* Epiphan. l. 1.

Let therefore Macedonia be the lot of Madai; witneſs the ancient name Æmathia, as Lucan ſings, Bella per Æmathios plus quam civilia campos.

If any man queſtion how Æ came in, I could ask him likewiſe how En came into Euphrates, which the Hebrews and thoſe of Meſopotamia call Perath; or how Æ into Ægyptus, which themſelves and their neighbours the Arabians call Cuphti; or how into Æthiopia, which ſome think to be ſo called of Theops or Theophi. It may be that of the Hebrew אר ſignifying regio the Greeks formed their αἶα terra, and ſo Aimathia is as much as αἶα Madai, the land of Madai; and Ægyptus αἶα Cuphti, the land of Cuphti; and Æthiopia αἶα Theophi, the land of Theophi. But howſoever it be, it is no unuſuall thing in the changing of a name out of one [* language] into another, to prefix a Vowel or Diphthong. But beſides this name Æmathia, we reade of a people in this tract called Μῆδοι, or (as ſome will) Μαῖδοι. Ariſtotle in his Book * of Strange reports ſpeaks of χώρα Μηδικὴ in the borders of Paonia; and hereabouts was that præfectura Medica we hear of in the Roman ſtories. Laſtly, Iſocrates in one of his Orations names one Μῆδος for King of theſe quarters, before (as he ſaith) they came to be a Greek nation.

[* This or the like word was wanting in the Ms.]

* περὶ θαυμασίων ἀκουσμάτων.

It is the common opinion, I confeſs, that Madai was the Father of the Medes in Aſia: but this I think will ſcarcely agree with Moſes, to remove Madai ſo farre from the reſt of his brethren. And how can that be any part of the Iſles of the Gentiles, which lies beyond Armenia the great and part of Aſſyria? Or what ſhould any of the ſons of Japhet do among the ſons of Sem? Indeed Joſephus ſaith that Madai was progenitour of that people which the Greeks called Μαδαῖοι: but I am ſure they called the Medes of Aſia Μῆδοι. And what though the Hebrews called them Madai? this proves no more that there was the Original ſeat of Madai the ſon of Japhet, then that Tarſhiſh, whither Solomon's ſhips went once in three years to fetch gold and ſilver, was the firſt dwelling of Tarſhiſh the ſon of Javan. It may be their names were occaſioned by theſe, either through Colonies, (which is the more unlikely,) or by the affinity of name, which the Jews corrupted to a name they were beſt acquainted with; which is an uſuall dealing of Nations of a diverſe language with the names of their neighbours.

Thus then at length we have found the firſt Seats of the ſons of Japhet, agreeable to the Rules we firſt laid down; and their Portions alſo are ſo laid out, that every one hath ſome part of his borders lying open to the Sea or toward empty land, that ſo they might vent their Colonies without diſturbing their brethren.

Gen. 10. 5.

The Colonies of Tarſhiſh.

NOW let us ſay ſomething of their Colonies. And we'l begin with Tarſhiſh, who lies open only to the Mediterranean Sea, and therefore is like to have ſent his firſt Colonies that way; but whither it is hard to ſay: but, if I may gueſs, it is likely unto the firſt land Weſtward he found unpeopled, and that may be the South part of Italy, where dwelt the Etruſci, a name coming ſomething near to Etarſhiſhi. But howſoever it is certain that the Hetrurians came from Aſia the leſs, and that they were a Greek Nation, and ſpake the Greek language. There is a Spaniard that hath lately written a Deſcription of Old Spain, and will have Tarſhiſh, whither Solomon's ſhips went with the ſhips of Hiram king of Tyre, to be Tarteſſus in the South of Spain near to Hercules Pillars; and indeed Ariſtotle in his Strange reports ſaies that when the Phœnicians came firſt thither, they found ſo much ſilver, that they were not able to carry it away, but were fain to make their Anchors and their Ship-furniture all of ſilver. But if this Tarteſſus be that Tarſhiſh, it ſeems the Phœnicians ſo called it, becauſe it lay unto Carthage their new Tyre as old Tarſhiſh in Cilicia lay to old Tyre, that is North-weſtward: or elſe they called it Tarſhiſh, becauſe they went to it by the Sea of Tarſhiſh. The Septuagint, who often turn Tarſhiſh the Carthaginians, ſeem to allude to the name, as though Carthago were Cartarſhiſh a City of Tarſhiſh: but Carthage was no Colony of Cilicia, but of Phœnicia, Urbs antiqua fuit, Tyrii tennere coloni,

Carthago——————

But it ſhould ſeem of all theſe or ſome of theſe the whole Mediterranean Sea was called Tarſhiſh, for the Chaldee Paraphraſt almoſt always turns Tarſhiſh יַמָּא, that is, the Sea; whom Tremellius follows.

The Colonies of Cittim.

The Cittæans lie open both to the Ægean and to the Mediterranean Seas, and therefore might ſend Colonies both ways. And firſt it is likely that they peopled Crete and the Iſles at the mouth of the Ægean Sea. But becauſe the Prophecy of * Daniel, concerning the ſhips of Chittim that ſhould come againſt Antiochus magnus, was fulfilled by the Romans; we muſt grant Italy alſo a Colony of our Cittæans, which ſeems to be the Eaſt part thereof which lies toward Syria, and was anciently called Magna Græcia: and yet I ſuppoſe that theſe Cittæi went as high as Tyber unto the borders of their brethren the Hetruſci, and were thoſe which were called Aborigines and Latini; and that part called Magna Græcia was filled with other Greek Colonies afterward and of more late time, becauſe they ſpake the ſame Greek, that other Greek nations did; but thoſe Aborigines or Latini ſpake the ancient Ionian tongue, as Varro affirmeth: and it ſhould ſeem beſides that they were a Colony of the ancienter Ionians or Greeks, becauſe they kept their father Javan's name amongſt them, calling him Janus, whom the other Grecians ſeem to have by ſome miſchance forgotten: even as the ancient Germans once worſhipped Terra mater, as Tacitus ſays, called Erthus, and yet now they have no ſuch name in all their language; whereas we, one of their Colonies, have ſtill the name Earth. Munſter and ſome others would have Janus to be Noah, with a farr-fetcht reaſon from Vt. Vinum, becauſe Noah planted a Vineyard and was drunken with the wine thereof. But this hath no likelihood at all, that the Greek nation alone ſhould worſhip the Father of all mankind, whereas others remember only the Father of their own nations; as the Thracians Odryſus, the Arabians Sabin, Aſſabinus. And that name Janus is ſo plain for Javanus, that I wonder how they could miſs it: And it may be that ſame Oenotrius, of whom Italy was called Oenotria; for both ſignify Vinoſus, and beſides that Oenotrius was one of the Surnames of Janus.

* Chap. 11. 30. For there ſhall come againſt him צִיִּים כִּתִּים ſhips of Chittim, or perhaps, ſhips from Chittim צִיֵּי מִכִּתִּים as in Hoſ. 14. 3. פְּרִים שְׂפָתֵינוּ the Lxx. (whom the Apoſtle follows) ſeem to have read פְּרִי מִשְׂפָתֵינוּ the fruit of our lips.

Javan. Furthermore, that the Romans were Javanites or Grecians, methinks I could prove out of Rom. 10. 12. where S. Paul speaking particularly to the Romans, says after this manner, There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek; for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him; where he seems to comprehend the Romans under the Grecians. But if any man will think otherwise, he shall have my leave. Gen. 10. 5.

But to return to that we are somewhat digressed from; Junius expounding this * Prophecy of the ships of Chittim, would have the Romans ships called the ships of Cittim, because they came immediately from the coast of Cittim, that is Cilicia, in the havens whereof they used to lie. But Cittim is a name of the plural number, and therefore not the name of a Country, but of a People; how then could the Romans ships be called the ships of the Cittæans, unless they had a priviledge that whatsoever ships came to their shores should be theirs? And again Cilicia, where the Roman navy used to lie, was the lot of Tarshish, not of Cittim; for Strabo says the Cetii or Cetians lay West from Cilicia, where we placed them. * Dan. 11. 30.

Another Colony of Cittim Balaam will tell us of in Num. 24. 24. where he says that ships shall come from the coasts of Chittim, and shall afflict the Assyrians, and shall afflict the Hebrews: which is meant of Alexander King of Macedonia; whereby it seems that the Macedonians were called Μαιδῶται from the mixture of the sons of Madai and Cittim, as it were Μαδιοκάτται or Μαθκάται, and after Μακκάται, even as for κατακαίοντες & κατκαίοντες we say κακκαίοντες, and for κατάβαλον κάββαλον· and so Macedonia is called from Μακκέτλαν or Μακέδδαν, that is, Maccetims, for an, en & in are terminations plural in diverse languages. And that ye may fully believe that a Colony of Cittim went into Macedonia, ye shall reade in 1 Maccab. 8. 5. Perseus king of Macedonia expresly called King of Cittim; which reading Junius would fain change, if he had any authority, to make his opinion good, that those ships also are called ships from the coasts of Cittim, because they came out of the havens of Cilicia. And thus much of the Colonies of the Cittaans. Macedones olim dicti Maceta; Gellius lib. 9. cap. 3. Eustathius in Dionysium. Hesych. Μακέτλια, ἡ Μακεδονία.

Now to speak a word or two of the Colonies of the rest. Of the offspring of Gomer, who were of him called Cimmerii, and had a City in their lot called Cimmeris of these Cimmerians or Gomerians, Thogarmah lies only open by the Ægean Sea to the Mediterranean, and therefore sent his ancient Colonies that way, and gave original to the old Gaules whom the Grecians called Γαλάται, and contractly Κίλται for Καλάται Cimbri: and of these Gaules proves Cambden came our ancient Britans, who yet retaine the name of their Grandsire Gomer, and call themselves Cumrah. The Colonies of Thogarmah.

Askenaz, another family of these Cimmerians, lies open to the North-west, and therefore sent his Colonies that way, and gave name to Cimmerius Bosphorus; and going along by Danubius, gave beginning to the Germans, whom Diodorus Siculus affirms to have their Original from the Cimmerians; and the Jews to this day call them Askenazim of Askenaz; and themselves retain the name of their Grandsire Gomer both in Cimbri, and calling themselves Germen, that is Gomeraans: as the Syrians call the Aramaans Armin, of which the Greeks forme their Armenia; so of Gemren or Germen the Latines formed Germania; for en is a German plural, and it is no harder thing to form of Gomer Gemren, then of Brother Brethren; for we English are the Germans brethren, and therefore also the sons of Askenaz. The Colonies of Askenaz.

Riphath lies only open to the Euxine Sea Northward, and West to Askenaz, The Colonies of Riphath.

Gen. 10. 5.

kenaz, and therefore ſent his Colonies ſomething Weſtward, but North of Askenaz; and ſo he gave beginning firſt to thoſe Riphæi above the Euxine Sea, and after to the Rutheni and Prutheni, both which ſound of Riphath, for Pruthen is that but contractly for Riphathen, that is, Riphathæans; for en (as I ſaid) is a termination plural. We call them Pruſsians and Ruſsians, and their language is the Polonian tongue or a dialect thereof, not the Askenazim or Dutch.

The Colonies of Meſhech,

Meſhech alſo lies only open Northward, and therefore ſent his Colonies beyond Palus Mæotis, who are of him called Muskovians.

and Tubal,

Tubal lies on the North-weſt of the Euxine Sea, and therefore ſent his ancient Colonies by it; but whither it is hard to ſay, but it is like Northward upon the Eaſt of the Muskovite.

and Magog.

Magog lies open to the North, and hath ſcope enough, and might goe, if he would, he and Tubal both, even as high as Nova Zembla.

The Colonies of Madai.

There remain Tiras and our Japhetian Madai: and Madai lies open both to the Adriatick Sea and to the confines of Illyricum and Mæſia; but it is not like he went by Sea ſo long as he might by land, and therefore I think he gave beginning to the Illyrians and to the Mæſians, for ſo Pliny calls them, which methinks comes near to Mathians; for θ and σ are changeable one for the other, as we ſee in Rutheni and Prutheni, whom we call Ruſsians and Pruſsians, and Ruſsia and Pruſsia for Ruthia and Pruthia.

The Colonies of Tiras.

Tiras lies open both to the North and the Weſt; but I think he went no further Northward then a River on the edge of Ruſsia, which of him is called Tyras: his other Colonies went more Weſtward, and gave beginning to the Dacians and Getæ and their off-ſpring.

And thus we have ſeen the Firſt Seats of the Off-ſpring of Japhet, and alſo whither they have been ſince ſcattered over the face of this Weſtern world. And now we have occaſion to conſider the Bleſsing of Japhet, * That God would enlarge him into the tents of Sem, and that * Cham ſhould be his ſervant: For there hath never yet been a ſon of Cham that hath ſhaken a ſceptre over the head of Japhet. Sem hath ſubdued Japhet, and Japhet ſubdued Sem; but Cham never ſubdued either. And this Fate was it that made Hannibal, a child of * Canaan, cry out with the amazement of his ſoul, Agnoſco fatum Carthaginis. (See Livy in l. 27. in fine.) The Saracens indeed once ſpoiled us, but they were no Chamites, but Arabians of the ſeed of Iſhmael; and yet becauſe a great number of their kind were after of the Moors and Chamiſh Arabians, we ſee they were in a moment ſhaken off by Japhet, and made to keep themſelves within their African limits.

* Gen. 9. 27.

* Cham was the father of Canaan, and the Lxx. for Canaan ſometimes put Cham; both of them being faulty towards Noah.

* That the Carthaginians were originally of the Stock or off-ſpring of Canaan (the ſon of Cham, whoſe poſterity poſſeſſed all Africk, beſides ſome part of Aſia,) is generally agreed; and S. Auſtin, (one of that countrey) in his Comment upon the Ep. to the Romans, relates, that when any of the people about Hippo or Carthage were asked What they were; they would anſwer in their Punick language, Chananæi, that is, (ſaith he) Chananæi, Canaanites.

And we may ſee likewiſe how God hath enlarged Japhet into the tents of Sem, and how he that was once the God of Sem is now the Bleſſed God of Japhet: For almoſt only the Off-ſpring of Japhet, yea and all the Off-ſpring of Japhet, are at this day Chriſtians, only Magog except; whom he ſeems to have reſerved, as he did ſome of the Canaanites in the land of Iſrael, to prove and puniſh us withall. But let us deſire him That he would at length deliver us from this Belial, and that he would daily enlarge us more and more into the tents of Sem, that he would remember the Bleſsing, and never forget his Promiſes ſo often made to the Iſles of the Gentiles. Hear, O Lord, the gronings of thoſe who are in bondage, and let their cry come up unto thy Holy Seat. Why ſhould the Heathen any longer rage, and gather themſelves together againſt thy Chriſt? How long, Lord, how long wilt thou be angry with them for ever? It is enough, Lord, it is enough; Ariſe and ſend them an Ezra, ſend them now an Helper, and make thine Holy Name known in the midſt of thy people.

DIS-

DISCOURSE XLIX.

Psalm 50. 14.

Offer unto God praise, and pay thy Vows unto the most High.

THE Book of Psalms is a Book of Prophecies; witness the frequent citing of them by our Lord and his Apostles; witness the Surname of King David, who being the penman of no other but this Book is styled the * Prophet David. I say the Psalms are Prophecies, and that both Concerning Christ himself, and also the Church which should be after him. Concerning Christ himself it needs must be; Saith he in the Gospel, (Luke 24. 24.) These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, That all things must be fulfilled which were written of me in the Law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the PSALMS: and more especially concerning his Beginning, * S. Paul quotes the words of the Psalm speaking in the Person of God, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; and again concerning his Office, * Thou art a Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedek. Now for the Church of the Gospel and calling of the Gentiles, as many parts of many Psalms do foretell thereof, so is this whole Psalm a description of the same; 1. What manner of one it should be; 2. What worship God would establish therein. For the first, it should be Catholick and gathered out of all Nations, The God of Gods (saith the beginning of the Psalm v. 1, 2.) even the Lord hath spoken, and called the Earth from the rising of the Sun to the going down thereof. Out of Sion, the perfection of beauty, hath God shined: Agreeable to the words of the * Gospel it self, That it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his Name among all Nations, beginning at Jerusalem: and that it did begin at Jerusalem where Christ himself began, where the Holy Ghost came down in cloven tongues: So out of Sion God shined, our God came and kept not silence; for a fire came before him, and a tempest moved round about him.

* Acts 2. 38.

* Acts 13. 33. Psal. 2. 7.

* Heb. 5. 6. Psal. 110. 4.

* Luke 24. 46, 47.

Now for the Worship and service which Christ would establish in his new reformed Church, it concerns either the First or the Second Table. For the First Table, it tells us What Offerings God would abolish, namely, all Typical Offerings or all the Offerings of fire; and then What Offerings he would accept, to wit, the Offerings of Praise and Prayer; Offer unto God Praise, and pay thy Vows unto the most High. For the Second Table, it commands a right and upright conversation, from the 16. verse unto the last; and the last is the Summe or a brief summary of both Tables, He that offereth Praise, shall glorifie me; and to him that disposeth his way aright, will I shew the Salvation of the Lord.

But to return again to the reformation of the First Table, whereof my Text is the Affirmative part: where (as I said) we are told both What Offerings God will not have offered, and What Offerings he requireth. He will no longer have any Typical Offerings, any Offerings of fire, or bloudy Sacrifices: For * I will not (saith he) reprove thee for thy Sacrifices or thy burnt-

* Vers. 8, 9, &c.

Pſal. 50.14. offerings; I will take no bullock out of thine houſe, nor goats out of thy folds; For all the beaſts of the forreſts are mine, and the beaſts on a thouſand hills. If I were hungry, I would not tell thee; for the world is mine and all that therein is. Will I eat the fleſh of bulls, or drink the bloud of goats? Nevertheleſs he ſtill requireth Offerings of Thankſgiving, and a Preſent when we come to pray unto him: ſo ſaith my Text, Offer unto God, &c. And ſo here is an ἄφεσις and a θέσις, as S. Paul ſaith in a like caſe, He taketh away the firſt, that he may eſtabliſh the ſecond.

Heb. 10. 9.

Typical Speeches often true in the Type and Antitype.

But as in Typical Speeches it often comes to paſs that the things which are ſpoken are true both in the Type and Antitype; as that in Hoſea 11. 1. Out of Egypt have I called my Son, was in ſome ſenſe true both of Chriſt and Iſrael; and that in Exod. 12. 46. Thou ſhalt not break a bone thereof, was true literally both of Chriſt and the Paſchal lamb; and that in Pſal. 22. 18. They parted my garments among them, was true figuratively in David, and literally in Chriſt: Even ſo it comes to paſs in Prophecies, and namely in this, That Prophecies ſo foretell things to come in the Church of the Goſpel, as that they inſtruct alſo the preſent Church of the Law.

it ſo foretells of things to come, that it concerned alſo the time preſent; it foretells the eſtate of the Church in the Goſpel, and yet meant ſomething that concerned the preſent Church of the Law. To which purpoſe we muſt frame the ſenſe after this manner, That God even then did not ſo much regard the Offerings of fire and Expiatory ſacrifices as he did the Offerings of Praiſe and Thankſgiving, becauſe the firſt were Ceremonial, the other Moral; the firſt, their End was changeable, the other, everlaſting. So that in reſpect of the Catholick Church the words of my Text are an Antitheſis or Apharеſis with the former, I will in no ſort have any Typical and Bloudy Offerings, but onely Offerings of Praiſe and Prayer: But in reſpect of the Legal Church or the Church of the Law they are a Protimeſis or Eſtimation, I require not ſo much any Typical offerings, as I do that you ſhould offer unto me Praiſe, and pay your Vows unto the moſt High. For ſo

* Matt. 9. 13. when God ſaith elſewhere, * I will have mercy and not ſacrifice, it is no Antitheſis, but a Protimeſis, that I had rather have mercy then ſacrifice. So again Matth. 6. 19. Lay not up for your ſelves treaſures upon earth, but lay up for your ſelves treaſures in heaven; this is no Antitheſis or Apharеſis, as though Chriſt would not have us at all provide for things of this life, but a Protimeſis, he would not have us take ſo much care for this life as for the life to come.

The Scope therefore of my Text is, to ſhew What kind of Offerings God did chiefly accept under the Law, and doth onely require in the Goſpel; to wit, two ſorts of Offerings, Euchariſtical, and Euctical or Votal. Euchariſtical Offerings are ſuch whoſe End is Thankſgiving to God for Benefits received, which are here termed זבחי תודה Offerings of Praiſe. Euctical I call ſuch as are made to God upon occaſion of ſuit we have unto him, that is, when we come to pray before him, that he might accept our ſupplications and we find favour in his ſight. And this is performed two manner of waies; either by promiſe if God ſhall hear us and grant our petition, which is called a Vow; or by actual exhibition at the time we do pray unto

Gen. 28. 20, &c. him. An example of the firſt kind is that of Jacob; If the Lord ſhall be with me and bring me back again, of all I have, the Tenth will I give unto him. The ſecond was much uſed in the firſt times of the Chriſtian Church, and of it in the Law we underſtand chiefly that Commandment,

Deut. 16. 16. That no man ſhould appear before the Lord empty; that is, Let no man that comes to pray before the Lord appear empty-handed. But becauſe the firſt was very ordinary among the Jews, my Text by a Trope onely names it inſtead of the whole kind of Euctical offerings. Pay thy Vows, that is, when in praying before me thou ſhalt vow a gift to me or mine, if I ſhall hear hear thee; or at thy prayer doſt exhibit the ſame before me, that thou mighteſt find favour in my ſight; ſuch Offerings are well pleaſing unto me, ſuch Offerings will I accept at thine hands. Offer therefore unto me praiſe, and pay thy vows unto the moſt High. Pſal. 50. 14.

This laſt word [moſt High] will ſerve us in ſtead of a Reaſon why God ſhould require this kind of ſervice at our hands, Becauſe he is the moſt High God: Offer unto God an Offering of Thankſgiving, becauſe he is the moſt High God, that is, the chiefeſt and higheſt Cauſe of all that thou haſt received: Offer unto God, when thou haſt a ſuit unto him, becauſe he is the moſt High God, that is, the Lord of Lords, the higheſt Lord; and therefore it doth little beſeem thee to appear before him without a preſent, when thou wouldſt doe it unto thine earthly Lord, if thou hadſt a ſuit unto him.

Now alſo the Lord, as he is the moſt High God, ſo he ever was and ever ſhall be the moſt High; and therefore this kind of Offering is due unto God naturally and perpetually. Therefore both Jew and Gentile muſt offer unto God Praiſe, and make and pay their Vows unto the moſt High. For theſe are Offerings made to God for a cauſe unchangeable, our Subjection and his Greatneſs; our receipt of daily benefits and his daily ſhowrs of bleſſings. Theſe therefore even among the Jews and under the Law he did accept without any regard of Type, ſimply and for themſelves; and theſe among the Gentiles he onely accepts, when all the reſt are quite aboliſhed. Thoſe other he rejects, becauſe Chriſt, who was then to ſuffer and to be offered, is not now to be offered any more: Theſe he will ſtill accept, becauſe the moſt High God then is the moſt High God ſtill and ſhall be evermore.

HAVING briefly ſhewn the ſcope and meaning of theſe words, and what theſe Offerings of Praiſe and Votal offerings are which God did chiefly accept in the Law, and will only admit in the Goſpel; there remain yet in my purpoſe theſe things to be treated of.

1. To diſtinguiſh this Moral kind of Offerings from the reſt in uſe under the Law, I will take a ſhort Survey of all the Offerings then uſed.

2. I will give ſome infallible marks whereby we may know this kind of Offerings from thoſe whoſe End was to figure and repreſent things to come.

3. I will bring ſome Reaſons to prove, That the main End of thoſe Offerings I call Euchariſtical and Votal was not Ceremonial but Moral.

4. Laſtly, I will ſhew how farre and in what ſort theſe Euchariſtical and Votal Offerings have been uſed in the firſt ages of the Church, ſpecially about the holy Sacrament and at the celebration of the Lord's Supper: and how the blind ignorance of after-times turned them into Expiatory Sacrifices, which were onely a real Thankſgiving and a kind of real Praying unto God.

[The Author in the following part of this Diſcourſe handles the firſt and ſecond particulars together.]

To begin therefore with the Firſt. All the Offerings in the Law were either Oblationes Sanctæ ſimply Holy, or Sanctæ Sanctarum moſt Holy, or Holy of holies. This diviſion is founded in the Scripture it ſelf, and without this diviſion it is impoſſible either to bring the multitude of Offerings into method, or to underſtand the End, Scope and Uſe of them aright. The Holy Offerings are called תרומות Terumoth, which we tranſlate Heave-offerings; the Holy of holies or moſt Holy Offerings are called קרבנים * Corbanim. And the Scripture is ſo preciſe in theſe words, as I dare affirm though one of them be uſed ſixty times, they are never confounded; but Terumoth is onely given to Offerings ſimply Holy, and Corbanim onely to thoſe who were Sancta Sanctarum or Holy of holies.

The Legal Offerings were either Simply Holy, as the Terumoth or moſt Holy, as the Corbanim were.

*The moſt Holy offering is called קרבן Corban, or אשה Iſheh, that is, an Offring of or by fire.

Why ſome Offerings are called Simply Holy; others moſt Holy.

Now for the reaſon of this difference of Holy and Holy of holies, it is this. The Heave-offering is called ſimply Holy, becauſe it was onely conſecrate to God, Psal. 50. 14. God, and had no other Holineſs but this. The Corban is called Holy of holies, becauſe it was not onely conſecrate to God, as was the other; but was alſo a Shadow and Type of Holy things to come: and hence it had a priviledge that whatſoever it ſhould touch, that ſhould be Holy alſo, as we may ſee Exod. 29. 37. & chap. 30. 29. Which was a Myſtery of that Holy one who by the union of Faith ſhould one day ſanctifie us and whatſoever is ours, as it is Heb. 10. verſ. 10, 14.

The Corban or moſt Holy Offering defined.

The Corban therefore, or the moſt Holy Offering, I define, An Offering of fire, figuring the ſatisfaction which Chriſt was one day to perform to God for us. And therefore the faithfull Jew was to preſent this Corban before God, and lay his hand upon it, as it were preſenting unto God Chriſt who was to come, and apprehending him by the hand of Faith. But the Prieſt alone was to offer it, and to eat up whatſoever remained from the fire, and that * in the Holy place; that ſo the Sacrifice it ſelf being turned into the Sacrificer, might foreſhew that our great Prieſt and great Sacrifice ſhould be one and the ſame; that is, that Chriſt ſhould offer himſelf for us to God his Father, and that he ſhould doe it in the Holy City whereon the name of God was called.

* Levit. 10. 17.

The Corban was either Zebach, or Mincha. Zebach defined.

Now every Corban or moſt Holy Offering was of two parts or (if you will) two kinds, זֶבַח and מִנְחָה. Zebach I define a Corban or a moſt Holy Offering, where by the ſlaughter and ſhedding of the bloud of Beaſts was figured the Expiation of ſin to be wrought by the death and paſſion of Chriſt to come. For our Expiation could not be wrought but by death and the effuſion of bloud; and therefore God here made choice of Beaſts for Types, becauſe they were capable of death and ſhedding of bloud. This Offering is by a ſpecial name called The bloudy Sacrifice, and the LXX in Amos 5. 22. turn it * σφάγιον, both properly and alluding to the word Zebach: the Latines well call it Hoſtia and Victima.

* And in Dan. 9. 27. (and moſt commonly) θυσία, which properly ſignifies a Slaughter-Offering, as in the Hebrew, ſo in the Greek, of θύω macto.

* Mincha defined.

Mincha* was a Corban for the moſt part joyned to a Zebach or Bloudy Sacrifice, where by the burning and aſcending of inanimate things, as Meats and Drinks, was ſhadowed the Obedience and Merits of Chriſt to come, which God would accept for our want of Obedience. By Obedience here I underſtand Chriſt's Active obedience, whereby he fulfilled the Law for us, not by his unvaluable Death, but by a blameleſs Life; for which of you (ſaith he) convinceth me of ſin? Here therefore was no need of Beaſts for Types, but Meats and Drinks; for godly works are as it were Meat and Drink to preſerve that life which is according to Godlineſs. This Corban we turn the Meat-and-Drink-offering, others Munus; the Gentiles called it Libum. But I ſaid, This Offering was commonly adjoyned to the Zebach or Bloudy Sacrifice; for ſometimes it is ſeparate from it. For to this Mincha I refer the holy Incenſe which was within the Temple, which figured that continuall ſweet ſavour and Incenſe of the Merits and Obedience which Chriſt preſents unto his Father in a Temple not made with hands, that is, in Heaven.

John 8. 46.

Zebach*, as alſo Mincha, was either Simple or Diverſe. What's meant by a Simple Sacrifice.

*Again, both Zebach and Mincha, the Bloudy Sacrifice with its Meat-and-Drink-Offering, were of differing kinds, and for differing Ends. For either kind was Simple or Diverſe. Simple I call that which all of it was moſt holy, and the whole was to ſhadow out the Satisfaction of Chriſt. And this was either for Internal ſins, or for External. For Internal ſins, that is, the ſins of our * Hearts, Thoughts and Affections was עוֹלָה the Holocauſt or Burnt-offering. For External ſins or evil deeds were חַטָּאת and אָשָׁם, the Sin-offering and the Treſpaſs-offering, as we call them: * the one (if I am

* So Aben Ezra on Levit. 1. 3. and the Targum of Jonathan on Levit. 6. 9.

* The Hebrew writers on Levit. 4. thus diſtinguiſh them; they make Chatiaah or the Sin-Offering to be for a thing done ignorantly againſt ſome Negative Precept, and now certainly known to have been againſt the Precept; but Aſham or the Treſpaſs-offering to be for a thing done alſo againſt ſome Negative Precept, but as yet not certainly known by the party to be a violation or breach of the Precept.

not not deceived) for Sins against the First Table, to wit אָשָׁם or the Trespass-offering; the other for sins of the Second Table. But because our Internal sins or sins of Infirmity are peccata jugia, continual and daily sins, therefore the Holocaust or Burnt-offering was * continuall and daily offered; the Sin-offering and Trespass-offering were not so: and yet whensoever they were offered, they were offered with a Burnt-offering; to shew that our Evil works cannot be expiated and made pure, unless the Heart, the fountain whence they spring, be also purged.

Psal. 50. 14

* עולת התמיד Num. 28. 10. Holocaustum juge.

What's meant by a Diverse sacrifice.

A Diverse Sacrifice or Varium Sacrificium I call that which was not wholy most Holy, neither was all of it to figure the Offering of Christ to come: So that it was partly holy, and partly most holy. Such a one was שְׁלָמִים or the Peace-offering, which I define A Corban, part whereof was burnt upon the Altar, as in other Sacrifices, but the remainder and greater part was eaten by the faithfull people who brought it; that so their Sacrifice by being turned into their bodies nourishment, might be a Sign of their incorporation into Christ to come, who was the true Sacrifice for sin. Here that which was eaten by the People was not most Holy, for then had it belonged onely to the Priest: but it was a Sacrament and a Communion of that Sacrifice which was offered, and signified Christ, whose Bloud was to be shed and Body broken for their atonement. Rightly therefore was it called a Sacrifice of Peace, as being a Ceremony or Sacrament of Peace and Communion with Christ Jesus, and by him with God the Father.

The Greeks commonly call it Εὐχαριστικὸν, an Eucharistical sacrifice, it being to be celebrated with both oral and real Thanksgiving to God; as for the same reason our Sacrament of Peace is called Εὐχαριστία the Eucharist, which our Saviour Christ hath ordained in stead of that Eucharistical Sacrifice under the Law. And of this kind were the ordinary Sacrifices of the Gentiles, of which the Christians were forbidden to eat, because they who in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper had communion with Christ already come, (as the Jews in the Peace-offerings had communion with Christ who was to come) might have no peace and communion with Devils, as the Greeks had in their sacrifice; as S. Paul (after he had compared these three together) concludes, 1 Cor. 10. 21. Ye cannot drink the Cup of the Lord, and the Cup of Devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's Table, and of the Table of Devils. Out of which place and the Epistle to the Hebrews you may gather all that I have said hitherto of the Use and Ends of the Corbanim or most Holy Offerings. This affinity of the Eucharistical sacrifice with the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper moved the ancient Christians to frame the Office of the Lord's Supper as near as could be unto the Office of the Eucharistical Sacrifice; as might be easily shewn in most particulars.

Of the Offerings which were Simply Holy, viz. Terumoth or Heave-Offerings.

BUT now will I leave The most holy Offerings, and come to Those which had but a single holiness, which I said before were called Terumoth or Heave-offerings, more seldom תְּנוּפוֹת Tenupheth or Wave-offerings; both from the manner of offering them, which was not by Fire, as in the most Holy, but by holding up or shaking them before the Lord.

The Terumah defined.

A Terumah therefore or Heave-offering I define thus, An Offering made unto God of that we have received, in way of thankfulness or acknowledgement of his dominion over the whole earth; or thus more shortly, An Offering made only unto the praise and honour of God: and therefore it is Levit. 19. 24. קֹדֶשׁ הִלּוּלִים Sanctum laudationum, an holy thing of praise, or an offering of praise. And to this purpose are those words of David unto God, 1 Chron. 29. 11, 12, 13, 14. whenas himself and the Princes of Israel had offered an huge Terumah of Gold and Silver for the building of the Temple; Thine, O Lord,

Pſal. 50. 14.

O Lord, (ſaith he) is the greatneſs, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and majeſty: for all that is in heaven and in earth is thine. Thine is the Kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as Head above all. Both riches and honour come of thee, and thou reigneſt over all—— Now therefore, our God, we thank and praiſe (namely, by this Heave-offering) thy glorious Name—— For all things come of thee, and of thine own hand we have given thee.

The Terumah or Heave-offering was either Definite or Indefinite; and this either Commanded, or Free. The Commanded was either General, or Special.

* The Free-will-Offering was either more, or leſs ſolemn.

Now the Terumah or Heave-offering was either Deſinite or Indefinite. A Definite Heave-offering was the Tenth of all increaſe; and this alone was certain, both in regard of the things to be offered, and the meaſure according to which they were to be offered. The Indefinite Terumah was either Commanded, or Free. That which was Commanded was either General, as the Firſt-fruits; or Special, as the Heave-offering of the breaſt and ſhoulder of the Peace-offerings, and of one loaf of the Meat-offering of the ſame; and theſe the Greeks call fitly ἀφωρίσματα and ἀφορίσματα. *The Free-will-offering or voluntary Heave-offering was either more, or leſs ſolemn. The moſt ſolemn and uſual was that which the Hebrews call Terumah-gedola, which indeed was ordinary, but I think no where abſolutely commanded. Voluntary Heave-offerings leſs uſual were the Offerings of Gold, Silver, Land, and whatſoever elſe they might give unto the uſe of the Lord, his Temple and Miniſters.

AND thus have we ſeen all the Kinds of the Offerings in the Law, both holy and moſt holy; and I think there is no Offering to be found but it belongs to ſome of theſe I have named: either to the Corbanim, the moſt Holy; or to the Terumoth, which were ſimply holy.

Concerning this laſt, which we tranſlate Heave-offerings, there remain two things to be treated of: 1. Their Morality; 2. The practice of this kind by the ancient Church in the Office of the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Concerning their Morality or Moral condition I will ſhew three things.

1. That they were not Typical.

2. That they were Offerings Euchariſtical and Euctical, that is, addreſſed or uſed to Thankſgiving and Prayer, according to the meaning of my Text.

3. That this kind of Offering is required at the hands of Chriſtians.

For the Firſt, That Heave-offerings were not Typical, I argue

1. That the Terumoth were not Typical, and that their main End was not Ceremonial, but Moral.

1. From their diſtinction from the reſt, as being alwaies ſimply holy, never holy of holies. The force of this Argument I frame thus; If all the Offerings of fire are therefore called Sancta ſanctarum, Holy of holies, becauſe they were not only conſecrate to God, but further Signs and Types of holy things to come, and ſo had a double Holineſs, one of Sanctification, another of Signification; then the Heave-offerings, which never are nor ought to be ſo called, were only ſimply holy, but no Types of Holy things to come: But the firſt is true, neither can other reaſon be given of this diſtinction: Therefore Heave-offerings were no Types of things to come.

2. My ſecond Reaſon ſhall be from the differing uſage of Terumoth from the moſt Holy offerings. For the moſt Holy Offerings were to be eaten only of Prieſts by condition, of Males by ſex, and in no place but the Holy place; and that becauſe Chriſt, whoſe Types they were, was to be a Prieſt, no miniſtring Levite; a Male, no Female; and was to offer and make his own Body a Sacrifice for ſin in no other part of the world but the Holy city of Jeruſalem: But as for Heave-offerings, not only Prieſts, but every Levite, Singer and Door-keeper; not only Males, but the Wives and Daughters of the Levites; not only Virgins, but even Widows and divorced women; not only free Iſraelites, but even their Slaves and Bondmen who were not of the Sons of Iſrael; and not only in the Holy place, but in every every place, they ate them. The truth hereof is certain and obvious through all the Law of Moses, without any one tittle crossing it. I will not trouble you therefore with quotations, but frame my second Reason after this manner; If none may eat of the most Holy Offerings but only Priests, only Males, and only in the Holy place; because only Priests, only Males, and of all places only the Sanctuary or holy place were Types of Christ: then surely those Offerings which every under-Levite ate of, every Levite's wife and daughter, widows and divorced women, every Levite's slave and bondman, and that in every place, those Offerings doubtless cannot be Typical or Signs of Christ or any thing proper to him; unless we affirm That every Levite, Levite's Wife, Daughter, Widow, divorced woman, yea Slaves and Bondmen, and every corner in the Land of Canaan, were Types of Christ. Psal. 50. 14.

3. To this we may adde in the third place, That there is no one word to be found in the whole Scripture concerning the abolishment of Terumah or the Heave-offering: but of the most Holy in expres terms it is said Dan. 9.27. That the Messias יַשְׁבִּית זֶבַח וּמִנְחָה should cause to cease the Zebach and Mincha, that is, all the Offerings of fire or Holy of holies. And S. Paul, Heb. 9, 9, 10. that θυσίαι and δῶρα Sacrifices and Gifts were ordained μέχρι καιροῦ διορθώσεως until the time of reformation: he saith not so of ἀπαρχαὶ, which word the LXX. use almost every where for the simply holy Terumah or Heave-offering; whereas by θυσίαι and δῶρα and προσφοραὶ they translate Corban, Zebach and Mincha, according to * S. Paul's own quotation out of Psalm 40. 6. Θυσίαν καὶ προσφορὰν οὐκ ἠθέλησας, in Hebrew זֶבַח וּמִנְחָה לֹא חָפַצְתָּ Zebach and Mincha thou wouldest not, that is, no Offering of fire, no Corban or most Holy; and more specially of the several kinds, A burnt-offering and an offering for sin thou requiredst not. * Hebr. 10. 5.

4. And hence it is in the fourth place, That God no where rejects the Heave-offering or any one kind thereof; but Zebach and Mincha almost as often as they are named in the Prophets or Psalms: As in this 50. Psalm, v. 8, 13. I will not reprove thee for thy Zebachim nor thy burnt-offerings: Will I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the bloud of goats? And in Psalm 40. 6. which S. Paul before quoted for the abolishment of Typical Offerings, Zebach and Mincha thou wouldst not, a burnt-offering and an offering for sin thou requiredst not. And Jer. 7. 21, &c. Put your burnt-offerings unto your Zebachim—— For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day I brought them out of the land of Egypt concerning Holocausts and Zebachim: But this I commanded them, Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people; and walk ye in all the ways I commanded you, that it may be well with you. He that will, may look further in Psal. 51. 16. Esay 1. 11, &c. Jer. 6. 20. Hos. 6. 6. Amos 5. 22. where we may hear God still rejecting and disdaining Holocausts, Zebachim and Mincha, Shelamim or Peace-offerings, the whole rabble of Corbanim or most holy offerings; but no word of Terumah. What force of reason this may bear with those who consider that these appellations of Offerings are never confounded in the whole Law of Moses or History of Israel, and therefore not like to be in these places only, I know not; I am sure Terumah is about sixty times found in the Bible, and no where taken for an Offering of fire or most Holy: Nor can it any where be shewn that Zebach and Mincha are put for any other Offerings but Offerings of fire, whereof I have already shewn Zebach was one part and Mincha the other.

And therefore I dare conclude, That Heave-offerings, called Terumoth and simply holy, howsoever many of them might be Ecclesiastical or Judi- cial ſacred in regard of ſome circumſtance, yet in their proper nature and principal end they were no Types of things to come.

2. AND ſo I come to the Second thing I propounded, to ſhew That theſe Offerings were Euchariſtical and Euctical, that is, their formalis ratio and eſſence conſiſted in Thankſgiving and Prayer. For an Offering is then Euchariſtical, when we give ſomething unto the Lord's uſe in way of Thankfulneſs for Bleſſings received; an Offering is then Euctical, when we give ſomething to the Lord's uſe, to the end that he ſeeing our Obedience and Thankfulneſs in honouring him, might grant us a further Bleſſing we ſue for: And this is either de præſenti, or de futuro: De præſenti, when our Offering is preſently exhibited; De futuro, when we bind our ſelves then to doe it when we obtain our ſuit: And this is called a Vow, differing from the other not in nature but in time: and this ſpecial kind, becauſe uſual, my Text puts for the whole kind, Pay thy vows, &c. Further, here is to be noted, that as Thankſgiving is joyned with Prayer, ſo is the Gift for Thankſgiving joyned with a Gift for Prayer; Or the ſame Gift is firſt applied to Thankſgiving, and then to Prayer; that ſo as Thankſgiving is a mean to obtain by Prayer, ſo a Preſent of Thankſgiving for a former Benefit is a mean to obtain of God a favour.

Offerings Euchariſtical and Euctical deſcribed.

Herein then conſiſts the Nature of an Offering addreſſed to Prayer, not to merit the thing we ask, but to be an argument before God that he would hear us, becauſe he hath promiſed in Chriſt to hear them who honour him. This is not then orare ſatisfactoriè, as the Papiſts do in their Maſs, but only oblatoriè. To pray ſatisfactoriè or meritoriè, is to offer a price worth the thing we ask for; To pray only oblatoriè, is to offer a motive or condition in regard of God's promiſe in Chriſt to obtain our ſuit; that is, to make as it were a viſible or real Prayer. And ſuch a Prayer were the Almes of Cornelius, Acts 10. of whom it is ſaid, v. 4. That his Prayers and Almes were come up for a memorial before God.

The Qualifications of Offerings Euchariſtical and Votal.

Now before this Offering Euctical or Euchariſtical can be complete, it muſt conſiſt of three degrees or parts, Cordis, Oris, Operis, the Offering of the Heart, of the Mouth, and of the Hand. The Offering of the Heart is a Surſum Corda, the lifting up of our Hearts to God either to praiſe him, or to pray unto him. The Offering of our Mouth is to expreſs the ſame with our tongues, and is called The * Calves of our lips. The Offering of our Hand (which is properly call'd an Offering) is a Teſtimony of what our Heart conceives or Tongue can expreſs, by honouring God with a Preſent of our ſubſtance. The firſt of theſe is the formalis ratio or that whereby the two laſt are ſanctified; without it they are no Offerings, no Thankſgiving, no Prayer: But the laſt is hallowed by the two former; for a Surſum corda, the lifting up of our Hearts, and the profeſſion of our Mouths, is that which makes our Gift an Offering, which without this Conſecration is no Offering at all.

* Hoſ. 14. 2. Heb. 13. 15. The fruit of our lips.

How theſe Offerings were λογικαὶ θυσίαι.

Hence it is that this kind of Offerings in regard of other Offerings is called θυσία λογικὴ· not (as ſome have thought) from the thing offered, as though nothing were offered but λόγοι rationes or orationes; but from the manner of hallowing it, which was (as Juſtin Martyr* ſpeaks) λόγῳ εὐχῆς καὶ εὐχαριστίας by way of Prayer and Thankſgiving. For λογικὴ θυσία is not (as ſome have thought) oppoſed to a material offering, but to an offering earthly and terrenely ſanctified, as were the Typical Sacrifices of the Law by Fire and Bloud; but this Offering is offered by no other Fire but the Fire of the Spirit, by no other Bloud then the precious drops of Prayer and Thankſgiving. In brief, λογικὴ θυσία is an Offering ſpiritually offered, offered, not an offering only of the Spirit; it is opposed to αἱμαλιὴν and [* σωμαλιὴν] θυσία, not to a material and real offering: as it is easily to be seen in Justin Martyr, Irenæus, and the ancient Liturgies, who call the material offering of Bread and Wine for the Sacrament θυσία λογικὴ καὶ ἀναίμακτος, a reasonable and unbloudy Sacrifice. As the most Holy offerings were called אשה Fiery offerings, not because they offered only fire, but because that which was offered was done by fire: so are all these Heave-offerings called λογικαὶ θυσίαι, because they were offered λόγῳ, meaning the manner, not the matter of the offering.

Psal. 50. 14.

[* This or the like word was wanting in the Manuscript. In the writings of the Ancient Fathers are frequently opposed θυσία σωμαλικὴ or ἡ δι' αἱμάτων καὶ σπονδῶν καὶ θυμιαμάτων, and θυσία ἀσώμαλος, ἀναίμακλος, λογικὴ, &c. Vid. Justin. Mart. in Apol. 2. Euseb. Dem. Evang. l. 1. c. 10. & l. 5. c. 23.]

To come therefore to a conclusion. That the Heave-offerings were such Offerings as I have now described, it appears plainly in three principal sorts of them, First-fruits, Tithes, and Voluntary Heave-offerings. In First-fruits it appears by the Confession which every one was to make who offered them, Deut. 26. 6, &c. When the Egyptians evil intreated us and afflicted us——and when we cried unto the Lord God of our fathers, the Lord heard our voice——and brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand and out-stretched arm——and he hath brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, even a land that floweth with milk and hony. And now behold, I have brought the First-fruits of the Land which thou, O Lord, hast given me. And (so saith the Text) thou shalt set them before the Lord thy God, and worship before the Lord thy God. Whither tend all these words but to a thankfull acknowledgment and remembrance of the Blessings they had received from God in giving them so good a Land, and doing so great things for them?

And for Tithes, you may see in the same place what he was to say that offered them, namely, * I have brought away the hallowed things out of mine house, and also have given them unto the Levite, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, according to all thy Commandments which thou hast commanded me——Look down (therefore) from thy holy habitation, from heaven, and bless thy people Israel, and the Land which thou hast given us, as thou swarest to our fathers, a Land that floweth with milk and honey. Here is an Euctical offering, an offering applied to Prayer; as if they had said, We honour thee, O Lord, with this part of our substance, that thou seeing our Obedience, mightest in mercy vouchsafe to look down from thy holy habitation, and bless us thy people, and the Land which thou hast given us.

I come now to the Voluntary Heave-offering, of which we have a noble Pattern in that great Terumah of Gold and Silver which David and his Princes offered for the building of the Temple, in 1 Chron. 29. Where we shall find first Praise or Thanksgiving, that is, an acknowledgment of God's Dominion, Power and Goodness, from which comes all the good we have; Thine, O Lord, (saith David ver. 11.) is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the Majesty; for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine——ver. 12. Both riches and honour come of thee, and thou reignest over all—— ver. 13. Now therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name. And afterwards he comes to Prayer (ver. 18, 19.) O Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel our fathers, —Give unto Solomon my son a perfect heart to keep thy Commandments, thy Testimonies and Statutes. I will adde for a conclusion that of Nehemiah, 13. 14. who being the Head and Ruler of his brethren when he commanded them to give the Heave-offering or portions of the Levites, it was as it were an Offering of his own, and therefore he applieth it Euctically, saying, Remember me, O my God, concerning this, and wipe not out my good deeds that I have done for the house of my God, and for the offices thereof.

Pſal. 50. 14. AND now I come unto the third thing I propounded, That this kind of Offering or Terumah (the eſſence and formalis ratio whereof conſiſted in Prayer and Thankſgiving) was ſtill required at the hands of Chriſtians; and then afterward ſhall ſpeak of the Practice of the ancient Church.

3. That theſe Offerings (as I may ſo ſpeak) of viſible Prayer and Thankſgiving are required at the hands of Chriſtians, I prove

1. Becauſe the inward worſhip of the Heart is ſtill due, and therefore alſo the outward ſo far as it was to be a Sign thereof: For what reaſon can be given why we ſhould be ſtill bound to honour God with the Praiſe and Prayer of our Hearts, yea and Mouth too, and ſhould not be bound to doe the ſame alſo by our Works and Deeds? Without doubt he that commands us to honour him with our whole Heart, with all our Mind, with all our Soul, and with all our Strength, would have us honour him in all the degrees of honour, with the honour of the Heart, of the Mouth and of the Hand; and howſoever the firſt of theſe be required ſimply, yet the other two are at leaſt conveniently.

Exod. 23. 15. Deut. 16. 16. 2. We know it is the Law of God, That no man ſhould appear before him empty: And this is ſo natural, that we never almoſt come before a man, if we have a ſuit or would ſhew our ſelves thankfull, but we think fit to honour him with a preſent, that we might find him the more favourable: Why ſhould not God much more expect ſome fruits of our Obedience when we come into his preſence; ſeeing he gives all things as Lord of all, not as a Steward to another; yea and of his free goodneſs, not as bound to give us any thing more then ſeems fit to his good will and pleaſure? And that this Law was to have place in the Goſpel as well as in the Law, it appears by S. Paul's decree concerning the Lord's day, which being the day wherein every Soul was publickly to preſent himſelf before the Lord to make his prayers and to give thanks unto his name, that this might not be done with empty hands, S. Paul gives order to all the Churches of Galatia and Corinth, 1 Cor. 16. 2. That upon the firſt day of the week every one ſhould lay by him in ſtore, as God had proſpered him, that is, he ſhould give for pious uſes according to his ability. Thrice in the year (ſaith the Law, Deut. 16. 16.) ſhall every male appear before the Lord, and no man ſhall appear empty. Once in a week (ſaith the New Teſtament) ſhall every Soul appear before the Lord, and no man ſhall appear empty. Deus non indiget eorum quæ à nobis ſunt, ſed nos indigemus offerre aliquid Deo;—— à nobis propter nos fieri vult, nè ſimus infructuoſi; God ſtands not in need of any thing that is ours, but it is needfull for us to preſent God with ſome Oblation of our own—— And it is not for any advantage to himſelf, that God would have this to be done by us; but for our own good and behoof, that we may not be in the number of unprofitable ſervants, ſaith * Irenæus, one of the moſt ancient Fathers, whoſe argument this is which I have brought; urged alſo by Mr. Bucer in his cenſure of our Liturgy. * l. 4. c. 34.

3. My third Argument is ſomething like unto the former. God is a King, and therefore to be honoured like a King. The proper honour of a King as a King is Tribute, whereby his Subjects acknowledge his Supremacy and Dominion. God is a King, a King of Kings, as well now in the Goſpel as ever in the Law; and therefore now as well as then to be honoured with a Tributory Offering. This reaſoning is good, ſeeing God himſelf ſo reaſoneth with his Mal. 1. 6. people; If I am a Father, (ſaith he) where is mine honour? if I am a Lord, where is my fear? Why may we not adde in the ſame force of reaſon, If God be a King, where is his Tribute, the proper honour of a King? yea ſo proper to a King, that they are terms convertible in the Scripture, To be be a King, and To receive Tribute or Preſents of his Subjects; To acknowledge to be a King, and To bring Preſents. For thoſe ſons of Belial (1 Sam. 10. 27.) which did not acknowledge Saul to be their King, are ſaid to have brought him no Preſents. And 2 Chron. 17. 5. the Holy Ghoſt uſeth no other words to ſignify that Jehoſhaphat was acknowledged and confirmed King of Judah but theſe, That all Judah brought him Preſents. We know the diſcipline of the Perſians was, That none might come before their King without a Gift, were it never ſo ſmall; and therefore the Peaſant * Sinætas offered Artaxerxes an handfull of water, having nothing elſe to give him. And this the Magi, who came from the Eaſt to worſhip Chriſt, knew well enough, and therefore they offered him Preſents of Gold, Frankincenſe and Myrrh; for they came to worſhip a King, and worſhipped him like a King: Where is he (ſay they) that is born King of the Jews? for we have ſeen his Star in the Eaſt, and are come to worſhip him. Nay the very reaſon why we give Tribute unto Kings is becauſe they are God's Miniſters: So ſaith S. Paul, Rom. 13. 6. For this cauſe pay you Tribute; for they are God's Miniſters. Propter quod unumquodque eſt tale, illud magis eſt tale; If this be due unto the Vice-gerent, what is due unto the Lord himſelf? I conclude therefore in the words of Irenæus, Offerre igitur Deo oportet primitias ejus creaturæ, We ought therefore to offer unto God an Heave-offering of his creatures; for ſo the Lxx, and from them all ancient Writers, uſe Ἀπαρχαὶ, which the Latines turn Primitiæ, not meaning that which in Hebrew is called ראשית, but every Terumah or λογικὴ θυσία. Irenæus a little before hath this, Per munus enim erga Regem & honos & affectio oſtenditur; For the Preſent ſhews what affection and eſteem the giver hath for the King he honoureth therewith: and afterwards, Sicut & Moſes ait, Non apparebis vacuus ante conſpectum Domini Dei tui; Even as Moſes ſaith, Thou ſhalt not appear before the Lord thy God empty.

But before I goe from hence, it ſhall not be amiſs to diſtinguiſh the uſe of this word Offering taken materially; for our writers in the point of Chriſtian Oblations ſpeak ſomewhat confuſedly thereof. An Offering therefore is taken properly or analogically. An Offering properly taken is a work of the Firſt Table; an Offering analogically taken is a work of the Second Table, otherwiſe called Eleemoſyna or Almes. The firſt is done to God immediately, and is when we give ought to the uſe and maintenance of his Worſhip. The Second is done to our Neighbour immediately, as when we ſupply his wants out of our abundance: and this is done to God only mediately; unleſs it be done unto the ſtranger, fatherleſs, and widow; for they in the old Law were in a ſpecial manner Cura Dei God's care, together with the Levite. Of theſe two kinds I have hitherto extended the firſt; though I exclude not Alms, ſo far as God is worſhipped by the good we doe unto our brother.

I COME now unto the laſt point I propoſed, namely, The Practice of the ancient Church in the uſe of this Offering or Oblatory Praiſe and Thankſgiving at the celebration of the Lord's Supper; and here I will ſhew firſt, What their cuſtome was; ſecondly, What ground and reaſon they had for the ſame.

To begin with the firſt. Among the ancient Chriſtians the whole Office of this Sacrament, I mean the whole Body of Rites and Actions about the ſame, conſiſted of three parts, namely, as they are diſtinguiſhed by * Ignatius, Προσφορὰ, Θυσία, Δοχή. Προσφορὰ was an act of Oblatory praiſe and prayer by addreſſing or applying Bread and Wine unto the uſe of the Sacrament, and other Gifts to the uſe of God's ſervice. Θυσία or Sacrifice, the conſecration or myſticall changing of Bread and Wine thus ſanctified

Psal. 50. 14.

into the Body and Bloud of our Lord Jesus. Δοχὴ was the eating or receiving of the same in sign of Communion with Christ and all the fruits of his Incarnation; whence Nazianzen defines this Sacrament κοινωνία ἐνσαρκώσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ, the Communion of the Incarnation of God. To these three acts answer three words: To προσφορὰ or the Oblation, hallowed Bread and hallowed Wine; but no more: To θυσία or the Consecration, the Body and Bloud of the Lord: To the third, the Communion of the Body and Bloud of the Lord. The first act of common Bread and Wine made holy and sanctified Bread and Wine, called Εὐλογία and Εὐχαριστία, that is, the Bread and Wine of Blessing and Thanksgiving: The second act of holy Bread and Wine made most holy, that is, holy signs of the Lord's Body and Bloud: The third of holy signs in general holy signs in special applied to the soul of each receiver. The first was done by being used to Prayer and Thanksgiving: The second by pronouncing the words of Institution at the breaking of the Bread and pouring of the Wine: The third by receiving it with Amen or So be it. The first and last were acts of Priest and People; the second of the Priest alone. Thus was there as it were a mutuall commerce between God and the People; the People giving unto God, and God again unto his People: the People giving a small Thanksgiving, but receiving a great Blessing; offering Bread, but receiving the Body; offering Wine, but receiving the mysticall Bloud of Christ Jesus.

Τὸ ποτήριον τῆς Εὐλογίας ὃ εὐλογοῦμεν, The Cup of Blessing which we bless. 1 Cor. 10. 16.

I know that the names of these are often confounded, all being used for the whole, and often one for another; but especially the Sacrament it self is called προσφορὰ the Oblation or Offering, by a Metonymie of the matter, because the matter was offered Bread and offered Wine. For the same reason is it called Εὐχαριστία, the Eucharist, because the matter of it was Eucharistia, Bread of Blessing and Thanksgiving; not, as some think, because the End thereof is Thanksgiving. It is called also Θυσία or Sacrifice, I think of the matter also, which was taken out of θυσία λογικὴ though some will have it so called becaufe it was a sign of Christ's sacrifice.

But I return again unto the Oblation, which (as you have seen) was as it were a Prologue unto the Sacrament, and had the full nature of the Heave-offering, which I have so long spoken of.

First it was in every part complete, having all the degrees or parts of a true offering, namely, of the Heart, of the Tongue, and of the Hand; all formally expressed in the ancient Liturgies. For when the people began to bring their Offering unto the Altar, the Priest was to say, Ἄνω τὰς καρδίας, Lift up your hearts; to which they answered, Ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν Κύριον, We lift them up unto the Lord: This was the use of those Versicles in ancient time. When this was done, then came the calves of their lips offered both to Praise and Prayer.

Cyrill. Catech. Mystag. 5. Chrysostom. in Hom. 18. in 2 Cor.

1. To Praise and Thanksgiving. When the Priest cried, Εὐχαριστήσωμεν τῷ Κυρίῳ, Let us give thanks unto the Lord; the people answered, Ἄξιον καὶ δίκαιον, It is meet and just we should doe so: and so they went on to give God thanks, or to make a thankfull remembrance of the Creation of the World and all things therein for the use of man, for the Providence of God in governing the same, for the Oeconomy of his Church afore the Law and in the Law; recounting in brief as they went the principal Histories of the Bible in all these particulars. This part of Oblatory Thanksgiving is now called the Preface in the Mass, though something diverse from the ancient.

But because Christ had commanded that in this service they should chiefly remember remember him, they made in the next place a large Thanksgiving unto God, that he so loved the world as to give his own Son for the same, that the Son of God would abase himself so low as to take upon him the nature of sinfull man, and by his death and passion to redeem us out of the jaws of death and pit of hell. And this is now for the greater part called The Hymne: and here ended The offering of Praise and Thanksgiving. Psal. 50. 14.

2. Next comes the Offering of Prayer, or Prayer with an Offering for Kings and Princes, the whole Catholick Church; and so along as we have it in our Litany, or in the Prayer for the whole state of Christ's Church: both which are beaten out of that mint. And our Prayer for the whole state of Christ's Church is yet Oblatory, if the Rubrick were observed, which enjoyns the Church-wardens to gather the Alms of the people, and then to make this Universal Prayer; and in the very beginning thereof we desire Almighty God to accept those our Alms and to receive our Prayers. In no other sense did the ancient Church use their word [Offer] so often repeated in those Prayers, but that God would accept of their Obedience in thus honouring him, and so according to his promise in Christ to hear their Prayers. And hence it is that sometimes they say, * We offer, sometimes, * We beseech thee; one expounding the meaning of the other. But this is now made to be the Canon of the Mass, and all this Offering of Prayer is turned into an Offering of Expiation for the quick and the dead. For this offering of Bread and Wine and Alms being out of use, the Priest could apply the word [Offer] to no other thing but the offering of Christ's Body and Bloud. Tertullian. ad Scap. c. 2. Cyrill. Catech. Mystagog. 5.

* προσφέρομέν σοι, * δεόμεθά σου.

Thus have you seen as briefly as I could the Practice of the ancient Church in their offering of Praise afore the Sacrament; for after this was done, as ye have heard, then came the Sacrament, and then the Communion of the same.

NOW it remains I should shew What ground and reason they had for this Custome; which I will doe briefly.

The First ground they seem to have had is from the Office of the Peace-offering or Eucharisticall Sacrifice, because they were both of the like nature and same end; the Jews in the Eucharisticall Sacrifice having communion with him who was to come, by eating of their Sacrifice, as we in this Sacrament have with him who is already come, by eating of his Mysticall Body and Bloud under the formes of Bread and Wine: And because of this affinity they framed the office of the one like unto the office of the other. For in every Peace-offering there was first a Terumah of Praise and Thanksgiving, both of * animalia and cibaria: secondly, A part of this being reserved for the Priest's use, the rest was made a Sacrifice by sprinkling of bloud, and burning some part thereof upon the Altar as a Memoriall of the whole: And in the third place, That which was saved from the fire, was eaten both of Priest and people. This may be seen in the Law of Peace-offerings and the offerings of Consecration and Purification, all being of the same Law.

* The living creatures were Bullocks, Sheep, or Goats, Levit 3. The other things without life, & which were for food, that were offered up, were the unleavened cakes, and wafers, of fine floure, and oil; as also levened bread, &c. which according to the Law (Levit. 7.) were required in every Peace-offering of Thanksgiving; whence it was called The Peace-offering that was offered with bread.

According to this Pattern was framed the Office of the Sacrament: for in this also was first offered a Terumah of Praise and Prayer, some part of which being kept for some other holy use, the rest was consecrate into a Sacrament, and then eaten both of Priest and People.

The Second reason they have is from the first celebration of this Sacrament by Christ and his Apostles, which the Evangelists record thus, That Christ took Bread, καὶ εὐλογήσας καὶ εὐχαριστήσας, that is, having made a blessing and a thanksgiving, he said, Take, eat, This is my body which is broken for you; and then likewise of the Cup: and to both addes, Doe this in remembrance of me. In theſe words of the Story we ſee three acts plainly expreſſed: 1. A Bleſſing or Thankſgiving; 2. A Conſecration of a Sacrament, This is my Body, &c. 3. A Communion or Receiving of the ſame, Take and eat. Now becauſe after all this Chriſt adds, Doe this in remembrance of me, or, As often as ye doe this, doe it in remembrance of me; it may be a queſtion whether he means that all theſe acts ſhould be done in remembrance of him, or onely ſome one of them. The * Singular number may argue he meant of ſome one; and then it is a Queſtion which of the three; whether he would have the Bleſſing and Thankſgiving, or the Conſecration, or the Eating done in remembrance of him. It may ſeem not to be meant of the Eating or Communion, for the words ſeem to be ſpoken before it was; and beſides the words ſeem to be ſpoken of ſomething himſelf had done, which were the two firſt acts onely. To be ſhort, The moſt ancient Fathers, Juſtin Martyr, Irenæus, with others, if I underſtand them, they underſtand theſe words of that firſt act, of Bleſſing and Thankſgiving; as if Chriſt had ſaid, Whereas heretofore in this act of Bleſsing and Thankſgiving you made a chief remembrance or chiefly gave thanks to God for paſſing by you, when he ſlew all the firſt-born of Egypt; henceforth in lieu of this ye ſhall doe it in remembrance of me, that is, you ſhall give thanks to God for my Incarnation and coming into the world to ſave mankind, for my precious Death and Paſſion, for my glorious Aſcenſion, and all the Benefits ye have from me. And ſo the meaning of S. Paul's words expounding the words of Chriſt, As often as ye eat of this bread and drink of this cup, ye declare the Lord's death untill he come, is to be conſtrued after the ſame manner, viz. Not by eating this bread or by drinking this cup, but at the eating of this bread and at the drinking of this cup, ye uſe to make a thankfull remembrance of the Lord's death: meaning that this remembrance or declaration is neither the Form nor the Effect of the Sacrament it ſelf, but a Connexum or thing joyned unto it, or uſed at the ſame time with it. For the Form of the Sacrament is a Sign and Communion of the Lord's body, the End and Effect the Confirmation of our Faith; neither of which ſeems to be meant by remembring of his death.

*Τοῦτο This do, Luke 22. 19. 1 Cor. 11. 24.

1 Cor. 11. 26.

Howſoever it be, upon this Expoſition the Fathers ground their Oblation of Prayer and Thankſgiving before the Sacrament as a thing injoyned by Chriſt himſelf. * Irenæus expreſly ſaith That Chriſt in this his taking bread and giving thanks, Novi Teſtamenti novam docuit oblationem, did teach and appoint the New Oblation of the New Teſtament; and that by ſo doing he taught his diſciples primitias Deo offerre ex ſuis creaturis, non quaſi indigenti, ſed ut ipſi nec infructuoſi nec ingrati ſint, to offer unto God an Heave-offering of his Creatures; not for that God had any need thereof, but that they might not ſhew themſelves ungratefull and unprofitable ſervants: and that of this Malachy propheſied, when he ſaith, In every place Incenſe ſhall be offered unto my Name, and a pure Offering.

*lib. 4. c. 32.

Mal. 1. 11.

If you wonder how it could be ſo taken, I will make it plain as I conceive it thus. Where it is ſaid that Chriſt took bread and gave thanks or made a bleſſing; it may be underſtood either that he gave thanks to God for the Bread, or with the Bread: If with the Bread, he made an Oblatory thankſgiving or bleſſing, as I have ſhewed the Ancients did: And in this ſenſe the Fathers take the words, and Beza himſelf leans the ſame way, quoting the words of Theophylact, That he gave not thanks for the bread, but ἐπὶ τῷ ἄρτῳ upon the bread, that is, he did an act of Oblatory praiſe by addreſſing Bread and Wine to the Lord's uſe in the Sacrament.

And that ſuch ſhould be the meaning of the words, this reaſon made great appearance, becauſe it is like that Chriſt uſed the ſame kind of Bleſſing ſing and the ſame kind of Thankſgiving which the Jews uſed in the Paſsover, onely changing the End thereof: Now their Thankſgiving was by way of Oblation; for the Paſsover was a kind of Peace-Offering, in which I have ſhewed, that which was to be a Sacrifice, was firſt offered a Terumah of Thankſgiving, whereof the whole Sacrifice was called Euchariſtical. Whether this be the meaning of the words or no, I will not ſay. Pſal. 50. 14.

The End of all this Diſcourſe of Offerings hath been to help my ſelf and others to underſtand the Fathers rightly, and to know the difference of the Romiſh Maſs from this ancient Terumah of Thankſgiving and Prayer; which I will briefly point at, and ſo make an end.

1. This Offering of the Fathers was before the Conſecration; the Maſs is after.

2. This was of bare and naked Bread and Wine; the Maſs of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt.

3. This was an Heave-offering of Praiſe and Prayer; the Maſs is an Offering of Expiation, or a price of redemption for the quick and dead.

4. This was an act of all the faithfull; but the Maſs is of the Prieſt alone.

DISCOURSE L.

1. Ep. JOHN 2. 3.

Hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his Commandments.

MAN that is born of a woman (ſaith Job) is of ſhort continuance and full of trouble: Nay our days are not ſo few, but they are alſo as full of ſorrow, full of unquietneſs and diſcontent; no hour is without, no eſtate is free; from him that ſitteth upon the glorious throne unto him that is beneath in the earth and aſhes, from him that is clothed in ſilk and wears a crown even unto him that is clothed in ſimple raiment. He that had attained the higheſt pitch of worldly felicity, King Solomon, who was great and encreaſed above all that were before him in Jeruſalem, whoſe eyes had whatſoever they deſired, who withheld not his heart from any joy; yet when he had conſidered all, he could ſee no good thing under the Sun, nothing wherein he could find true hearts-content; but cried out, Vanity of vanities, all is vanity and vexation of ſpirit: All things are full of Labour, man cannot utter it. Yea Pleaſure it ſelf is linkt with pain and ſorrow, Extrema gaudii ſemper occupat luctus. In vain then do men take up their reſt where they have not long to ſtay; in vain do they ſeek for comfort in thoſe things where no true comfort can be found. There is but one thing in the world that can make this miſerable life happy unto us, and that is ſo to demean our ſelves while we live here, as that we may be aſſured of the Life to come: This is that will make us not to feel the ſorrows and troubles of this life; This is that will make us with eaſe to ſwallow the bitter pills of Death it ſelf; when

Job 14. 1.

Eccles. 2. 9, 10.

Verſ. 2. 14.

Verſ. 8.

1 John 2. 3. when we can ſay with Job, I know (or I am ſure) that my Redeemer liveth, and that theſe eyes ſhall ſee him, though worms conſume this body of mine.

*Job 19.25,26. But the greateſt part of men think no ſuch Aſſurance can be had, and therefore think it but labour loſt to ſeek after it: Others on the contrary are too credulous, aſſuring themſelves of God's favour and of eternal life, without any proof or triall of their Aſſurance whether it be true or no. That both theſe ſorts of men may ſee what a dangerous Errour they are in, let them peruſe but this one Epiſtle of S. John, and out of the whole Epiſtle let them conſider with me a while the Verſe which I have read; let them hear what the Spirit ſaith by the beloved Apoſtle of the Lord, By this we do know (or come to be aſſured) that we know him, if we keep his Commandments.

The firſt part of theſe words tells us of an Aſſurance to be gotten; and leſt we might deceive our ſelves, the other part tells us what that is whereby we come to be aſſured, and whereby we may prove infallibly whether our Aſſurance which we have conceived be good or no, viz. If we keep his Commandments. By this we do know (or, we are ſure; ſo the former Tranſlation, and it comes all to one) that we know him, if we keep his Commandments.

In the firſt part of theſe words all is plain, and there is nothing hard to be underſtood, but onely what is meant by this Knowing of Chriſt; what manner of Knowledge this ſhould be which is here ſpoken of. For there are diverſe kinds of knowing Chriſt. There is a Knowledge which the very Devils have: the Devils (ſaith S. James) believe alſo and tremble; and Jam. 2. 19. in Luke 4.34. we reade that the Devil ſaid unto Chriſt, I know thee who thou art, the holy one of God; and in verſe 41. that other Devils alſo came out of many whom they poſſeſſed, crying out and ſaying, Thou art Chriſt the Son of God; but Chriſt rebuked them, and would not ſuffer them λαλεῖν ὅτι ᾔδεισαν τὸν Χριστὸν αὐτὸν εἶναι to ſay that they knew him to be Chriſt. There is a Knowledge likewiſe which the wicked may have, but it is like unto the Knowledge which Devils have: For the wicked may know Chriſt to be the Son of God, they may know he died upon the Croſs for the ſins of men, they may know that he is gone up into Heaven and ſitteth at the right hand of his Father in glory everlaſting; but, alas! this Knowledge, if they have no more then it, will not profit them at all, it will never ſtand them in ſtead, but rather make them more inexcuſable at the Day of Judgement.

But the Knowledge which the Text ſpeaks of, it is the Knowledge of the Faithfull, yea it is the Knowledge of Faith, yea it is Faith it ſelf: For this Knowledge of Chriſt is to know him to be our Chriſt, to know him to be our Redeemer, to know him to be the Propitiation for our ſins as well as for the ſins of other men. This you ſee is Faith it ſelf, and this is the Knowledge here meant; as you may eaſily ſee further, if you do but reade the words going next before my Text, where our Apoſtle ſaith, If any man ſin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous: And he is the Propitiation for our ſins; and then come the words of my Text, And hereby we know (or we are ſure) that we know him; that is, Hereby we know him to be (as was ſaid before) our Advocate, our Propitiation; all this we are ſure, we know, he is to us, if that we keep his Commandments.

1. If therefore Faith be a Knowledge, If to believe in Chriſt be to know Chriſt; how then can Faith and Ignorance ſtand together? how can an ignorant man be a faithfull man? or how can he have Faith who knoweth not the things of Faith?

Here is a Leſſon to be learned of thoſe that think it needleſs for a man to buſy his head in the knowledge of the things belonging to his Salvation; that that think it is enough if they have a good meaning, though they know nothing elſe. They are proud of their Ignorance, and will ſay they have as good Souls as the beſt of them all: but, alas! they know not that Light and Darkneſs cannot agree together; they know not that to walk in darkneſs is to walk in the ſhadow of death; they remember not that Light is come into the world, and that thoſe that love darkneſs rather then light ſhall be caſt into outer darkneſs, where there is weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. What will you anſwer at the great day of hearing, when Chriſt will not know you, becauſe ye knew him no better? Will you ſay, as ſome do, That you were not Book-learned, and therefore could not reade? Will you ſay you had no Learning, and therefore hope to be excuſed? Theſe Figg-leaves will not ſerve to cover your nakedneſs withall. 1 John 2. 3.

I confeſs, there are many things which the Learned know, which you are not bound to know; Thoſe who are expert in the Scriptures know many things both concerning God and his Works, which others may be ignorant of without endangering their Souls ſafety; yea matters of high Controverſy, thoſe who are ſimple are forbidden to meddle withall; for ſo ſaith S. Paul, Rom. 14. 1. Him that is weak in the faith receive you, but not to doubtful diſputations.

But things which concern our Faith, things which are needful to our Salvation, things which concern our Obedience unto God; theſe things no man muſt be ignorant of that regards the ſafety of his Soul; theſe things God will require at the hands of every one who ſhall be ſaved, whether they be learned or unlearned, whether they be of the wiſe or of the ſimple: whoſoever knows not Chriſt and the means to come to Chriſt; whoſoever knows not what it is to have a Redeemer, to have God to be his Father, what it is to be reconciled to God, to have Chriſt to be his Advocate and Mediatour; whoſoever knows not ſuch things as theſe, muſt hear that heavy doom of Go ye curſed into everlaſting fire.

For want of this knowledge of things needfull to be known God had a controverſy with his people Iſrael, Hoſ. 4. 1. The Lord hath a controverſy with the inhabitants of the land, becauſe there is no knowledge of God in the land. For want of this knowledge it was that God ſaith, Eſay 5. 13. My people are gone into captivity, becauſe they wanted knowledge. And our Saviour in Luke 19. 42. wept over Jeruſalem, and ſaid, O that thou hadſt known the things which belong unto thy peace, &c. As it befell the Jews, ſo will it fall out with every one of us that knows not the things which belong unto our peace, that is, unto our reconciliation with God in Jeſus Chriſt; God will have a controverſy with us, he will ſend us into everlaſting captivity, from whence we ſhall never return again.

Let me therefore beſeech you (Brethren) in the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt, If there be any among you that have not yet gotten this needful knowledge, that do not yet know the things belonging to their peace, that they would now look unto themſelves, and uſe the means which God hath appointed. If you may have the beſt means, uſe the beſt: if not, yet make uſe of thoſe which God hath given you; deſpiſe not the leaſt and weakeſt means; deſpiſe not the bare reading of the Scriptures, for they are the Oracles of God, and God's Spirit may be in the mouth of the reader. Pray therefore unto the Lord that he would give you hearts to underſtand, that his Word may dwell in you plentifully in all wiſdome, that he would open unto you the treaſures of wiſedom and knowledge, that you may reliſh the heavenly Manna, and that you may long after the ſincere milk of the Goſpel; that by this means your ways may proſper, your ſorrows may be eaſie and your comforts many, your lives holy and your deaths comfortable.

And

1 John 2. 3. And thus much have I ſpoken to thoſe who are ignorant, and pleaſe themſelves therein. Now let me ſpeak a word or two alſo to thoſe who covet and deſire knowledge, and take delight in the underſtanding of rare and excellent things. Surely it is a commendable thing to be deſirous of knowledge in any thing which may lawfully be known; and this deſire in 1 Kings 3. Solomon pleaſed God ſo well, that becauſe he asked wiſedom and knowledge, God gave him riches alſo, and ſuch honour that there was no King like unto him among the Kings that were before him, neither after him ever came the like. Art thou then deſirous of knowledge? wouldſt thou know rare and excellent things? wouldſt thou know things ſecret, and foreknow things which are to come? Loe here is a Knowledge the beſt of all knowledges, the knowledge of Faith, to know Chriſt to be thy Redeemer. What more ſecret thing wouldſt thou know then to know the Myſtery which was hidden from the beginning of the world? What higher knowledge then to know thy name to be written in heaven? What more gainfull knowledge then that knowledge that will bring thee a Kingdom whoſe glory ſhall never have end? What better knowledge of things to come then to know that thou ſhalt live in the life to come? If thou kneweſt the tongues of Men and Angels, if thou kneweſt all Arts and Sciences, if thou wert wiſer then Solomon, and couldſt diſcourſe of Trees and Herbs, of Beaſts, of Fowl and of Fiſhes; and yet wanteſt this Knowledge of Faith, all thy wiſedom is folly, and thou art not worthy to wipe the ſhoes of thoſe who are truly wiſe indeed. Never therefore count thy ſelf wiſe, before thou art wiſe in the Lord; never think thou knoweſt any thing, before * Prov. 1. 20. & ch. 9. 1. &c. thou knoweſt thou haſt a part in Chriſt Jeſus: For Faith is the * Wiſedom of wiſedoms; he that knows Chriſt, knows all, though he knows nothing elſe. So that we may ſay with Solomon, Prov. 3. 13, &c. Bleſſed is the man that findeth this wiſedom, and getteth this underſtanding: For the merchandiſe thereof is better then the merchandiſe of ſilver, and the gain thereof then fine gold. Length of daies is in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and honour. Her waies are waies of pleaſantneſs, and all her paths are peace. She is a Tree of life to them that lay hold upon her, and happy is every one that retaineth her.

חכמות Sapientia, (i. e.) Sapientia Sapientiarum, vel Summa Sapientia.

There is yet a third ſort of men to whom this which hath been ſpoken may give profitable inſtruction; I mean the nice and dainty hearers of the Word, who grow almoſt weary of hearing, becauſe the Miniſters ſing nothing but this old ſong of Knowing and Believing in Chriſt; they always beat upon this one point, How men ſhould get Faith, and know Chriſt to be their Redeemer: But they would have ſome new things taught them, theſe common things are tedious, the Miniſter muſt teach them ſomething they never knew before: or, if they muſt have the old things ſtill, their ſtomachs are ſo queaſie, that they muſt needs have them dreſt and ſet out with delicious words and gay ſhews of Learning, that ſo they may goe down the better; that is, They would have Gold to be gilded, and find want of knowledge in the nobleſt piece of Learning in the world.

Verſ. 5, 6. Theſe men are like unto the Iſraelites, Num. 11. who, when God gave them Manna from heaven, and fed them with the food of Angels; after they had a while been uſed to it, they began to murmure, and ſaid, Our ſouls loath this Manna; what, nothing but Manna? what, ſtill Manna? every day Manna, Manna? O that we had the fleſh-pots of Egypt, our onions and our cucumbers! As if they had ſaid, What though this Manna be an heavenly Manna, we had rather have that which comes from the Earth, ſo it be rare and geaſon; we regard not the goodneſs of the meat, but the variety of fare.

But

But what befell theſe dainty-mouthed murmurers? Many they had their wiſh, they had fleſh of the beſt, the fleſh of Quails ſent them; but while the *meat was in their mouths, the wrath of the Lord came upon them, and they died; not becauſe it was unlawful for them to eat fleſh, but becauſe they made more account of this groſſer food, becauſe 'twas rare, then of the Manna which fell from heaven. Take heed therefore, you that are too-too choiſe in hearing, and had rather hear rare and new things, then profitable things, becauſe you hear them often.

1 John 2. 3.

* Num. 11. 33.

The Knowledge of Chriſt is this Manna which came from heaven. If the Miniſter of God feed you with this, it is the beſt food he can give you. What more ſoveraign Diet can be unto your ſouls then that which makes them live for ever? What more pleaſing News can you hear then Tidings that God will be at peace with men? This made the very Angels of heaven to ſing for joy at the Birth of Chriſt, Glory be to God on high, and peace amongſt men. Account not that common which ſo few men taſt of: account not that tedious which the beſt of you all have need of, and which if you could once but reliſh the ſweetneſs of, you would think you never had enough of.

Luke 2. 14.

I ſpeak not all this as quite diſallowing a moderate ſhew of Learning in Sermons, but becauſe I would have you know that in reſpect of the Manna it ſelf they are but leeks and cucumbers, the onions and garlick of Egypt.

AND ſo I come to the next thing I obſerve out of the Firſt part of my Text, and that is from theſe words, we are ſure, or we know, as in the Greek it is *γινώσκομεν· but it comes all to one, for he that knows he knoweth Chriſt, is ſure he knows; he that knows he hath a thing, is ſure he hath it.

* So in Luke 10. 11. γινώσκετε is rendred Be ye ſure; and John 6. 69. ἐγνώκαμεν We are ſure. And ſo a like word οἴδαμεν is rendred, John 16. 30. Rom. 2. 2. & ch. 15. 29.

Mark then from hence, That a man may be ſure he ſhall be ſaved, he may be ſure that the Benefits of Chriſt's death belong unto him. For to know Chriſt, I told you, was to know him to be our Redeemer, that is, to have Faith in him or to believe him to be our Chriſt. If every one therefore that knows him aright and believes in him truly, ſhall be ſaved; he that is ſure he knows him, he that knows he believes truly in him, this man muſt needs know alſo and be aſſured of his Salvation. But you ſee the words of my Text do plainly imply that a man may be ſure he knows Chriſt, or elſe in vain ſhould the Apoſtle tell us of the means how to get that which was impoſſible to be gotten. But if the words of my Text be not ſufficient to perſwade you, then call to mind the firm Aſſurance of S. Paul, who was perſwaded that neither life nor death, neither principalities nor powers, nor any thing elſe in the world, could ſever him from the love of God. Call to mind again the words of Job, who ſaith he was ſure that his Redeemer liveth, and that his eyes ſhould ſee him.

Rom 8. 38, 39.

Job 19. 25, &c.

But perhaps you will ſay that theſe were extraordinary men, Apoſtles and Prophets might know ſo much by ſpecial inſpiration, but every man muſt not look for that which they had; All are not Apoſtles, all are not Prophets, and therefore all muſt not look to be like unto Apoſtles and Prophets.

But mark again the words of my Text, We are ſure, or we know, that we know him: He ſayes not, I John am or may be ſure, or that the other Apoſtles might be ſure; but we know, or we are ſure, we know him: that is, I and you both; not I alone who am an Apoſtle, but all you alſo to whom I write, who have believed through the preaching of the Apoſtles and Diſciples of the Lord Jeſus; we all of us may be ſure, or know, we know him, if we keep his Commandments. And ſurely if this be not ſo, why doth S. Peter 2 Ep. ch. 1. 10. bid us endeavour to make our calling and election ſure? why is the Spirit of God called the Earneſt and Seal of our ſalvation*? The Seal, we know, confirms and makes a thing ſure; and he that hath given earneſt, is bound to

* Epheſ. 1. 14. --the earneſt of our inheritance; and ch. 4. 30 -- ſealed unto the day of redemption.

1 John 2. 3. ſtand to his bargain: whoſoever then doth feel the Spirit of God to be within him, as every one may and muſt do before they ſhall be ſaved, this man hath God's promiſe ſealed unto him, and God hath given him the Earneſt of his Salvation: and certainly God uſeth not to break covenants, he will not break promiſe with us, if we keep promiſe with him; for he is not as the ſons of men, that he ſhould be changed; the Lord hath ſworn, and it ſhall not repent him; the counſell of the Lord remains for ever, and his decree from generation to generation.

Wouldſt thou then have comfort in thy miſery, wouldſt thou have joy in all thy ſorrows, wouldſt thou find reſt in the greateſt troubles of thy life, wouldſt thou entertain Death as a meſſenger of joy, wouldſt thou welcome the Lord Jeſus at his coming? O labour then to make thy election ſure; never ceaſe till thou haſt gotten the ſeal and earneſt of thy Salvation; renounce all kind of peace till thou haſt found the peace of conſcience; diſcard all joy till thou feeleſt the joy of the Holy Ghoſt. Doe this, and there is no calamity ſo great but thou maiſt undergoe, no burthen ſo heavy but thou maiſt eaſily bear it: Doe this, and thou ſhalt live in the fear, dye in the favour, and riſe in the power of God the Father, and help to make up the heavenly Conſort, ſinging with the Saints and Angels, Hallelujah, Hallelujah,

Rev. 5. 13. All glory and honour and praiſe be aſcribed to the Lamb, and to him that ſitteth upon the throne for evermore.

But now leſt that which hath been ſpoken concerning Aſſurance of Salvation might diſquiet the weak conſcience of ſome who cannot feel this Aſſurance in themſelves; let them know That this Aſſurance doth not always continue in like meaſure, but is often ſhaken with the aſſaults of miſbelief, and overcaſt with clouds of diſtruſt. We know that though the Sun be riſen upon the earth, ſhe doth not always ſhew her ſelf in full brightneſs, but ſometimes is overcaſt with clouds and ſhadowed from our ſight; and yet ſhe always giveth ſo much light as thereby we may diſcern the day from the night: Even ſo although the Sun of comfortable Aſſurance be riſen in our hearts, yet it doth not always ſhine forth with brightneſs, or ſhew it ſelf in full ſtrength and vigour, but is ſometime overcaſt with fear and diſtruſt; and yet when there is leaſt, there is ſo much light that a man may diſcern day from night, and know the children of God from the ſons of Darkneſs. Deſpair not therefore, though fear ſometimes diſquiets thee; Diſtruſt not the Lord thy God, though he ſeems ſometimes to hide his Countenance from thee: but when thou feeleſt a combate in thy ſoul, pray then and ſay with the Mark 9. 24. Father of that child in the Goſpel, Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief.

AND thus I come unto the ſecond part of my Text, which contains the Means whereby we come to this Certainty of knowing Chriſt and this Aſſurance of Salvation; and that is, By keeping God's Commandments; for ſaith my Text, Hereby we know that we do know him, if we keep his Commandments. To know Chriſt (I told you) is to believe in him, to be aſſured we know him is to be aſſured our Faith is a right and a true Faith; which Faith whoſoever knoweth he hath, cannot chuſe but know certainly he ſhall be ſaved: But hereby (ſaith my Text) may we know that we know Chriſt aright, and believe in him truly and ſavingly, if that we keep his Commandments.

Obſerv. 1. From whence I obſerve Firſt, That though it be true, That whatſoever good thing we have cometh from God, and that it is his Holy Spirit that worketh all heavenly graces in our hearts; yet he doth it not immediately, without means, but by bleſſing thoſe helps and motives to us which he hath ordained for us to attain ſuch graces and ſuch favours by.

For it is true, that Aſſurance of Salvation is the work of God's Spirit; and yet S. John ſaith here, That it is the keeping of God's Commandments whereby whereby we are aſſured we know Chriſt to be our Redeemer: that is; The Spirit of God by this keeping of the Commandments and by obedience to the will of God doth aſſure us, as by an argument or evidence, that our Faith is a true Faith, a living Faith; and that therefore we may aſſure our ſelves that the Spirit of God dwelleth in us, and that we ſhall enjoy a Crown with Saints and Angels in the life to come. So likewiſe Faith is the work of the Spirit of God; and yet S. Paul ſaith, that Faith cometh by hearing; and how ſhould men believe unleſs they hear the Word preached? It is God that ſaveth us, and Chriſt who purchaſed eternall life for us; and yet the uſe of the Sacraments muſt be as means to bring us to this happineſs. So ſaith Chriſt, Every one that believeth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved; and S. Peter, 1 Ep. 3. 21. calleth Baptiſme the figure whereby we are ſaved.

1 John 2. 3.

Rom. 10. 17.

Mark 16. 16.

And throughout the Scripture we ſhall finde that God beſtows his bleſſings and favours by the uſe of means, and to thoſe who uſe the means which he hath appointed. If Abimelech will have God to heal him and to forgive his ſin, he muſt have Abraham to pray unto God for him: ſo ſaith the Text Gen. 20. 7. Reſtore the man his wife; for he is a Prophet, and he ſhall pray for thee, and thou ſhalt live. So if Job's friends will have God to forgive their ſin in cenſuring Job ſo uncharitably, they muſt uſe the means which God commanded them, Job 42. 8. Take unto you (ſaith God) ſeven bullocks and ſeven rams, and go to my ſervant Job, and offer for your ſelves a burnt-offering; and my ſervant Job ſhall pray for you, and I will accept him. If Cornelius will have the will of God revealed to him, he muſt ſend to Joppa for Peter to preach unto him, Acts 10. 5. If Naaman the Syrian will have the God of Iſrael to heal him of his Leproſy, he muſt uſe the means commanded, to waſh himſelf ſeven times in the River Jordan; 2 Kings 5. 10, 14. Again, Though God had promiſed Jacob that he would be with him, that he would doe him good, when he was to return unto the land of Canaan; and though Jacob depended onely upon God to deliver him from the fury of his brother Eſau; yet he knew that God would require of him the uſing of the means, and therefore he ſent a Preſent to his brother, and when he came unto him, he uſed all humble and ſubmiſſe behaviour toward him. Laſtly, Though Hezekiah in his ſickneſs had received a Sign and a Promiſe from God that he ſhould recover, I have heard thy prayer, (ſaith the Lord, 2 Kings 20. 5.) I have ſeen thy tears: behold I will heal thee, on the third day thou ſhalt go up unto the houſe of the Lord; yet for all this he did not neglect the means, for according to the counſell of the Prophet Eſay he took a lump of figs (ſaith the Text, v. 7.) and laid it upon the boil, and he recovered. Thus then you ſee the manner how God beſtows his graces and favours upon the ſons of men: He is the chief and principal worker in all things which are done, and yet he worketh not without the means, for ſo he ſhould always doe Miracles; (for Miracles are nothing elſe but the works of God without and againſt the ordinary means) but he worketh by bleſſing of the means to thoſe who have and uſe them.

Gen. 32.

Here is therefore a Leſſon worthy to be learned of thoſe who, when you tell them of the perverſeneſs and corruption of their hearts, and exhort them to ſeek to be at peace with God, to amend their lives, to eſchew evil and doe the works of righteouſneſs, anſwer preſently, That all the thoughts of man's heart are by nature evil, and that of our ſelves we are not able ſo much as to think one good thought, much leſs to doe any good deed; we have no free will in theſe things, but are dead in ſin; we cannot turn to God, unleſs he turns us firſt unto him; we cannot mend, unleſs God

firſt amend us; we cannot believe, unleſs he give us Faith; we cannot of our ſelves doe any good, until it pleaſeth God to enable us: And after this manner (as S. Peter ſaith) thoſe who are unskilfull and unſtable wreſt the Scriptures to their own deſtruction. But do you not know alſo, that it is God that giveth us our daily bread, that he giveth us meat to eat and clothes to put on? and yet which of you all will not uſe the means to get theſe things, becauſe elſe you cannot look that God ſhould give you his bleſſing? Do you not know, when you are ſick of a bodily diſeaſe, that if you be healed, God muſt heal you, God muſt reſtore you to your former health? and yet which of you all will not ſeek unto the Phyſician, and uſe all means that can be gotten? Do you not know, when you are in danger, that God muſt deliver you? and yet would you not laugh at him that in ſuch a caſe ſhould ſit ſtill and ſay, God help me, and never ſtir his finger to help himſelf? Are you thus wiſe in theſe outward things, and will you not be as wiſe in things ſpiritual? Is it needfull you ſhould uſe the means to obtain God's bleſſing in things concerning your Body, and is it needleſs in things concerning the good of your Soul?

It is true indeed that of your ſelves you are not able to turn from your evil waies unto the Lord your God; but you are able, I hope, to uſe the means whereby God's Spirit works the converſion of the heart. This Sun the Lord makes to ſhine both upon the evil and the good; this Rain he ſhowres down upon the juſt and unjuſt. What though thou canſt not believe of thy ſelf? yet thou canſt uſe the means of believing. What though thou canſt not of thy ſelf will or doe the thing which is good? yet mayeſt thou uſe the means whereby God gives the grace of willing and doing good. Wouldſt thou then have God to enable thee with the grace and power of his Spirit? uſe the means wherein the Spirit of God is lively and Heb. 4. 12. mighty in operation, ſharper then any two-edged ſword, and entreth through even to the dividing aſunder of Soul and Spirit: Meditate continually in the Law of God, be diligent to hear the Word both read and preached, attend to Exhortation, to Inſtruction: and as Joab ſaid unto his army going 2 Sam. 10. 12. againſt the Aramites, Be ſtrong, and let us be valiant for our people and for the cities of our God, and let the Lord doe that which is good in his eyes; ſo ſay thou unto thine own Soul, I will firmly reſolve, and with all the power I have endeavour to uſe the means appointed by our God, and let the Lord doe that which is good in his eyes. Nay then fear not, thou ſhalt ſee the ſalvation of the Lord: he will give thee a new heart, and put a new ſpirit within thee; he will take away thy heart of ſtone, and give thee an heart of fleſh, that thou mayeſt walk in his ſtatutes and keep his Commandments; and thou ſhalt be one of his people, and he will be thy God.

Obſerv. 2. Obſerve in the ſecond place, That a true and unfeigned Faith in Chriſt (which is the knowing him here mentioned) brings forth obedience to his Commandments. Chriſt, we muſt know, is not only a Prieſt to reconcile us, but alſo a King to be obeyed by us. Theſe two, as they are inſeparable in him, [a Prieſt, but a Kingly Prieſt; a King, but a Prieſtly King;] ſo muſt the acknowledgment of them be in his ſervants. Whoſoever therefore receives him as a Prieſt for atonement of his ſin, muſt alſo ſubmit unto him with loyal obedience as a King. We can never truly acknowledge him the one, but we muſt alſo yield him the other. For Chriſt will not be divided by us; we muſt, if we will have him, take him whole, otherwiſe we have no ſhare in him at all. This is that Faith we ſay juſtifies, and no other but ſuch a Faith as this, which adheres unto Chriſt Jeſus both as a Prieſt and as our Lord and King. And therefore do our Adverſaries moſt unworthily and wrongfully charge us, That we condemn Good works, or hold a man may be in Chriſt or in the ſtate of grace, though his life be never ſo wicked; becauſe we hold, as S. Paul does, we are juſtified by Faith, and not by the works of the Law, Gal. 2. 16. 1 John 2. 3.

Obſerve, thirdly, That the Act of Faith which juſtifies is the Receiving or Knowing of Chriſt; not (as ſome erroneouſly conceive) an Aſſurance or Knowing we know him. For Aſſurance of being juſtified is no way a Cauſe or Inſtrument, but a Conſequent of Juſtification. A man muſt be firſt juſtified before he can know or be aſſured he is juſtified. For this Aſſurance or Certification you may ſee in my Text comes in the third place, not in the firſt; wherein you may obſerve theſe three things to have this order, 1. Knowing or owning Chriſt, which is Faith: 2. Keeping his Commandments, which is the Fruit and evidence of a true Faith: then in the third place comes Aſſurance, For by this we are ſure we do know him, if we keep his Commandments. The Object muſt be before it can be known; the Sun muſt be riſen before ſhe can be ſeen: So hath every one his intereſt in Chriſt before he can know he hath it. Nay he may have it long before, before he knows he hath it: For it is not onely a conſequent, but a ſeparable conſequent, neither preſently gotten, and often interrupted. For though it be neceſſary the Sun ſhould be riſen before ſhe can be ſeen; yet ſhe may be long up before we ſee her, and often clouded after ſhe hath ſhined. This I obſerve for the comfort of thoſe who are troubled in mind and tempted to deſpair, becauſe they ſee not the light of God's countenance ſhining in their hearts. Obſerv. 3.

My fourth Obſervation, and the chief in the Text, is this, That he that walks in the ways of God, and makes conſcience to keep his Commandments, may hereby infallibly know he knows Chriſt, that his Faith is a true Faith, and that he ſhall be ſaved everlaſtingly. This is the main and principal Scope of the Text, and ſo plainly therein expreſſed, that it needs no other confirmation. But the Reaſon is plain; For Good works are the fruits of Faith, and a Godly converſation is the work of God's holy Spirit. Whomſoever Chriſt accepts as a Servant, he gives the token of his Spirit, the Grace which enlivens and quickens the Heart and Will to his Service in a new and reformed converſation. Even as the heat of the Fire warmeth whatſoever comes near unto it; ſo the Spirit of Chriſt kindles this Grace in every Heart that Faith links unto him: the Fruit whereof is that infallible Livery whereby every one that wears it may know himſelf to be his Servant. Obſerv. 4.

A Tree is known by its fruit, the workman is known by his work; whoſoever then ſhews theſe works, and brings forth theſe fruits, hath an infallible argument that the Spirit of God, the earneſt of his Salvation, dwells in his heart; that his Faith is a true and ſaving Faith; that his believing is no preſumption, no falſe conceit, no deluſion of the Devil, but the true and certain motion of God's own Spirit. The riſing of the Sun is known by the ſhining beams, the Fire is known by its burning, the Life of the Body is known by its moving: Even ſo certainly is the preſence of God's Spirit known by the ſhining light of an holy converſation; even ſo certainly the purging Fire of Grace is known by the burning Zeal againſt ſin, and a fervent deſire to keep God's Commandments; even ſo certainly the Life and livelineſs of Faith is known by the good motions of the Heart, by the beſtirring of all the powers both of Soul and Body, to doe whatſoever God wills us to be doing as ſoon as we once know he would have us doe it. He that hath this Evidence, hath a bulwark againſt Deſpair, and may dare the Devil to his face: He that hath this, hath the Broad Seal of Eternal life, and ſuch a man ſhall live for ever.

But on the contrary, He that walks not in the waies of Obedience

1 John 2. 3. to God's Commandments; whatſoever conceit he hath of God's favour toward him, without all doubt he knows not Chriſt to be his Redeemer, he hath not nor cannot have any Aſſurance of Salvation; for how ſhould a man be aſſured of that which is not? His Hope is Preſumption, his Faith is nothing but Security, his Comfort (if he feels any) a mere imagination: His Hope, his Faith, his Comfort are all deluſions of the Devil. For if we ſay (ſaith our Apoſtle ch. 1. v. 6.) that we have fellowſhip with him, and walk in darkneſs, we are liars, yea and the Devil, the Father of lies, is in us.

Heb. 12. 14. Here therefore is a good Caveat for us all. Let us not deceive our ſelves; without Holineſs no man ſhall ſee God. Beware of Preſumption, for Preſumption ſends more to Hell then Deſperation. Let us never think we have Faith to be ſaved by, or acknowledge Chriſt throughly, till we may ſee and know it by keeping his Commandments. For hereby we know that we know him, &c.

But you may ſay, Alas! this is an hard ſaying: If none have true Faith or know Chriſt aright but thoſe who keep the Law of God, who then can be ſaved? For what man is he who hath ſuch a Faith? for there is no man living which ſins not; and who can ſay his Heart is clean? the beſt of us all hath need to pray unto God daily and hourly, Lord, forgive our treſpaſſes.

1. I anſwer, It is true, that an abſolute and perfect Obedience to the Law of God is not attainable in this life: For the beſt that are, though not in a current and conſtant courſe, yet ever and anon offend, both in doing what they ought not, and omitting what they ſhould doe; yea ſome mixture of infirmity and imperfections will cleave unto the face of the faireſt action. So incompatible is an uninterrupted and unſtained purity with this unglorified ſtate of mortality.

2. All this is true and cannot be denied; For our Apoſtle himſelf ſaith chap. 1. 8. If we ſay we have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves, and there is no truth in us. But the ſame Apoſtle in chap. 3. 8. of this Epiſtle ſaith alſo, That he which commits ſin is of the Devil. There is therefore ſome meaſure of holineſs and obedience, and that more then ordinary, required of thoſe who are the Sons of God. That ours may be ſuch, we muſt know the requiſites thereof are three, To be Cordial, Reſolved, and Univerſal.

1. It muſt be Cordial, that is, Conſcionable and Sincere: it muſt be internal, proceeding from the Heart, not external only, in the appearance of the outward work. God looks for fruit, and not for leaves; therefore Matt. 21. 19. the Fig-tree in the Goſpel which had nothing but leaves, we know, was accurſed. Pſal. 119. 2. But bleſſed are they (ſaith David) that keep his Teſtimonies, and ſeek him with their whole heart. For true Faith not only reſtrains the actions of the outward man, (for that Humane laws and other reſpects may doe) but it purifies the Heart alſo from the reigning allowance of any luſt or lewd courſe of ſin. There is abhorring as well as abſtaining, loathing as well as leaving; for elſe a chained Lion, though he abſtain from devouring, hath his Lioniſh nature ſtill.

2. It muſt be Reſolved, that is, out of a full and ſettled purpoſe to conform our ſelves to the Law of God; That howſoever we often fail in the execution, yet this Root may ſtill keep life within us. For good actions which come only by fits and occaſions, are no part of true Obedience: nor where ſuch a Reſolution is, are failings and ſlips more a ſign of a diſobedient child, then the miſſing of a mark argues he that ſhot never aimed to hit it; but only is a ſign either of weakneſs, want of skill, or good heed, or ſome impediment.

3. It muſt be Univerſal; I ſay not abſolute and perfect, for no man can keep keep the Law of God abſolutely and perfectly; yet it muſt be Univerſal, that is, to one Commandment as well as to another. True Obedience knows no exception, no reſervation, nor can any ſuch ſtand with a true Faith and allegiance to Chriſt our Lord. 1 John 2. 3.

Firſt therefore there muſt no darling, no boſome ſin, no Herodias, be cheriſhed: ſuch a dead fly as this will marre the whole box of ointment: For how ſhould he take himſelf for a faithfull ſervant of Chriſt, who ſtill holds correſpondence with his Arch-enemy the Devil? It were treaſon in an earthly ſubject to doe it, how ſerviceable ſoever he might otherwiſe be unto his Prince. One breach in the walls of a City expoſeth it to the ſurpriſe of the Enemy; one leak in a Ship neglected will ſink it at laſt into the bottome of the Sea; the ſtab of a Pen-knife to the Heart will as well ſpeed a man as twenty Rapiers run through him: If thou hedge thy cloſe as high as the middle region of the Air in all other places, and leave but one gap, all thy graſs will be gone: If the Fowler catch the Bird either by the head or the foot or the wing, ſhe is ſure his own. So in the preſent caſe, If Satan keep poſſeſſion but by one reigning ſin, it will be thine everlaſting ruine. If thou live and die with allowance and delight in any one known ſin, without reſolution to part with it, thou art none of Chriſt's ſervants, thou as yet carrieſt the Devil's brand, he hath thereby markt thee out for his own.

Secondly, An Univerſal obedience ſubmits not only to Prohibitions of not doing evil, but puts in practice the Injunctions of doing good. Many think they keep the Commandments well, ſo they doe nothing which they forbid: But the not doing good is 'a ſin as well as the doing of evil. Dives fries in Hell, not for robbing, but for not relieving Lazarus. The unprofitable ſervant was caſt into outer darkneſs, not for ſpending, but for not beſtowing his Maſter's talent. The five fooliſh Virgins were ſhut out of doors, not for waſting, but for not having oile in their Lamps. And the wicked ſhall be condemned at the laſt day, not for reaving the meat from the hungry, but for not feeding their poor brethren; not for ſtripping the naked out of his clothes, but for not clothing him. It will not be enough for thee that thou bringeſt forth no bad fruit, but thou muſt bring forth good fruit. Every Tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, ſhall be hewen down and caſt into the fire. Matt. 3. 10. What if thou ſteal not from thy brother? yet if thou open not thy hand to help and ſuccour him, thou art a Robber. What if thou doſt neither lie nor ſwear? yet if thou makeſt not thy mouth a glorious organ, and thy tongue a trumpet to ſound forth and proclaim the love and mercy of God, thou art a deep and a round offender. What if no man can condemn thee for any evil? yet unleſs God and thine own conſcience ſhall commend thee for ſome good thou haſt done, thou art far from any Aſſurance of Faith, or Knowing thou knoweſt Chriſt to be thy Redeemer.

CHAP. VI. The Third Particular, That the Chriſtian Sacrifice is an Oblation of Thankſgiving and Prayer through Jeſus Chriſt Commemorated in the Creatures of Bread and Wine. Sacrifices under the Law were Rites to invocate God by. That the Euchariſt is a Rite to give thanks and invocate God by, proved from ſeveral Teſtimonies of the Fathers and the Greek Liturgies. A paſſage out of Mr. Perkins *agreeable to this notion. CHAP. VII. The Fourth Particular, That the Euchariſt is a Sacrifice, according to the ſtyle of the ancient Church. How Sacrifices are diſtinguiſhed from all other Offerings. A Sacrifice defined. The univerſal Cuſtom of mankind to contract or confirm Covenants and Friendſhip by eating and drinking together: This illuſtrated from Teſtimonies of Scripture and humane Authors. Sacrifices were Federal Feaſts, wherein God and men did feaſt together in token of amity and friendſhip. What was God's Meſſe or portion in the Sacrifices. The different Laws of Burnt-offerings, Sin and Treſpaſſe-offerings, and the Peace-offerings. Burnt-offerings had Meat and Drink-offerings annexed to them, and were regularly accompanied with Peace-offerings. That Sacrifices were Feaſts of amity between God and men, proved by four Arguments. The reaſon of thoſe phraſes, Secare fœdus and Icere fœdus. That in thoſe Sacrificial Feaſts (and alſo in the Euchariſt) God is to be conſidered as the Convivator, and Man as the Conviva. This cleared by ſeveral paſſages in this and the following Chapter. pag. 469

CHAP. VIII. The Fifth Particular, That the Body and Bloud of Chriſt in the Euchariſt was made of Bread and Wine which had firſt been offered to God, to agnize him the Lord of the Creature. This proved from the Teſtimonies of Antiquity next to the Apoſtles times, and from ancient Liturgies; as alſo from the Fathers arguing from this Oblation of the Creaure in the Euchariſt to God, that the Father of Chriſt was the Creator of the world, in confutation of ſome Hereticks in their days; and laſtly from S. Paul's parallel of the Lord's

Lord's Supper and the Sacrifices of the Gentiles. Two Queſtions anſwered. 1. Whence may it appear that our Saviour at the Inſtitution of the Euchariſt did firſt offer the Bread and Wine to God, to agnize him the Lord of the Creature? 2. Is not the celebration of the Euchariſt in the Weſtern Churches (whether the Reformed or the Roman) therefore defective, becauſe no ſuch Oblation is there in uſe? pag. 473

CHAP. IX. The Sixth Particular, That Chriſt is offered in the Euchariſt Commemoratively onely, and not otherwiſe. *This Commemorative Sacrifice, or the Commemoration in the Euchariſt, explained. That Chriſt is offered by way of Commemoration onely, was the ſenſe of the ancient Church. This proved from ancient Liturgies and Fathers. THE SECOND BOOK; CONTAINING SEVERAL DISCOURSES and TREATISES CONCERNING CHURCHES, AND The Worſhip of God therein.

CHURCHES,

THAT IS,

APPROPRIATE PLACES for Chriſtian Worſhip, both in and ever ſince the Apoſtles times.

1 COR. 11. 22.

Have ye not houſes to eat and drink in? [ἢ γὰρ ἐκκλησίας τοῦ Θεοῦ καταφρονεῖτε;] or deſpiſe ye the Church of God?

IT is taken in a manner for granted by the moſt of our Reformed Writers, and affirmed alſo by * ſome of the other ſide, That in the Apoſtles times and in the Ages next after them (whileſt the Church lived under Pagan and perſecuting Emperours) Chriſtians had no Oratories or Places ſet apart for Divine worſhip; but that they aſſembled here and there promiſcuouſly and uncertainly, as they pleaſed, or the occaſion ſerved, in places of common uſe, and not otherwiſe. But that this is an errour, I intend to demonſtrate by good evidence; taking my riſe from this paſſage of the Apoſtle, who reproving the Corinthians for uſing prophane banquetings and feaſtings in a Sacred place, Have ye not houſes (ſaith he) to eat and drink in? ἢ γὰρ ἐκκλησίας τοῦ Θεοῦ καταφρονεῖτε; or deſpiſe ye the Church of God? Here I take the word ἐκκλησία, or Church, to note, not the Aſſembly, but the Place appointed for Sacred duties; and that from the oppoſition thereof to Οἰκίαι, their own Houſes, Μὴ γὰρ οἰκίας οὐκ ἔχετε;

* Joſeph. Vicecom. de antiquis Miſſa ritibus, Vol. 3. l. 1. c. 21.

1 Cor. 11. 22. Have ye not Houſes to eat and drink in? theſe are places proper for ordinary and common repaſt, and not the Church or Houſe of God: which is again repeated in the laſt verſe of that Chapter, Εἴ δέ τις πεινᾷ, ἐν Οἴκῳ ἐσθιέτω, If any man hunger, let him eat at home.

Thus moſt of the Fathers took ΕΚΚΛΗΣΙΑ in this paſſage, namely, as moſt of the words ſignifying an Aſſembly or Company are wont to be uſed alſo for the Place thereof; as Ἀγορὰ, Βουλὴ, Συνέδριον, Synagoga, Collegium, &c.

Quæſt. 57. ſup. Levit. S. Auſtin is ſo plain as nothing can be more. For concerning expreſſions, where the Continent is called by the name of the Thing contained, he inſtances in this of Eccleſia; (a) "Sicut "Eccleſia (ſaith he) dicitur locus "quo Eccleſia congregatur. Nam Ec- "cleſia homines ſunt, de quibus dici- "tur, Ut exhiberet ſibi glorioſam Ec- "cleſiam: Hanc tamen vocari etiam "ipſam Domum orationum, idem A- "poſtolus teſtis eſt, ubi ait, Numquid "domos non habetis ad manducandum "& bibendum? an Eccleſiam Dei contemnitis?

(a) As (for example) the Church is called the Place where the Church is aſſembled. For the Church are men, of whom accordingly it is ſaid (Epheſ. 5. 21.) That he might preſent to himſelf a glorious Church: But withall that the Church is called the Houſe of Prayer, the ſame Apoſtle teſtifies, where he ſaith, Have ye not Houſes to eat & drink in? or deſpiſe ye the Church of God?

S. Baſil hath the ſame notion in his Moralia, Reg. 30. (b) "Quòd non "oportet [τὰ ἅγια] loca ſacra mi- "ſturâ eorum quæ ad communem u- "ſum ſpectant contumeliâ afficere. Which he confirms thus; "Et in- "travit Jeſus in Templũ Dei, & eji- "ciebat omnes ementes & vendentes "in Templo, & menſas numulariorũ, "& cathedras vendentium columbas "evertit, & dicit eis, Scriptum eſt, Domus mea domus orationis vocabitur, "vos autem feciſtis eam ſpeluncam latronum. Et ad Cor. 1. Numquid do- "mos non habetis ad manducandum & bibendum? aut Eccleſiam Dei con- "temnitis? Si quis eſurit, domi manducet, ut non in judicium conveniatis.

(b) That we ought not to diſhonour Sacred places or things by the mixture of things of common uſe. S. Baſil confirms it from that in S. Matt. 21. 12, 13. as alſo from that in 1 Cor. 11. 22. Have ye not Houſes to eat and drink in? or deſpiſe ye the Church of God? and verſ. 34. If any man hunger, let him eat at home, &c.

The Author also of the Commentaries upon the Epistles, amongst the works of S. Hierome, (whosoever he were) expounding (a) Ecclesiam Dei contemnitis? by (b) Facientes eam Triclinium epularum, shews, he took Ecclesia here to signifie the Place. 1 Cor. 11. 22.

(a) despise ye the Church of God?

(b) making it a place for common feasts and banquettings.

The self-same words are to be found in the Commentaries of Sedulius, as many other passages of this Author verbatim; which I note by the way.

S. Chrysostome is of the same minde; (c) "Ecce quarta accusatio, (saith "he) quòd non pauperes tantùm, sed "Ecclesia læditur. Quemadmodum "enim Dominicam cœnam privatam "facis; ita & Locum, tanquam Domo "Ecclesiâ usus. Ecclesia therefore here with him is Locus.

(c) Behold a fourth charge, That not the poor onely, but also the Church it self is injur'd. For as hereby thou makest the Lord's Supper a private Supper; so thou dealest no better with the Place, in that thou usest the Church as a private and ordinary house.

And so it is with Theodoret, who paraphraseth the words on this manner; (d) "Si acceditis ut lautè & "opiparè epulemini, hoc facite in do- "mibus. Hoc enim in Ecclesia est con- "tumelia, & aperta insolentia. Quo- "modo enim non est absurdum, intus "in Templo Dei, præsente Domino, "qui communem nobis mensam appo- "suit, vos quidem lautè vivere, eos "autem qui sunt pauperes esurire, "& propter paupertatem erubes- "cere?

(d) If ye come together to feast it, doe this in your own Houses: for to doe thus in the Church is a manifest contempt, a plain dishonour done to the Church. For how can it but seem a thing wholy indecorous and absurd for you to fare deliciously in the Temple of God, where the Lord himself is present, who hath prepared for us a common table; when at the same time those Christians that are poor are hungry, and out of countenance by reason of their poverty?

Theophylact and Oecumenius follow the same track, as he that looks them shall finde.

I have produced thus largely the Glosses of the Fathers upon this Text, that they might be as a preparative to my ensuing Discourse, by removing, or mitigating at the least, that prejudice which some have so deeply swallowed, of an utter unlikelihood of any such Places to have been in the Apostles times, or the times near them. For if these Glosses of the Fathers be true, then were there Places called Ecclesiæ or Churches, and consequently Places appointed and set apart for Christian assemblies to perform their solemn Service to God in, even in the Apostles times. Or suppose they be not true, or but doubtfull, and not necessary; yet thus much will follow howsoever, That these Fathers, who were nearer to those Primitive times by above one thousand one hundred years then we are, and so had better means to know what they had or had not then we, supposed there were such Places even in the Apostles times: If in the Apostles times, then no doubt in the Ages next after them. And thus we shall gain something by this Text, whether we accept this notion of the word Ecclesia or not.

HAVING therefore gotten so good an entrance, we will now further enquire What manner of places they were, or may be supposed to have been, which were appropriated to such use; and that done, proceed to shew by such Testimonies or footsteps of Antiquity as Time hath left unto us, That there were such Places through every Age respectively from the dayes of the Apostles unto the reign of Constantine, that is, in every of the first three hundred years.

1 Cor. 11. 22.

For the first, It is not to be imagined they were * such goodly and stately Structures as the Church had after the Empire became Christian, and we now by God's blessing enjoy; but such as the state and condition of the times would permit; at the first, some capable and convenient Room within the walls or dwelling of some pious disciple, dedicated by the religious bounty of the owner to the use of the Church, and that usually an Ἀνώγεον, or Ὑπερῶον, an upper room, such as the Latines call Cœnaculum, being, according to their manner of building, as the most large and capacious of any other, so likewise the most retired and freest from disturbance, and next to Heaven, as having no other room above it. For such uppermost places we find they were wont then to make choice of, even for private devotions; as may be gathered from what we reade of S. Peter, Acts 10. 9. ἀνέβη ἐπὶ τὸ δῶμα προσεύξασθαι, that he went up to the house-top to pray: for so Δῶμα signifies, ex usu Hellenistarum, and is accordingly here rendred by the vulgar Latine, in superiora.

* Isidorus Pelusiota lib. 2. Ep. 246. ὅτι μὲν οὖν τῶν Ἀποστόλων, ἐκκλησιαστήρια ἦν τὰ κεκοσμημένα οὐκ οἶδα, ἐκκλησία δὲ θείοις καὶ οὐρανίοις χαρίσμασι ἐστεμμένη. Where note that of two expressions of this in the same place, the words ἦν τὰ κεκοσμημένα in the Printed Copie are deficient in the first of them; but to be supplied out of this, the second, or repetition of the same thing, as the Reader that considers it will observe the Antithesis requires.

Such an Hyperôon as we speak of, was that remembred by the name of * Cœnaculum (a) Sion, where, after our Saviour was ascended, the Apostles and Disciples (as we reade in Acts 10. 13, &c.) assembled together daily for prayer and supplication; and where being thus assembled, the Holy Ghost came down upon them in Cloven tongues of fire at the Feast of Pentecost. * Concerning which there hath been a Tradition in the Church, That this was the same room wherein our Blessed Saviour the night before his Passion celebrated the Passeover with his Disciples, and instituted the Mystical Supper of his Body and Bloud for the Sacred Rite of the Gospel: The same place where on the day of his Resurrection he came, and stood in the midst of his Disciples, the doors being shut, and having shewed them his hands and his feet, said, Peace be unto you; As my Father hath sent me, so I send you, &c. John 20. 21. The place where eight dayes or the Sunday after, he appeared in the same manner again unto them being together, to satisfie the incredulity of Thomas, who the first time was not with the rest: The place where James the Brother of our Lord was created by the Apostles Bishop of Jerusalem: The place where the seven Deacons (whereof S. Stephen was one) were elected and ordained. The place where the Apostles and Elders of the Church at Jerusalem held that Council, and pattern of all Councils, for decision of that Question, Whether the Gentiles which believed were to be circumcised or not. And for certain, the place of this Cœnaculum was afterwards enclosed with a goodly Church, known by the name of the Church of Sion, upon the top whereof it stood: Insomuch that S. Hierome, in his Epitaphio Paulæ, made bold to apply that of the Psalm unto it, (b) Fundamenta ejus in montibus sanctis; diligit Dominus portas Sion super omnia tabernacula Jacob. How soon this Erection was made I know not; but I believe it was much more ancient then those other Churches erected in other places of that City by Constantine and his Mother; because neither Eusebius, Socrates, Theodoret, nor Sozomen make any mention of the foundation thereof, as they do of the rest. It is called by S. Cyril, who was Bishop of the place, "ἡ ἀνωτέρα Ἐκκλησία τῶν Ἀποστόλων, the upper Church of the Apostles, "τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον (saith he) κατῆλθεν ὅτε τοὺς Ἀποστόλους ἐν ἄλλῃ πυελίνων γλωσσῶν, ἐνταῦθα δὲ

If this Tradition be true, it should seem by it that this Cœnaculum, from the time our Blessed Saviour first hallowed it by the institution and celebration of his Mystical Supper, was thenceforth devoted to be a Place of prayer and holy assemblies. And surely no Ceremonies of dedication, no not of Solomon's Temple it self, are comparable to those sacred gests whereby this place was sanctified. This is the more easie to be believed, if the House were the possession of some Disciple at least, if not of kindred also to our Saviour according to the flesh; which both Reason perswades, and Tradition likewise confirmeth it to have been. And when we reade of Acts 4. 34, 35.
those first Believers, that such as had houses and lands sold them, and brought the prices, and laid them down at the Apostles feet; it is nothing unlikely but some likewise might give their house unto the Apostles for the use of the Church to perform Sacred duties in. And thus perhaps should that Tradition whereof Venerable Bede tells us be understood; viz. That this Church of Sion was founded by the Apostles: Not that they erected that Structure; but that the Place, from the time it was a Cœnaculum, was by them dedicated to be an House of Prayer. His words are these, De locis sanctis cap. 3. in Tom. 3. (a) "In

(a) In the upper plain of Mount Sion there are cells of Monks encompassing that great Church, which was founded there (as they say) by the Apostles; because that there they received the Holy Ghost: and there also is to be seen the venerable place of the institution and first celebration of the Lord's Supper.

And if this were so, why may not I think that this Cœnaculum Sion or upper room of Sion was that Οἶκος whereof we reade, concerning the first Christian Society at Jerusalem, Acts 2. 46. That they continued daily in the Temple, and breaking bread [κατ' οἶκον] in the House, ate their meat with gladness and singleness of heart? the meaning being, That when they had performed their devotions daily in the Temple at the accustomed times of prayer there, they used to resort immediately to this Cœnaculum, and there having celebrated the Mysticall banquet of the Holy Eucharist, afterwards took their ordinary and necessary repast with gladness and singleness of heart. For so κατ' οἶκον may be rendred for ἐν οἴκῳ, and not domatim, Ut apud Homerum passim.
or per domos, house by house, as we translate it; and so both the Syriack and Arabick render it, and the New Testament (as we shall see hereafter) elsewhere uses it. Moreover we find this Cœnaculum called Οἶκος in the 2. verse of the same Chap. And for the phrase of Breaking of bread, we know that the same a little before in the 42. verse is wont to be understood of the Communion of the Eucharist, and by the Syriack Interpreter is expressly rendred by the Greek word, (b) Fractio Eucharistiæ, both there and again chap. 20. vers. 7. according to that of S. Paul, The bread which we 1 Cor. 10. 16.
break, &c. why should it not then be so taken here? If it be, then according to the Interpretation we have given this will also follow, That that custome of the Church, to participate the Eucharist fasting, and before dinner, had its beginning from the first constitution of the Christian Church. A thing

(b) קציא דאוכריסטיא The breaking of the Eucharist.

1 Cor. 11. 22. not unworthy observation, if the Interpretation be maintainable; of which let the learned judge.

It was an Ὑπερῶον, or Cœnaculum, also where the Disciples at Troas came together upon the First day of the week to break bread, or to celebrate the holy Eucharist, Acts 20. 7. where S. Paul preached unto them, and whence Eutychus, being overcome with sleep, sitting in a window, fell down ἀπὸ τριστέγου, from the third story or loft, and was taken up dead. Such a one seems also to have been the Place of the Churches assembly at Cæsarea Cappadociæ, by that which is said Acts 18. 22. viz. That S. Paul sailing from Ephesus, landed at Cæsarea, where ἀναβὰς καὶ ἀσπασάμενος τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν, having gone up and saluted the Church, he went down to Antioch. Note, he went up to salute: whereby it should seem that the place where the Church was assembled was some upper place. See Ludovic. de Dieu upon this place; where he tells us, that the Æthiopick translator so understood it, rendring, (a) & descendit Cæsaream, & ascendit in Domum Christianorum, (i. Ecclesiam) & salutavit eos, & abiit Antiochiam. Such as these, I suppose, were the Places at first set apart for Holy meetings, much like to our private Chappels now in great mens houses, though not for so general an use.

(a) And he came down to Cæsarea, and went up into the House of the Christians, (that is, the Church) and saluted them, and departed thence to Antioch.

In process of time, as the multitude of Believers encreased, some wealthy and devout Christian gave his whole House or Mansion-place, either whilest he lived, if he could spare it, or bequeathed it at his death, unto the Saints, to be set apart and accommodated for Sacred assemblies and Religious uses.

At length, as the multitude of Believers still more increased, and the Church grew more able, they built them Structures of purpose, partly in the Cœmeteries of Martyrs, partly in other publick places: even as the Jews (whose Religion was no more the Empire's then theirs,) had, nevertheless, their Synagogues in all Cities and places where they lived among the Gentiles.

In the First Centurie.

THIS being premised, I proceed now (as I promised) to shew, That there were such places as I have described appointed and set apart among Christians for their Religious assemblies and Solemn addresse unto the Divine Majestie, through every one of the first three Centuries particularly; and that therefore they assembled not promiscuously and at haphazard, but in appropriate places, unless Necessity sometimes forced them to doe otherwise.

1. For the Times of the Apostles therefore, or First Century in particular, which ends with the death of S. John the Evangelist, I prove it, first, from the Text I premised, where is a Place mentioned by the name of Ecclesia, not to be despised or prophaned with common banquetings: at least from the authority of the Fathers, who by their so expounding it, give us to understand, they thought it not improbable that there were such Places in the Apostles times. For the further strengthening of this kind of argument, Know also that Eusebius, in that Discourse of his where he endeavours to prove that the Essenes, or Θεραπευταὶ, which Philo describes, were the first Christian Society of the Jewish Nation at Alexandria, converted by S. Mark, amongst other Characteristical notes (as he calls them, τὰ χαρακτηριστικὰ τῆς Ἐκκλη-Ἐκκλησιαστικῆς ἀγωγῆς) or badges of Christianity, (however he were mistaken in his conclusion or inference) alledges this for one of the first, That they had sacred Houses called Σεμνεῖα or Worshipping-Places, that is, Churches. His words are these, "(a) Deinceps ubi eorum domicilia quænam essent descripserat, (nempe Philo*) de Ecclesiis in variis locis exstructis sic loquitur: Est in quoque agro ædes sacra quæ appellatur* Σεμνεῖον, vel Μοναστήριον, in quo illi ab aliis Μονέμψυοι, soli agentes, Σεμνῷ βίῳ, sanctæ religiosæque vitæ mysteria obeunt; [N. B.] nihilque eò vel cibi, vel potionis, vel aliarum rerum quæ ad corporis usum necessariæ sunt, important, sed leges & oracula à prophetis divinitus edita, & hymnos, aliáque quibus scientia & pietas erga Deum crescat & perficiatur. Afterwards reciting some other customs and particular observances of their Discipline, as Their frequent assemblies in their Σεμνεῖα to hear the Scriptures read and interpreted; The distinction of places for men and women; Their manner of singing Hymns and Psalms by a Precentor, the rest answering * τὰ ἀκροτελεύτια, the extremes of the verses; The Degrees of their Hierarchy, like those of Deacons and Bishops, and some other the like, he concludes, Quòd τὰ ἀρχῆθεν περὶ τῆς Ἀποστόλων ἔθη σεμνοποιούμενα καταλαβὼν ὁ Φίλων ταῦτα ἐγραψε, παντὶ τῷ δῆλον, That Philo wrote these things, as one having knowledge of the customs at the beginning delivered by the Apostles, is manifest to any one. But whether that be so manifest or not, this I am sure is, That Eusebius believed the antiquity of Churches or Oratories of Christians to have been from the Apostles times, yea, to have been an Apostolical ordinance; or else he mightily forgot himself, to bring that for an argument or badge to prove Philo's Essenes to be S. Mark's Christians; then which otherwise there could not be a stronger argument to evince the contrary to what he intended. Now who could know this better then Eusebius, who had searched into and perused all the Writings and Monuments of Christian Antiquity then extant, for the compiling of his Ecclesiastical History, and his Commentaries of the * Acts of Martyrs now perished?

Hist. Eccl. l. 2. cap. 17.

(a) Philo having described what kind of habitations they had, proceeds to speak of their Churches which were frequently to be met with in several places of their Country; How that the Sacred House was called Σεμνεῖον a Worshipping-place, and Μοναστήριον a Monastery, wherein these solitary livers performed the Mysteries of a severely-religious life; bringing in thither not meat nor drink, nor any other necessaries for the use of the Body, but the Books of the Law, the Prophets, the Psalms or Hymns, and the like things of Sacred use, whereby Divine knowledge and Piety might be encreased and advanced to great perfection.

Adde to this, what I a little before observed out of Bede, De locis sanctis, of a Tradition, That the Church of Sion was founded by the Apostles. And so I leave my first Argument.

My next Argument why may I not take from that singular Character given to some one above other in the Apostles Salutations, as their peculiar? Salute such a one, καὶ τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτοῦ Ἐκκλησίαν, and the Church at his house. As Colos. 4. 15. of Nymphas, Ἀσπάσασθε Νυμφᾶν, καὶ τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτοῦ Ἐκκλησίαν, Salute Nymphas, and the Church at his house. To Philemon also ver. 1, 2. To Philemon our dear brother and fellow-labourer (to Apphia our beloved, and Archippus our fellow-souldier,) καὶ τῇ κατ' οἶκόν σου Ἐκκλησίᾳ, and to the Church at thy house. See, he forgets it not after a Parenthesis, neither attributes it to Archippus, but as proper to Philemon alone. The like he hath of Aquila and Priscilla two several times: once sending salutation to them, Rom. 16. 3, 5. Salute Priscilla and Aquila, and the Church at their house: again sending salutation from them, 1 Cor. 16. 19. Aquila and Priscilla salute you much in the Lord, with the Church at their house. Which I understand not to be spoken of their Families, as it is commonly expounded, but of the congregation of the Saints there wont to assemble for the performance of Divine duties; that is, ἢ συνερχομένῳ κατ' οἶκον ἀντὶ τῆς Ἐκκλησίαν. Whence (if it be granted) it will follow, First, that the Churches then used to assemble not in mutable and promiscuous, but in definite and appropriate places. Secondly, That those who are here saluted with that Appendix, were such as in their several Cities had bestowed and dedicated some part or some place within their dwellings to be an Oratory for the Church to assemble in for the performance of Divine duties according to the rule of the Gospel; Nymphas at Colosse, Philemon at Laodicea, (for there Archippus, who is saluted with him, was Bishop, saith * Author Constit. Apost. as Philemon himself was afterwards of the neighbouring City Colosse) Aquila and Priscilla first at Rome, till Claudius banished them with the rest of the Jews from thence, Acts 18. 2. afterwards at Ephesus, ver. 19. whence S. Paul wrote that first Epistle to the Corinthians.

I am not the first (I think) who have taken these words in such a sense. Oecumenius in two or three of these places (if I understand him) goes the same way, though he mention the other Exposition also. As to that of Aquila and Priscilla, Rom. 16. his note is, (a) "Adeò virtute spectati "erant, ut suam etiam domum Ecclesi- "am fecerint. Vel dicitur hoc, Quia "omnes domestici fideles erant, ut jam "Domus esset Ecclesia. He mentions, as I said, both Interpretations. So upon that of Nymphas, Col. 4. his words are, (b) "Magni nominis hic vir "erat, nam domum suam fecerat Eccle- "siam. And unless this be the meaning, why should this appendant be so singularly mentioned in the Salutations of some, and not of others, and that not once, but again, if the same names be again remembred, as of Aquila and Priscilla? Had none in those Catalogues of Salutation Christian families, but some one onely who is thus remembred? It is very improbable; nay, if we peruse them well, we shall find they had, but otherwise expressed; as in that prolix Catalogue, Rom. 16. we find Aristobulus and Narcissus saluted with their household, v. 10, 11. Asyncritus, Phlegon, &c. with the brethren which are with them, v. 14. others, with the Saints which are with them, v. 15. 2 Tim. 4. 19. The household of Onesiphorus. This therefore so singular an Appendix must mean some singular thing, not common to them with the rest, but peculiar to them alone: And what should this be but what I have shewed?

(a) They were so eminently religious, as that they converted their own House into a Church. Or else it is said [The Church at their House,] because all of their household were Believers and faithfull Christians; so that their House or Family was a little Church.

(b) He was a person of great esteem, for he turned his House into a Church.

Now because this Exposition concludes chiefly for a Cœnaculum devoted to be an House of prayer; let us see if out of a Pagan writer, who lived about the end of this Centurie, we can learn what manner of ones they were. For * Lucian in his Dialogue Philopatris, by way of derision (sed ridentem dicere verum quid vetat?) brings in one Critias telling how some Christians went about to perswade him to be of their Religion; and that they brought him to the place of their assembly, being an Hyperôon, which he describes thus; (c) "Pertransi- "vimus (saith he) ferreas portas & "area limina; [ἀναβάθρας δὲ πολ-] "λὰς περικυκλωσάμενοι] multisque jam "superatis scalis, in Domum aurato "fastigio insignem ascendimus, qualem "Homerus

* Or whosoever else were the Author thereof under Trajan, whose then fresh success in subduing the Parthians and Arabians (contrary to the unlucky presages of some) his scope seems to have been to gratulate. See Jacobus Micyllus in Argumento.

(c) We passed through iron gates and over brazen thresholds, and by many winding ascents we came at last to the house or room, whose roof was overlaid with gold, (not unlike to what Homer makes Menelaus his house to have been:)

And now I beheld and obſerv'd all things therein; but I could ſee no Helena there, but on the contrary a company of perſons with their bodies bowed down and pale countenances.

"φότας καὶ κατωχριωμένους] viros
"in faciem inclinatos, & palleſcentes. So he. 1 Cor. 11. 22.

My third proof is from a Tradition the Church hath had, of the Houſes of ſome devout and pious Chriſtians, as afterwards, ſo even in the Apoſtles time, converted into Churches or Oratories; as the houſe of Theophilus, a potent man in Antioch, (the ſame, as is ſuppoſed, to whom S. Luke (who was alſo an Antiochian) inſcribes both his Goſpel and Acts of the Apoſtles) who, being converted unto the Faith by S. Peter, converted his houſe into a Church, where S. Peter had his firſt See or Epiſcopal Reſidence. This Tradition is derived out of the Recognitions of Clemens, where it is firſt found: Which, though it be an Apocryphall writing, yet is of no ſmall antiquity; and this paſſage is of ſuch a nature, as it cannot be well imagined to what end it ſhould be deviſed or feigned. 3.

The like is reported of the houſe of Pudens, a Roman Senator and Martyr, in the Acta Pudentis, That it was turned into a Church after his Martyrdom. This is that Pudens mentioned by the Apoſtle in the 2 Epiſt. to Timothy, 4. 21. and coupled with Linus; Pudens and Linus (ſaith he) ſalute you. All this comes not of nothing; but ſurely argues ſome ſuch cuſtom to have been in thoſe times.

I will ſeal up all my proofs for this Centurie of the Apoſtles with one paſſage of Clemens (a man of the Apoſtolical Age) in his genuine * Epiſtle ad Corinthios: "Debemus omnia ritè & ordine facere quæcunque nos Domi-
"nus peragere juſſit; præſtitutis temporibus oblationes & liturgias obire.
"Neque enim temerè vel inordinatè voluit iſta fieri, ſed ſtatutis temporibus
"& horis. UBI etiam, & A QUIBUS peragi vult, ipſe excelſiſſimâ
"ſuâ voluntate definivit; ut religioſè omnia ſecundùm beneplacitum ejus
"adimpleta, voluntati ipſius accepta eſſent. Here Clemens ſaith expreſly, That the Lord had ordained (even now in the Goſpel) as well appropriate Places WHERE, as appropriate Times and Perſons, (that is, Prieſts,) When and WHEREBY he would be ſolemnly ſerved, that ſo all things might be done religiouſly and in order. Who then can believe that in the Apoſtles times (when this Clemens lived) the Places were not diſtinct for holy Services as well as the Times and Perſons were? or that Clemens would have ſpoken in this manner, unleſs he had known it ſo to have been? The Corinthians, it ſeems, in that their notorious ſedition and diſcord, had violated this order; at the correction whereof this paſſage aimeth. 4.

* Pag. 52.

[See this of Clemens quoted in Greek and tranſlated by the Author, in the next Diſcourſe, Sect. 1. toward the end.]

This one paſſage therefore makes all my former Proofs credible, and may ſupply their defect where they are not enough convictive. And it is the more precious, in regard of the penury of written Monuments by any Diſciples of the Apoſtles remaining unto us of that Primitive Age.

If any man ſhall aſk, where this Divine ordinance which Clemens here mentioneth is to be found; I anſwer, in the Analogy of the Old Teſtament, whence this Principle is taught us, That as the Divine Majeſty it ſelf is moſt Sacred and Incommunicable, (the reaſon why the Worſhip and Service given unto him muſt be communicated with no other;) ſo is it likewiſe a part of that Honour we owe unto his moſt Sacred, Singular and Incommunicable Eminency, that the things wherewith he is ſerved ſhould not be promiſcuous and common, but appropriate and ſet apart to that end and purpoſe. And thus I conclude the Firſt Seculum.

In The Second Centurie.

Ab Ann. 100. ad 200.

NOW for the Second, and that too for the beginning thereof, we have a witneſs not to be rejected, the holy Martyr Ignatius, who ſuffered An. 107. and wrote the moſt of his Epiſtles in his bonds. He in his confeſſed Epiſtle ad Magneſios ſpeaks thus; (a) "Omnes ad orandum in "idem loci convenite, una ſit com- "munis precatio, una mens, una ſpes "in charitate & fide inculpata in "Jeſum Chriſtum, quo nihil præ- "ſtantius eſt. Omnes velut Unus "ad Templum Dei [εἰς τὸ Ναὸν "τοῦ Θεοῦ] concurrite, quemadmodum "ad Unum Altare, ad Unum Jeſum Chriſtum Pontificem ingeniti Dei.

1.

(a) All of you meet together for prayer in one place; let there be one common prayer, one mind, one hope in love, in the immaculate faith in Jeſus Chriſt, then whom nothing is better. All of you, as one man, run together to the Temple of God, as to one Altar, to one Jeſus Chriſt the High-Prieſt of the unbegotten God.

Lo here a Temple with an Altar in it, whither the Magneſians are exhorted to gather themſelves together to pray; To come together in one place, that ſo they might all joyn together in one common prayer, ſpirited with one intention, with one and the ſame Hope in the Charity and Faith they have to Chriſt-ward: Secondly, To come thither as One, that is, in Unity of affection and brotherly love one towards another, as if all were but One, and not many; even as the Altar before which they preſented themſelves was but One, and the High-Prieſt and Mediatour between them and the Father, Jeſus Chriſt, but One.

For it is to be obſerved that in thoſe primitive times they had but One Altar in a Church, as a Symbole both that they worſhipped but One God through One Mediatour Jeſus Chriſt, and alſo of the Unity the Church ought to have in it ſelf: whence Ignatius, not onely here, but alſo in his Epiſtle to the Philadelphians, urges the Unity of the Altar for a monitive to the Congregation to agree together in one. For, (b) "Unum "Altare (ſaith he) omni Eccleſiæ, "& unus Epiſcopus cum Presby- "terio & Diaconis conſervis meis.

(b) One Altar to every Church, and One Biſhop with the Presbytery and Deacons my fellow-ſervants.

This cuſtom of One Altar is ſtill retained by the Greek Church. The contrary uſe is a tranſgreſſion of the Latines, not only ſymbolically implying, but really introducing, (as they handle it) a πολυθεΐα, or multiplying of Gods and Mediators, in ſtead of that One God, and One Mediator between God and men, the man Chriſt Jeſus.

1 Tim. 2. 5.

Nay more then this: It ſhould ſeem that in thoſe firſt times (before Dioceſes were divided into thoſe leſſer and ſubordinate Churches we now call Pariſhes, and Presbyters aſſigned to them) they had not only one Altar in one Church or Dominicum, but one Altar to a Church, taking Church for the Company or Corporation of the Faithfull united under one Biſhop or Paſtor; and that was in the City and place where the Biſhop had his See and Reſidence: like as the Jews had but one Altar and Temple for the whole Nation united under one High Prieſt. And yet, as the Jews had their Synagogues, ſo perhaps might they have more Oratories then one, though their Altar were but one; there namely where the Biſhop was. (c) "Die Solis (ſaith Juſtin "Martyr in Apol. 2.) omnium, qui "vel in oppidis vel ruri degunt, in "eundem locum conventus fit; namely,

(c) On Sunday all that live in towns or in the country meet together in one place.

namely, as he there tells us, to celebrate and participate the holy Euchariſt. Why was this, but becauſe they had not many places to celebrate in? And unleſs this were ſo, whence came it elſe that a Schiſmaticall Biſhop was ſaid (a) conſtituere or collocare aliud Altare; and that a Biſhop and an Altar are made correlatives? See S. Cyprian Ep. 40, 72, 73. de unitate Eccleſiæ. And thus perhaps is Ignatius alſo to be underſtood in that forequoted paſſage of his, (b) "Ἑν "Θυσιαστήριον πάσῃ τῇ Ἐκκλησίᾳ, "& unus Epiſcopus cum Presbyterio "& Diaconis. Howſoever, I here determine nothing, but refer it to the judgment of thoſe who are better skilled in Antiquity: only adding this, that if it were ſo, yet now that Pariſhes are divided into ſeverall Presbyteries as their proper Cures, every one of them being as it were a little Dioceſe, the reaſon and ſignification of Unity is the ſame, to have but One Altar in a Pariſh-Church.

1 Cor. 11, 22.

(a) to ſet up another Altar;

(b) One Altar to all the Church, and One Biſhop with the Presbytery and Deacons.

To this Teſtimony of Ignatius of the uſe in his time I will adde another of his, in his Epiſtle ad Antiochenos, where in his Salutes he ſpeaketh thus; "Ἀσπάζομαι τὰς φρυρὰς τῶν ΑΓΙΩΝ ΠΥΛΩΝΩΝ, τὰς οὔσας ἐν Χριστῷ "διακόνους, I ſalute the keepers of the Holy Doors, the Deaconiſſes which are in "Chriſt; that is, the Doors the women entred in at. For ſo we may learn from the Compiler of the Apoſtolicall Conſtitutions, Lib. 2. c. νζ'. al. 61. deſcribing a Church-aſſembly; (c) "Stent oſtiarii, ſaith he, "ad introitus virorum, illos cuſto-"dientes; Diaconiſſæ ad introitus "fœminarum. But if they had in Ignatius his time Holy Doors, (or, as ſome render it, (d) ſacra veſtibula) who can believe alſo but they had Holy Houſes?

(c) Let the Door-keepers ſtand at the entries of the men, looking well to them; the Deaconiſſes at the doors where the women are to enter.

(d) Holy Porches.

This Epiſtle indeed is none of the confeſſed ones: The title is excepted againſt; as that Ignatius wrote no Epiſtle ad Antiochenos, becauſe Euſebius, and after him S. Hierom, when they rehearſe his Epiſtles, make no mention of any ſuch. Yet were the Antiochians his flock, his paſtorall charge. Who would not then think it unlikely that, amongſt ſo many Epiſtles written to other Churches in his going that long journey from Antioch to Rome, to receive the crown of Martyrdome, (yea to Smyrna, through which he had paſſed) he ſhould not remember with one farewell Epiſtle that Church whereof he was Biſhop and Paſtor, as well as the reſt? Thus much I dare ſay, That this is as ſtrong an Argument every whit to perſwade that he wrote ſuch an Epiſtle, (eſpecially there being one extant under that Title,) as Euſebius his ſilence (for S. Hierom did but follow his ſteps) is that he did not. For why ſhould it be thought more neceſſary that Euſebius ſhould have met with all the Epiſtles of Ignatius in the Library of Ælia or Jeruſalem, (whence he * profeſſeth to have collected the whole matter of his Hiſtory,) then he did with all the Works and Commentaries of ſome other Eccleſiaſticall men whom he mentioneth; many of whoſe Writings, beſides thoſe he rehearſeth, he confeſſeth not to have come to his hands, or knowledge either what or how many they were? See him Hiſt. Lib. 5. c. [a] 26. & Lib. 6. c. [b] 10. This will be yet more conſiderable, if we remember that ſome Books, even of the Canon of the New Teſtament, were not known to ſome Churches at the ſame time with the reſt, and therefore a while doubted of, after they had notice of them. Beſides, it is to be noted that Euſebius in expreſs terms undertakes only to recite thoſe Epiſtles of Ignatius which he wrote as he paſſed through Aſia?

Aſia: but after his coming into Europe (whence thoſe Epiſtles are dated which he mentions not) whether any thing were written by him or not he informs us nothing. Nay, which is yet more, Vedelius grants the words and ſentences of this Epiſtle to be the moſt of them, by their ſtyle and character, the words and ſentences of Ignatius; but he would have them therefore to be taken out of ſome of his other Epiſtles, to wit, according to a new and ſtrange conceit of his, that the genuine Epiſtles of Ignatius have been robbed and gelded of much of their contents, to make up more Epiſtles under new Titles. He excepts only in this Epiſtle againſt the Salutations at the end thereof; becauſe there were not ſo many or no ſuch [a] Church-offices in Ignatius his time as are there mentioned. But what is this elſe but to beg the queſtion? Till therefore ſome body ſhall not only affirm, but prove there were no ſuch, no not in the Church of Antioch, ([b] whence divers Eccleſiaſticall cuſtoms had their firſt beginning, which were afterwards imitated by the reſt of the Churches) I can ſee no juſt cauſe hitherto why I ſhould not believe this paſſage, as well as the reſt, and ſo the whole Epiſtle, to have had Ignatius for its Author. And ſo I leave it.

For the middle of this Seculum, or thereabouts, there are * extant two ſhort Epiſtles of Pius the firſt, Biſhop of Rome, to one Juſtus Viennenſis; none of the Decretals, (for they are indeed counterfeit,) but others diverſe from them, which no man hath yet, that I know of, proved to be ſuppoſititious. In the firſt whereof there is mention made of one Euprepia, a pious and devout Matron, who conſigned the Title of her Houſe unto the Church for the uſe of Sacred aſſemblies. "Antequam Româ exiiſſes, (ſaith he) ſoror "noſtra Euprepia (ſicut bene recordaris) titulum domûs ſuæ pauperibus "aſſignavit; ubi nunc cum pauperibus noſtris commorantes, * Miſſas agimus. He ſeems by pauperes, the poor, to note the Clergy, which in his other Epiſtle he calls Senatus pauperum, (a) Salutat te Senatus pauperum: Otherwiſe the whole Chriſtian flock might be ſo called; according to that in the Goſpel, Pauperes Evangelizantur, The poor have the Goſpel preached to them, (Matt. 11. 5. Luke 7. 22.) and that of Eſa. ch. 61. 1. applied by our Saviour, Luke 4. 18. The Lord hath anointed me to preach the Goſpel to the poor; and according to that in the Parable, Luke 14. 21. Introduc pauperes, Bring in hither the poor. Perhaps in thoſe perillous times they were wont to make their Donations of this kinde under ſuch covert names.

* In Tom. 1 Biblioth. Patrum edit. Pariſienſ. ex Archivo Viennenſi.

* The word Miſſa ſeems ro have been long uſed in Italy before it was elſewhere.

(a) The Senate of the poor ones ſalutes thee.

In his ſecond Epiſtle to the ſame Juſtus, he mentions certain Martyrs who had then newly (as he there ſpeaks) triumphed over the world: amongſt which he mentions one Paſtor, by Office a Presbyter, who before his death had erected or created a Titulus, that is, a Church, as that name is vulgarly known to ſignifie: "Presbyter Paſtor (ſaith he) Titulum con- "didit, & dignè in Domino obiit. Why the Roman Church called ſuch places by the name of Tituli, whether becauſe by their dedication the Name of Chriſt our Lord was as it were inſcribed upon them, (as the manner then was to ſet the Names or Titles of the Owners upon their Houſes and poſſeſſions,) and ſo it would concurre in notion with thoſe other names of Κυριακὸν, & Baſilica, The Lord's, and The King's; or whether becauſe they gave a Title of Cure or denomination to the Presbyters to whom they were committed, (for the chief or Epiſcopal Church I doubt whether it were ſo called or not,) let others determine.

I ſhall not doe amiſs, I think, if I adde to this teſtimony a paſſage of Theophilus ophilus Antiochenus, (who lived at the same time) which though, I grant, it be indifferent to be otherwise understood, yet seems very prone to be construed for our purpose. It is to be found in his second Book ad Autolycum, where having compared the World to the Sea, he follows the Allegory thus; (a) "Quemadmodum "(saith he) in Mari insulæ quæ- "dam prominent habitabiles, frugi- "feræ, & quibus est aqua salubris, "necnon navalia, & portus com- "modi, quò se naufragi reciperent; "sic Deus dedit mundo, qui pecca- "torum tempestatibus & naufragiis "jactatur, Synagogas, quas Eccle- "sias sanctas nominamus, [Gr. "τὰς συναγωγὰς λεγομένας Ἐκκλη- "σίας ἁγίας] in quibus veritatis "doctrina fervet, ad quas confu- "giunt veritatis studiosi, quotquot "salvari Deique judicium & iram evitare volunt. It is ambiguous what he means here by Ecclesiæ, Churches: but if it were probable that Synagoga were here taken, as it is usually in the New Testament, for a Place, then might we determine that Ecclesia were so taken also, and not for a Company or Assembly only.

1 Cor. 11. 22.

(a) As in the Sea there are Islands to be met with, which are commodious for habitation, fruitfull and well watered, and accommodated with convenient harbors and ports for those who are distrest at Sea to repair to for their safety: so is it in the world, (which is a very troubled Sea, tempestuous and tossed by reason of sin) God hath here provided Synagogues, or Holy Churches, as we call them, wherein the Truth is diligently taught, and whither they repair who are lovers of the Truth, and desire in good earnest to be saved, and to escape the judgment and wrath of God.

Well, howsoever Ecclesia be taken in this passage (which I reckon not upon,) yet thus much I am sure of, That toward the end of this Century it was used for a Place of Sacred assembly; witness Clemens Alexandr. (who then lived) Lib. 7. Strom. where speaking of the Church or Ἐκκλησία, "Οὐ νῦν τὸν τόπον, saith he, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἀξίωμα τῆς ἐκλεκτῶν, Ἐκκλη- "σίαν καλῶ, I call not now the Place, but the congregation of the Elect, Ecclesia, the Church: Whereby it appears, that in his time Ecclesia was used for the Place of the assembly of the Elect, τόπος τῆς ἐκλεκτῶν, as he calls them, that is, of the Saints, and not for the Congregation only; for otherwise this Caution needed not. And so himself uses it in that story of the young man whom S. John committed to a Bishop of Asia to be instructed and trained up in the Christian piety and discipline, and who afterwards was by ill company withdrawn to lewd and debauched courses, and became Captain of a band of robbers in the mountains: For there when S. John, after a time coming again to visit the Churches, demanded of the Bishop an account of the charge he had committed to him; the Bishop answers, "He is become a villain and a robber, καὶ νῦν ἀντὶ τῆς Ἐκκλησίας ὄρος κατ- "είληφε μετ' ὁμοίων ληστικῶν, and now in stead of the Church he hath "laid hold of a Mountain, with a company like himself. To conclude, if the Name were in Clemens his time, undoubtedly the Thing was. And this is my proof for the latter end of this Centurie.

Clem. Alex. in Opere, Quis sit ille dives qui salvetur, apud Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. c. 17. Gr. κγ'. Also in this Century undoubtedly were extant those Fabricks in the Cemeteries of S. Peter in the Vaticane, and of S. Paul in via Ostiensi (which could be no other then some Christian Oratories) whereof Gaius speaks in Euseb. and calls Trophæa Apost. lib. 2. cap. 24.

In the Third Centurie.

Ab Anno 200. ad 300.

NOW are we arrived at the Third Seculum, and the last under the Ethnick and persecuting Emperours: wherein the Testimonies of the Christians Oratories do abound, and are such as will out-face any that shall dare contradict them.

For the beginning of this Centurie, Tertullian shall give in Evidence; firſt, in his Book De Idololatria: Where declaiming againſt ſome Chriſtian Artificers, who, becauſe it was their occupation and trade, thought it lawfull to make Idols for the Gentiles, ſo themſelves worſhipped them not, he ſpeaks thus; (a) "Totâ die ad "hanc partem zelus fidei perorabit, "ingemens Chriſtianum ab Idolis in "ECCLESIAM venire, de ad-"verſaria officina in DOMUM "DEI venire; attollere ad De-"um patrem manus matres Idolo-"rum; his manibus adorare quæ "(nempe in operibus ſuis) foris "(i. in Templis Gentium) ad-"verſus Deum adorantur; eas "manus admovere Corpori Domi-"ni quæ Dæmoniis corpora confe-"runt. Mark here, DOMUS DEI THE HOUSE OF GOD, & ECCLESIA THE CHURCH expounded by it; In Eccleſiam venire, id eſt, In Domum Dei venire; To come into the Church, that is, To come into the houſe of God; and both of them ſet in oppoſition to an Idol-ſhop.

1 Cor. 11. 22.

(a) All the day long ſhall the zeal of Faith ſpeak to this point; bewailing that a Chriſtian ſhould come from Idols into the CHURCH, that he ſhould come into the HOUSE OF GOD from the ſhop of his enemy; that he ſhould lift up to God the Father thoſe hands which were the mothers (and makers) of Idols, and adore God with thoſe very hands which (namely in reſpect of the Idols made by them) are adored without (the Church, viz. in the Heathens Temples) in oppoſition to God; and that he ſhould preſume to reach forth thoſe hands to receive the Body of our Lord, which are employ'd in making Bodies (that is, Images) for the Demons. [That according to the Gentiles Theology Images were as Bodies to be informed with Demons as with Souls, ſee the Apoſtaſy of the latter Times.]

Of this Domus Dei or Houſe of God, in his Book adverſus Valentinianos, cap. 2. he deſcribes unto us the form and poſture, upon this occaſion. He compares the Valentinian hereſie, in reſpect of their affected ſecrecie and reſervedneſs in hiding the myſteries of their doctrine, to the Eleuſinian Holies, whoſe Temple had many Curtains and doors, through which thoſe that were to be initiated were five years in paſſing, before they could be admitted unto the Adytum or Sacrarie where the Deity was: whereas contrariwiſe, he proveth out of Scripture the badge and genius of the Religion of Chriſt to conſiſt in a Dove-like ſimplicity and openneſs, and accordingly had its Oratories or Houſes of worſhip, not like that of the Eleuſinian Holies, concealed with multiplicity of walls, veils, turnings and windings, but agreeable to and as it were figuring its diſpoſition. For, "Noſtræ Colum-"bæ domus (ſaith he) ſimplex, etiam in editis & apertis, & ad lucem. "Amat figuram Spiritûs ſancti, Orientem Chriſti figuram. Nihil veritas "erubeſcit, &c. (b) "Noſtræ Co-"lumbæ domus, i. Domus religionis "noſtræ columbinæ, or Catholici "Chriſti gregis, qui Columbâ figura-"tur; namely, as he ſaid a little before, Chriſtum Columba demonſtrare ſolita eſt, ſerpens verò tentare; meaning, as I ſuppoſe, not ſo much Chriſt perſonal, as Chriſt myſticall, that is, the Diſciples or Religion of Chriſt. For it is the concluſion of his proofs brought out of Scripture, to ſhew that Simplicity was the Livery of Chriſt's Diſciples or Religion; (c) "In "ſumma, ſaith he, Chriſtum columba "demonſtrare ſolita eſt, &c. And otherwiſe, that (d) [ſolita eſt] would ſcarcely be true; ſince Chriſt perſonal is but once pointed out by a Dove, namely, at his Baptiſm. This Houſe, ſaith he, is (e) ſimplex, that is, ſine tot portarum & ſipariorum involucris: Alſo

(b) The Houſe of our Dove, that is, of our Dove-like Religion, or the Catholick flock of Chriſt figured by the Dove.

(c) In ſhort, The Dove is wont to point out Chriſt.

(d) is wont

(e) Plain, without ſuch a multiplicity of doors and curtains.

Also (a) in editis & apertis, places which Doves delight in; & ad lucem, that is, toward the place whence light ſpringeth, or the Sunriſing: For (b) Amat figuram Spiritûs ſancti, that is, the Dove, as also (c) Orientem Chriſti figuram; wherein he alludes to that Oriens ex alto or Day-ſpring from on high in Zacharie's Benedictus, and hath reference to the word, & ad lucem, i. ad locum vel plagam lucis. For, that the Churches of Christians anciently were turned toward the Eaſt, appears by the Author of the * Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, which ſurely are as ancient as Tertullian: (d) "Domus ſit ob-"longa, ad Orientem converſa, ſaith he. Beſides, it appears out of * Tertullian himſelf, that Chriſtians then worſhipped towards the Eaſt, and therefore more then probable their Houſes were ſited and accommodated accordingly. Thus I have done my beſt to clear this paſſage, becauſe the Author is crabbed and obſcure.

(a) In high and open places.

(b) It loves the figure of the Holy Ghoſt.

(c) The Eaſt the figure of Chriſt.

(d) Let the Houſe be long, and built Eaſtward.

* Apol. c. 16.

There are two or three * more places in the ſame Father where the Chriſtian Oratories are mentioned by the name of Eccleſia: but becauſe the ambiguous and indifferent ſignification of this word, either for a Place or an Aſſembly, makes them not convictive, unleſs ſome circumſtance be annexed which determines it, I will onely produce that De corona Militis, Cap. 3. where concerning the Sacrament of Baptiſm he ſpeaks thus; (e) "Aquam "adituri, ibidem, ſed & aliquanto "priùs in Eccleſia, ſub Antiſtitis ma-"nu, conteſtamur nos renunciare Di-"abolo, & Pompæ & Angelis ejus: "dehinc ter mergitamur. I ſay, Eccleſia here ſignifies the Place. For the clearing whereof, know that the Baptiſteries, or places of water for Baptiſm, in thoſe elder times were not, as now our Fonts are, within the Church, but without, and often in places very remote from it. When therefore Tertullian here ſaith, That thoſe who were to be baptized firſt made their Abrenunciation in the Church ſub manu Antiſtitis, (that is, as I ſuppoſe, the Biſhop or Prieſt laying hands upon them, either in the mean time, or as ſoon as they had done) and afterward again at the Water; he muſt needs by Eccleſia mean the Place: otherwiſe, if it were taken for the Aſſembly of the faithful, the Church in that ſenſe was preſent alſo at the Water. But Eccleſia here and the Water are ſuppoſed to be two diſtinct places; in both of which (according to the rite of the African Churches) Abrenunciation was to be performed: "Aquam adituri, IBIDEM (i. "apud aquam) ſed & aliquanto priùs in ECCLESIA, conteſtamur nos "renunciare Diabolo, &c. And thus much for the teſtimony of Tertullian.

(e) Coming to the water, (to be baptized,) not onely there, but alſo ſomewhat afore, in the CHURCH, under the hand of the Biſhop, we take witneſs that we renounce the Devil, and his Pomp and Angels; and afterwards we are drenched thrice in the Water.

My next witneſs is Hippolytus, who flouriſhed between the twentieth and thirtieth year of this Century in the reign of Alexander Mammæa. He, in his Treatiſe De conſummatione mundi ſeu de Antichriſto, deſcribing the ſigns and impieties which ſhould precede the Perſecution of Antichriſt, (as he conceived thereof,) hath this paſſage concerning the irreligion and prophaneneſs which ſhould then reign; (f) "Οἱ Ναὸι τῦ Θεῦ ὡς οἶκοι ἴσονται· "Templa Dei domorum communi-"um inſtar erunt; ubique Eccleſia-"rum everſiones fient, Scripturæ "contem-

Nay, a prophane Teſtimony will further confirm us he needed not: For Lampridius reports of this Alexander Mammeæ, (in whoſe time Hippolytus lived) (b) "Quòd cùm Chri-

(b) The Chriſtians being in poſſeſſion of a certain publick place, and challenging it for theirs; and on the other ſide the Taverners alledging that it belong'd of right to them; the Emperour's Reſcript in favour of the Chriſtians was this, That it was better that God ſhould be worſhipt there after what way ſoever, then that it ſhould be delivered and given up to the Taverners.

About the middle of this Century flouriſhed that famous Gregorie of Neocæſarea, ſurnamed Thaumaturgus. He in his Epiſtola Canonica (as the Greeks call it) deſcribing the five degrees or admiſſions of Penitents, according to the diſcipline of his time, (which he calls "Πρόκλαυσις,

1 Cor. 11. 22.

(a) How that by becoming all things to all men, he had in a ſhort time gained a great number of Converts through the aſſiſtance of the Divine Spirit, and that hereupon he had a ſtrong deſire to ſet upon the building of a Temple or Place for Sacred aſſemblies; wherein he was the more encouraged by the general forwardneſs he obſerved among the Converts to contribute both their moneys and their beſt aſſiſtances to ſo good a work. This is that Temple which is to be ſeen even at this day. This is that Temple, the erection whereof this Great perſon being reſolved to undertake without any delay, he layd the foundation thereof (and therewithall of his Sacerdotal, i. e. Epiſcopal, Prefecture) in the moſt conſpicuous place of all the City.

(b) Whereas all other Houſes, whether Publick or private, were overthrown by that Earthquake; this [Gregorian] Temple alone ſtood firm without any the leaſt hurt.

Nor is this all; He tells in the ſame place how that a little before the perſecution of Decius (which was Anno Chriſti 252.) this Thaumaturgus, having converted not the City of Neocæſarea onely, but the whole territory adjoyning, to the Faith of Chriſt, "Βωμῶν τε καὶ ἱερῶν καὶ εἰδώλων ἐν ἅπα-"σιν ἀνατετραμμένων, the Converts pulling down their Idol-Altars and "Idol-Temples, and in every place erecting εὐκτηρίους ὅπη τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ "Χριστοῦ ναούς, Oratories in the name of Chriſt, ſtirred up the fury and indignation of the Emperour.

About the ſame time with this Gregory lived S. Cyprian at Carthage. In him I obſerve the Chriſtian Oratories twice remembred; once by the name of (c) Dominicum, i. Κυριακὸν, another time of (d) Eccleſia. Contemporary with S. Cyprian was that famed Dionyſius Alexandrinus, made Biſhop ſomewhat before him, but out-lived him ſome five years, namely until 265. There is an Epiſtle of his extant (which is part of the Canon-Law of the Greek Church) to one Baſilides, reſolving certain Quære's of his; amongſt the reſt, Whether a woman, during the time of her ſeparation, might enter into the Church or not: To which his Anſwer is negative. This Quære he expreſſeth thus; "De mulieribus quæ ſunt

(c) might enter into the Houſe of God.

And here, becauſe the Time fitly preſents it in our way, take notice, for ſome reaſon that we ſhall hear of ere we have done, That this of the Chriſtians having ſuch Houſes for their devotions was a thing publickly known to the Gentiles themſelves, together with the name whereby they called them: as appears by two Imperial Reſcripts, the one of Galienus about the year 260. (recorded by Euſebius, Hiſt. lib. 7. cap. 12. Gr. ιγ'.) which calls them ΤΟΠΟΙ ΘΡΗΣΚΕΥΤΗΣΙΜΟΙ, Worſhipping Places; which, having been a little before, in the perſecution of Valerianus his Father, taken from the Chriſtians, and then in the hands of the Gentiles, Galienus graciouſly reſtored unto them, with liberty freely to exerciſe their Religion. And therefore you may make uſe of the Copy of my Letters, to the end ye may be ſecured from any future attempts to diſturb you herein.

The other is of Aurelianus, De Libris Sibyllinis inſpiciendis, when the Marcomanni invaded the Empire, Anno Ch. 271. recorded by Vopiſcus, in theſe words: (e) "Miror vos,

"quaſi in Chriſtianorum Eccleſia,
"non in Templo Deorum omnium,
"tractaretis; that is, in the Capitol, where the Senate uſed ſometimes to ſit. 1 Cor. 11, 22.

Adde to this, if you pleaſe, that which * Euſebius relates of this Emperour, to wit, that when Paulus Samoſatenus, being depoſed by the Council from his Biſhoprick, and Domnus choſen in his room, would not yield up the poſſeſſion of the Church, τῆς Ἐκκλησίας οἴκου· the matter being brought before Aurelianus the Emperour, he decrees that it ſhould be given to thoſe of the Sect unto whom the Biſhops of Rome and Italy ſhould ſend Letters of communion: (a) "Sic demum Paulus (ſaith Euſebius) "à ſeculari poteſtate ſummo cum dedecore ex Eccleſia expellitur. * Hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 7. c. 29. Gr. λ'.

(a) Thus was Paulus with great diſgrace caſt out of the Church by the Secular power.

For that by τῆς Ἐκκλησίας οἴκου is here meant the Chriſtians Oratorie or Houſe of Sacred aſſembly at Antioch, (and not the Biſhop's houſe, as ſome would have it,) appears, both becauſe Euſebius elſewhere ſo uſes it, as namely Lib. 8. cap. ult. & Lib. 9. cap. θ'. as alſo becauſe he expounds himſelf preſently by Eccleſia, when he ſaith, "Sic Paulus ſummo cum dedecore à poteſtate ſeculari ex Eccleſia exigitur. For ſurely he meant not that he was by the ſecular arm caſt out of the Church, as Church is taken for the Company of the Faithfull, but as it ſignifies the Place of Sacred aſſembly, where this Paulus kept poſſeſſion after he was depoſed for Hereſie by the Council.

But what need we trouble our ſelves thus to gather up Teſtimonies for the latter half of this Seculum? I have one Teſtimony behinde which will diſpatch it all at once, yea and, if need be, depoſe for the whole alſo. It is that of Euſebius in his eighth Book Hiſt. Eccl. in the beginning; where deſcribing thoſe peacefull and Halcyonian dayes which the Church enjoyed for many years, from the time of the Martyrdome of S. Cyprian unto that moſt direfull perſecution of Diocletian, and how wonderfully the number of Chriſtians was advanced during that time, he ſpeaketh on this manner: (b) "Quomodo quiſquam infinitâ illos hominum turbâ frequentatos
"conventus, cœtuúmque in ſingulis
"urbibus congregatorum multitudinem, illuſtréſque in Oratoriis concurſus deſcribere valeat? Quorum
"cauſa, quum in Antiquis illis Ædificiis ſatis amplius loci non haberent, (vel, antiquis illis Ædificiis haudquaquam amplius contenti) * amplas ſpatioſáſque in
"omnibus urbibus ex fundamentis erexerunt Eccleſias. Lo here how in thoſe Halcyonian dayes Chriſtians had not only Churches or Houſes of worſhip, but ſuch as might then be called τὰ πάλαι οἰκοδομήματα, ancient Edifices; which how far it may reach let others judge: Secondly, That the number of Chriſtians being grown ſo great that thoſe ancient Fabricks were no longer ſufficient to contain them, they erected new and more ſpacious ones in every City from the foundations: And all this teſtified by one that himſelf lived and ſaw part of thoſe times. Theſe ſacred Edifices Diocletian and thoſe other ſurrogated Emperours (which continued that direfull ten-years Perſecution begun by him) commanded by their Edicts to be every where demoliſhed, as we may reade in the ſame Euſebius at large.

(b) How ſhall any one be able to expreſs thoſe infinite multitudes of Chriſtians aſſembling in every city, thoſe famous meetings of theirs in their Oratories or Churches? and therefore they not being content with thoſe ſmaller Churches which before they had, (thoſe their ancient Edifices not being large enough to receive ſo great a number) took care to erect from the very foundations fairer and more ſpacious ones in every city.

* ἐν τοῖς πρόσθεν εὐκλειοῖς.
* τοῖς πάλαι οἰκοδομήμασιν μηδαμῶς ἀρκέμενοι.
* εὐρείας εἰς πλάτος.

1 Cor. 11. 22. large. The like whereunto ſeems never to have happened in any of the former Perſecutions, in which they were only taken from the Chriſtians, but again, when the perſecution ceaſed, for the moſt part reſtored unto them: as in the former Perſecution they were by Galienus, under the name of τόποι προσευκτήριοι, Worſhipping Places.

And thus I think I have proved by good and ſufficient Teſtimonies, That Chriſtians had Oratories or Churches, that is, appropriate Places for Chriſtian worſhip, in every of the firſt three hundred years: I am well aſſured (whoſoever be judge) long before the dayes of Conſtantine. I will adde to theſe Authorities two or three Reaſons why they muſt, in all likelihood, have had ſuch Places. Firſt, Becauſe it is certain that in their Sacred aſſemblies they uſed then to worſhip and pray towards the Eaſt: which how it could be done with any order and conveniencie, is not eaſie to be conceived, unleſs we ſuppoſe the Places wherein they worſhipped to have been ſituated and accommodated accordingly, that is, choſen and appointed to that end. Secondly, Becauſe of their Diſcipline, which required diſtinct and regular Places in their aſſemblies, for the (a) Pœnitentes, Auditores, Catechumeni, and Fideles; and therefore argueth they met not in every place promiſcuouſly, but in Places already fitted and accommodated for that purpoſe. Laſtly, Becauſe they had before their eyes an example and pattern in the Proſeucha's and Synagogues of the Jews, from whom their Religion had its beginning; which though as contrary to the Religion of the Empire as theirs, yet had places appropriate for the exerciſe thereof, whereſoever they lived diſperſed among the Gentiles. Who can believe that ſuch a pattern ſhould not invite the Chriſtians to an imitation of the ſame, though we ſhould ſuppoſe there were no other reaſons to induce them but that of ordinary conveniencie?

(a) The Penitents, the Hearers, the Catechumens or Learners and Probationers in Chriſtianity, and the Believers.

Whereſoever ten men of Iſrael were, there ought to be built a Synagogue. Maim. in Tephilla, c. 11. §. 1.

Anſwers to the OBJECTIONS.

Object. 1. I Come now to anſwer the Objections brought by ſuch as maintain the contrary opinion, which are two. Firſt, ſay they, It is not likely, no not poſſible, they ſhould have any ſuch Places, living under a Pagan and perſecuting State and Empire.

Anſwer. I anſwer, This Objection is already confuted by matter of Fact: For it is to be noted that the greateſt and moſt cruel Perſecutions, and the five laſt of the Ten, fall within the third or laſt Centurie; in which that Chriſtians had Oratories or Houſes of Chriſtian worſhip, we have before proved by moſt indubitate and irrefragable Teſtimonies: But if in this, why not as well in the former Ages, wherein the Perſecutions were, as no more in number, ſo far leſs bitter? For it is to be taken notice of, That theſe Perſecutions were not continuall, but as it were by fits; and thoſe of the two firſt Centuries of no long durance; ſo as the Churches enjoyed long times of peace and quietneſs between them.

Beſides, why ſhould it ſeem to any one leſs credible that Chriſtians ſhould have their Oratories or Houſes of worſhip under the Roman Empire, whileſt the State thereof was yet Gentile and oppoſite to the Faith of Chriſt, then that they had them in the Kingdom of Perſia, which never was Chriſtian? For that they had them there as old as the days of Conſtantine, Sozomen teſtifieth, Lib. 2. c. 8. The occaſion of the demoliſhing whereof whereof by King Isdigerdes, and of that most barbarous persecution of the Christians of those Countries for thirty years together, about the year 400. Theodoret relates Lib. 5. c. 38. namely, that one Audas, out of an indiscreet and unseasonable zeal, (though otherwise a vertuous and godly Bishop) having demolished the Persians Pyræum or Temple where the Fire was worshipped, and refusing to build it up again as was enjoyned him, the King thereupon mightily enraged, caused all the Christians Oratories or Churches in his dominions to be demolished likewise, and that horrible Persecution before mentioned to storm against them. Could the Christians finde means and opportunity to erect Churches, that is, Houses for their Religion, under a Pagan government in Persia, and could they not under the Roman Empire? 1 Cor. 11. 22.

The other Objection is from the Authors of Apologies against the Gentiles, Origen against Celsus, Minutius Felix, Arnobius, and Lactantius, who when the Gentiles object Atheism to the Christians, as having no * Templa, no Aræ, no Simulacra; these Authors are so far from pleading they had any such, that they answer by way of Concession, not only granting they had none, but (which is more) affirming they ought not to have, and condemning the Gentiles which had. Object. 2. * No Temples, Altars, Images.

(a) Celsus (saith Origen) affirms that Christians decline the building or setting up of Altars, Images and Temples.

(b) We do indeed (saith Origen) decline the building of Temples, (not for the reason which the Gentiles suppose, but) because we having learnt by the doctrine of Jesus Christ How God is to be worshipped and served, we think our selves obliged in conscience to avoid and abstain from all such things as under a pretence and colour of Piety do make men really impious, namely those who have erred and gone astray from the true way of worshipping God by Jesus Christ, who alone is the way of worshipping God aright, according to that most true saying of his, I am the Way, the Truth and the Life.

(c) Why do the Christians keep such adoe to conceal and hide that, whatsoever it be, which they worship?——Why have they no Altars, no Temples, no Images?——unless that which they worship and keep so close were either worthy of punishment, or shamefull.

(d) Do you think that we conceal what we worship, because we have neither Temples nor Altars? But I beseech you, What Image should I make for God, whenas (if we well consider it) Man himself is the lively Image of God? What Temple should I build for him, whenas the whole world, made by him, is not able to contain him? And whenas I who am but a man have a large habitation and room enough to be in, shall I think to enclose and confine so Great a Majesty within one little House? Tell me, Is not God better sanctified in our Mind

(a) Herein ye are wont to charge us with most hideous impiety and irreligion, viz. That we neither build Sacred Houses or Temples to perform the Offices of religious worship in, nor make any Image or Representation of any God, nor build any kind of Altars at all.

Who would now think that Christians had any Churches or Houses of worship in these Authors dayes?

Answer. This Objection indeed looks very big at the first sight, but it is no more but a shew, and we shall deal well enough with it. For we are to take notice, that these Authors, all four of them, lived and wrote within and after the Third Seculum was begun, and the eldest of them Minutius Felix after Tertullian; Origen after him: yea, why do I say after the Third Seculum was begun or within it? whenas two of them, Arnobius and Lactantius, lived and wrote rather after it was ended, and in the beginning of the Fourth; Arnobius in the time of the Persecution of Diocletian, Lactantius somewhat after him; for he was his Scholar, and dedicates his Institutions adversus Gentes to Constantine the Great.

Now then remember what Authorities and Testimonies were even now produced for the Christians Oratories all that Seculum throughout, not Probabilities only, but such as are altogether irrefragable and past contradiction. This they seem not to have considered, unless they dissembled it, who so securely urge these passages, to infer a Conclusion point-blank against evidence of Fact. As for example, (I will alledge no more but what is out of possibility to be denied or eluded) Had the Christians no Oratories or Churches in Gregory Thaumaturgus his time? Had they none in S. Cyprian's? Had they none in the days of Dionysius Alexandrinus? Had they none when Galienus released their (d) ΤΟΠΟΙ θρησκεύσιμοι? Had they none in those Halcyonian days whereof Eusebius speaks, when the multitude of Christians was grown so great, that τὰ παλαι οἰκοδομήματα, the ancient Edifices were no longer able to contain their Assemblies; but that they were fain to build new and spacious Churches in every City from the foundations?

(d) Worshipping Places?

dations? Had they none when the Edict of Diocletian came forth for demoliſhing them? For all theſe were before that either Arnobius or Lactantius wrote. Let thoſe therefore who put ſo much confidence in theſe paſſages tell us, before they conclude, how to untie this knot, and then they ſhall ſay ſomething. 1 Cor. 11. 22.

What then, will you ſay, is the meaning of theſe paſſages? and how may they be ſatisfied, and this ſcruple taken off? I anſwer; The Gentiles in theſe Objections had a peculiar notion of what they called a Temple: and theſe Fathers and Authors, in their diſputes with them, anſwer them according unto it. For they defined a Temple by an Idol and the incloſure of a Deity; not of the Statue or Image onely, but of the Demon himſelf: that is, They ſuppoſed their Gods by the power of Spells and Magicall conſecrations to be retained and ſhut up in their Temples, as Birds in a Cage, or the Devil within a circle, that ſo their ſuppliants might know where to have them when they had occaſion to ſeek unto them; and that, for ſuch retaining or circumſcribing of them in a certain Place, an Idol was neceſſary, as the Centre of their collocation. Thus much Origen himſelf will inform us in thoſe his diſputes againſt Celſus, as in his 3. Book pag. 135. Editionis Græco-lat. where he deſcribes Νεὼς καὶ ἀγάλματα, Temples and Idols, to be places where Demons are ἱδρύμενοι, enthroned or ſeated, either having preoccupied ſuch places of themſelves, "ἢ διά τινων τελετῶν ἀχθέντες καὶ "μαγγανειῶν ὥσπερ οἰκῶσι, or brought thither by certain Ceremonies and Magi- "call invocations, do as it were dwell there. And again, Lib. 7. pag. 385. in fin. telling us that Demons "τοιοῖσδε παρακαθέζονται κήμασι καὶ χωρίοις, "ſate in thoſe kind of Forms and Places, (viz. Idols and Temples) "ἤ τοι "ὑπό τινων μαγγανειῶν κατακληθέντες, ἢ καὶ ἄλλως δυνηθέντες προκαταλαβεῖν "ἑαυτοῖς τόπους, &c. either lodged and confined thither by Magicall conſecra- "tions, or otherwiſe having preoccupied the places of themſelves; where "they are delightfully fed and refreſhed (for ſo the Gentiles thought) with "the nidor and ſavour of the Sacrifices. I ſhall not need to produce the reſt of his ſayings to the ſame purpoſe; let him that will conſult him further in the end of that 7. Book pag. 389. and a little before, pag. 387. in fine. To this confining of Gods in Temples (that ſo thoſe that had occaſion to uſe their help might not be to ſeek, but know where to find them) that alſo of Menander cited by Juſtin Martyr, in his De Monarchia Dei, hath reference.

Οὐδείς (ſaith he) μ' ἀρέσκει περιπατῶν ἔξω Θεός, Οὐδὲὶς οἰκίαν παραλείπων ὅτι τῷ σανιδίῳ.
——— ἢ δίκαιον δεῖ Θεὸν
Οἴκοι μένειν σώζοντα τὺς ἱδρυμένους.

No God pleaſeth me that gads abroad,
None that leaves his houſe ſhall come in my Book.
——— A juſt and good God ought
To tarry at home to ſave thoſe that placed him.

According to this notion of a Temple, theſe Authors alledged grant that Chriſtians neither had any Temples, no nor ought to have; forasmuch as the God whom they worſhipped was ſuch a one as filled the Heaven and the Earth, and dwelt not in Temples made with hands. And becauſe the Gentiles appropriated the name of a Temple to this notion of encloiſtering a Deity by an Idol; therefore the Chriſtians of thoſe firſt Ages, for the moſt part, abſtained therefrom, eſpecially when they had to deal with Gentiles, calling their Houſes of Worſhip Eccleſiæ, or Οἶκοι τῆς Ἐκκλησίας· Κυριακὰ, (whence is the Dutch and our Engliſh Kurk and Church) in Latine Dominica; Acts 7. 48.
